

Friday, July 19, 2013S1 - DE LA SEPARATION*LA NORME ET L'ÉCART : ÉTIOLOGIE ET IDÉOLOGIEB. Marquer*Université de Strasbourg*

Abstract: Il s'agira, dans cette communication, d'aborder le vaste continent des idéologies scientifiques au XIXe siècle, en analysant la construction d'un discours étiologique qui fait bien souvent office de passerelle entre une avancée scientifique et un imaginaire immémorial. Les représentations du corps et de son hygiène sont, dans ce cadre, particulièrement éloquentes, dans la mesure où elles articulent un savoir physiologique (ou plus largement médical), et la rhétorique d'une évidence totalement étrangère à la démarche scientifique, mais pourtant mobilisée pour la valider. Le corps dont il sera question n'a bien évidemment rien à voir avec le corps réel, mais avec ce qu'Alain Corbin appelle le corps « culturalisé », social et observé. Corps qui « est une fiction, un ensemble de représentations mentales, une image inconsciente qui s'élabore, se dissout, se reconstruit au fil de l'histoire du sujet, sous la médiation des discours sociaux et des systèmes symboliques » (Histoire du corps, Seuil, 2005, II, p. 9). Plus précisément, il s'agira de voir comment le discours médical sur le corps peut délimiter une norme (une santé), et par contrecoup une déviance, à travers quelques « cas » symptomatiques : « maladie métaphore » (S. Sontag) comme l'hystérie, physiognomonie ou nosographie aux critères essentiellement esthétiques (Lombroso, Charcot, Nordau, Emile Laurent), voire physiologie sous-tendant un modèle politique (les discours hygiénistes sur la tempérance et la norme).

Biography: - Histoire du corps, Paris, Seuil, 2005, t. 2. (sous la dir. d'A. Corbin, J.-J. Courtine, G. Vigarello)

- J.-P. Aron, R. Kempf, La Bourgeoisie, le sexe et l'honneur, Éditions complexe, « Historiques », Bruxelles, 1984

- J.-P. Aron (dir.), Misérable et glorieuse. La femme du XIXème siècle, Éditions Complexe, « Historiques », Bruxelles, 1984

- J. Borie, Le Célibataire français, (nouvelle édition revue et augmentée) Livre de Poche, « Biblio essais », Grasset, 2002

- Jean-Louis Cabanès, Le Corps et la maladie dans les récits réalistes (1856-1893), Paris, Klincksieck, 1991, 2 t.

« Invention(s) de la syphilis », Romantisme, n° 94, 1996, p. 89-109.

- Mireille Dottin-Orsini, Cette femme qu'ils disent fatale, Grasset, 1993

- M. Foucault, Naissance de la clinique, Paris, P.U.F., « Quadriges », 2003 [1963].

Le Pouvoir psychiatrique. Cours au Collège de France. 1973-1974, Paris, Gallimard Seuil, « Hautes Études », 2003.

- Histoire de la sexualité I. La volonté de savoir, « Tel », Gallimard, 1976.

- Bertrand Marquer, Les Romans de la Salpêtrière. Réceptions d'une scénographie clinique : Jean-Martin Charcot dans l'imaginaire fin-de-siècle, Droz, « Histoire des idées et Critique Littéraire », 2008, 424 p.

- A. Parent-Duchâtelet, La Prostitution à Paris au XIXème siècle, (Texte présenté et annoté par Alain Corbin), L'Univers Historique, Seuil, 1981 (édition abrégée de De la prostitution dans la ville de Paris, publié en 1836)

THE DIALECTICS OF ULYSSES: SCIENCE VS THE ART OF EVERYDAY LIFEG. Rowen-Clarke*University of Southern Queensland*

Abstract: My proposed presentation, informed by a hybrid New Historicism / Deconstructionist approach, explores the science / humanist dialectic present in Ulysses. Criticism exploring James Joyce's collaboration with science and technology, such as Allen Thiher's Fiction Refracts Science: Modernist Writers from Proust to Borges (2005) and Maud Ellman's The Nets of Modernism: Henry James, Virginia Woolf, James Joyce, and Sigmund Freud (2010) highlight the interconnections between science and the formal shape of modernist fiction. Jeff Drouin's James Joyce, Science, and Modernist Print Culture, 1914-1939: The Einstein of English Fiction (2011) explores the nexus of scientific thought and modernism, and elucidates the humanistic issues at the core of Joyce's engagement with Einstein's relativity theories. My paper, however, will emphasise the tension between Joyce's meeting with science and his continued reference back to the art of everyday life. It will focus on how Ulysses solicits the reader to remember the art in the "ordinary" (Declan Kiberd Ulysses and Us; Liesl Olson Modernism and the Ordinary). The case study of food and eating in Ulysses will be presented as a mediation of the more "artless", scientific way Irish food and food intake had been written about in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century. The connection of art and the "hard sciences" in Ulysses proposes the modernist novel as a space for negotiating the physical world of progress and affirming the need to stay hinged to "the ordinary" through an emphasis on an appreciation of life, the sacredness of memory and the creative potential of interiority.

Biography: Gabrielle is a doctoral student at the University of Southern Queensland working on a comparative study of how food and eating are utilised by three central figures in modernist literature: James Joyce, Virginia Woolf and Marcel Proust.

LA GUERRE DES ÉTOILES

S. Zékian
CNRS

Abstract: En se concentrant sur le tournant des XVIIIe et XIXe, cette communication reviendra sur le divorce des lettres et des sciences en s'attachant au cas particulier des astres comme objets de savoirs et de discours concurrents. Elle exposera les grandes lignes du conflit qui met alors aux prises des hommes de lettres (comme L.-S Mercier ou Restif de la Bretonne) et des savants professionnels reconnus, souvent membres de l'Acad. des sciences.

Biography: Stéphane Zekian est chercheur au CNRS (UMR 5611 LIRE). Il vient de publier "L'Invention des classiques. Le 'siècle de Louis XIV' existe-t-il ?" (CNRS ed., 2012).

ÉVOLUTIONNISME ET MODÈLES D'INTERDISCIPLINARITÉ : EDGAR QUINET, HERBERT SPENCER, JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS ET ERNST HAECKEL

N. Wanlin
Université d'Artois

Abstract: Évolutionnisme et modèles d'interdisciplinarité : Edgar Quinet, Herbert Spencer, John Addington Symonds et Ernst Haeckel Le développement de la science évolutionniste en Europe dans la seconde moitié du XIXe siècle est l'occasion d'observer comment se construisent les relations entre différentes disciplines de l'esprit, des sciences naturelles aux sciences morales et politiques en passant par la littérature et la philosophie. Malgré ce qui peut apparaître comme un divorce de « deux cultures » (C.P. Snow), les relations de modélisation réciproques et d'hybridation entre sciences humaines et sciences dures sont très actives et fécondes. Ces relations sont parfois thématiques et théorisées, par exemple chez Quinet, Spencer, Addington Symonds et Haeckel. On s'intéressera aux différentes manières dont leurs textes abordent l'interdisciplinarité et en quoi ils révèlent que malgré des discours et des méthodes légitimement distincts, sciences et lettres travaillent à modeler un imaginaire commun. L'enjeu principal de l'interdisciplinarité apparaîtra alors comme les relations de contrôle et de limitation que chaque discipline entend imposer à l'autre dans l'exercice de son magistère culturel.

Biography: Nicolas Wanlin est maître de conférences en littérature française à l'Université d'Artois. Il a publié un ouvrage et des articles sur la poésie française du XIXe siècle, sur les relations entre littérature et arts visuels et sur les relations entre littérature et sciences. Membre de l'équipe ANR HC19 (dir. A.-G. Weber), il travaille actuellement sur les relations entre évolutionnisme et littérature en France à la fin du XIXe siècle.

S1 (QUEERING) TRANSLATION

QUEERING TRANSLATION: IS TRANSLATION A CRITICAL APPROACH?

W.J. Spurlin

Brunel University, London

Abstract:

This paper examines critically the gender and sexual politics of translation. How do we work with translating terms for naming dissident genders and sexualities in comparing terms of naming dissident genders and sexualities across languages, which may not be translatable to their English equivalents (gay, lesbian, bisexual, queer)? How might we work with the specificity of 'queer,' which has its origins in western Anglophonic cultures, when translating texts from non-Anglophonic and non-western contexts? What new translation issues arise when we recognise that in some postcolonial cultures, for example in the Maghreb, the area in which I work, terms for same-sex sexual identities maybe not be inscribed discursively, but may name instead gender-defined performances of same-sex desire for which equivalent terms in European languages may not exist? The paper will also examine how translation theory may be broadened through the pressures of queer theory, whilst asking the extent to which translation operates as a queer praxis. N.B. This abstract is only being submitted so that the call for papers can be registered, as people will respond to the call with abstracts.

Biography: William J Spurlin is Professor of English at Brunel University London and formerly Professor of English and Director of the Centre for the Study of Sexual Dissidence & Cultural Change at the University of Sussex in Britain. He is the Chair of the ICLA Research Committee on Comparative Gender Studies. His most recent books include Imperialism within the Margins: Queer Representation and the Politics of Culture in Southern Africa (2006); Lost Intimacies: Rethinking Homosexuality under National Socialism (2009); and he has co-edited Comparatively Queer: Interrogating Identities across Time and Cultures (2010) with Margaret R Higonnet and Jarrod Hayes. For excellence in pedagogical research and teaching practice, Prof Spurlin was named a Fellow of the British Higher Education Academy in 2009. His next book examines the influences of French colonialism, postcolonial nationalism, and diaspora on new queer francophone literature emerging from the Maghreb.

THE PROBLEM OF TRANSLATING QUEER MODERN POETRY

M. Kramer

University of Saskatchewan

Abstract: The taboo that characterized queer representations in Modernist poems seeped also into their translations. Ill at ease with subjects that were often conveyed only through a network of metaphors and other queer strategies, generations of translators in a host of languages fell back on heteronormative readings of this poetry. For example, in a language that distinguishes between third person male and female possessive adjectives, what accurately translates the famous "Ses Yeux," which ends Rimbaud's "Vowels," or Stefan George's grammatically gender-neutral "Du schlank und rein wie eine flamme" in languages where predicative adjectives agree with the gender of the noun or pronoun? This paper will deconstruct these and other queer sites of untranslatability among European languages and lay bare comparatively the shifting horizon in the history of translating closet poetry to show how translations are always a form of critical approach that depends essentially on the doxa of their time.

Biography: Max Kramer is Assistant Professor of French and Comparative Literature at the University of Saskatchewan, Canada. He holds a joint Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from Columbia University and the Sorbonne (Paris IV). A former Fellow of the Studienstiftung des deutschen Volkes, he is also a former Pensionnaire Étranger of the École Normale Supérieure in Paris. His research focuses on queer representations in nineteenth- and early twentieth-century poetry (French, German, Spanish, English), on sexuality in postcolonial North African and Middle Eastern literature and society, on online media, and on the question of human rights vs. cultural rights. At present he is finishing the revisions on a book based on his dissertation, Poésie et inversion : la métaphore queer dans la poésie moderne. He has also published articles on modern poetry and queer sexuality in the Muslim world.

L'ENTRE-NATHANAËL, LE DÉsir: NATHANAËL (NATHALIE STEPHEN)'S QUEER SELF-TRANSLATION

J.M. Greenblatt

Justus-Liebig Universität Giessen

Abstract: Nathanaël (published as Nathalie Stephens) self-describes as writing "l'entre-genre." Indeed, Nathanaël writes between many things. Some French, some English, Nathanaël's texts are never entirely either; while one language generally predominates, the other almost always intervenes. Je Nathanaël, originally (mostly) French, exists under the same title in English as a work of self-translation. While the expressive and erotic potential and failures of language/s are regular foci of Nathanaël's work, the act of translation heightens these moments of comparative tension between languages and between language and/as desire. In one section of the volume, a recurrent play with the word "langue," which appears as "tongue" in translation, loses some of its polysemy since, while "tongue" can also mean "language" in English, that meaning is subordinate. And yet, the word "viens," which also appears throughout this section, translates as "come." The same word, of course, with which Nathanaël earlier translates her use of "jouis." In lessening one productive indeterminacy, JN gains another, prompting Nathanaël to shift the title of the section's final page from "Relents" in the French to "A Fuckable Text" and to follow this title with three questions that appear only in the translation: "What is a fuckable text and is it only fuckable in English? Is there such a thing as a literary hard-on?" (JNtrans. 49). And, indeed, as Nathanaël writes: "Le problème de Nathanaël est posé. Il s'agit bel et bien d'un problème de traduction" (JN 91). However, the problem is always one not only of translation between languages, but between bodies and languages, self and other, and also, of course, desire.

The "Nathanaël" of Je Nathanaël is a reference to André Gide's Les nourritures terrestres; however, the figure of Nathanaël appears throughout the author Nathanaël's oeuvre. Aside from taking the name for herself (her website's author bio uses this name and female pronouns), Nathanaël consistently evokes "Nathanaël" as both self and other. She writes in ...s'arrte?ê Je: "Dis-moi: Nathanaël" (16). In Species Ex(hib)it, she writes: "she wants to be called Stephen and sometimes Nathanaël" (n. pag.). Indeed, there is constant pronominal slippage in Nathanaël's work between "I," "you," "she," and "he" and of where the "I" stands in relation to "Nathanaël." Nathanaël's use of pronouns and emphasis on both the difficulty and desire of language resonates with Monique Wittig's appropriation of and challenge to Émile Benveniste's claim, in Problems in General Linguistics, that it is through the act of saying "I" that one obtains subjectivity. Wittig's contention that, for many of us, subjectification is a difficult process that language both enables and constrains, rendering it both excruciating and euphoric, is extended in Nathanaël's evocation of not just the insufficiency of language, but of languages.

The resistance to traditional linguistic structures and to how they construct gender and sexuality represents further points of contiguity between Nathanaël's work and both Wittig's theory and her novel Le corps lesbien. But Nathanaël's multi-valent, fluidly queer use of gendered pronouns and physical markers creates a corps that cannot be contained by the marker "lesbien." Indeed, in JN, "je" claims: "À Nathanaël je prêterais les mots suivants: 'I am a queer boy'" (88). Ruminating on betweenness, Nathanaël writes: "Entre deux mots le souffle./ Entre deux corps le chagrin./ Entre deux villes la douleur. Entre deux voix le désir.// Entre nous le livre à feuilleter" (JN 59). In conversation with Wittig, and drawing from Nathanaël's other works, but focusing on the two Je Nathanaëls, I argue that Nathanaël employs the moments of productive comparison where two languages touch to evoke a queer betweenness of the erotic, the body, and sex. These moments suggest, through the queerness of translation, the queerness of all language, wherein the self and the other are (always difficulty) both reversible and desirable, and the self is produced in, yet cannot be contained by language. Here, the "literary hard-on" is never just a thing of one language, but of language itself, brought to our attention through the reverberations of languages brushing against each other. Evoked by "Nathanaël," in response to whom "on bande et on mouille en tournant les pages" (JN 51) and who is "la fille et le fils" (...s'a?J 16), the "hard-on" of this work is both in and in response to language, a hard-on that, through its in-betweenness of person, gender, sex, text, and language itself, evades phallogocentrism through the moist hardness of leafing through the pages of an eminently fuckable text.

Biography: Jordana Greenblatt is an Adjunct Professor of Gender Studies at Queen's University and of English at York University. She is currently working on publishing a revision of her dissertation, "Words Like That: Reading, Writing, and Sodomasochism," which, in its original form, was supported by a Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada Doctoral Fellowship, won York's dissertation prize, and was nominated for the Canadian national award. Her work generally sits at the intersection of high theory and fucking, and her interests include textual difficulty, textuality and sexuality, queer theory, graphic narrative/comics, and 20th century literature and culture.

S1 COMPARATIVE EARLY MODERNITIES

BETWEEN EXAMINATION HALL AND MARKETPLACE: CULTURAL CAPITAL AND TROPES OF EXCHANGE IN EARLY MODERN CHINA

A. Des Forges

University of Massachusetts - Boston

Abstract: Between Examination Hall and Marketplace: Cultural Capital and Tropes of Exchange in Early Modern China Alexander Des Forges The more or less polemical use of the term "Early Modern China" in recent works of cultural history has invited sinologists to grapple with comparative approaches to shifts in cultural production, with particular attention to post-Renaissance Europe. Considering the specificities of these shifts from a theoretical perspective allows new insight into aesthetic discourse in the mid- to late Ming (1368-1644) and Qing (1644-1911) dynasties, and simultaneously exposes some of the particularist assumptions on which theories of cultural production that pretend to universal applicability base themselves. The last three decades have seen an intense renewal of scholarly interest in the role of the market in early modern Chinese society, and analyses of different cultural subfields -- art, historical and philological scholarship, and the publishing world, among others -- have drawn inspiration from Bourdieu and other theorists of cultural capital in the process. Many of the dynamics that we understand to be characteristic of cultural capital in its European context are clearly at work in a variety of modes of Ming and Qing cultural production, from pottery to painting to poetry. But standard approaches to the question of cultural capital come up short when confronted with the civil service examination system, a social institution of a size, duration, and range of influence that puts it in a different category from the publishers, literary groups, museums, and theaters discussed by European and American theorists of cultural capital. In mid-sixteenth-century China, a young civil service examination candidate who would later become famous as a playwright produced a striking essay on the topic "The woman would have excess cloth," reflecting on the social phenomenon that Adam Smith would later understand as the division of labor, and demonstrating the interpretive latitude available in a genre that has generally been understood as the epitome of intellectual and stylistic conservatism, the eight-legged essay. Although the topic is taken from the Mencius, a work well-known for its valorization of rightness over profit, Tang Xianzu (1550-1616) expresses deep concern over the accumulation of goods that cannot be lent out at interest; although the point of the passage in question is that the ruler should provide support for men who make a public display of a specific type of patriarchal moral practice, the essay argues that women who weave cloth at home suffer if there is no market for the products of their labor. What becomes clear in the course of reading "The woman would have excess cloth" is not only the complexity of the original passage of the Mencius, but also the extent to which the introduction of the "small topic" (xiaoti) genre of examination question in the early modern period provides an opening for candidates to distinguish themselves through creative and unorthodox lines of argument. Any of a number of civil service examination essays from this period could serve to prove this point, but Tang's elaborations on the place of the market in well-ordered society provide in addition a new perspective from which to approach the "literature of response and exchange" (yingchou zhi wen) in its social context, and further suggest that in early modern China it is the civil service examination system, not the market, that constitutes the fundamental social ground against which literary production -- from archaic prose to vernacular fiction -- takes shape. Beginning from Tang's essay, this paper takes a critical and comparative approach to the question of cultural capital in the early modern period, arguing that by focusing primarily on the functions of consumption and exchange in the formation and maintenance of class hierarchies, inquiries into cultural capital have so far shortchanged one of the defining features of capital -- its specific productive potential.

Biography: Alexander Des Forges is Associate Professor of Chinese in the Department of Modern Languages and the Program in Asian Studies at University of Massachusetts -- Boston. He is the author of Mediasphere Shanghai: The Aesthetics of Cultural Production (University of Hawai'i Press, 2007); "Burning with Reverence: The Economics and Aesthetics of Words in Qing (1644-1911) China" PMLA 121, no. 1; and numerous book chapters and articles on nineteenth- and twentieth-century Chinese literature and film.

VERISIMILITUDE, DIDACTICISM, AND THE "RISE OF THE NOVEL": EUROPEAN READINGS OF CHINESE TALENT-BEAUTY FICTION, 1750-1850

N. Ma

Tufts University

Abstract: This paper addresses readings of translations of seventeenth-century Chinese talent-beauty fiction by European readers including Thomas Percy, Jean-Pierre Abel-Rémusat, and Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. The interests these sophisticated intellectuals revealed about a Chinese narrative subgenre now usually regarded second-class are often puzzling to modern interpreters, seemingly attributable only to the very rarity of Chinese literary works in Europe during the time. My analysis nevertheless wishes to show that the European readers' apparent misappraisals of the Chinese texts have to do with remarkable parallels between the literary as well as ethical tendencies underlying the rise of talent-beauty fiction in China and those explored by European writers since the mid-eighteenth century: specifically, these parallels concern an emergent discourse about the didactic value of fictional verisimilitude in both cultures, a discourse further related to new conceptions of narrative method and moral subjectivity. The European reception of Chinese talent-beauty fiction between 1750 and 1850 thus constitutes a useful source for rethinking the comparability between early modern Chinese and European literatures, as well as the nature of the eighteenth-century European "rise of the novel" from a cross-cultural perspective.

Biography: Ning Ma received her PhD in Comparative Literature from Princeton in 2008. She is currently an Assistant Professor at Tufts University.

INDIVIDUALISM AND VERNACULAR FICTION IN LATE IMPERIAL CHINA

L. Ge
University of Notre Dame

Abstract: Early modernity in the West has often been associated with a burgeoning form of individualism, which in turn may have been one of the cultural conditions for the advent of the novel. Were there similar conditions for the rise and flourish of vernacular fiction in late imperial China? Indeed, as the overwhelming majority of the literati were barred from officialdom, many of them turned to more individualistic and more commonplace pursuits. The story of the mythic stone in the eighteenth-century novel Dream of the Red Chamber can be taken as an allegoric account of this shift toward individualism: as the stone is rejected from a divine project of heavenly reconstruction, it starts an excursion to the mundane world and turns its sublunary experience into a fictional text.

Biography: Liangyan Ge received his Ph.D. in comparative literature from Indiana University. He is currently an associate professor in Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures at the University of Notre Dame. His primary research area is premodern Chinese fiction.

COMPARING THE MATERIALITY OF THE BOOK: EARLY MODERN JAPAN AND EUROPE

Y. Yamamoto
University of Tokyo

Abstract: This paper seeks to propose using the material history of the book as a crucial point of comparison for reading literary texts from different early modernities, drawing on comparisons among poetry collections published in early modern Japan (1603-1868) and early modern Europe (1450-1789) as illustrative cases. In both Japan and Europe, the early modern period saw significant innovations in print technology and the resultant rise in the cultural importance of books as a commercially viable medium for the accumulation and circulation of knowledge and information. There is no question that the reading and writing of books, not just in literature and the arts but in a diverse range of disciplines, played a crucial role in preparing, so to speak, the emergence of the modern period in both Japan and Europe. Nevertheless, books from early modern Japan and Europe differ greatly in their material constructions. The majority of early modern Japanese books were printed with hand-carved woodblocks, in contrast with the European counterparts, most of which were printed using the moveable type. The kinds of paper used in the printed books also differ greatly, affecting the physical weight and shapes of books. The material characteristics of books cannot be overlooked, insofar as they offer clues as to how knowledge and information were amassed and distributed. The vast differences in the material characteristics of early modern Japanese and European books suggest that knowledge and information were organized and disseminated in completely different ways in early modern Japan and Europe, and thus that these early modern literatures are not at all easily comparable, particularly in terms of their verbal and ideological content. At the same time, however, the material characteristics of books can be compared--that is, objectively. Observing the physical as well as aesthetic differences in the materiality of the book provides a highly concrete context in which the differences and similarities in the verbal and ideological content among books from different early modernities can be discussed. This paper will cross-examine several poetry collections from early modern Japan, England, and Italy, first observing the material differences among the books, then analyzing how these books can help shed light on the relationship between vernacular languages and the lingua franca (Classical Chinese in early modern Japan, Latin in early modern Europe) and the role of poetry as a politically divisive or unifying force in the respective early modern societies.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Yoshitaka Yamamoto is a Ph.D. candidate in the Program in Comparative Literature and Culture at the University of Tokyo. He also serves as a Research Fellow in the humanities at the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science. His area of specialization is early modern (17-19 C.) Japanese literature, with a particular focus on the reception of Ming Dynasty (14-17 C.) Chinese literature, thought, and culture in early modern Japan by way of printed books and manuscripts. He is especially interested in the cultural and political role of Classical Chinese poetry in late 18 C. to early 19 C. Japan. Yamamoto grew up in Japan, Malaysia, and the United States. He received his bachelor's degree in comparative literature from Harvard University in 2008, and his master's degree in comparative literature and culture from the University of Tokyo in 2012.

ASIAN MYTHS AND POLITICS OF INTERPRETATION

DANGUN MYTH, THE BIBLE, AND A CANADIAN MISSIONARY'S INTERPRETATION OF THE FOUNDING MYTH OF KOREA: JAMES SCARTH GALE'S CASE

S. LEE

Pusan National University

Abstract: This study examines James Scarth Gale's interpretation of Dangun Myth, which played a significant role in introducing this founding myth of Korea to the western readers of the early 20th century. Gale came to know Dangun Myth between 1895 and 1901 through Dongguktonggam, but his first understanding of it was to dismiss the national sanctity and historicity it bears to Korean people. Thus, when Gale first attempted to record the myth in English in around 1910, he searched for a notion after the Protestant image of God and found the word "Hanim" to name the Paternal Divinity in the myth. He wanted to utilize Dangun Myth for the purpose of his missionary accomplishment, that is to say, so he put the genealogy of "Hwanin, Hwanwoong, and Dangun" in the trinity structure of "God the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit." After having finished his translation of the Bible into Korean, however, Gale's recognition of Dangun Myth changed drastically. He no longer wanted it to be a Korean reflection of the Christian Trinity, but recognized its value as an indigenous myth of Korea which was based upon the primeval monotheistic notion of Korean people. Thus, Gale researched through the Korean literary works written in Chinese to find the holistic terms such as "Cheon" and "Shin" to replace his previous Christian terms to refer the myth's divine characters. Gale's shifts in his recognition of Dangun Myth indicates that his translation of The Bible into Korean was an effort not only to fulfill the gospel for Christian civilization, but also to create the scriptures of secularized Christianity for a nation composed of its own historical figures and literary tradition.

Biography: Dr. Sang-hyun Lee Affiliation: Pusan National University / The Jeompiljae Institute

A MARXIST CONTROVERSY OF DANGUN MYTH IN 1930'S KOREA

H. CHO

Seoul National University

Abstract: There was a big controversy over the historical significance of Dangun Myth in 1920s Korea, which was under Japanese oppression. The Japanese bureaucratic scholars were reluctant to acknowledge the historical existence of Gojoseon—the first kingdom ever established in Korean peninsula—as presented in Dangun Myth, while the Korean nationalist scholars claimed that Dangun myth was not only a sacred story, but also a factual, historical manifestation of the foundation of Gojoseon. The Korean scholars emphasized the central existence of Gojoseon in the history of East Asia, but this nationalistic approach was never acceptable to their Japanese opponents. Amidst this controversy emerged a new interpretation of Dangun Myth in the 1930s by the Marxist scholars. Denying both arguments of the Japanese colonist and Korean nationalist scholars, the Marxist scholars of the 1930's took a scientific approach to understand Dangun myth from a perspective of historical materialism. Unfortunately, however, they ended up distorting Dangun myth due to their materialistic interpretation based upon the mechanical theory of reflection. They intended to de-mythologize the non-realistic narrative of Dangun legend, but their study resulted in delivering a new myth, i.e., that of materialistic fabrication.

Biography: Dr. Hyun-soul Cho Affiliation: Seoul National University / Dept. of Korean Language and Literature

A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF ASIAN GENESIS MYTHS IN KOREA, JAPAN, THAILAND, AND VIETNAM

W. Choi

Gwangju National University of Education

Abstract: It is genesis myths that can be first of all discussed in mythology. As such, they can be regarded as occupying an important position in the discussion of any mythological tradition; thus, a profound and extensive exploration of its genesis myths is also necessary if we want to understand the genealogy of any given culture. Given the definition of genesis myths as the transcendent stories that account for the cosmological origin of any given culture or ethnic group, this study compares various Asian genesis myths to examine how different Asian cultures have developed their respective genesis myths to explain their respective origins of life and community through various primitive imaginations. The primary discussions for this comparative study are mainly based upon the genesis myths of East Asian regions such as Jeju Island of Korea and Okinawa of Japan, but those of other parts of Asia such as Thailand and Vietnam will be also examined in an attempt to introduce the various types of Asian genesis myths to western readers. This study also provides with many primary mythological materials and data in addition to the scholarly interpretations of them, and as such, it will hopefully enlighten its readers to engage in further studies of Asian mythological studies.

Biography: Dr. Wonho Choi Affiliation: Gwangju National University of Education / Dept. of Korean Language Education

S1: RACONTER LA THEORIE

LE PROCÈS ÉVOLUTIF DU ROMAN : L'INSTRUMENTALISATION DE LA MÉTA-FICTION ET L'INSCRIPTION DE LA THÉORIE DANS LE CORPS ROMANESQUE

W. Kryszinski

Université de Montréal

Abstract: En constituant un corpus méta-fictionnel et méta-réflexif, je me propose d'interroger certaines formes romanesques qui engendrent les contenus théoriquement ou thématiquement déterminés et transforment le discours narratif en une multiplicité de messages métatextuels (ex. le style du « nouveau roman » libre d'éléments « tragifiants » pratiqué par A. Robbe-Grillet ; le roman comme système de gloses (voir Hans Magnus Enzensberger) ; le roman comme mélange de genres (voir M.Pavic)

Les considérations conclusives devraient mener vers une saisie de l'instrumentalisation de la métafiction comprise comme support hyperdiscursif et comme embrayeur (shifter) de la représentation romanesque.

Le corpus qui suit devrait permettre de différencier entre ce qui devient dominant et ce qui permet de proposer une typologie des formes romanesques activement impliquées dans l'évolution du roman moderne et post-moderne.

Beckett.S., Mercier et Camier, thématization du roman comme fragmentation en chapitres et comme fonction méta-narrative de résumés.

Robbe-Grillet,A. Le Voyeur, Topologie d'une cité fantôme (L'inscription narrative et discursive de la théorie du nouveau roman, surtout exprimée par Robbe-Grillet dans l'étude « Nature, humanisme, tragédie »

Enzensberger, H. M - Le bref été de l'anarchie. La vie et la mort de Buenaventura Durruti (« L'Histoire considéré comme fiction collective »)

Manganelli. G., Discours de l'ombre et du blason ou du lecteur et de l'écrivain considérés comme déments (« La littérature sur la littérature »)

Pavic, M. Le dictionnaire Khazar Roman-lexique exemplaire féminin (Le roman comme mélange des genres :un livre d'aventures,un roman policier, un recueil de nouvelles, un ouvrage kabalistique, un récit fantastique)

Biography: Wladimir Kryszinski

SCIENCE AND (LITERARY) THEORY AS INTERTEXTUAL GAME IN JOHN BANVILLE'S DOCTOR COPERNICUS

M. Natsvlishvili

Universität des Saarlandes

Abstract: The Irish writer John Banville can be regarded as a master of playing with theories, literary as well as scientific ones. This ability climaxes in his tetralogy of science (Doctor Copernicus 1976, Kepler 1981, The Newton Letter 1982, Mefisto 1986). His first and most important novel of this tetralogy, Doctor Copernicus, deals with the conflicts between science and life, truth and fiction. The unpredictability of everyday life – intrigues, disappointments, defeats –, which Banville prominently uses in Doctor Copernicus to create its novel-like structure, is in opposition to the search for scientific knowledge. The author shows us how Copernicus' heliocentrism not only dismantles a dogmatic world view, but also how it marks the beginning of a transition to the modern era. In this context, Banville highlights the metaphorical value of Copernicus' cosmology, which in the end represents man's lasting uncertainty. This uncertainty is also reflected on an aesthetical level. Banville does not present us with an authentic historical novel but he uses the narrative of Copernicus' life in order to deconstruct a 'historiographic' style of writing which seems to rely on facts. If the author talks about there being no absolute truth but – at the most – only "workable versions of truth", then he combines his hero's contemporary thoughts with postmodern knowledge. The mediation process of the novel also shows signs of a postmodern consciousness. The narrator repeatedly uses a variety of intertexts, which partly originate from the ancient world and the early modern era, and partly from scientific and literary 20th century texts. He thus creates a complex web of hypo- and hypertexts and a highly ambivalent discourse, which in itself serves the ultimate goal of undermining any claims of truth. To a certain point, Banville contributes here to the discussions on cultural memory by using the character of Copernicus to exemplify different kinds of storage of scientific or pseudo-scientific information. The different kinds of inter- or intratexts – scientific, philosophic, and literary texts, title, inscription, preface, summary, report, transcript – as they are used in this novel do not only provide a structural surface for the text, but also represent at the same time the awareness of the achievements of memory as a cultural process.

Biography: Name Marika Natsvlshvili

Geboren am 03.05.1978 in Tbilissi (Georgien) Schulausbildung 1984 – 1995 Grigol Khandzteli experimentelle Schule Nr. 1 (Tbilissi) Hochschulstudium 1995 – 1999 Bachelor-Studium der Germanistik an der Staatlichen Ivane-Javakhishvili-Universität Tbilissi, der Fakultät für westeuropäische Sprachen und Literatur Oktober 1998 – Februar 1999 DAAD-Stipendium für Germanistik an der Universität Hannover Januar 2000 – März 2000 Stipendium des Italienischen Außenministeriums für die Università per Stranieri di Siena, Italien Januar 2001 – März 2001 Stipendium des Italienischen Außenministeriums für die Università per Stranieri Perugia, Italien 1999 – 2001 Master-Studium der Germanistik an der Staatlichen Ivane-Javakhishvili-Universität Tbilissi, der Fakultät für westeuropäische Sprachen und Literatur Thema der Masterarbeit Umberto Eco als Semiotiker und Schriftsteller: Über seine Schrift „Einführung in die Semiotik“ und seinen Roman „Il nome della rosa“. Oktober 2003 – März 2004 DAAD-Forschungsstipendium an der Universität des Saarlandes, im Fach Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft April 2009 – März 2010 Promotionsstipendium der Landesgraduiertenförderung an der Universität des Saarlandes, im Fach Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft Beruflicher Werdegang Juli – August 1999 Tätigkeit als Referentin/Übersetzerin am Georgischen Rundfunk, in der Nachrichtenabteilung (Deutschsprachige Sektion) Juli – August 2000 Tätigkeit als Referentin/Übersetzerin am Georgischen Rundfunk, in der Nachrichtenabteilung (Deutschsprachige Sektion) Oktober 2002 – Juni 2003 Tätigkeit als Dozentin für deutsche Sprache an der Ilia-Chavchavadze-Universität Tbilissi, Georgien Oktober 2005 – Januar 2009 Tätigkeit als Dozentin für Italienisch an der Senioren-Akademie der Katholischen Familienbildungsstätte Neunkirchen Oktober 2004 – März 2011 Wiss. Hilfskraft am Lehrstuhl für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft der Universität des Saarlandes April 2011 – März 2012 Wissenschaftliche Mitarbeiterin am Lehrstuhl für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft der Universität des Saarlandes Wissenschaftliche Publikationen „Experiment und Metamorphose: Michail Bulgakows Satire auf Wissenschaft und Gesellschaft in der Erzählung Hundehertz“ IN: Literature and Science/Literature und Wissenschaft. Hg. von Monika Schmitz-Emans. Würzburg: Königshausen & Neumann, 2008, S. 193-209.

UN NOUVEAU ROMAN EN ÉBAUCHE (CHEZ TROIS ÉCRIVAINS EUROPÉENS, DURANT LES ANNÉES 1920 ET 1930)

R.L. Stantcheva
Université de Sofia

Abstract: Pour mes recherches je m'appuie sur trois littératures européennes : la littérature française, la littérature bulgare et la littérature roumaine. Dans ce triangle peu fréquenté, je cherche la concordance des impulsions créateurs en imagination et en théorie, de même que les divergences dans la démarche de chaque écrivain et de chaque contexte littéraire national. Certains écrivains s'engagent à introduire des éléments de théorie dans le texte même. Ainsi pour cette analyse je vais étudier le roman roumain « Le lit de Procuste » (1933) de Camil Petrescu (1894-1957), le roman bulgare « Le cœur dans la boîte en carton » (1933) de Svetoslav Minkov (1902-1966) et Konstantin Konstantinov (1890-1970), à côté du roman déjà « canonisé » d'André Gide (1869-1951) « Les Faux-Monnayeurs » (1925). Chez Camil Petrescu la théorie se manifeste d'une manière directe, à travers l'instance du narrateur-théoricien qui apparaît largement en bas de page. L'intention de Petrescu est de construire un roman « au message authentique » et de souligner la solitude de l'homme moderne, en créant une forme romanesque adéquate, constituée de dépositions et de documents : lettres échangées entre les quatre personnages ; pages de journal intime. Les propos du narrateur ont la fonction d'une réflexion sur un nouveau type de roman. Le contexte en Roumanie de l'entre-deux-guerres présente un bouillonnement moderniste de recherche théorique et de mise en pratique de divers procédés romanesques (qu'on observe de même chez des écrivains comme Mircea Eliade et Mihail Sebastian). Nous pouvons relier la théorie romancée de Camil Petrescu à la théorie du genre du roman, à la théorie de la fiction. On pourrait dire que sa démarche annonce, avant la lettre, les idées de la narratologie et de la « mort de l'auteur ». Le roman « Le cœur dans la boîte en carton » de Sv. Minkov et de K. Konstantinov introduit la théorie aussi bien dans la structure du texte que dans les commentaires du narrateur. Dans sa double instance déclarée, le narrateur formule ses idées sur le roman moderne dans un registre ironique. Une théorie est esquissée pour combattre les imitations du roman réaliste du XIX^e siècle, déjà vétuste. Les intentions ludiques sont annoncées et commentées largement dans le texte. Cette remise en question des aptitudes du roman attaquent l'omniscience du narrateur, ainsi que les inerties quand au volume du roman, questions débattues largement dans les écrits critiques du temps. Les références aux exemples romanesques français permettent de penser de même à une démarche de littérature comparée implicite et à une réflexion sur le roman comme genre de la modernité européenne. Sans doute ce roman permet des analyses dans le domaine de la théorie du genre du roman et de son développement à l'époque des avant-gardes. Comme point de référence je vais prendre l'exemple bien connu et largement analysé d'André Gide et de son roman « Les Faux-Monnayeurs ». L'accent sera mis sur la dimension autoréférentielle, sur la mise en pratique de la théorie, sur la démarche explicite. La réception de la théorie romancée de Gide dans le roman roumain et dans le roman bulgare, va montrer son importance non seulement pour la théorie du genre et de la fiction, mais de même pour la littérature comparée. La communication vise tout d'abord à analyser des romans qui racontent, chacun, une théorie du roman. Deuxièmement, la comparaison proposée cherche à vérifier si le moment des années 1920-1930 est vraiment perméable pour les nouveautés esthétiques dans différentes littératures. Et, enfin, je cherche à esquisser un nouveau roman européen en ébauche dans un contexte littéraire, propice aux changements.

Biography: Roumiana L. Stantchéva est professeur de littérature comparée (domaine roumain, bulgare et français) à l'Université de Sofia « St. Kliment Ohridski ». Fondatrice du « Cercle Académique de Littérature Comparée » bulgare et son premier président (2001-2011) ; membre de l'AILC (et du Comité sur le Sud-est européen); membre du REELC (fait part du Com. Exec., 2007-2011) ; Docteur honoris causa de l'Université d'Artois (2002) ; officier dans l'Ordre des Palmes académiques (depuis 2002). Monographies récentes: Rencontre dans le texte. Littérature comparée et Etudes balkaniques. Sofia, Ed. Balkani, 2011 ; Littérature européenne/Littératures européennes. Les littératures balkaniques sont-elles européennes? Sofia, Ed. Balkani, sous presse pour 2012. Traductrice en vers de Jacques Prévert, Victor Hugo, Ana Blandiana etc.

THEORIES OF DRAMA IN GOETHE'S "WILHELM MEISTER'S THEATRALISCHE SENDUNG" AND IN JOYCE'S "STEPHEN HERO"

H.K. Birus

Jacobs University Bremen

Abstract: In Modern European literature there are three ambitious novels which were eventually abandoned, but then resumed and continued a lifelong: Goethe's "Wilhelm Meisters Theatralische Sendung," Proust's "Jean Santeuil," and Joyce's "Stephen Hero." Very unusual, in a contemporary context, is that Goethe's and Joyce's unfinished novels contain detailed remarks on poetics, in particular theories of drama — following Aristotle's "Ars poetica," relayed by Corneille or by Thomas Aquinas. Their thematical content is obvious and hereafter will be outlined. Their structural integration however was so problematic that in the course of the revision of both novel projects these theoretical discussions were drastically condensed, but in "Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre" — much to Joyce's admiration — due to the focus on Shakespeare's "Hamlet" substantiated and convincingly included in the narrative. Similarly numerous references to theories can be found in Proust's "À la recherche du temps perdu" (e.g. to Jean-Henri Fabre's entomological research, to John Ruskin's art criticism, or to onomastical and etymological speculations) as well in Joyce's "Ulysses" and "Finnegans Wake" (e.g. to Victor Bérard's "Les Phéniciens et l'Odyssée," to Nicolaus Cusanus' and Giordano Bruno's speculations about the 'coincidentia oppositorum', or to Giambattista Vico's "Scienza Nuova" in general), but these — in contrast to Th. Mann, Musil, or Broch — do not form any essayistic digression within the novel, rather they are seamlessly integrated in the narrative and stylistic texture.

Biography: Prof. Dr. Hendrik Birus was born in Kamenz (Saxony) in 1943; he left for the Federal Republic of Germany in 1961, studied German and Comparative Literature as well Philosophy at the universities of Hamburg (1961-64) and Heidelberg (1964-72) and received his 'habilitation' in Göttingen (1984). He has been head of the Institute for Comparative Literature at the Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität Munich (since 1987) and has taught as a Visiting Professor at the universities of Vienna, Rome, Illinois (Urbana-Champaign), Indiana (Bloomington), Washington (Seattle), and Pennsylvania (Philadelphia), at Washington University (St. Louis) and Yale (New Haven), as well as at the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales Paris; he was named a Fellow at the Wissenschaftskolleg (Institute for Advanced Study) of Berlin in 1995. Since August 2006 he is Vice President and Dean (now Acting Provost) of Humanities and Social Sciences at the Jacobs University Bremen. Publications include work on literary theory, hermeneutics, and onomastics; several studies on Comparative Literature with various authors and philosophers from the 18th to 20th century, e.g. Goethe and Oriental poetry, Jean Paul, Nietzsche, Th. Mann, K. Kraus, Celan, and Derrida.

S1 ETHNOLITERATURE AND ETHNOPOETICS

WORDS OF WELCOME AND INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

C. Moser¹, M. Winkler²

¹Universität Bonn, ²Université de Genève

THE ETHNOGRAPHY OF RELIGION IN MICHEL DE MONTAIGNE'S JOURNAL DE VOYAGE (1580-1581)

L. Villas Bôas

Universidade Federal do Rio de Janeiro

Abstract: In contrast to the obsessively revised Essais, Michel de Montaigne's Journal de Voyage en Italie par la Suisse et l'Allemagne en 1580 et 1581 was never prepared for publication. The first half of the Journal is written in French by his secretary, the second in both Italian and French by Montaigne himself. Its contingent diversity of voices and tongues – or, else, hands – contrasts with the fashioning of the individual Montaigne into author of the Essais. The perception of the Journal as a textual monstrosity – at once fiction of the self and fiction of the other with no set boundaries – was the determining factor in the history of its transmission. Once included into a modern edition of Montaigne's works, it was envisioned as arrière-boutique of the Essais. I wish to argue that the significance of the Journal lies less in the imaginary articulation than in the actual practice of a model of traveling according to which the traveler lends himself to the exercise of becoming other. As a manuscript, private aide-mémoire, the Journal opens up possibilities for experiencing and recording cultural diversity precluded from the printed, public self-portrait of the Essais. One of the most salient features of the Journal is the traveler's participating observation both of the “new” protestant religions and the “old” Catholic and Jewish faiths. The question I would like to address is how – in the context of Religious Wars – the Journal offers an ethnography of religion. To what extent does the convergence between curiosity and religion presuppose an observer whose point of view is secularized? By exploring the connection between ethnographic curiosity and religious dissent, my analysis takes part in the problematization of the concept of religion and its historical counterpart, the process of secularization.

Biography: Luciana Villas Bôas holds a PhD in Comparative Literature (Columbia University, NY, 2005) and has been teaching at the Department of Germanic Languages and Comparative Literature at Federal University of Rio de Janeiro since 2009. She is currently completing the book on colonial translators in sixteenth-century Brazil, within the multiple contexts of Jesuit missions, French, Dutch and Portuguese settlements, entitled The Language and Politics of Colonial Translation in Sixteenth-Century Brazil. She is the author of several articles on early modern travel literature, the history of ethnography and models of authorship, and also published several translations, including Reinhart Koselleck's Crítica e crise.

ASPECTS OF ETHNOLITERARY POETICS IN PARATEXTS TO 18TH CENTURY TRAVEL WRITING

R. Möller

Universität de Gießen

Abstract: In my contribution, I seek to discuss key notions of a double aesthetics of travel and travel writing as they are developed by authors of late 18th century travel writings in prefaces to their travel texts, as well as other surrounding paratexts connected to these. I will suggest to view these prefaces as small, condensed treatises that deal with the aesthetics and poetics of an emerging genre and as fragmentary, yet revealing prolegomena to an early theory of ethno-literature: they represent an interesting liminal standpoint in between theory and practice, relating to the summing-up of a retrospective reflection on the actual voyage, and at the same time to the beginning of the narrated voyage which is to be ‘repeated’ in its representation and in the reader's imagination. Key concepts that are discussed here include the idea of perspectivism or broken realism as an intermediary conception between the aporias of subjectivism and objectivism, the question of partiality and totality in the context of representing the experience of travel, the relationship between description and narration, ‘movement’ as a poetological key metaphor and different conceptions of (inter)cultural difference, alterity and the possibility of negotiation. The poetological strategies that are envisaged in this context can be described in terms of an interplay between static elements of close and ‘thick’ description of remarkable phenomena and their dynamic counterpart in the form of relating strategies of narration and reflection, which to a certain degree seems to correspond to the cultural practice of travel as a dynamic motion in – more or less – ‘unexplored’ spaces. Among the texts to be discussed are Georg Forster's prefaces to Voyage Around the World and Ansichten vom Niederrhein, Jens

Baggesen's 'prooemium' to his travelogue Labyrinth, as well as Goethe's reflections on the poetics of the Voyage through Italy. The different options for dealing with cultural alterity that are thematized in these texts relate to a poetics of cultural encounter in the sense of strategies of "worldmaking": the forms in which cultural difference can be practically negotiated and verbally represented are presented as neither pre-established nor fully incommensurable, but as something which has to be made situationally in correspondence to the circumstances of the individual and specific cultural, social and aesthetic constellations in which they occur.

Biography: Reinhard M. Möller (International Graduate Centre for the Study of Culture, Giessen)

ETHNOPOETICS: THE CASE OF MEDEA

M. Winkler
Université de Genève

Abstract: Ethnopoetics: The Case of Medea Euripides first charged the old mythical figure of Medea with the murder of her two sons and conceived her as an ethnically alien other, that is as a 'barbarian' in the ethnocentric sense that this Greek concept acquired in the 5th century BC. At the heart of Euripides' ethnopoetic transformation of the myth of Medea lies a cultural geography that the play conveys and questions at the same time. My paper will investigate how modern and contemporary variations of the tragedy (e.g. Hans Henny Jahnn, Robinson Jeffers, Pier Paolo Pasolini, Heiner Müller) adapt Euripides' ethnopoetics, thereby bearing witness to its continuing relevance.

Biography: Prof. Dr. Markus Winkler (Geneva), born in 1955 in Bonn, studied Romance languages and literatures, German literature, philosophy, and pedagogy in Bonn, Paris, and Lausanne. After acquiring his doctorate in Bonn, he became "maître assistant" at the University of Geneva (1983-1989), then "visiting scholar" at the University of Washington, Seattle (1990-1992). He was appointed associate professor, later full professor at the Pennsylvania State University (1992-1998). In 1996, he acquired his "Habilitation" at the University of Fribourg, Switzerland. Since 1998, he holds the position of Professor of German and Comparative Literature at the University of Geneva. He is President of the Swiss Association of Comparative Literature (since 2002). His research areas are: German and Comparative Literature from the Enlightenment to the present. For a list of his publications, see:
<http://www.unige.ch/lettres/alman/enseignants/moderne/winkler.html>

ETHNOPOETIC VERSIONS OF BRAZIL: FROM CLAUDE LÉVI-STRAUSS TO W.G. SEBALD

C. Moser
Universität Bonn

Abstract:

Biography: Christian Moser is Chair Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Bonn. He was Max Kade Distinguished Visiting Professor at Columbia University, New York, in 2007. From February 2008 until July 2009, he was Chair Professor of German Literature at the Universiteit van Amsterdam. Moser is President of the German Comparative Literature Association. He is co-editor of Komparatistik. Jahrbuch der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft and of the European Journal of Life Writing. Moser's current research interests lie in the fields of the history of subjectivity in its relation to historical changes in media technology, the semantics of the nature-culture-opposition in the 18th and 19th centuries, the cultural practices of collecting and discarding, and the cultural history of the line/linearity.

Recent book publications include: - Buchgestützte Subjektivität: Literarische Formen der Selbstsorge und der Selbstthermeneutik von Platon bis Montaigne. Tübingen: Niemeyer, 2006.

- Kannibalische Katharsis. Literarische und filmische Inszenierungen der Anthropophagie von James Cook bis Bret Easton Ellis. Bielefeld: Aisthesis, 2005.

- AutoBioFiktion. Konstruierte Identitäten in Kunst, Literatur und Philosophie. Bielefeld: Aisthesis, 2006 (co-edited together with Jürgen Nelles).

- Kopflandschaften. Landschaftsgänge. Kulturgeschichte und Poetik des Spaziergangs. Köln and Weimar: Böhlau, 2007 (co-edited together with Axel Gellhaus and Helmut J. Schneider).

- Automedialität. Subjektconstitution in Schrift, Bild und neuen Medien. München: Fink, 2008 (co-edited together with Jörg Dünne).

- Friedrich Schiller und die Niederlande. Historische, kulturelle und ästhetische Kontexte. Bielefeld: Aisthesis, 2012 (co-edited together with Eric Moesker and Joachim Umlauf).

S1 GLOBAL SHEN CONGWEN

FREUD IN HUNAN: THE CHALLENGE OF TRANSLATING SHEN CONGWEN'S "HSIAO-HSIAO"

E.C. Eoyang

Indiana University (emeritus)

Abstract: This paper will analyze the challenges of translating Shen Congwen's distinctly rural ethos, depicted in his short story, "Hsiao-Hsiao" ["Xiaoxiao"], into an English that is both plausible and suggestive. Among the issues to be considered are: Chinese appellations; rural vernacular; inept literatlisms. Relationships between characters over time, and through changes of status are crucial to this traditional story, which has, ironically, a distinctly modern valence. In reflecting on my translation of this short story, which appeared in Modern Chinese Stories and Novellas, 1919-1949, edited by Joseph S. M. Lau, C. T. Hsia, and Leo Ou-fan Lee (New York: Columbia U. P., 1981, pp. 227-236), I revisit the difficulties I encountered in rendering this poignant rural story into contemporary English. Three issues seemed crucial: the appellation for Hsiao-hsiao's ward, who would become her husband; the nicknames of the subsidiary characters; and what I perceived to be the chaste tone of the narration, neither satirical nor naive.

Biography: Eugene Chen EOYANG is Professor Emeritus of English, Translation, Humanities, and General Education at Lingnan University in Hong Kong as well as Professor Emeritus of Comparative Literature and of East Asian Languages & Cultures at Indiana University in the U. S. He was a co-founder of the journal, Chinese Literature: Essays, Articles, Reviews (CLEAR), and numbers among his publications, The Transparent Eye: Reflections on Translation, Chinese Literature, and Comparative Poetics (Hawaii), Coat of Many Colors: Reflections on Diversity by a Minority of One (Beacon Press), 'Borrowed Plumage': Polemical Essays on Translation (Rodopi), Two-Way Mirrors: Cross-Cultural Perspectives on Glocalization (Lexington Books) and The Selected Poems of Ai Qing (Foreign Languages Press/Indiana University Press). His translations have appeared in Sunflower Splendor: Three Thousand Years of Chinese Poetry edited by Irving Lo and Wu-chi Liu (Indiana University Press). He was elected President of the American Comparative Literature Association from 1995-1997. He was chair of the Intercultural Studies Committee of the International Comparative Literature Association from 1997 to 2004, and he was Vice President of the Fédération Internationale des Langues and Littératures Modernes (FILLM) in 2000-2006. He has been admitted as a Fellow to the Royal Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Commerce, and Merchandise. His book on comparative literature, The Province and Premise of Creativity: Why Comparative Literature Matters, will be published by Continuum Books.

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF SHEN CONGWEN'S MASTERWORK, BIAN CHENG (BORDER TOWN) / BIAN CHENG (UNE BOURGADE À L'ÉCART), PAR SHEN CONGWEN: LES TRADUCTIONS EN ANGLAIS

J. Kinkley

St. John's University

Abstract: Bian cheng, a novella by Shen Congwen (1902-1988) written in 1933-34, is commonly considered the author's masterpiece. Along with his short story "Xiaoxiao," it is one of the most often translated works in his oeuvre. Four separate English translations of Bian cheng have appeared, in 1936, 1947 (reprint, 1982), 1962 (reprints, 1980 and 1981), and 2009, in quite different eras of Sino-Western cultural interaction. All appear to have been undertaken by friends and acquaintances of the author, which is perhaps their greatest common thread, given the very different publishing venues. The first translation, titled Green Jade and Green Jade and undertaken by Emily Hahn and Shing Mo-lei (identified only decades later as the major writer Shao Xunmei), appeared in China in a cosmopolitan English-language magazine of Chinese culture edited by Chinese, T'ien Hsia Monthly. One cannot help speculating that the novella's publication was partly intended to present it in English as a "true Chinese" complement, or perhaps rejoinder, to Pearl Buck's novel of rural China, The Good Earth. The second translation, titled The Frontier City, was executed by Ching Ti (that is, Jin Di) and Robert Payne and published by George Allen and Unwin in London. This rendition, which is indebted to the previous translation, was undertaken at the height of Shen's reputation, after the war. Shen Congwen's literature was out of favor during most of the Maoist years, but a translation entitled The Border Town, done by Gladys Yang for the official Foreign Languages Press, appeared in 1962, during a relatively liberalized period when China was trying to recover from the radicalism of the Great Leap Forward. This translation was reprinted in 1980 and 1981, as part of China's post-Mao state-sponsored cultural opening-up. The most recent translation into English, by Jeffrey C. Kinkley (author of this essay), entitled Border Town, was able to appear in a commercial edition from HarperCollins thanks to a new (and short-lived) series devoted to Chinese fiction that was an achievement of Howard Goldblatt, the foremost contemporary translator of modern Chinese fiction into English. All the translations are competent or better. The persistent retranslation of the work, decade after decade, reflects the novella's literary quality and its lasting importance.

Friday, July 19, 2013

as judged by many different parties, who in their different generations have desired to put the work into their own idiom. It also reflects the periodic declines and revivals of the author's reputation in Sinophone and Anglophone cultures.

Biography: Jeffrey C. Kinkley is a professor of history at St. John's University.

S1 COMPARATIVE EPISTEMOLOGIES AND PERSPECTIVES ON "REALISM"

READING FOR THE TEST: THE TRIAL, THE NOVEL AND THE CURIOUS HEROINE

H.M. Schor
English

Abstract: This paper argues that there is a connection between women, curiosity and the novel; that this connection helps us to understand realism in some more complicated way; and that all of this is at the heart of modern feminism – that curiosity was present when feminism was born, and the novel was the vehicle of its arrival. It makes an historical argument about the gradual enfranchisement of women and expanding notions of legal personhood, and it develops these arguments through a rethinking of narrative theory, one that draws together the terms Roland Barthes laid out, “farewell, door, gift,” to tell a story of seduction, exchange and contract. Selves are made, bodies are traded, questions are asked and answered. By focusing in particular on the relationship between Ian Watt’s equation of formal realism with the mechanics of a trial, and the way that the plot of “maidens choosing” in Clarissa and Middlemarch undoes the easy notions of “legal realism,” I argue that it is the curious heroine who herself tests the novel – and with it provokes realism’s examinations of its own laws.

Biography: Hilary M. Schor is Professor of English, Comparative Literature and Law at the University of Southern California. She is currently a fellow at the Radcliffe Institute at Harvard University. She is the author of "Scheherezade in the Marketplace: Elizabeth Gaskell and the Victorian Novel" (Oxford, 1992) and "Dickens and the Daughter of the House" (Cambridge, 1999) and of articles on contemporary versions of Victorian culture and film adaptations. Her study of the realist novel, "Curious Subjects: Women and the Trials of Realism" is forthcoming from Oxford University Press.

REALIST PAINTING BETWEEN ART CRITICISM AND MASS REPRODUCTION

A. Higonnet
Barnard College

Abstract: French avant-garde painting proclaimed itself Realist in the middle of the 19th century. How did these claims rely on both the texts of art criticism and new possibilities for realism introduced by photography and mass-reproduced prints?

Biography: Anne Higonnet is Ann Whitney Olin professor of art history at Barnard College, Columbia University. She has written widely on nineteenth century painting, collecting, and childhood.

THE REALITY OF VALUE – THE VALUE OF THE REAL CREDIT ECONOMY AND THE EMERGENCE OF REALISTIC FICTION IN NINETEENTH CENTURY HUNGARY

S. Hites
Hungarian Academy of Sciences

Abstract: In recent decades the interdependence of financial and aesthetic exchange has been intensely studied with regard to the monetary and literary histories of 18-19th European cultures, claiming that the need to distinguish between valid and invalid monetary instruments became the ground for all distinctions between fictionality and factuality. As paper-credit set new fictional/factual distinctions in terms of wealth, novels brought about a new division between imaginary and real in terms of literary representation. Credit, that is, belief, both in finance and the novel, equally claiming to represent reality, depended on the same medium, writing. The new types of monetary writing (exchange bills, bank notes, credit certificates) were texts themselves, and required very circumspect reading strategies. Paper-money, a form of credit, was deprived of its material basis (specie), and unlike the gold or silver coin which designated a substantial value, it came to represent a value the reality of which was absent in exchange. As such, the acceptance of the representational validity of both paper-money and the novel required a “willing suspension of disbelief”. My paper is concerned with 1) how realistic fiction in mid-19th century Hungarian literature emerged concurrently with the introduction of a paper-based financial system, 2) how paper-based monetary instruments were to represent value, and how novels were to represent (social, economic, and financial) reality, 3) how the insights concerning the developments in Western cultures might be applied to or confronted with 19th century Hungarian literary and financial history.

Biography: Education 1993-1998: Eötvös Loránd University (ELTE, Budapest), Hungarian Literature and Linguistics – Philosophy (1994-1996) 1998-2001: ELTE Doctoral School 2005: PhD degree (summa cum laude) at ELTE Positions held 2002 – present: research fellow, Hungarian Academy of Science 2000, 2011: ELTE, Department of Comparative Literary Studies Membership in professional associations Modern Language Association (MLA) 2011 – Present International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA) 2010 – Present International Association of Hungarian Studies (IAHS) 2005 – Present Fellowships 2001: Erasmus Fellowship, University of Amsterdam 2009: Visiting Fellow, University of London School of Advanced Studies, Institute of Germanic and Romance Studies 2011: Visiting Fellow, Institute for Advanced Studies in the Humanities (IASH), University of Edinburgh

POLITICAL FICTION AS A FORM OF THE NOVEL

E. Apter

New York University

Abstract: Drawing on Stendhal's La Chartreuse de Parme, Flaubert's L'Education Sentimentale and Zola's Son Excellence Eugène Rougon this paper will develop a theory of political fiction related to, but distinct from the historical novel. The focus will be on defining the literary form of "politics small 'p,'" featuring the microphenomenology of political life. This is a subgenre – a kind of political "realism" informed by the random motion of political back-stories, conspiracy and calculation. Gossip, accounts of forgotten scandals, descriptions of ephemeral social interaction, these textual elements perform maximally as openings onto forms of political reason. They are not just political "filler" (intangible and inconsequential); they give shape to historical contexts defined by the take-off of economic world-systems, crises of governmentality, financial debacle, defeat in war, civil disorder, strikes and attentats, colonial expansionism, new forms of xenophobia, democratic leisure, and a burgeoning mass media fully participant in the spread of journalistic irony and political fraudulence.

Biography: Areas of Research/Interest: 19th- and 20th-century French and comparative literatures; Francophone studies; cultural studies; critical theory.

External Affiliations: Editor of a book series, Translation/Transnation, Princeton University Press, and serves on the editorial boards of PMLA, Comparative Literature, October and Signs.

Fellowships/Honors: Guggenheim Fellow (2003), Mellon, Rockefeller, ACLS, NEH, College Art Association.

S1 PRESIDENTIAL PANEL — COMPARATIVE LITERATURE/WORLD LITERATURE : RECONSIDERED / LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE/LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE : NOUVEAUX EXAMENS

WORLD LITERATURE/COMPARATIVE LITERATURE - INTRODUCTION TO THE DISCUSSION

S. Sondrup
Brigham Young University

Abstract: World Literature/Comparative Literature — Introduction to the debates

Biography: Steven Sondrup – Professor, Brigham Young University

AVANT-PROPOS/FOREWORD

G.E.P. Gillespie¹, J. Bessière²
¹*Stanford University*, ²*Université Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3*

Abstract: Avant-propos/Foreword/

Biography: Gerald Gillespie, Professor Emeritus, Stanford University, and/et Jean Bessière, Professeur émérite, Université Sorbonne Nouvelle Paris III

BY LAND OR SEA: MODELS OF WORLD LITERATURE

H. Saussy
University of Chicago

Abstract: The conversation about world literature initiated by Goethe and prolonged by Marx, Engels, and contemporary world-systems theorists emphasizes the motif of "exchange"-- making the trade in literary products a concomitant, perhaps even a consequence, of the trade in commodities. Subtly written into the narrative of exchange is an assumption that exchange occurs primarily through sea transport. What though of the translations and adaptations impelled by the growth of land empires, primarily in Asia? Dostoevsky's Pushkin oration will lead us in search of variant models of cultural cosmopolitanism.

Biography: Haun Saussy, Professor, University of Chicago

S1: LES RAPPORTS LITTÉRAIRES ENTRE LA FRANCE ET LE BRÉSIL

PRÉSENCE FRANÇAISE DANS LA POÉSIE BRÉSILIENNE

M.L. Berwanger da Silva

Universidade Federal do Rio Grande do Sul

Abstract: La lecture symbolique de la Poesie Bresilienne, de sa fondation au Contemporain, met en evidence la presence d auteurs francais sous forme de parole avouee et inavouee laquelle l Histoire de la Litterature Bresilienne n a encore signale que tres partiellement. Fixant comme objectif primordial l inscription de ces traces etrangeres, cette etude se destina a configurer le paysage poetique textuel et transtextuel, explicite et implicite de cette cartographie tout en contribuant a demarquer la productivite de ces presences considerees comme mediation efficace non seulement a la reecriture de l histoire litteraire bresilienne vue sous l egide de l Alterite, mais aussi basee sur le constat que, ce faisant, cette etude favorisera l inclusion de la production du Bresil dans la Litterature Mondiale.

Biography: Maria Luiza Berwanger da Silva est Docteur en Litterature Comparee par l Universidade Federal do Rio Grande do Sul (1995) et a fait un post doctorat aussi en Litterature Comparee a l Universite de Paris 3, Sorbonne Nouvelle (2010). Ses principales publications sont les livres Paisagens Reinventadas, tracos franceses no Simbolismo Sul-Rio-Grandense (1999) et Paisagens do Dom e da Troca, presencas francesas na Literatura Brasileira (2009). Recemment, elle a publie les essais Litterature Bresilienne entre production et reflexion (dans Etudes Reunies, par Jean Bessiere, 2011) et Paysages Poetiques du Bresil Contemporain (dans Vers une geographie culturelle, website de l Universite de Paris 3, Sorbonne Nouvelle, 2012).

O BRASIL E OS BRASILEIROS NA POÉTICA DE ELUARD

B.R.R.D. CUNHA

UNIVERSIDADE FEDERAL DE UBERLÂNDIA

Abstract: O Brasil e os brasileiros na poetica de Eluard Betina Ribeiro Rodrigues da Cunha - Ufu -razil Resumo Esta proposta de comunicação visa apresentar pontos e elementos de contato entre o poeta Paul Eluard e os Brasileiros, mais especificamente Cicero Dias e Manuel Bandeira, percebendo como sua relação desenvolveu-se a partir de uma visão utópica, apaixonada e profundamente lírica do Brasil. A relação entre eles desenvolveu-se a partir de uma inter-relação entre suas produções artísticas e um diálogo, até então inédito, entre as diversas linguagens artísticas empregadas pelos três e que, no entanto, se imbricavam em busca de uma mesmo sentido sensível. Por outro lado, esse trabalho permite ainda resgatar, inclusive através da apresentação de alguns documentos pertencentes a Dias, a amizade do pintor com os surrealistas e seu papel na resistência francesa, fatos esse que, disponibilizados por Cícero, em entrevista com essa pesquisadora, atestam e consolidam o papel dos brasileiros na recuperação de um recorte – incluindo ai uma homenagem de Eluard a Luis Carlos Prestes e sua coluna – artístico e cultural.

Biography: B.R.R.D. CUNHA - Possui graduação em Letras pela Universidade Federal de Uberlândia, cursos de Especialização no Canadá e Antilhas, Maîtrise ès Lettres na Universidade de Nice (França), Mestrado e Doutorado em Letras, pela Universidade de São Paulo, e pós-doutoramento em Literatura Comparada pela Universidade Federal do Rio de Janeiro. Como professora da Universidade Federal de Uberlândia ocupou diferentes cargos administrativos e desempenhou funções docentes em diversas áreas afins, sobremaneira na área de Literaturas, Língua e Ling. Aplicada. Atualmente, como docente associado e efetivo da Universidade Federal de Uberlândia, desenvolve atividades, na graduação, na área de Língua e Lit. Francesa; na pos graduação, comparece como professor permanente do quadro do Mestrado, orientando e participando de grupos de pesquisa, respondendo, inclusive, como Coordenadora do Mestrado em Teoria Literária. Atua também como avaliadora do Instituto Nacional de Estudos e Pesquisas Educacionais Anísio Teixeira (INEP) e como membro do corpo de supervisores de avaliação da SEED/MEC. Tem experiência na área de Letras, Educação, com ênfase em Literatura, Teoria da Literatura, Língua Francesa e Portuguesa, Metodologia e Práticas, atuando - inclusive com diversas publicações - nos seguintes temas: narrativa, discurso literário, análise do discurso, estudos culturais, literatura francesa e brasileira, história da comunicação e práticas de ensino. Cabe ainda realçar a participação, como Membro, da Rede CO3 - Rede Centro-Oeste de Ensino e Pesquisa em Artes, Cultura, Tecnologias Contemporâneas.

MICHEL BUTOR ET ALEIJADINHO, LE STROPIAT.

M. Arbex-Enrico

Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais/CNPQ/FAPEMIG

Abstract: Depuis que Blaise Cendrars a réalisé le désormais célèbre voyage à Minas Gerais, en 1924, en compagnie des amis modernistes brésiliens, le regard des poètes et des écrivains français n'ont cessé de se tourner vers cette région de l'intérieur du Brésil où fleurit l'art baroque. Michel Butor est un de ces écrivains-voyageurs qui a eu l'occasion de visiter le Sanctuaire de Bom Jesus de Matozinhos, à Congonhas, lors de sa première visite au Brésil en 1967, comme en témoigne l'entretien qu'il a accordé au Suplemento Literário. Sur le parvis de l'église, l'écrivain a pu contempler le travail d'Antônio Francisco Lisboa, plus connu sous son pseudonyme Aleijadinho — le stropiat —, ce sculpteur et architecte fils d'un maître maçon portugais et d'une esclave, né à Ouro Preto en 1730 (-1815), qui a réalisé les sculptures des douze prophètes dont le style et la force expressive sont incomparables. Butor affirme avoir d'abord connu l'artiste à travers des informations trouvées dans des livres, mais d'avoir vu de près ses travaux a néanmoins provoqué en lui un choc. Le résultat de ce premier impact se trouve dans le texte Dans le miroir du Boomerang (Le Génie du lieu 3) dédié au "stropiat", texte que nous comptons examiner dans cette communication, en particulier le recours à la ventriloquie, à la polyphonie textuelle, aux intertextes utilisés par Butor dans la composition de sa vision littéraire de l'oeuvre de l'artiste brésilien. À partir d'une première cartographie des relations de l'écrivain avec le Brésil, notre objectif consiste aussi à apporter des éléments de réflexion sur le thème des relations entre la littérature française et l'art brésilien.

Biography: Márcia ARBEX-ENRICO est Professeure de Littérature Française et de Littérature comparée à la Faculté de Lettres de l'Université Fédérale de Minas Gerais (UFMG), Brésil; Chercheur au CNPq (Conseil National de Développement Scientifique et Technologique) et à FAPEMIG (Fundação de Amparo à Pesquisa do Estado de Minas Gerais). Ses recherches portent sur les rapports entre le texte et l'image dans la littérature moderne et contemporaine. Elle a conclu son Doctorat ès Lettres à la Sorbonne Nouvelle Paris III en 1994 et a réalisé un Post-doctorat au Centre d'étude de l'écriture et de l'image (CEEI), Université Denis Diderot - Paris 7 en 2002. Elle a publié divers articles et dirigé des ouvrages dont le plus récents: Interartes (2010), Poéticas do Visível : ensaios sobre a escrita e a imagem (2006). Un livre intitulé Alain Robbe-Grillet e a pintura: jogos especulares est prévu pour 2012, ainsi que la publication des Actes du Colloque International L'Univers Butor, organisé en 2011 à l'UFMG, Brésil.

MARGUERITE DURAS: "C'EST TOUT"?

R.T. Rodrigues

Universidade Estadual do Centro-oeste Paraná

Abstract: Recherche sur la réception de l'oeuvre de Marguerite Duras par la critique brésilienne. L'étude, qui définit les lignes générales de cette réception, est fondée sur quelques principes théoriques de l'Esthétique de la Réception et sur les principes définies par Le modèle d'interprétation proposé pour Fredric Jameson. Le "corpus" comprend des documents critiques publiés dans les principaux journaux et quelques hebdomadaires du pays, pendant la période comprise entre 1963 et 1997. L'analyse désigne les oeuvres de Marguerite Duras qui ont attiré l'attention des lecteurs brésiliens représentés par les critiques littéraires, elle réunit des informations qui contribuent à mieux comprendre la situation de la critique littéraire brésilienne, aussi bien que révèle des aspects de l'horizon d'attente de cette même critique au moment de la réception. La bibliographie comprend des références aux textes de Duras qui ont été traduits et publiés au Brésil, aussi bien qu'aux principaux textes écrits par des critiques brésiliens sur l'écrivain français et qu'aux oeuvres consultées envisageant la fondation théorique de la recherche.

Biography: Mme Rodrigues, Raquel Terezinha, Diplômée en littérature de l'Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina (UFSC), maîtrise en littérature de l'Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina (UFSC) et docteur en littérature (la théorie littéraire et littérature comparée) de l'Université de São Paulo (USP). Occupe actuellement le poste de professeur adjoint, Universidade estadual do Centro-oeste (Paraná), possède une expérience dans la littérature, en mettant l'accent sur la théorie littéraire, agissant sur les sujets suivants: l'accueil critique, Marguerite Duras, Miguel Torga, mémoires, autobiographies, les littératures d'expression portugaise.

S1 BOOK – MATERIAL – TEXT

INTRODUCTION

S. Heimgartner, C.A. Bachmann
Ruhr-Universität Bochum

Abstract: In recent times, the literary text is not only represented in the medium we are all used to: the book. Instead, we face a development that detaches texts from a physical surface and presents them in virtual form: on ebook readers – which at least outwardly suggest a similarity to the old physical object – or even online. The medial change affects the process of reading, or at least readers report about it doing so. Naturally, it will also lead to a change in the conditions of production and commercialization of literature. A short outlook on these developments will open up a frame for the presentations of this congress section and present a perspective for further discussion.

Biography: Stephanie Heimgartner is currently teaching Comparative Literature at Ruhr University in Bochum/Germany. She has worked as an editor after earning a master degree from Dalhousie University (Halifax/Canada) and a PhD in German and Italian Philology from Ruprecht-Karls-Universität in Heidelberg/Germany. Her main areas of her interest include lyrical poetry and book editing. Christian A. Bachmann is research associate (Wissenschaftlicher Mitarbeiter) with the DFG-financed research project 'Das Künstlerbuch als ästhetisches Experiment', and assistant lecturer in the Department of Comparative Literature at Ruhr University Bochum, Germany. He has studied Comparative Literature and Linguistics in Bochum and is currently working on a doctoral thesis concerning comic books. He runs a publishing company focusing on literary studies, cultural studies, and comic book studies (www.christian-bachmann.de).

TEXTUAL IMMATERIALITY VS THE MATERIALITY OF THE BODY

I. Krzywkowski
Université Stendhal-Grenoble 3

Abstract: Since I could not find the announced four keynotes, I hope that my proposition for a short presentation of 10 min. cross one of the four seminar sessions (that I will try to follow anyway). Within the general question on the (im)material / (im)materiality of the digital work, and the new relationship which it infers in the reading as in the practice, I would like to think about the place of the body. If, as notices it Mario Costa, "the technology transformed the notion of body", we can also make the hypothesis, with Jean-Pierre Bobillot, that "the more virtual there is, the more the real presence is necessary". I shall quickly present the works of several authors who attempt to recreate a materiality of the reading, as if it was there a question of "compensating" the immateriality of the work with the "tangible" character of the experience: incitement to a "gesticulation" during the reading (Annie Abrahams, Natalie Bookchin, Philippe Bootz, etc.) or to a movement (Jean-Pierre Balpe, Eduardo Kac, etc.), so as to move the reading act closer to a kind of performance.

Biography: Isabelle KRZYWKOWSKI is Professeure de littérature generale et comparee at the University Stendhal-Grenoble 3, and assistant director of the Centre de recherche sur l'imaginaire (CRI). After a doctoral thesis concerning "The Garden of the dreams. Study on the symbolism of the garden in the literature and the iconography at the end of the 19th century in Europe", she concentrate for several years her researches on the historic avant-gardes ("Le Temps et l'Espace sont morts hier". Les Annees 1910-1920. Poesie et poetique de la premiere avant-garde, Paris, Editions L Improviste, 2006) and on the relations between the literature, the arts and the technologies (Machines a ecrire. Litterature et technologies du XIXe au XXIe siecle, Grenoble, ELLUG, 2010), around the more general question of experimental literatures. It is in this frame that she was interested in the digital literatures. She makes the hypothesis that the literary experiment is bound with the exploration of a medium (whatever it is), and that this approach is particularly obvious in the moments of technological changes.

SPEED READING ON THE INDEXICAL HIGHWAY: A SEARCH FOR HISTORICAL ANALOGS

A. Carr
Université de Montréal

Abstract: As Roger Chartier points out in Culture écrite et société, our contemporary "electronic text" revolution is also a revolution in reading practices. Although book and media scholars continue to probe the current shift from page to screen by considering the print incunabula in the late 15th century to early 16th century, by framing our current shift first and foremost as a revolution in reading, Chartier invites a comparative analysis that predates the emergence of print culture. If the revolution underway is a revolution in reading practices, then the transition from book to screen may share more in common with an earlier revolution in reading-- one that took place in medieval Europe, signalled by the then-new proliferation of reading aids that included concordances, indexes, pagination and tables. Indeed, Ivan Illich describes the 12th century development of alphabetical book indexes as a watershed moment analogous to the introduction of the alphabet in ancient Greece; in this transition, he maintains, a "cultural impulse, a mental purpose, and a graphic device combine to achieve something unprecedented." If we are now undergoing another major revolution in reading, it is arguably one being driven not by a shift from page to screen but rather by another proliferation of reading aids--in this case, digital finding aids that enable readers to rely even less on their own memory and to locate information at an unprecedented pace. This paper examines what is at stake in shifting our comparative analysis from one mainly centered on the primacy of the text to the paratextual, technological devices used to navigate them, and specifically, how paying attention to earlier analogs in the history of reading might inform current investigations of the epistemological implications of digital reading practices.

Biography: Angela Carr is a writer and translator currently completing a PhD in Comparative Literature at the University of Montreal. She is the author of two books of poetry, most recently The Rose Concordance; her third book will be published in late 2013 by BookThug in Toronto. She has also translated a book of poetry, Coit (from the French of Quebecoise writer Chantal Neveu), also forthcoming with BookThug.

SAFRAN FOER'S THE TREE OF CODES (2010), BOOK DESIGN, AND DIGITAL SCULPTURING

T.G. Rapatzikou
Aristotle University of Thessaloniki

Abstract: This paper is going to focus on Jonathan Safran Foer's The Tree of Codes (2010), a book that stands in between past and future book-making practices and literary traditions. Based on Bruno Schulz's The Street of Crocodiles (1934), Foer constructs a sculpted book experience but with a twist. His book and the story contained in it has been carved out of Schulz's narrative, creating thus not simply another version of Schulz's stories but a material object within which language takes on tangible qualities by exposing its recombinatory, intra-genre and translatable ability through the intervention of various print and digital practices. With Foer's book being a transmedial object, if one considers the printing (offset/digital) and sculpting/crafting techniques it combines in addition to the kind of text it features, it invites readers to re-evaluate the semantic, material and technological significance of the book form not as a mere container of texts but as a generative mechanism that triggers different effects. Foer's digitally designed holed-out pages allow for different word arrangements to be made both on a semantic and visual level, echoing Johanna Drucker's words when she claims that "even in its most conventional format, the book is a sculptural object. It has spatial dimensions, material qualities and a complex structure" (qtd. in Vogler, "When a Book is not a Book" 457). By moving across narrative practices and languages, if one takes into account Foer's use of the translated version of Schulz's original Polish text, Foer manages to assemble a mass-produced, digitally-designed and crafted object that moves beyond a mere book artifact in an attempt to pave the path for further experimentation in the realm of book design and literary textuality after the intervention of the digital. As for the title itself, it highlights the branching out of Foer's book into an intermediated causality of relations, juxtaposing and interrelating "systems of representation," "modes of representation, particularly analog and digital," and "interfaces connecting humans with intelligent machines that are our collaborators in making, storing, and transmitting informational process, and objects" (Hayles, My Mother was a Computer 33). This paper wishes to address the materiality of the book form in conjunction with digital coding in the way language is patterned, disseminated, and rearranged as it moves between various media by pushing the literary and reading experience onto a different level of interaction and appreciation. Foer's intermediated book allows access to a network of perspectives and insights as to how materiality, artistic practice, print design, digital coding and textuality can lead to a novel codex as well literary experience.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Tatiani G. Rapatzikou is Assistant Professor in the Department of American Literature and Culture at the School of English of the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece. Her teaching and research interests focus on contemporary American fiction and poetry, cyberculture/cyberpunk, the technological uncanny, postmodernist writing and print/digital convergence. In summer 2009, she was a Fulbright Visiting Scholar at the M.I.T. Comparative Media Studies program. She has published a monograph under the title Gothic Motifs in the Fiction of William Gibson (Rodopi, 2004) as well as essays in journals and edited volumes, encyclopedic entries, and books reviews. She has edited two collections of essays and co-edited special issues for the peer-reviewed journals Writing Technologies, Gamma: Journal of Theory and Criticism and European Journal of American Culture. She is currently (Spring 2012) a visiting scholar at the Literature Program, Duke University, U.S.A., and currently works on a monograph on enhanced narrative experience in contemporary American fiction.

S1: COMPARATISME ET INTERMÉDIALITÉ

INTRODUCTION

C.E. Paul

Université de Mannheim

Abstract: À la suite d'Irina O. Rajewsky, la recherche s'accorde généralement pour qualifier d'« intramédiales » les relations entre deux œuvres relevant du même système sémiotique, et d'« intermédiales » les relations entre deux œuvres relevant de systèmes sémiotiques différents[1]. Or, comme stipulé dans l'appel à communication, l'intermédialité est une discipline relativement jeune et dont l'assise théorique et lexicale reste encore à construire. Il existe déjà de nombreux termes pour désigner les différents types de relations médiatiques au sein d'objets précis (conjonction de plusieurs média, recyclage de pratiques, adaptation, convergence, interaction, assimilation progressive, etc.). Or, plus que la désignation des types d'emprunt, nous souhaitons proposer une réflexion sur le statut de l'œuvre finale par rapport à ses œuvres-sources. En contexte générique, c'est-à-dire dans le cadre de la réception d'une œuvre, le lexique préexistant est lui aussi extrêmement abondant. Ainsi, comme le rappelle Christophe Zuschlag, le chercheur peut recourir aux termes de « réplique, copie, variation, version, reproduction, citation, paraphrase, parodie, travestissement, persiflage, pastiche, allusion, influence, plagiat, contrefaçon, hommage, etc.^[2] » pour définir et classer les rapports entre une œuvre-source et ses œuvres secondaires. Mais outre le fait que leur définition change selon les critiques, ces dénominations sont, pour la majorité, issues de la terminologie littéraire qui porte exclusivement sur le système verbal. Dans quelle mesure leur utilisation est-elle appropriée lorsque l'on aborde la question sous un angle intermédiaire ? Dire que La Traviata est une « variation lyrique » de La Dame aux Camélias d'Alexandre Dumas suffit-il à rendre du compte de la transformation complexe subie par l'œuvre-source ? Et quelles sont les implications de cette transformation ? Sont-elles uniquement d'ordre esthétique ou bien ont-elles également trait aux enjeux de l'œuvre romanesque ? De la même façon, le terme, extrêmement répandu, d'« illustration » n'est-il pas discutable dans la mesure où toute transcription visuelle d'une œuvre ne se réduit pas forcément à son illustration ? Sur ce point, nous pourrions citer en exemple les lithographies faustiennes de Delacroix, qui prennent le contrepied de l'œuvre goethéenne « illustrée ». Dans notre communication nous souhaiterions proposer, pour favoriser la réévaluation de ces œuvres si riches et si complexes, un lexique qui permette d'emblée de marquer la distinction entre, par exemple, une illustration servile et une mise en image audacieuse, ou encore une simple adaptation à la scène et une transposition dramatique originale. En effet, la pensée se développe dans une certaine mesure en fonction des mots dont elle dispose pour s'exprimer. Sans vocabulaire adapté, il sera difficile d'interroger le regard que nous portons sur ces « adaptations originales ». Notre projet ne répond pas à la volonté de participer à l'inflation taxinomique à l'œuvre dans le monde de la recherche mais à rendre à certaines formes artistiques leurs lettres de noblesse : toutes les illustrations et les adaptations d'une œuvre n'entretiennent pas avec leur « modèle » un même rapport. L'introduction d'un lexique adéquat pourrait permettre d'éviter des confusions nuisibles ou de négliger la dimension originale de certaines productions, une tendance qui a longtemps fait tort aux œuvres visuelles. Un certain nombre d'exemples de relations génériques intermédiales issus des aires culturelles francophone, anglophone et germanophone illustrera notre propos. Nous espérons que notre lexique, qui se veut simple et innovant, permettra de faciliter l'appréhension du dialogue entre les arts et entre les œuvres et contribuera à décloisonner et redynamiser la réflexion sur le dialogue des arts pour favoriser les échanges entre monde de la recherche et amateurs éclairés.

[1] Cf. Irina O. Rajewsky : Intermedialität, Tübingen, Basel, A. Francke, Reihe « UTB ; 2261 », 2002, p. 199. [2] Cf. Christoph Zuschlag : « Vom Kunstzitat zur Metakunst. Kunst über Kunst im 20. Jahrhundert », in : Wettstreit der Künste. Malerei und Skulptur von Dürer bis Daumier, hrsg. Ekkehard Mai und Kurt Wettengl, Wolfratshausen, Edition Minerva, 2002, p. 171-189, cité par Christoph Zuschlag, « Auf dem Weg zu einer Theorie der Interikonizität », op. cit., p. 90. Nous traduisons « Replik, Kopie, Variation, Version, Reproduktion, Zitat, Paraphrase, Parodie, Travestie, Persiflage, Pasticcio, Allusion, Einfluss, Plagiat, Fälschung, Hommage, usw. ».

Biography: Après avoir obtenu, en 2008, un Master de littérature française et un Master de littérature germanique, M^{me} Claude Paul a été reçue première au concours des allocations de recherche de son école doctorale. En 2011, elle a été élevée au grade de docteur pour sa thèse de littérature générale et comparée sur « Le Faust de Goethe. Etude de réception intermédiaire comparée du personnage diabolique (Méphistophélès) dans les aires culturelles germanophone et francophone (1775-1870) », thèse réalisée en cotutelle à l'Université de Metz et à l'Université de la Sarre. M^{me} Paul a ensuite été chargée de cours en littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Francfort-sur-le-Main. Elle occupe actuellement un poste de maître de conférence (wissenschaftlicher Mitarbeiter) à l'université de Mannheim. Parallèlement à cette activité d'enseignement, elle a poursuivi ses recherches centrées sur les relations intermédiales en contexte interculturel et publié à ce sujet un certain nombre d'articles dans des revues et des actes de colloque.

INTERARTIALITÉ, INTERDISCURSIVITÉ, INTERMÉDIALITÉ. L'APPROCHE COMPARÉE MONTRÉLAISE DES LETTRES, DES ARTS ET DES TECHNIQUES

P. Despoix
Université de Montréal

Abstract: La communication s'attachera à montrer comment une approche comparatiste peut contribuer non seulement à (re)définir le concept d'intermédialité mais aussi en quoi ce dernier peut aider à repenser les conceptions du comparatisme. Nous rappellerons comment les études intermédiales se sont, dans le contexte interuniversitaire bilingue montréalais, développées de manière différente de ce qui fut le cas en Europe - soit en s'appuyant en premier lieu sur un programme comparatiste élargi développé à l'Université de Montréal sous l'impulsion de Paul Zumthor ainsi que sur des études cinématographiques locales qui découvriraient comment l'étude du cinéma des premiers temps ouvrirait une perspective autre, «non-littéraire», sur ce médium. La conception comparatiste qui a présidé à Montréal à l'élaboration d'un nouveau concept d'intermédialité a été d'emblée non additive mais relationnelle et inclusive. A l'image du contexte multiculturel canadien, elle a procédé à un élargissement systématique de son champ non seulement aux littératures et aux arts non européens mais aussi à des formes littéraires et culturelles orales. En s'appuyant de plus sur la tradition interdisciplinaire de l'École de communication de Toronto, elle a assimilé la spécificité des techniques comme un facteur constitutif des médias (nouveaux ou pas) et de leur rôle culturel. Enfin la relative porosité disciplinaire du système universitaire canadien a été un facteur supplémentaire qui a contribué à rendre possible la création d'un Centre de recherche sur l'intermédialité (dès 1997) interfacultaire et relié à un important réseau international. Bien qu'en grande partie à l'initiative de comparatistes (ou d'anciens comparatistes), les recherches intermédiales se sont finalement moins développées à Montréal à partir d'un décloisonnement de l'interartialité traditionnelle qu'à travers un déplacement programmatique incluant tout autant cette dernière qu'une double approche interdiscursive ainsi qu'interculturelle s'intéressant à la relation de la littérature aux autres médias, y compris au sens technique du terme, et aux autres domaines discursifs et culturels en toutes conséquences interdisciplinaires. La formation du Centre de recherche fut suivi de la création d'une revue bilingue Intermédialités (en 2003) et, plus récemment, de celle d'un programme doctoral en Études littéraires et intermédiales géré par les comparatistes, en collaboration avec l'ensemble des philologies nationales, de l'histoire de l'art et des études cinématographiques et en communication. N'ayant pas l'espace pour développer une étude spécifique caractéristique de cette conception comparatiste de l'intermédialité, je me contenterai de mentionner les types de travaux et recherches qui s'effectuent dans un tel cadre.

Biography: PHILIPPE DESPOIX est professeur titulaire au Département de Littérature comparée de l'Université de Montréal. Il a obtenu son doctorat de l'École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales à Paris en 1987 suite à une double formation scientifique et philosophique. Il a par la suite enseigné la littérature comparée à l'Institut Peter Szondi de la Freie Universität de Berlin ainsi que comme professeur invité à New York University (1994), The University of Chicago (1998), comme professeur Ernst Cassirer de l'Université de Hambourg (2000), puis au Centre canadien d'études allemandes et européennes de l'Université de Montréal qu'il a dirigé entre 2003 et 2008. Senior fellow à l'Internationales Forschungszentrum Kulturwissenschaften de Vienne en 2009, il est aujourd'hui directeur de la revue Intermédialités. Histoire et théorie des arts des lettres et des techniques:

<http://www.littco.umontreal.ca/recherche/intermedialites/index.html> Il a, entre autres, publié Éthiques du désenchantement. Essais sur la modernité allemande au début du siècle (Paris 1995; éd. all. Bodenheim 1998), coédité les principales traductions des écrits de Siegfried Kracauer en français ainsi que les volumes Culture de masse et modernité (Paris 2001), Siegfried Kracauer, Penseur de l'Histoire (Paris-Québec 2006). On lui doit également la direction du projet dix-huitiémiste Crosscultural Encounters and Constructions of Knowledge in the 18th and 19th Century (Kassel 2004). Sa dernière monographie s'intitule Le monde mesuré. Dispositifs de l'exploration à l'âge des Lumières (Genève 2005; éd. all. Göttingen 2009). Ses recherches actuelles portent sur la fonction des médias dans les processus mémoriels et de transferts culturels. Il dirige au CCEAE le groupe de recherche «Médias et mémoire» qui a en particulier édité sous sa codirection : Arts de Mémoire – Matériaux, médias, mythologies (Montréal, 2007) ainsi que les numéros de revue «Mémoires de l'Allemagne divisée. Autour de la DEFA» (CiNéMAS, 18/1 2007); «Travailler–Harun Farocki» (Intermédialités, 11, 2008); «Les moyens techniques de l'art» (Revue de Synthèse, 2/3, 2008). Il prépare un ouvrage sur le médium photographique dans une perspective intermédiaire.

TRANS-, MULTI-, INTERMÉDIALITÉ : LA FICTION COMME DISPOSITIF

B. Tane
université de Toulouse

Abstract: Trans-, multi-, intermédialité : la fiction comme dispositif Le comparatisme pourrait être assuré d'avoir initié et développé les approches « croisées », notamment en articulant la littérature à d'« autres » arts. Cependant, non seulement d'autres disciplines, littéraires ou non, s'intéressent aux mêmes phénomènes et aux mêmes objets, qui ne sauraient être la propriété des uns ou des autres[1], mais il serait vain de croire que l'approche comparatiste puisse se réserver la perspective historique, géographique et culturelle. Pour ne pas se payer de mots et donner sa pleine place au comparatisme ; il faut entrevoir que l'intermédialité est le symptôme d'un phénomène qui est au fonctionnement même de la fiction. Le glissement terminologique qui s'est opéré, sans que les termes soient équivalents, entre « art », « modes » et « media », associés aux préfixes « inter- », « multi- » et « trans- »[2], indique bien que non seulement l'analyse ne doit pas ramener la fiction à son intrigue, sa fable, son texte comme le centre de variations garantissant la nature mythique de l'œuvre, mais à ses supports techniques : « le » media ne saurait ici oublier le medium, mis en avant par la médiologie, ainsi que continue à le montrer, d'une certaine façon, la revue Intermédialités[3]. C'est en ce sens que la théorie de la fiction doit être fondamentalement intermédiaire quant à ses objets et trans-médiale quant à ses approches[4]. La fiction, en tant que dispositif[5] qui engage des éléments hétérogènes, est travaillée par leurs interactions et par leurs disjonctions, au point que l'intervalle et l'intermédiaire y soient aussi centraux que ces composants mêmes[6]. Mais elle implique aussi plus largement une indicialité fondamentale et peut-être inaugurale : dans cette perspective, la fiction est moins indexée sur la représentation – la re-présentation d'un modèle idéal, fût-il réel – que sur la présentation d'éléments qui témoignent d'une expérience et engagent celui auquel elle se présente – ce n'est déjà plus un lecteur exclusivement, ce n'est plus même un « récepteur » passif. Pour le concevoir, l'ouverture du champ du comparatisme n'est pas seulement un atout mais une nécessité. Dans cette présentation, nous espérons pouvoir rendre compte d'un travail en cours et de longue haleine sur le sujet ; nous appuierons notre analyse sur un corpus transhistorique et transnational d'occurrences problématiques de traces – messages d'Hermès, pas de Vendredi, lettres de Madame de Merteuil[7] et jusqu'aux documents comme copiés-collés dans le roman multimodal contemporain ; elles sont thématiques et technicisées dans et par la fiction, à moins que ces empreintes, ces inscriptions, ces impressions ne soient la matrice même du fonctionnement fictionnel.

[1] Voir à ce sujet l'exemple du livre illustré, que j'ai esquissé dans mon intervention au congrès organisé en 2009 par la SFLGC sur le thème « Littérature comparée et esthétisme(s) » (« Un livre, des arts ? Esthétique et littérature comparée dans l'approche de l'illustration littéraire au XVIIIe siècle » ; <http://ufr-lacs.univ-provence.fr/cielam/node/591>). [2] Sur la question de la transposition, voir « L'œuvre offerte : littérature comparée et esthétique de la transposition (traduction, adaptation, illustration) », in Loxias (C.T.E.L. Centre transdisciplinaire d'épistémologie de la littérature, université de Nice), 2005 : <http://revel.unice.fr/loxias/document.html?id=697> [3] Voir la présentation de la revue : <http://www.intermedialites.ca/> [4] Sur l'actualité de cette approche, voir le colloque « Storyworlds across media », organisé en 2011 par l'Université de Mayence : <http://www.storyworlds.de/> [5] Je pense à Discours, image, dispositif, volume dirigé par Philippe Ortel (L'Harmattan, coll. « Champs visuels », 2008), et qui fait suite à La Littérature à l'ère de la reproductibilité technique, Pierre Piret dir., 2007. [6] Liliane Louvel parle par exemple du « Tiers pictural » comme ce qui se joue dans le rapport texte/image (Liliane Louvel, Le Tiers pictural. Pour une critique intermédiaire, P.U.R., 2010). [7] L'épistolarité pourrait à elle seule fournir matière à une démonstration sur l'intermédialité de la fiction ; selon son degré d'avancement, nous pourrions évoquer dans cette perspective le projet « Transpos/Laclos », que je développerai avec les étudiants de l'Université de Toulouse en 2012-2013.

Biography: Benoît Tane Ancien élève de l'ENS de Fontenay/Saint-Cloud, agrégé de lettres modernes, auteur d'une thèse sur l'illustration du roman au XVIIIe siècle (« Avec figures... » Roman et illustration au XVIIIe siècle ; Marivaux, Richardson, Rousseau, Rétif de la Bretonne (2004 ; publication en préparation). MCF en littérature générale et comparée à l'Université de Toulouse, chercheur au laboratoire LLA-CREATIS, il travaille sur les relations du texte et de l'image dans la fiction romanesque, notamment au XVIIIe siècle, et plus largement sur les interactions de la fiction et de ses supports (histoire du livre, phénomènes de transpositions...). Ouvrages : Lettres anglaises ; ou Histoire de Miss Clarisse Harlove [Clarissa, or the History of a young Lady, Richardson (1747-1748)] ; traduction d'Antoine Prévost d'Exiles (1751). Textes choisis et établis par Benoît Tane, introduction et notes de Stéphane Lojkine, choix d'illustrations du XVIIIe siècle, Presses universitaires de l'université Laval, Québec, 2007, 641 p. Choix de communications et articles récents : Octobre 2011 : « Des estampes d'illustration à la « littérature en estampes » : l'« autre » roman ? (Richardson, Hogarth, Töpffer) », colloque « Genres littéraires et peinture », org. Anne-Sophie Gomez, CELIS, Université Blaise-Pascal, Clermont-Ferrand. A paraître Mai 2011 : « Le modèle défiguré. Le supplément de la mère coupable : Julie, Rosine, Charlotte ». Communication au colloque « Le modèle de Julie », org. Geneviève Goubier et Stéphane Lojkine, CIELAM, Université de Provence, Aix. Publication en cours. Juin 2010 : « Pour une approche des figures. Entrer dans le roman illustré au XVIIIe siècle ». Communication au colloque « Texte & Image : la théorie au 21^e siècle », org. Sophie Aymes, Odile Bernez, T.I.L., Université de Bourgogne, Dijon. Publication dans Interfaces, n°32, automne 2011, pp. 33-48 ; accessible en ligne : <http://college.holycross.edu/interfaces/vol32/articles/Tane.pdf> Novembre 2009 : « Pierre Bayard et le 'Livre Imaginaire++'. Vision, image, imagination dans Les Liaisons dangereuses ». Communication au colloque « Comment parler des livres que l'on n'a pas lus ? Autour de Pierre Bayard », London Postgraduate French Studies Conference, King's College, Londres, org. Par Elise Aru, Cecile Bishop, Alex Robbins et Léa Vuong. Publication dans La Lecture littéraire, Revue de Recherche sur le régime littéraire de la lecture, n°11 La non-lecture, mars 2011, pp. 97-111.

FRUITFUL COMPARISONS: INTERNATIONAL INTERARTISTIC MODERNIST THEORY AND STYLE

W.B. Faris

University of Texas at Arlington

Abstract: Although it is by now an old chestnut of comparatist method, I would like to argue for the continuing relevance of interarts analysis, since it continues to unearth new perceptions regarding much studied artists as well as theories and styles, either within one culture or between different cultures. In the latter case, these analyses illustrate with new and illuminating examples the scope and coherence of modernism as an international movement. Such comparisons may concern, among other categories, the macro level of theoretical formulations and the micro level of textual details. I will illustrate these with analyses of several examples, among them the following. Benjamin, Bataille, Turner, Proust, and the Return of the Storyteller. In Turner's case the return of the "storyteller" at the macro level concerns the painter's position within the canvas, a small but intriguing example of which culminates in the (in)famous "varnishing days" at the Royal Academy during which the artist himself added finishing details to his canvases, watched by exhibition visitors, but more importantly, in the way Turner locates his and the viewer's virtual placement within the vortex of a painting's overall design; at the micro level, it manifests itself in the visible activity of brushstrokes and palette marks on the canvas. In Proust's case, the macro level involves the continual presence and reflections on his own and other writers' and artists' ideas and techniques, while the micro level concerns the lengthy and complex sentences detailing the recursive and endlessly convoluted passage of time, together with massively detailed descriptions that surpass the dictates of realistic representation. Even more specifically, Proust's desire to abolish temporal distinctions, merging past with present time, corresponds to Monet's analogous conflation of realms in space, such as can be seen especially in the late waterlily paintings, in which the viewer often has trouble distinguishing a clear horizon line, and which (in Proust's words) set waterlilies "flowering in the heart of the sky"; in both cases, we see the modernist preoccupation with the processes of seeing. My second example (which I will not detail here) will illustrate the similarities in theory and technique between the writings and texts of Virginia Woolf and Wassily Kandinsky, which document in new ways the international thrust of modernism because these artists have rarely been compared. As a coda to these particular modernist examples of the fruitfulness of interartistic analysis, I will survey several critical texts, such as Alexander Nehamas' Only a Promise of Happiness: The Place of Beauty in a World of Art, which argue for as they also document a resurgence of questions of beauty in contemporary criticism, and which further illustrate the crucial role that interartistic analysis can play in the location of analysis of particular styles of beauty in a given era.

Biography: 1967 B.A. Stanford University Field: Spanish Literature 1970 M.A. Harvard University Field: Comparative Literature 1975 Ph.D. Harvard University Field: Comparative Literature Books Carlos Fuentes. New York: Frederick Ungar, 1983. Labyrinths of Language: Symbolic Landscape and Narrative Design in Modern Fiction. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1988. Ordinary Enchantments: Magical Realism and the Remystification of Narrative. Nashville: Vanderbilt University Press, 2004. Edited, with Lois Parkinson Zamora, Magical Realism: Theory, History, Community. Durham: Duke University Press, 1995. Reprinted 1998. Articles related to conference presentation: "The 'Dehumanization' of the Arts: J. M. W. Turner, Joseph Conrad, and the Advent of Modernism." Comparative Literature, 41, iv (1989), 305-326. "Gold and Citron: The Exotic Primitivisms of Baudelaire and Gauguin, Gide and Matisse." Proceedings of the XIII Congress of the International Comparative Literature Association, Ziva Ben-Porat and Hana Wirth-Nesher, eds. The Force of Vision, Volume 1: Dramas of Desire. Roseann Runte and Hans R. Runte, eds., 420-25. Tokyo, Japan, n.d. (very late publication of 1991 congress). "Larger than Life: The Hyperbolic Realities of Gabriel García Márquez and Fernando Botero." Word & Image, 17, iv (2001), 339-59. "Bloomsbury's Beasts: The Presence of Animals in the Texts and Lives of Bloomsbury." The Yearbook of English Studies, vol. 37 (2007), 107-125. Co-authored (with Steven F. Walker), "Latent Icons: Compensatory Symbols of the Sacred in Modernist Literature and Painting." In Modernism. Vol. XXI of the International Comparative Literature Association's The Comparative History of Literatures in European Languages. Amsterdam and London: John Benjamins, 2007), vol 2, pp. 637-650.

S1: LITERATURE AND MEDICINE

LITERATURE AND MEDICINE, MEDICAL HUMANITIES, AND THE COMPARATIVE METHOD

A.H. Jones

University of Texas Medical Branch

Abstract: When I joined the faculty of the Institute for the Medical Humanities (IMH) of the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston in 1979, I was both a comparatist and a pioneer in the newly emerging field of literature and medicine in American medical education. Perhaps because the practice of literature and medicine was so new at that time, it was two decades before I was challenged by my IMH colleagues and graduate students to articulate how my training in comparative literature—or more specifically my “methodology”—had prepared me for the work that I was then doing in medical humanities. As I accepted their challenge and looked back at the theories and methods of comparative literature I had studied as a graduate student, I came to a renewed awareness and appreciation of the openness and flexibility of mind that the study of comparative literature can foster. In this 2013 AILC/ICLA workshop, I will argue that the comparative method is excellent preparation for work in medical humanities because it begins by recognizing the importance of understanding differences—not only among individuals, cultures, and values, as they are represented in different languages and literatures, but also among ideas, disciplines, and ways of knowing. My argument for a natural affinity between the comparative method and the work of medical humanities relies, however, on my deep conviction that medicine is not a “hard science,” but, as Kathryn Montgomery Hunter has argued so persuasively, “a rational science-using activity in the service of the ill.” Medicine, that is to say, is a practice (some call it an art) that must use both narrative and scientific methods to attain its highest goals of providing humanistic care for all patients. The comparative method is exceptionally well suited to illuminate and foster an understanding of the complementary nature of these apparently opposed ways of knowing.

Biography: Anne Hudson Jones is Harris L. Kempner Chair in the Humanities in Medicine, Institute for the Medical Humanities (IMH), and Professor, Department of Preventive Medicine and Community Health, at the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston (UTMB), where she is also on the faculty of the Graduate School for Biomedical Sciences. For seven years (2004-2011), she served as Director of the Medical Humanities Graduate Program, which offers the only PhD in Medical Humanities in the United States. Before joining the UTMB faculty in 1979, she was Assistant Director of the Center for Programs in the Humanities at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in Blacksburg. She received her PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1974.

Jones was a founding editor of the journal Literature and Medicine (Johns Hopkins University Press), which she served as editor-in-chief for more than a decade. She has been active in a number of professional organizations, serving on the national Board of Directors of the American Medical Writers Association, 1987-88; as member and then Chair of the Executive Committee of the Literature and Science Division of the Modern Language Association in 1986-90; on the Council of the Society for Health and Human Values, 1995-98; and on the first Board of Directors of the American Society of Bioethics and Humanities, 1998-2000.

She has lectured throughout the world; served as a consultant to colleges and medical and nursing schools nationally and internationally; and published widely in both humanities and biomedical journals, from Academic Medicine to Woman's Art Journal. The Japanese translation of her Images of Nurses: Perspectives from History, Art, and Literature (University of Pennsylvania Press, 1988) was published in July 1997. She and Faith McLellan authored a series of feature essays on literature and medicine for the The Lancet (1996-97), and they were coeditors of the book Ethical Issues in Biomedical Publication (Johns Hopkins University Press, 2000). Jones was also an associate editor of Annals of Internal Medicine from 2000-2008.

Elected a Fellow of the American Medical Writers Association (AMWA), Jones received the association's President's Award in 1991. She received the McGovern Award of the American Osler Society in 1993. In 1999 she received the AMWA McGovern Award for Excellence in Medical Communication, and in 2000 she received the AMWA Harold Swanberg Distinguished Service Award. In 2003, she received the Nicholas E. Davies Memorial Scholar Award from the American College of Physicians. She was the inaugural recipient of UTMB's Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences Teaching Excellence in Medical Humanities Award in 2005, and was selected by the students to receive the award again in 2006 and 2011. In 2012, she received the Lifetime Achievement Award in Education from UTMB's Academy of Master Teachers.

Her research interests include the theory and practice of literature and medicine; graduate education in medical humanities; narrative ethics; narratives of mental illness; bioethics in film; and ethical issues in medical catastrophes. She is currently working on a narrative history of the traumatic events at Memorial Medical Center in New Orleans during and after Hurricane Katrina.

THE CHALLENGES OF TEACHING NARRATIVE MEDICINE

S.A. Henke

University of Louisville

Abstract: As modern medicine becomes increasingly dependent on new technologies, twenty-first-century patients feel disturbingly alienated. Why, they wonder, do physicians ignore a wealth of personal stories? Can empathy be taught to doctors in training? In 2007, I attended a workshop on Narrative Medicine organized by Dr. Rita Charon at Columbia Medical School. Two years later, I pioneered a course on Literature and Medicine at the University of Louisville Medical School, using Charon's Narrative Medicine: Honoring the Stories of Illness as a principal resource.

The pedagogy of narrative medicine requires a virtual leap of faith concerning the relevance of narratological theory to clinical practice. Charon offers empirical evidence that medical students introduced to narrative theories early in their careers tend to develop reflective skills that strongly influence the successful interpretation of patient case histories. She admits, however, that empathy cannot be directly taught and that an implicit paradox resides at the heart of a pedagogy which requires ambiguity tolerance rather than dichotomous thinking.

Poets, novelists, and autobiographers often expose the raw underbelly of human suffering, and writers who articulate pain by controlling trauma through scriptotherapy have a great deal to teach us all. Physicians might well profit from listening to the powerful resonance of narrative voices that counsel respect for each person's phenomenological life-world from the first moment of consciousness to the last. And that, finally, is all one might ask of a medical doctor--or, indeed, of a professor of English literature.

Biography: Suzette Henke (PhD Stanford) is Thruston B. Morton Senior Professor of Literary Studies at the University of Louisville. She has held visiting professorships in Finland, Italy, Australia, India, England, Israel and Denmark. She has published widely on Modern British and American Literature, Irish Literature, Women's Studies, Auto/Biography Studies, Critical Theory, and Postcolonial Literature. Her publications include Shattered Subjects: Trauma and Testimony in Women's Life-Writing (1998), James Joyce and the Politics of Desire (1990), Virginia Woolf and Trauma: Embodied Texts (2007), Women in Joyce (1982), in addition to edited volumes, journal issues, essays, journal articles, creative nonfiction, and poetry.

WHERE IS FANCY BRED? APPLYING LITERARY READING PRACTICES TO THE DISCOURSE OF PSYCHOSOMATIC ILLNESS

C. Farkas

Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences

Abstract: Psychosomatic illnesses—including somatic symptom disorders and illness anxiety (hypochondriasis)—present significant challenges in medical care. Although these illnesses are no longer considered forms of hysteria, the diagnostic criteria have long been either overly specific, or unhelpfully vague, frustrating both physicians and patients. In fact, researchers have found that somatic symptoms play a role in many patients' illnesses and cause them a great deal of distress—including the distress of feeling they are not taken seriously by their doctors. Somatic symptoms are at once a source of conflict and a site of profound miscommunication, where patients and providers struggle to find mutually-agreeable ways to "read" bodily distress. Why so much struggle? Somatic symptom disorders pose a problem that is inherently interdisciplinary, as both body and mind are involved in inextricable ways. However, until very recently, the discourse of somatic symptoms has been strictly divided along disciplinary lines. The diagnostic criteria are developed in one discipline (psychology), and then applied most often by another (medicine) to a group who have historically not had a very strong "disciplinary" claim: the patients themselves. Members of each discipline have very different forms of knowledge, not to mention very different beliefs and assumptions which shape—and hence constrain—what they can express, and even what they can notice, about "illness" and "wellness." The result is what Montgomery has referred to as a kind of "blind spot," where doctors and patients cannot communicate, because they simply cannot see, the point of view of the other. Literary reading practices have the potential to correct this blind spot. Although "literary" reading may once have implied a focus only on certain privileged art forms, in current practice, literary study is among the most interdisciplinary forms of enquiry, wherein practitioners try to understand all the discourses which affect our lives, including the central experiences of illness. Scholars in the medical humanities have done considerable work in recent years to make sense of the many ways in which doctors and patients create, interpret, and respond to discourses about illness and wellness. For example, as I will demonstrate in this presentation, literary reading practices can be applied to the professional-scientific “literature” used by researchers to study psychosomatic illness—how it is diagnosed and treated by healthcare providers, and (very importantly) experienced by patients; to narratives representing the patient point of view, including internet discussion boards, profiles in health magazines, memoirs, and fiction; and to other forms of popular culture which capitalize on illness in general, and psychosomatic illness in particular, for entertainment purposes—medical melodramas and sit-coms. Traditional approaches of close reading and rhetorical analysis, as well as newer approaches which deconstruct the cultural and ideological underpinnings of specific texts, allow us to identify and examine how patterns of ideas and beliefs create (mis)understanding. Readers trained in literary analysis can synthesize and challenge multiple, competing perspectives, including those found in both “professional” and “lay” sources (starting with the implications of the opposition created by those very terms). A central goal in such analysis is to find readings which bring attention to disciplinary biases, and in doing so, to overcome them—to create a new interdisciplinary discourse that all of us can use to think and communicate more humanely about body and mind, provider and patient, illness and wellness.

Biography:

Carol-Ann Farkas is an Associate Professor of English and Director of Writing Programs in the School of Arts and Sciences at Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences. She teaches first-year composition and literature, as well as elective courses in the 19th century British novel, and Literature and Medicine. Her scholarly work examines fictional representations of medical women in 19th century fiction as well as non-fiction representations of health in contemporary media. This presentation is part of a larger project on the discourse of psychosomatic illness in popular culture.

WRITING THE SELF, WRITING THE PATIENT: THE INTERSEX SUBJECT IN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL AND MEDICAL LITERATURE

S.M. Hilger

University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

Abstract: „Aus eines Mannes Maedchenjahren“, published under the pseudonym N.O. Body in Berlin in 1907, presents the autobiographical account of the intersex individual Martha/Karl Baer. Born in 1884 with ambiguous genitalia, which were first interpreted as female and later reinterpreted as male, the memoir describes Baer's negotiation of the medical, legal, and religious discourse of his/her time to solve the riddle of his/her enigmatic body. The ambivalence of gender is connected in myriad ways to the ambiguous position of the autobiographical genre, which not only records but also fictionalizes the circumstances shaping the subject's identity. This paper proposes to explore the discursive nature not only of the autobiographical text but also of medical writing, namely of the medical report on Baer written by Berlin sexologist Magnus Hirschfeld. This paper will investigate the implicit and explicit dialogue between patient and practitioner and the permeability of the medical report and the personal life story, two genres traditionally perceived as separate and self-contained.

Biography: Stephanie M. Hilger is Associate Professor of Comparative Literature and German at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research focuses on gender, class, and race in eighteenth-century British, French, and German literature. She is the author of Women Write Back: Strategies of Response and the Dynamics of European Literary Culture, 1790-1805 (2009). Her articles have appeared in journals such as Lessing Yearbook, Eighteenth-Century Studies, Colloquia Germanica, Neophilologus, College Literature, French Review, Seminar, and Women in German Yearbook. Her second book, The Warrior and the Traveler: Women in the French Revolution examines the depiction of socially and politically active women in German literature during the thirty-year period following the French Revolution. Her new project, Liminal Bodies: Intersexuality in Literary and Medical Discourses explores the representation of intersexuality in texts from the eighteenth to the twenty-first century. For this project, she was awarded a faculty fellowship from the Illinois Program for Research in the Humanities as well as a grant for study in a second discipline, allowing her to take coursework in embryology and genetics.

S1: CONCEPTS AND COMPARATIVE CRITICISM

HOMELAND, DISPLACEMENT AND REPLACEMENT IN COMPARATIVE LITERATURE: VOICES OF EASTERN-EUROPEAN SCHOLARS EXILED IN AMERICA

R. Eichel

University of Bucharest

Abstract: The phenomenon of exile rises multiple questions regarding culture, identity, mobility, continuity and change, and in the case of exiled writers and scholars, the discourse they practise can always be subject to an analysis which reveals the challenges of their status, the troubles of displacement and the intricate pattern of a personality adapting to a new cultural space, employing new strategies and new concepts. My paper deals with the trajectories of three Romanian scholars who built academic careers in the field of Comparative Literature in the United States of America, after leaving their home country in the late 60's and early 70's, due to the oppression of the communist regime: Thomas Pavel, Matei Calinescu and Virgil Nemoianu.

According to specialists, comparative literature and its discourse revolve around "unhomeliness" due to their very nature (Emily Apter, "Comparative Exile: Competing Margins in the History of Comparative Literature", in "Comparative Literature in an Age of Multiculturalism", ed. Charles Bernheimer, Johns Hopkins University Press, Baltimore and London, 1995, pp. 86-97); in other views, displacement acts as a tool for the enactment of certain concepts in theory, particularly relevant for the mobility of Eastern European theory: "Exile and emigration were the extreme embodiment of heterotopia and polyglossia" (Galim Tikhanov, "Why Did Modern Literary Theory Originate in Central and Eastern Europe? (And Why Is It Now Dead)", in "Common Knowledge", Volume 10, Issue 1, Winter 2004, Duke University Press, p. 68).

In discussing the works of Nemoianu, Calinescu and Pavel, one must take into consideration the double nature of "exilic consciousness" in their discourse: the "metaphorical" exile inherent to the condition of all comparatists, and the way in which it is intertwined with real exile. Displacement becomes, in their case, replacement of the Romanian ideological "scars" with the new "skin" of their host culture. The aim of my project is to explore the paths of these intellectuals from the "margin" to the "center" of Western culture: I am interested in the manner in which such voices of scholars coming from the outskirts of Europe managed to legitimize their critical discourse and at the same time to place their own identity under the lens of analytical thought. Reflections on both sides of space and culture polarities (totalitarian and democratic, Eastern and Western) form the object of an important part of their work. Also, each approach to theory that they choose illustrates "travelling concepts"; or simply the influence of the conceptual "background" from their homeland.

The core of my paper spins around the question "How can one be a(n) (Eastern) European in the Western world?". Edward Said believes that "the point of theory is (...) to travel", and with these three Romanian scholars, indeed it does. The root of Nemoianu, Calinescu and Pavel's careers and identity options is their decision to leave a place where the only valid option at the time was to become a Structuralist devout in order to avoid the ideological path of literary criticism and engage in the "linguistic turn". As far as their options in America are concerned, one notices their persistent focus on European literature and its positions in relation to politics and ideology ("A Theory of the Secondary" by Virgil Nemoianu), the dichotomy idealism-realism in various periods of literature (the work cited before and Thomas Pavel's "The Thinking Novel"). However big the gap between American and European theory, their link to Eastern European theoretical roots was never severed, which is why I believe their studies must be analysed from a European angle.

The narrative of origins can be found in their autobiographical writings (Matei Calinescu's "A Sort of Diary" and "Memories in Dialogue"; with Ion Vianu, Virgil Nemoianu's "Inner Archipelago"), prone to an affective approach which provides a fertile territory for analysing the shifts of identity from a Romanian to an American sense of belonging. On the other hand, their theoretical discourse sometimes bears and displays the traces of their years of intellectual formation in Romania or hints to their homeland, some of which only a Romanian reader may comprehend. Rewriting works (such as Matei Calinescu's "The Modern Concept of Poetry"; first published in Romania in 1970, developed into "Faces of Modernity" in America in 1977 and later on into "Five Faces of Modernity" in 1987, translated into Romanian in 1995) or the issue of translating them ("The Life and Opinions of Zacharias Lichter", the novel the same author never managed to actually translate into English) represents only one of the aspects a research project must analyse. Among the reasons for leaving Romania, Matei Calinescu mentions his interest in modernity and the impossibility to pursue his reflection upon the phenomenon in his home country, after the ideological constraints imposed by Ceausescu's July Theses. Matei Calinescu and his colleagues were interested in the one feature of the modernity where its authenticity lies: mobility (Peter Sloterdijk, among others theorists, refers to this extensively in his work "Eurotaoism. Contributions to a Critique of Political Kinetics"), in the sense of multi-perspectivism, which was exactly what the communist dictatorship had forbidden. They encounter this feature in the multicultural Western environment, which provided them with the desired research opportunities, the freedom to express political or religious beliefs (for Virgil Nemoianu, for instance, Catholicism and liberalism are two essential elements of his intellectual structure).

Given the transnational dimension of the scholars my paper deals with, I believe they can be regarded and analysed as instances of "travelling theory", relevant for the mobility of concepts we encounter in the second half of the 20th century.

Biography: Roxana Eichel, Ph.D. candidate, University of Bucharest, preparing a thesis on Romanian Criticism and Theory in Exile on the American Continent. Research Assistant, "Tudor Vianu" Centre of Interdisciplinary Research in European and Romanian Cultural Studies, University of Bucharest. Recent conference participations: "How Can One Be a European in America?", in "How Can One Be a European?", Bucharest, 2012, "An Imaginary Mobility of Space. Possibilities for a Critique of European Literary Kinetics", in Literary Studies Facing European Literature, Bucharest, 2011; Colocviul ALGCR, 2010, 2011, Iasi and Brasov, Romania. Articles and studies in: "Observatorul Cultural", Bucharest; "Scrisoarea de dragoste, iubire, amor" (collective volume, Ars Docendi, Bucharest, 2009, ed. Antoaneta Tanasescu).

FICTION AS PHILOSOPHY: WILLIAM H. GASS' CONCEPTION OF METAFICTION

J.K. Helgason
University of Iceland

Abstract: It is often maintained that the important critical concept of metafiction was initially coined by William H. Gass in his article „Philosophy and the Form of Fiction“. This article was published in 1970, as a part of a collection of essays by various authors and edited by Robert Scholes, but Gass also included it in his book, Fiction and the Figures of Life. Gass uses metafiction to describe works by several contemporary prose writers, including John Barth and Jorge Luis Borges. In my paper I will discuss Gass' rather vague definition of this concept and try to determine how it relates first to some of the other essays in his Fiction and the Figures of Life and second to some earlier terms dealing with similar ideas and authors, such as Scholes' fabulation, Barth's literature of exhaustion, and Borges' magias parciais. Finally, Gass' argument will be contrasted to Roland Barthes' discussion of méta-littérature in his short and often overlooked article "Littérature et méta-langage". As the title suggest, Barthes seem to be inspired by Alfreds Tarski's and perhaps Louis Hjelmslev's writings on metalanguage, while the ideas of Gass' metafiction are more of a philosophical than linguistic nature.

Biography: Jón Karl Helgason is a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature and a Professor in the Department of Icelandic and Comparative Cultural Studies, University of Iceland, Reykjavík. He has published works in the fields of translation studies, Icelandic cultural history and metafiction.

COMPARING CONCEPTS ACROSS ARTS: A CASE STUDY ON "BURLESQUE"

S. Nyqvist
University of Helsinki

Abstract: Critical concepts are always highly ambiguous. Unlike their seemingly exact counterparts in the natural sciences, critical concepts often carry an evaluative connotation and are used in an impressionistic sense. Many critical concepts overlap with other concepts. Yet their function is to specify and distinguish a particular phenomenon. Using concepts means engaging in a negotiation and comparison. This is especially evident when concepts are being borrowed from one field or discipline to another. In what senses are they adopted and to what ends? What kinds of changes occur in the process? As a case study, I shall investigate the example of burlesque. Originally a concept of subversive and comic drama and poetry, it has become adapted to opera, novels, variety show, striptease, performance, film, and painting. Whether through deliberate borrowing or evolving with the art form, the concept has moved across the boundaries of many art forms from 17th century to the present. It offers a rich case history for considering the potential of a concept-based analysis for a comparative history of the arts. Moreover, the case of burlesque also calls for a reconsideration of the distinction between critical terms and concepts. Terms can be observed as simple tools and relatively unambiguous labels. By calling 'burlesque' a concept, I wish to draw attention to the constructive and disruptive powers of 'words-as-concepts' in critical discourse.

Biography: Sanna Nyqvist is a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Helsinki, Finland. She is an alumna of the Universities of Essex and Helsinki and a former fellow of the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study. Her research concentrates on critical concepts (imitation, parody, pastiche, burlesque, forgery) and on imitation and repetition as creative strategies.

S1: THE UPS AND DOWNS THAT WESTERN LITERARY CONCEPTS HAVE EXPERIENCED ON THEIR WAY TO THE EAST

HISTOIRE/DISOURS : LE FABULEUX DESTIN D'UNE DISTINCTION NOTIONNELLE ET SON CONTACT AVEC LE MONDE CHINOIS

D. Wang
Peking University

Abstract: Considérant les temps verbaux du français, Emile Benveniste a distingué deux systèmes qui manifestent deux plans d'énonciation différents, celui de l'histoire et celui du discours («Les relations de temps dans le verbe français » in Problèmes de linguistique générale, 1966). L'énonciation historique se trouve dans les récits des historiens comme dans ceux des romanciers, tandis que le discours est « toute énonciation supposant un locuteur et un auditeur, et chez le premier l'intention d'influencer l'autre de quelque manière ».

Cette distinction, très utile pour comprendre les systèmes temporels du verbe français et les plans d'énonciation des textes littéraires en général, a été bientôt reprise et développée par Tzvetan Todorov, par Claude Bremond et surtout par Gérard Genette qui, en remplaçant histoire par récit, a formulé toute une série de réflexions narratologiques autour du Discours du récit et du Nouveau discours du récit. D'autres auteurs comme Harald Weinrich et Paul Ricoeur, tout en reconnaissant la pertinence de cette distinction fondamentale, ont proposé des notions très voisines...

Depuis quelques années, des chercheurs chinois commencent à se référer à ces deux catégories pour analyser des textes littéraires comme pour faire des exposés théoriques. Cependant, bien que très efficace dans l'interprétation de certains textes chinois notamment des romans classiques marqués par l'intervention explicite du narrateur (qui raconte apparemment à des auditeurs et non à des lecteurs), cette distinction histoire/discours pose encore des problèmes dans sa réception en Chine : comment traduire convenablement ces deux notions qui ont connu des redéfinitions et des transformations depuis Benveniste ? Comment considérer la question de la temporalité dans l'analyse des textes chinois sachant que le verbe chinois ne se distingue pas par les formes temporelles ? Est-il possible d'établir une sorte de dialogue en introduisant certaines notions chinoises de la littérature classique ? C'est autour de toutes ces questions que cette communication, dont l'auteur est en même temps traducteur de Benveniste, cherche à comprendre...

Biography: ETUDES et FORMATIONS:

1975-1980 Ecole de Langues Etrangères de Changchun, Bac d'études anglaises

1980-1984 Université de Pékin, Département de Français, Licence ès Lettres

Mémoire rédigé « L'image de la Chine chez Paul Valéry », dirigé par Professeur LIANG Peizhen

1984-1987 Université de Pékin, Département de Français, Maîtrise ès Lettres

Mémoire soutenu « La structure narcissique de L'Amant », dirigé par Professeur GUI Yufang

1988-1989 Université de Wuhan/Université de Paris 8, DEA en Littérature Française

Mémoire soutenu « L'Asie de Marguerite Duras », dirigé par Professeur Jacques NEEFS

1989-1994 Université de Paris 8, Doctorat en Sciences du Langage

Thèse soutenue « Les signes et les mutations : pour une étude sémiotique du Grand commentaire du Yijing », dirigée par Professeur Jean-Claude COQUET

1994-1995 Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes de Paris, études doctorales en Sinologie

Etudes suivies et dirigées par Professeur Marc KALINOWSKI

ACTIVITES PROFESSIONNELLES:

1987-1988 Traducteur auprès de Chinese Association for International Understanding, Beijing

1994-1995 Chargé de cours à l'Université de Paris 8, UFR « Histoire Littérature Sociologie »

Depuis 1995 Enseignant au Département de Français de l'Université de Pékin

(1996-2000, Directeur du Département de Français ; depuis 1999, professeur titulaire)

Depuis 1996 Membre du Centre Etienne de l'Université de Pékin

Depuis 1999 Professeur associé à l'Institut de Littérature Comparée de l'Université de Pékin

PUBLICATIONS ET TRADUCTIONS:

Auteur des divers articles publiés en France ou en Chine notamment du livre Les signes et les mutations, une approche nouvelle du Yijing: histoire, pratique et texte, Librairie L'Asiathèque, Paris, 1995 (cf. Article de Kenneth Goodall in China Review International Vol. 5, No.1, 1998, pp 260-263, University of Hawai'i Press Journals)

Traducteur de nombreux ouvrages français (romans et ouvrages théoriques), notamment:

L'Amant, La Douleur, Le Ravissement de Lol V. Stein, L'Amour, Le Vice-consul, India Song de Marguerite Duras ; Le Livre du rire et de l'oubli de Milan Kundera
Critique de la critique de Tzvetan Todorov ; La Sémiotique du discours de Jean-Claude Coquet ; Eléments de sémiologie de Roland Barthes ; Le Primat de la perception de Maurice Merleau-Ponty ; Les Problèmes de linguistique générale d'Emile Benveniste

"LITERATURE" AS A TRANSLATED WORD AND THE BIRTH OF MULTICENTERED LITERARY SPACE RECONSTRUCTION OF "UNIVERSALITY" OF EAST ASIA IN THE EARLY 20TH CENTURY

S. Yee
Ewha Womans University

Abstract: 'Literature' as a translated word and the birth of multicenter literary space - Reconstruction of 'universality' of East Asia in the early 20th century

The word "Literature" ("bungaku" in Japanese, "munhak" in Korean, "wénxué" in Chinese) reflected a universal concept derived from the same origin and a shared notion present in East Asia before the mid-19th century. In this Chinese-character cultural area, "Literature" meant 'general erudition or total humane studies,' a concept based on Confucianism. Confucianism functioned as a theoretical canon that managed a broad range of human endeavors, including law, ethics, and culture, and within this broader worldview particular countries interpreted some of these canons and classics of Confucianism instead of translating them. However, with the inflow of Westernization and modernization after the mid-19th century, "Literature" became a translated word and transfigured its concept closer to "literature" and away from its prior broader meaning.

This paper examines changes in the concept of "literature" from the interpreted word (Literature) to the translated word (literature) and analyzes the deep structure of this change related to the reconstruction of universality. This process exemplifies a clash of two universalities, on the one hand the established Confucian universality and on the other hand a Western universality that operated under the name of "modernization" or "civilization." This paper focuses on the reconfigured and legislated new canons of each country's modern literature: Natsume Soseki in Japan, Yi Kwangsu in Korea and Lu Xin in China. Natsume dealt with Confucian universality as a past classic, admitted Western universality as the new mainstream, and emphasized the specialty of Japanese literature. Yi rejected Confucian universality completely and followed Western universality as the one and only path. However, this tendency to pursue the ultimate principle is not unlike the old Korean interpretive mode of Confucian canon and classic. Lu tried to create a new universality and new literature through rebuilding the history and intention of novel, which is connected to the renovation of Confucianism during the Chinese modern formative period.

In so doing, the Chinese-character cultural and geopolitical area have reconstructed a new literary field as a "multicenter literary space." Within this space they share the Chinese characters and the Confucian originality, but they translated Western literature in their own unique ways, and in so doing they finally reinforced their literary individuality. This phenomenon is far apart from the Western literary space that was divided into one center and several peripheries.

Keywords: Universality, Confucianism, Translation, East Asian Literary Space

Biography: [Education] 2006–Present: Ewha Womans University (Ph. D. Candidate) 2003–2006: Ewha Womans University (M.A.) 1999–2003: Ewha Womans University (B.A.) [Publication] - Academic Essay 1) "Transcultural Writing of Tchi Ho Yun – focused on language, genre, and subjectivity of the early diary(1883'~1895')", Comparative Literature, Vol.56, 2012 2) "The Postcolonialistic Location of the others – Through the Analysis of the Novels of J. M. Coetzee's Waiting for Barbarians and Inhoon Choi's Christmas Carol", The Society of Ewha Korean Language and Literature, Vol.27, Nov. 2010 3) "The Multitude of Contemporary Korean and Japanese Novels; Through the Analysis of the Novels of Young-ha Kim and Okuda Hideo", Studies in Humanities & Social Science by Young Researchers, Vol. 5, 2009 4) "A Study of Utopian Thoughts in the Works of Tae-Joon Lee", M.A. , Ewha Womans University, 2005 - Literary Criticism 1) "Stating the homotoeicus", World's Literature, Summer 2012, 2012 5) "Interpretation- Spot Love, alive poem", A Love called Urging, Munji Publishing, 2011 6) "The representation of "Nothing"- review of Soo-A Bae's novel", 2011 prize-winning entry in the category of literature criticism in the spring literary contest sponsored by Chosun Ilbo, 2011.1.1.

2) "Walk, pilgrimage to the inside", Platform March/April 2012, 2012 3) "Golem, who became Seiren", World's Literature, Spring 2012, 2012 4) "Surviving American nightmare", Jaeum & Moeum, Winter 2011, 2011

JOURNEY TO THE EAST: METAMORPHOSIS OF DECADENCE IN TWENTIETH-CENTURY CHINESE LITERATURE

H. Wang

University of California

Abstract: Like a brilliant shooting star, Decadence generated tremendous admiration as well as outrageous controversy in the late nineteenth century in Europe, particularly in France and Britain. The British and French Decadence presents itself as an artistic movement going against nature. It inherits anti-utilitarianism from Aestheticism and celebration of will-power from Romanticism but moves beyond both through the cult of artificiality. The movement is replete with paradoxes. First, Decadents believe in the norms that they revolt against; hence their revolt is a perverse performance. Meanwhile, the Decadent pursuit of rare sensations through the cult of artificiality is constantly fleeting and self-negating; therefore when the revolt itself becomes a new norm, Decadence invites its own demise. Last but not the least, although the Decadents spare no effort to astonish and shock, they would not tolerate the popularization of their ideas, because popularization drowns individual thinking and dampens the will power. Therefore, Decadence is a performance of perversion, a rebellion for rebellion's sake, a demonstration of individual free will. Decadence was introduced to China in the early 1920s. However, ever since its journey into China, it has carried two interrelated negative connotations, namely, a pessimistic world view and indulgence in physical pleasures. This is largely due to the Chinese translation of the word "Decadence." Originally, Decadence was translated as "tuijadang," which is almost a transliteration of the French word "décadent," and literally means "tui" plus "dang." In Chinese, tui refers to the state of being dejected, dispirited, disappointed, downcast, etc.; while dang indicates the state of being loose in morals, lascivious, licentious, dissolute, dissipated, and so on. Later on, Decadence is more commonly translated as "tuifei," which carries these two implications with it, because fei is similar to dang in Chinese, meaning "to be abandoned." Many Chinese writers and critics in the twentieth century were devoted to "Decadent" literature and most of them understood the term with the two connotations embedded in its Chinese translation. There was wide hostility against "Decadent" literature due to its superficial resemblance to pornography. The period between the 1940s and the 1970s is almost blank for "Decadent" literature because the leftist dominance in China suppressed anything decadent. However, many scholars also made strenuous recuperative efforts to justify its existence. In the 1920s and 1930s, some interpreted it as a metaphor for the national crisis, just like in the 1980s and 1990s, some considered it as a reflection of the historical trauma in the Cultural Revolution. There were also scholars who appreciated it for its own sake, considering it an assertive expression of a nouveau sexual morality in the 1920s and 1930s or as a demonstration of a postmodern worldview in the 1980s and 1990s. Either way, none of them retrieved the celebration of the individual free will in its French and British origins. However, they provide a magical lens to look back at the landscape of Chinese cultural history in the twentieth century, which witnesses dramatic social and cultural transformations.

Biography: Dr. Hongjian Wang just finished her dissertation entitled "Performing Perversion: Decadence in Twentieth-Century Chinese Literature" in the Department of Comparative Literature and foreign languages at the University of California, Riverside. She is going to start teaching Chinese language and culture as assistant professor in the Department of World Languages, Literatures and Cultures at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville in August, 2012. Dr. Wang's sees herself as a comparatist with a strong interest in cultural history. Her research interest covers twentieth-century Chinese literature, film, theater and cultural history, nineteenth-century British and French literature and art.

THE STATUS AND ASSIGNMENTS OF THE RESEARCH ON JAPANESE MODERN "CONCEPTS"

J. Liu

International Research Center for Japanese Studies

Abstract: The formation of East Asian Modern "Concepts" was a long and complex process. From the view of geographical and lingual interchange, these concepts had traveled between China/Chinese and Japan/Japanese for several times during a long period of almost a whole century (from early 19th century to early 10th century). No matter in China or Japan, in past days researchers on these "concepts" always limited themselves in the historical structure of particular country or discipline. In other words, these researchers were actually discussing "concepts" from the perspective of their own country's linguistics, intellectual history, philosophy or culture status. As a result, such studies had not only lost the grasp of some "concepts" with multiple cultural backgrounds, but also missed the historical scene from which each concept came into existence.

Taking the example of Japan, the purpose of this paper is firstly to introduce some recent efforts and accomplishments with trans-lingual or trans-discipline view on this topic. After pointing out the problems and assignments of this new tendency, I want to discuss the possibility and significance to referring to these new experiences.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: LIU Jianhui, Professor of comparative literature International Research Center of Japanese Culture
Kyoto, Japan

S1: PLURILINGUISME LITTÉRAIRE 1900

INTRODUCTION

B. Benert
Université de Strasbourg

LE "PLURILINGUISME OCCULTÉ" DANS L'ŒUVRE DE GEORGES RODENBACH, ÉCRIVAIN FLAMAND FRANCOPHONE DU XIXE SIÈCLE

K. Vandemeulebroucke
KULeuven Kulak

Abstract: C'est d'un cas particulier de plurilinguisme littéraire qu'il sera question dans cette contribution : celui de la quasi-absence, voire du refus du plurilinguisme dans l'œuvre francophone de Georges Rodenbach, écrivain flamand du 19^e siècle. Rodenbach pourrait être qualifié d'un « francophone involontaire » (Grutman 2002), qui regrette ne pas pouvoir s'exprimer à l'aise en néerlandais, la langue de 'sa' Flandre. Assez paradoxalement, le désir du plurilinguisme de l'auteur est loin de se refléter dans son œuvre. Si à première vue Rodenbach ne tient pas compte du tout de la réalité flamande néerlandophone, il la rejette en fait davantage : dans ses ouvrages, le flamand n'est jamais représenté comme étant susceptible de devenir une langue littéraire. Force nous sera d'examiner les différentes techniques discursives de ce plurilinguisme 'occulté' dans l'œuvre de Rodenbach, de l'énonciation française monolingue mise dans la bouche de personnages 'néerlandophones', au discours rapporté et donc traduit de leurs paroles (D'hulst 2008). Ces résultats seront ensuite inscrits dans le contexte de l'époque : le plurilinguisme caché des personnages de Rodenbach semble confirmer l'idéal de la bourgeoisie francophone, celui de créer d'une littérature belge écrite uniquement en français.

Biography: Karen Vandemeulebroucke (°1981) est attachée à la KULeuven Kulak (Belgique) en tant que chargée de recherches auprès du Fonds de la Recherche Scientifique - Flandre. Elle a soutenu une thèse de doctorat sur l'émergence d'un nouveau répertoire poétique en Belgique pendant la seconde moitié du XIXe siècle. Elle y accorde de l'intérêt aux transferts intranationaux entre la poésie flamande et la poésie francophone de Belgique d'un côté, et aux transferts internationaux entre la poésie belge et la poésie française de l'autre.

STEFAN GEORGE, LE PLURILINGUISME A L'ÉPREUVE DE LA RENAISSANCE NATIONALE

D. Weissmann
Université Paris-Est Créteil

Abstract: En 1897, Stefan George prépare à Berlin et Paris la publication de son recueil "Das Jahr der Seele" qui paraîtra à l'automne de la même année et dont certains poèmes ont été rédigés d'abord en français. Le jeune poète s'apprête alors à révolutionner la littérature de langue allemande ; et le paradoxe veut qu'il le fait en passant par une intense « épreuve de l'étranger » : non seulement en traduisant des textes étrangers, ce que tous ses grands aînés ont fait, mais en écrivant directement en langue étrangère. Tout se passe comme si son ressourcement de la langue littéraire allemande ne pouvait se réaliser que moyennant le détour par l'écriture en langue étrangère : à côté du français, George a également utilisé l'anglais et des langues inventées telles que sa lingua romana. Cependant, 1897 c'est aussi le début de la politique pangermanique menée par l'Empire wilhelmienne, l'année du célèbre discours du prince Von Bülow, secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères, réclamant « une place au soleil » pour l'Allemagne et inaugurant une politique agressive de conquête coloniale. Difficile de trouver deux états d'esprit plus éloignés que la recherche d'altérité extrême menée par George, d'une part, et l'ethnocentrisme belliqueux pratiqué à la même époque par les hommes politiques, d'autre part. Xénophonie et xénophobie, deux attitudes qui semblent coexister dans le monde germanique de cette année 1897. Or, George, après avoir accompli, à partir du milieu des années 1900, son « tournant patriotique », finira par rejoindre le nouvel élan nationaliste inauguré par la politique impérialiste de Guillaume II, jusqu'à cultiver une relation plus qu'ambiguë avec l'idéologie nazie montante. Notre communication se propose de retracer la genèse du plurilinguisme de George, en relation avec son travail de traducteur, jusqu'à la disparition des langues étrangères dans l'œuvre de la maturité. Ainsi nous mettrons en évidence tout ce que la modernité du jeune George doit à ses expériences exophones, après quoi son écriture deviendra beaucoup plus traditionaliste. Somme toute, il s'agit de présenter l'exophonie comme partie intégrante du renouveau poétique dans la littérature allemande de la Fin de siècle, ce que confirment également les cas de Wedekind et de Rilke.

Biography: Dirk WEISSMANN Maître de conférences (langue et littérature allemandes) à l'Université Paris-Est Créteil
 Membre de l'Institut des Mondes anglophone, germanique et roman (IMAGER), EA 3958, Université Paris-Est
 PARCOURS PROFESSIONNEL - Maître de conférences à l'Université Paris-Est Créteil (depuis 2006) - ATER, Université
 Paris-Est Créteil (2004-2006) - ATER, Université de Reims, Champagne-Ardenne (2003-2004) - Lecteur de langue, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-Denis (2002-2003) - Allocataire de recherche, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-
 Denis (1999-2002) AUTRES ACTIVITES PROFESIONNELLES - Membre du jury d'allemand du concours d'entrée aux
 Grandes Ecoles Commerciales (Banque d'épreuves BCE) (depuis 2005) - Chargé d'enseignement à HEC, Paris (2004-2010) - Chargé de cours, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-Denis (2001-2002) - Chargé d'enseignement à la Maison
 Heinrich-Heine, Fondation de l'Allemagne, CIUP, Paris (2000-2002) ETUDES, DIPLOMES, TITRES - Docteur en études germaniques (2003) - Agrégation externe d'allemand (2000) - DEA « Cultures, identités et territoires des pays de langue allemande contemporains » (Université de Paris-8, Vincennes—Saint-Denis, 1999) - Maîtrise de Lettres modernes mention littérature générale et comparée (Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris-3, 1998) - Licence de Lettres modernes mention littérature générale et comparée (Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris-3, 1997) - Études de Littérature générale et comparée, études germaniques et philosophie à Mayence, Lausanne et Paris.
 RESPONSABILITES ET MANDATS ELECTIFS EN COURS - Membre élu (suppléant) de la 12^e section du Conseil National des Universités (depuis 2011) ; participation active aux travaux de la session 2012 - Membre élu du conseil de l'UFR Lettres, langues, sciences humaines (depuis 2010) ; membre de la commission de pédagogie (depuis 2010)
 RESPONSABILITES ET MANDATS ELECTIFS PASSES - Directeur adjoint du Département d'allemand, Université
 Paris-Est Créteil (2006-2008) ; projets innovants mis en œuvre : réforme des parcours d'allemand (rentrée 2007/2008) -
 Responsable des enseignements de langue allemande pour spécialistes d'autres disciplines (LANSAD), Université Paris-
 Est Créteil (2005-2010) ; projets innovants mis en œuvre : modernisation de la filière LANSAD ; mise en conformité avec le Cadre commun européen de référence pour les langues - Responsable de l'équipe pédagogique L1 et enseignantréférent L1 de la filière LLCE allemand, Université Paris-Est Créteil (2008-2010) - Webmestre des pages du département d'allemand sur le site de l'Université Paris-Est Créteil (2005-2011) - Co-porteur de la maquette 'mastérisation' du CAPES externe d'allemand lors de la campagne d'habilitation (2010) Participation A des comités de SELECTION - Membre du Comité de sélection à l'Université Paris-Est Créteil pour les postes 4084 11 MCF 0963 (linguistique anglaise) et 4105 11-
 12-70 MCF (didactique des langues vivantes étrangères) pendant la campagne synchronisée 2012
 ACTIVITES DE RECHERCHE Axes de recherche - Littérature de langue allemande (XIX^e-XXI^e) : interprétation et réception - Interculturalité et multilinguisme dans la littérature - Transferts culturels franco-allemands (XIX^e-XXI^e siècles) -
 Traduction ; traductologie ; didactique de la traduction
 Recherche actuelle Auto-traduction et plurilinguisme littéraires dans le champ franco-allemand Publications récentes [1] [Dir.] « Littérature et migration : écrivains germanophones venus d'ailleurs », Allemagne d'aujourd'hui, n° 197, 3/2011 (juillet-septembre). [2] [Art.] « Une littérature transnationale et transculturelle en langue allemande », Allemagne d'aujourd'hui, n° 197, 3/2011, pp. 52-62. [3] [Chap.] « Une relation intertextuelle provocante : la traduction "de surface" d'un poème de Wordsworth par l'écrivain autrichien Ernst Jandl », in : Cl. Fabre et E. Vialle (dir.), La relation 2, Paris, Michel Houdiard, 2011, pp. 128-138. [4] [Art.] « Mehrsprachigkeit in Frank Wedekinds Büchse der Pandora: ein (fast) vergessenes Charakteristikum der Lulu-Urfassung », Germanisch-Romanische Monatsschrift, 3/2011,
 S. 283-299. [5] [Chap.] „Sprachmittlung versus Übersetzung. Zur Anwendbarkeit der Vorschläge des Gemeinsamen
 Europäischen Referenzrahmens auf Curricula der Auslandsgermanistik“, in : DAAD (éd.), Zukunftsfragen der Germanistik, Beiträge der DAAD-Germanistentagung 2011 mit den Partnerländern Frankreich, Belgien, Niederlande, Luxemburg, Göttingen : Wallstein, 2012, p. 182-194. [6] [Chap.] « 'Trouver sa langue, trouver sa place' : Anne Weber et l'idéal d'une littérature de l'entre-deux », in : R. Zschachlitz (dir.), Enjeux et perspectives d'un canon culturel européen -
 Au-delà des canons culturels et littéraires nationaux ?, Paris : L'Harmattan, 2012..
 [7] [Dir.] « La médiation linguistique : entre traduction et enseignement des langues vivantes », Etudes de linguistique appliquée, 1/2012 (n° 165) (avec Joëlle Aden) [8] [Art.] « La médiation linguistique à l'Université : proposition pour un changement d'approche de la traduction dans les filières LLCE », in : « La médiation linguistique : entre traduction et enseignement des langues vivantes », Etudes de linguistique appliquée, 1/2012 (n° 165), pp.

L'ENVERS DE LA TAPISSERIE FLAMANDE : L'ALTÉRITÉ LINGUISTIQUE CHEZ MAURICE MAETERLINCK

R. Grutman
 Université d'Ottawa

Abstract: [NB: le site n'accepte aucun signe diacritique ou accent genere par mon iMac] Des goliards qui entrelardaient hier leurs Carmina Burana de vers dans la langue du peuple, aux Chicanos qui passent aujourd'hui de l'espagnol a l'américain ou a un mélange des deux (Spanglish), l'hétérolinguisme semble être une constante en littérature. Certes, il a connu des moments de gloire et des moments de désaffection. Ainsi le penchant des écrivains neo-classiques et plus tard, réalistes, pour l'unilinguisme, alterne-t-il avec le colinguisme fondamental des époques médiévale, renaissance et baroque, sans oublier les expériences joyeusement polyglottes qui ont marqué les différentes avant-gardes entre les deux Guerres mondiales. De ce point de vue, le XIXe siècle semble en effet constituer une ligne de partage, selon l'hypothèse de départ de l'atelier. Il le serait pour deux raisons. D'abord, en contestant les hiérarchies relatives à la distribution stylistique des genres, les romantiques font de nouveau entrer le "mot bas" dans la littérature sérieuse, accommodement et mélange stylistiques (Stilmischung) qui ouvrent la brèche par laquelle pourra entrer un siècle plus tard la Sprachmischung des grands modernistes (Joyce, Eliot, Pound). Dans le dernier quart du siècle, les symbolistes français renouèrent par-dessus les frontières avec l'héritage (certes réinterprété) des romantiques allemands, à qui ils empruntent jusqu'à la distinction entre symbole et allégorie (Todorov 1977). C'est le deuxième moment d'ouverture de l'éventail linguistique, dans la mesure où leur volonté de combattre "l'universel reportage" (Mallarmé) du réalisme passe par une réflexion ontologique sur le langage. Fermer la parenthèse du réalisme, c'est aussi, indirectement, arrêter le mouvement "glottophage" (Grutman 1999), devorateur de langues, qui l'accompagnait. Chez de nombreux écrivains de la fin de siècle et de la Belle Époque, cette réflexion fut le produit, direct ou indirect, de l'une ou l'autre forme d'altérité linguistique. C'est particulièrement frappant chez les jeunes "métèques" venus faire la promotion du "symbolisme" à Paris. Celui à qui l'on doit l'invention de ce terme, Jean Moreas, était né Iannis Papadiamantopoulos à Athènes; Stuart Merrill vit le jour près de New York, Francis Vielé-Griffin en Virginie, Jules Laforgue à Montevideo, en Uruguay. Puis, près d'un symboliste sur trois était belge, généralement flamand (souvent de langue, toujours de culture). Les symbolistes français eux-mêmes venaient parfois de régions limitrophes, comme Gustave Kahn et Marcel Schwob, d'origine alsacienne (même si Schwob est né à Nantes), ou René Ghil, originaire de Tourcoing, tout près de la frontière belge. Mais l'altérité linguistique fascine jusqu'aux écrivains les moins hybrides : tandis que Remy de Gourmont s'émerveille (après Joris-Karl Huysmans) devant Le latin mystique, Stéphane Mallarmé est suffisamment intrigué par Les mots anglais pour traduire des poèmes de Poe, voire, chose très peu connue et encore plus rarement signalée, pour s'essayer à la traduction de tel de ses propres poèmes en anglais. C'est grâce au travail de sages fait par des auteurs comme ceux-là que l'hybridité linguistique des textes pourra, au courant du XXe siècle, devenir une option esthétique viable et même reconnue. Il y a là un paradoxe, car l'époque voit aussi se développer, et bientôt s'exacerber, un sentiment national qui allait bien au-delà du patriotisme et se nourrissait de différentes formes de ressentiment. Pourtant, avant qu'il n'éclate violemment en 1914, ce sentiment n'a pas empêché de nombreux écrivains d'activer et de rechercher la différence linguistique, voire de la cultiver. Interroge au sujet de son choix du français pour Salomé, l'Irlandais Oscar Wilde invoque l'exemple du Belge Maurice Maeterlinck. Wilde attribue l'effet curieux des pièces de ce dernier au "fact that he, a Flamand by grace, writes in an alien language". La comparaison est forcée mais néanmoins révélatrice. Forcée parce que Maeterlinck n'a pas, contrairement à Wilde, du s'approprié la langue française : elle fut l'instrument de toute sa formation intellectuelle. Flamand formé en français, Maeterlinck était vraiment "biculturel", comme on dit aujourd'hui. Le jeune Maurice fit ses études en français, chez les pères jésuites du collège Sainte-Barbe, à Gand, puis à l'université francophone de cette même ville. Cette formation était le prolongement d'un milieu familial très largement (et volontairement) francisé, ce qui n'a toutefois pas empêché Maeterlinck de pratiquer le dialecte flamand avec les bonnes et les paysans, avec son ami Cyriel Buysse et même au barreau. En même temps, le choix de Maeterlinck comme modèle est extrêmement révélateur. Il l'est d'abord de la tactique de Wilde, qui cherche à donner des lettres de noblesse à sa propre démarche "translinguistique" en lui associant le nom du "Shakespeare belge" récemment découvert à Paris et à Londres (The Pall Mall Gazette, où parut l'interview avec Wilde, avait largement fait écho à l'article dithyrambique de Mirbeau dans Le Figaro). Il l'est ensuite et surtout de l'image et de l'idée qu'on pouvait alors se faire de Maeterlinck : un homme à cheval sur deux langues, servant de trait d'union entre l'Europe du Midi et l'Europe du Nord (pour reprendre les archétypes de la baronne de Staël). Il n'y a pas de fumée sans feu, bien entendu : son biculturalisme de Flamand francophone, et les connaissances linguistiques qui y étaient liées, permirent à Maeterlinck d'entamer une trajectoire inhabituelle à partir de la périphérie belge. Sa situation périphérique constituait un handicap dans la course à la gloire, mais il a su transformer cette faiblesse en force, se transformant lui-même en un agent de change (et du changement) conscient de sa différence linguistique. En réponse à une enquête sur les relations intellectuelles et sociales entre la France et l'Allemagne, menée conjointement en 1895 par le Mercure de France et la Neue Deutsche Rundschau, il vante d'abord de manière générale, comme la plupart des autres écrivains et penseurs sollicités, "les richesses invisibles que crée toujours l'échange dans le domaine spirituel". Mais il se démarque par le moyen pratique suggéré pour arriver à une telle solidarité intellectuelle : "Le plus pratique serait peut-être que les Français apprirent l'allemand, comme la plupart des Allemands ont appris le français?", se demande-t-il. En privé, Maeterlinck va plus loin encore. Dans une des notes éparses recueillies à la même époque dans le Cahier bleu (et donc pas destinées à la publication), il égratigne ses confrères unilingues, remarquant "l'énorme infériorité de ceux de la nouvelle génération latine qui ne sont pas polyglottes". Par contraste, le dialecte gantois allait lui servir de tremplin vers le néerlandais standard, puis vers d'autres langues germaniques : l'allemand, l'anglais, l'afrikaans même. Grâce aux lectures qu'il pouvait faire dans toutes ces langues sans devoir attendre que des traductions françaises fussent disponibles sur le marché; et sans dépendre des traductions existantes, pas toujours fiables, il arrivait à donner ses propres œuvres un cachet distinctif, une image de marque. Il l'a fait de deux manières complémentaires, qui seront tour à tour abordées dans cette communication. D'une part, sur le plan si l'on veut intertextuel (qui désigne le passage d'un texte à un autre), il a traduit : à partir du moyen néerlandais (Ruusbroec), de l'allemand (Novalis), de l'anglais elisabethain (John Ford). Ce sont autant de prises de position, moins parce qu'il s'agit parfois d'adaptations libres que parce qu'il s'agit toujours de textes inédits en français, dont Maeterlinck peut donc proposer des "traductions-introductions" (Meschonnic) accompagnées de tout un appareil argumentatif (notes, préfaces, articles). Sur le plan intratextuel, d'autre part, ses poèmes et pièces (mais aussi un conte comme Onirologie, cf. Grutman 2010) n'auraient pas le même cachet sans l'ouverture linguistique de leur auteur (ce qui rejoint le constat de Wilde, mais sans faire de Maeterlinck l'allophone qu'il n'était pas). Grâce au recours ponctuel à d'autres langues (l'anglais et l'allemand, mais aussi le latin), grâce surtout à l'inscription souterraine, par le biais d'emprunts et de calques, du substrat "hollando-flamand" (comme Maeterlinck l'appelait lui-même), son œuvre symboliste ressemble à un vaste palimpseste, ou à ce "tapiz flamenco mirado por el reves" de cervantine mémoire, qui cache en révélant.

Biography: Rainier GRUTMAN (1966). Professeur de littérature et de traductologie à l'Université d'Ottawa (Canada). Études de philologie romane et de littérature comparée aux universités de Namur, Leuven, Madrid et Montréal. Auteur d'un livre sur le plurilinguisme dans la littérature québécoise (Des langues qui résonnent, Montréal, Fides, 1997), il a codirigé un Dictionnaire des termes littéraires (Paris, Champion, 2001) ainsi qu'une volumineuse Histoire de la littérature belge (Paris, Fayard, 2003). Il a publié une centaine de travaux, portant tantôt sur la littérature française du XIX^e siècle, tantôt sur les littératures francophones, avec un intérêt particulier pour les écrivains et l'écriture plurilingues. Ses recherches actuelles portent sur l'autotraduction littéraire et sur Maurice Maeterlinck.

S1: AESTHETICS AND POLITICS IN TURKEY

FROM DOCUMENTARY REALISM TO ALLEGORICAL NARRATIVES: IMAGES OF INNOCENCE IN FILM

A.F. Suner

Istanbul Technical University

Abstract: This paper aims to make a comparative analysis of two emergent narrative modes that recent political filmmaking in Turkey is built upon: documentary realism and allegorical narratives. Documentary realism is often associated with the films reflecting the experiences of the oppressed groups in Turkey (most notably the Kurdish minority). Allegorical narratives appear in the films that tend to articulate the perspective of ordinary Turks who have internalized the Turkish state's discourse of suppression and denial with regard to the violence in Turkey's past. While both modes of filmmaking engage in politics of social memory, they present different visions of the past: one is based on the presumed clarity of historical facts and a sense of self-righteousness; the other is based on an obscured undertaking of the past that takes shape around a sense of oblivion, guilt and complicity. The paper seeks to investigate divergent emotional and political investments behind these narratives by directing attention to a theme that they both draw upon: that of innocence and victimhood.

Biography: Asuman Suner is Professor at the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences at Istanbul Technical University in Istanbul, Turkey. She has a book entitled Turkish Cinema: Belonging, Identity and Memory published by I. B. Tauris Press in Britain in 2009. Having acquired her Ph.D. from the Department of Communication at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst in 1996, she taught at the Department of Comparative Literature at University of Hong Kong between 1996 and 1998.

HISTORIES AND FICTIONS OF WORLD WAR I: THE POLITICS OF SEXUAL VIOLENCE

H. Adak

Orient Institut Istanbul/Sabancı University

Abstract: Histories and Fictions of World War I: The Politics of Sexual Violence

During the twentieth century, writers such as Halide Edib, Peyami Safa, Orhan Kemal, Kemal Tahir, Yasar Kemal, Dido Sotiriou, Migirdiç Margosyan, Leyla Erbil, Mehmet Uzun, Esmahan Aykol and others have narrated different accounts of World War I in Turkey and proffered various strategies of remembering and criticizing the Armenian genocide. Such works were not analyzed throughout the century because of the taboos related to discussing the Armenian genocide and because reading practices were shaped by an internalization of the "Republican defensive narrative" on the Armenian genocide which entailed—in general terms—the denial of the 1915-1916 massacres. This paper will explore the various works of key writers who have produced texts of "commemoration" of the victims of the Armenian genocide asking the texts the following questions: 1) Are there key differences between women's and men's writing on World War I and the Armenian genocide? 2) What possibilities, if any, do these texts provide for narrating sexual violence during the war? 3) Are there differences in describing sexual violence between men's and women's writing? 4) Are there differences in the narration of sexual violence depending on the ethnicity of the perpetrator and/or the ethnicity of the victim? 5) Given the fact that several of these writers were writing memoirs, war reports and fiction simultaneously--are there differences between fiction and autobiographical accounts or reports of the war? And if so, what accounts for these differences? 6) Lastly, how does the "reception" of the works in Turkey shape the way "sexual violence" is remembered and/or silenced and what are the strategies for unraveling multifarious levels of silencing of sexual violence?

Biography: Hülya Adak is Assistant Professor of Comparative Literature at Sabancı University in Istanbul. She has conducted research as a Research Fellow at the Orient Institut Istanbul during the academic year 2011-2012 and will be a Research Fellow in Berlin through the Humboldt Foundation as the recipient of the Humboldt Research Scholarship for Experienced Researchers during 2012-2013. Hülya Adak's research and publications focus on gender and sexuality, nationalism, memory studies, political violence, war, and genocide particularly in relation to Turkish fiction and egodocuments. Her most notable publications include Hundert Jahre Türkei: Zeitzeugen Erzählen (with Erika Glassen), an anthology of memoirs, fiction, articles on Turkish cultural history of the twentieth century and Special Dossier on Gender, Ethnicity and the Nation-State of New Perspectives on Turkey (with Ayşe Gül Altınay) (2010). She has published various articles on nationalism, aesthetics and politics, Turkish autobiographies and literature in journals such as the South Atlantic Quarterly, PMLA and Querelles.

ORHAN PAMUK'S POETICS AND POLITICS OF GENRE

S. Irzik

Sabancı University

Abstract: This paper discusses how Orhan Pamuk, despite his persistent positioning of himself in iconoclastic opposition against the tradition of political literature in Turkey, charts in his novels a kind of “politics of artistic form.” His novels describe the ways in which art and politics become entangled with each other, sometimes in liberating, sometimes in oppressive, even deadly ways. They thematize the relation between freedom, power, and violence on the one hand, and the forms of knowing and representing life on the other, and weave this relation into their own textures as an aesthetic problem. They dramatize the ways in which politics and art resemble each other in their attempts to impose form and order on life, in their attempts to make life bend to human will and desire. In doing so, they put forth the performative and dialogic capabilities of the novel as a response to the question of the limits of representation, staging a series of complex tensions among poetry, theater, painting, and film, and underlining the novel's capacity to embody and ironize them. The paper will illustrate this dynamics of politics and genre with specific examples from most of Pamuk's novels and address both the contemporary Turkish literary and political contexts of this strategy and its possible shortcomings.

Biography: Sibel Irzik is currently teaching comparative and Turkish literature in the Cultural Studies Program of Sabancı University. She is the author of Deconstruction and the Politics of Criticism and the co-editor of Relocating the Fault Lines: Turkey Beyond the East-West Divide. She has recently published on Orhan Pamuk, Yasar Kemal, and on Turkish coup d'état novels.

S1 QUESTIONS DE METHODE

LIRE EN DÉPIT DU BON SENS

B. Letellier

Université de la Réunion

Abstract: Ou comment préserver l'intégrité de la sagesse ? Tel aurait été le souci du roi de l'Inde Debchelim lorsqu'il confia au philosophe hindou Bidpaï la tâche de "composer un livre contenant les diverses formes de la sagesse" (Kalila et Dimna, Klincksieck, 1957, p. 296) et connu actuellement sous le titre de Panchatantra. Bien que ce livre renvoie à différentes versions, copistes, traducteurs et commentateurs expriment tous le souci premier de bien entendre le propos du livre. Ainsi, Ali B. Ach-Chah Al-Farisi, qui préface la traduction arabe d'Ibn al-Muqaffa', rappelle "quelle perfection dans la lecture de ce livre doit apporter celui qui l'examine, quelle constance dans son étude et dans l'observation du sens intime du texte" (Kalila et Dimna, Op. Cit., p. 283) il doit manifester. Les enseignements de ce philosophe hindou, bien qu'illustrés par des fables accessibles à tous, s'avèrent plutôt un "exercice d'intelligence à l'intention de l'élite" qui exige une lecture savante. Le lecteur savant et critique devra alors prêter l'oreille aux discours des hommes et des bêtes afin d'aiguiser son entendement et accepter de lire en dépit du bon sens. Car l'intelligence consiste à discerner le sens commun, d'une part, et le sens singulier et intime, d'autre part. Cela revient à ne pas lire seulement ce qui tombe sous le sens pour tout le monde. En somme, cette lecture accepte le malentendu dans la mesure où elle se distingue par son autonomie, telle une lecture libre de toute appartenance à un système d'intelligibilité. Elle le dépasse dans la mesure où elle devine et entend la parole vraie et ineffable. Si le bon sens s'accorde sur la forme, la bonne intelligence s'accorde intuitivement sur l'information, c'est-à-dire le savoir, et les manières de l'exprimer. Dès lors, le malentendu est l'indice de coexistence de deux ou plusieurs systèmes d'intelligibilité. Accréditer le sens commun, c'est ignorer les malentendus et n'adhérer qu'à une seule communauté interprétative. Or, les fables animales invitent le lecteur à adopter une approche comparative et critique qui répondrait à l'intention de l'auteur : savoir discerner "tous les principes dont l'homme a besoin pour se diriger lui-même ou régler la conduite de sa famille et de ses intimes, toutes les directives nécessaires pour la vie de ce monde et pour l'autre" (Kalila et Dimna, Op. Cit., p. 298). Ainsi, peu importe la confusion sémantique engendrée par les textes et les contextes, car le malentendu révèle avant tout le degré d'ouverture à une altérité. La sagesse sous-entendue ici consisterait alors à reconnaître le malentendu et à y remédier par l'écoute attentive de l'autre, fondamentale à toute entente sincère et profonde. Il s'agira donc de s'interroger sur les formes continues du malentendu à l'origine des fables notamment à travers l'étude comparée des fables indiennes, arabes et françaises.

Biography: Bénédicte Letellier est Maître de Conférence en littérature comparée à l'université de La Réunion depuis 2008. A paraître en juin 2012 : "Penser le fantastique en contexte arabe" (Honoré Champion). Ses domaines de recherche privilégiés sont les littératures arabes et la théorie littéraire.

S1: LITTÉRATURE ET PHILOSOPHIE

LA QUESTION DU BEAU EN LITTÉRATURE

R. Smadja
Université d'Orléans

Abstract: Les études littéraires considèrent habituellement le beau comme la propriété de la forme, par opposition aux contenus de l'oeuvre littéraire implicitement considérés comme esthétiquement neutres. C'est contre cette tradition qu'il faut s'insurger. Cela implique 1° qu'on reconsidère le concept du beau lui-même qui n'est pas en littérature ce qu'il est dans les autres arts. 2° Qu'on repère de façon relativement précise les éléments du "beau intellectuel" (selon la formule de Plotin) qui sont le support du beau en littérature.

Biography: Robert SMADJA est professeur émérite de littérature comparée à l'Université d'Orléans (France). Publications récentes: Introduction à la philosophie de la littérature, Honoré Champion, 2009. De la littérature à la philosophie du sujet, L'Harmattan, 2010.

LE COMPARATISME, METHODE CRITIQUE POUR EVALUER LA MOUVANCE DES CONCEPTS: L'EXEMPLE DU SUBLIME.

D.L. Peyrache
université de Nantes

Abstract: La question du sublime, théorisée dans l'Antiquité par Longin, et examinée à nouveau dans le cadre de la philosophie sensualiste au XVIIIe siècle (par Edmund Burke) puis dans le sillage de la philosophie kantienne et romantique, montre à quel point le dialogue entre littérature et philosophie nous permet d'évaluer la mouvance des concepts selon les contextes culturels et historiques. Tout en conservant un certain nombre de données invariantes, le sublime est une problématique qui s'est profondément transformée selon les champs épistémologiques qui se sont emparés d'elle pour repenser leurs propres objets d'étude. Cette mouvance conceptuelle s'explique par la nature même d'une notion qui s'est élaborée à partir des interférences entre divers champs épistémologiques (la philosophie, l'éloquence, la littérature, les Beaux-Arts, l'éthique et le politique). Pour Longin, le sublime est ce qui élève l'humanité au-dessus d'elle-même et se révèle essentiellement à travers le langage. Le théoricien grec affirme aussi l'universalité du sublime en même temps que sa dimension spécifiquement subjective, liée non pas aux qualités intrinsèques des objets, mais aux sentiments et aux émotions vécus par le sujet. Le sentiment du sublime naît quand l'individu est confronté à certaines situations qui provoquent l'idée d'un dépassement possible des limites humaines, quand les cadres ordinaires de l'existence volent en éclat pour conduire le sujet pensant vers un au-delà (du Beau, de la mesure ou des normes), et toujours vers un au-delà de lui-même. De ce fait, le sublime nous permet d'interroger la nature parfois très différente de ces situations subjectives, déterminées historiquement et culturellement, profondément évolutives qui, tout en menaçant d'anéantir l'individu ou la collectivité, peuvent en même temps les conduire à un plus haut degré d'humanité, vers un plus grand bien ou vers une liberté plus effective. C'est ainsi en confrontant les éléments invariants par lesquels la tradition philosophique a cherché à donner une définition essentialiste du sublime, et ses diverses actualisations esthétiques, poétiques, et historiques en littérature, que la compréhension des enjeux du sublime, périodiquement renouvelés, pourra s'en trouver accrue et affinée.

Biography: Dominique Peyrache-Leborgne est maître de conférences habilitée à diriger des recherches. Elle enseigne la Littérature générale et comparée à l'Université de Nantes. Elle travaille essentiellement sur des questions d'esthétique dans le cadre du romantisme européen et anglo-saxon. Elle a publié chez Champion : La Poétique du sublime, de la fin des Lumières au Romantisme (1997) ; et Grotesques et arabesques dans le récit romantique, de Jean Paul à Victor Hugo (2012). Elle travaille également sur le roman historique, romantique et contemporain, et a co-dirigé deux ouvrages sur le sujet : Le roman historique; récit et Histoire, Editions Pleins Feux, 2000 ; et Le Romanesque et l'historique, éditions Cécile Defaut, 2010.

POÉSIE & PHILOSOPHIE : DE L'ONTOLOGIE À LA CRITIQUE

F. Mahot Boudias

Université Paris Ouest Nanterre

Abstract: Depuis le romantisme allemand et ses évolutions philosophiques, chez Heidegger notamment, la poésie apparaît comme un genre hautement philosophique. Après la faillite de la métaphysique et des systèmes totalisants, la poésie contiendrait une pensée du fragment et de l'apparition progressive. Du côté de la phénoménologie et de l'ontologie, le poème serait le lieu de la manifestation, toujours précaire certes, d'une essence. La poésie serait un genre heuristique dont la pratique déboucherait soit sur une connaissance, soit sur une vérité. Chez Rimbaud, c'est par le dérèglement de tous les sens ; chez Valéry, c'est par la pensée logique et raisonnable : muthos ou logos, peu importe, la poésie permettrait en tout cas une découverte, du point de vue de l'auteur comme de celui du lecteur.

Dans ce cadre et cet héritage théorique, je souhaite interroger une autre dimension du lien entre poésie et philosophie, ou plus simplement de celui entre poésie et pensée par la réinscription du genre poétique dans la société et dans ce que Jacques Rancière nomme « le partage du sensible ». Plus que par des définitions essentialistes, il s'agit de définir ce lien par une historicisation rigoureuse de la création et de la circulation de l'objet poème. Le corpus d'étude prend principalement en compte des textes européens de l'entre-deux-guerres et privilégiera les figures d'Aragon, Auden et Brecht. Mais il peut aussi s'étendre vers des poètes du XIXe siècle et des poètes dits contemporains, comme Michel Deguy.

Dans cette prise en compte de son inscription dans la société et dans l'histoire, la poésie apparaît fondamentalement comme un discours critique. Cette vocation critique, remettant en question les systèmes politiques et intellectuels, est un héritage du romantisme allemand. Adorno affirme tous deux que le poète est un critique à la fois inclus et exclu de la société et de ses activités. Sa position autonome, si elle relativise ses pouvoirs de guide ou de prophète, permet à son discours d'être plus radical encore. Cette vocation critique apparaît notamment dans deux caractéristiques propres au genre poétique moderne : la création permanente de nouvelles formes et la référence constante à l'action politique réelle. La poésie a une vocation de création de nouveaux concepts et de nouvelles formes. Elle est sans cesse dans l'avenir et la création de nouvelles formes change nécessairement la vie, tel est le projet des avant-gardes. La poésie est aussi un genre qui est souvent associé à l'action, voire à la vie, dans une République des Lettres qui serait le règne de « la parole muette ».

Dans une perspective qui n'est ni ontologique ni phénoménologique, je souhaite montrer que la poésie n'est pas le genre de la recherche de la vérité, mais celui de la déconstruction des discours.

Bibliographie

- ADORNO Theodor Wiesengrund, Notes sur la littérature, traduit par Sibylle MULLER, Paris, Flammarion, coll. « Champs », 2009, 438 p.
- ADORNO Theodor Wiesengrund, Prismes : critique de la culture et de la société, traduit par Rainer ROCHLITZ et Geneviève ROCHLITZ, Paris, Payot, 2003.
- BOURDIEU Pierre, Les règles de l'art: genèse et structure du champ littéraire, Paris, Éd. du Seuil, coll. « Libre examen », 1992, 480 p.
- CAMPION, Pierre. La littérature à la recherche de la vérité, Paris, Seuil, 1996
- DAMON Maria et LIVINGSTON Ira, Poetry and Cultural Studies: A Reader, University of Illinois Press, 2009, 466 p.
- DEGUY Michel, « Savoir du non-savoir », Noesis, 15 mars 2004, no N°7.
- HABERMAS Jürgen, L'espace public [Strukturwandel der Öffentlichkeit], Paris, Payot, coll. « Critique de la politique », 1992, 324 p.
- LACOUÉ-LABARTHE Philippe et NANCY Jean-Luc, L'Absolu littéraire: théorie de la littérature du romantisme allemand, Paris, Éditions du Seuil, coll. « Collection poétique », 1978, 444 p.
- MACHEREY, Pierre. A quoi pense la littérature ? Exercices de philosophie littéraire, Paris, PUF, 1990.
- PINSON Jean-Claude, « De l'athéisme poétique aujourd'hui », Noesis, 15 mars 2004, no N°7.
- PINSON Jean-Claude, Habiter en poète: essai sur la poésie contemporaine, Seyssel, Champ Vallon, coll. « Recueil », 1995, 279 p.
- RANCIÈRE Jacques, Politique de la littérature, Paris, Galilée, coll. « La philosophie en effet », 2007, vol. 1/, 231 p.
- RANCIÈRE Jacques, Aux bords du politique, Paris, Gallimard, coll. « Folio », n° 434, 2004, 261 p.
- RANCIÈRE Jacques, Le partage du sensible: esthétique et politique, Paris, la Fabrique éd, 2000, 74 p.
- RANCIÈRE Jacques, La parole muette: essai sur les contradictions de la littérature, Paris, Hachette littératures, 1998, 190 p.
- RANCIÈRE Jacques (éd.), La politique des poètes: pourquoi des poètes en temps de détresse ?, Paris, A. Michel, coll. « Bibliothèque du Collège international de philosophie », 1992, 227 p.
- THIBAUD, Pierre, PINSON, Jean-Claude. Poésie et philosophie, actes du colloque tenu à Marseille, 10, 11, 12 octobre 1997.

PINSON, Jean-Claude. « De la pluralité des poésie 'pensantes' » (p. 11-25)

TOSEL André, « Philosophie et poésie au XXe siècle », Noesis, 15 mars 2004, no N°7.

ZAMBRANO María, Philosophie et poésie, traduit par Jacques ANCET, Paris, J. Corti, coll. « En lisant en écrivant », 2003, 172 p.

« Toi aussi, tu as des armes »: poésie & politique, Paris, la Fabrique éd, 2011, vol. 1/, 201 p.

Biography: Agrégé de lettres modernes et ancien élève de l'ENS de Lyon, Florian MAHOT BOUDIAS est doctorant constructuel à l'université Paris Ouest Nanterre la Défense, en littérature comparée, au sein du centre de recherche « Littérature et poétiques comparées ». Dirigé par M. William Marx, il travaille sur la poésie politique européenne, notamment marxiste, dans l'entre-deux-guerres, autour des figures de Bertolt Brecht, Louis Aragon et W. H. Auden.

LA LITTÉRATURE: UN "ART SCEPTIQUE"

C. Millner

Université Paris III CERC

Abstract: Sans se réduire à une simple allégorie du lien entre littérature et connaissance, nombre de récits contemporains confirment l'hypothèse de Jacques Rancière selon laquelle la littérature est un « art sceptique »[1], art de la contradiction qui opposerait à toute tentative d'assertion la confrontation des points de vue. Le récit semble donc une mise en exergue de l'écart, que celui-ci soit la conséquence de l'impossible accès à la résolution, ou l'interstice structurel qui permet l'opposition sans cesse recommencée des contraires. La littérature peut être considérée comme le lieu où la philosophie peut contourner le langage de ses intentions, ainsi la quête heuristique du scepticisme trouve dans la construction de la fiction une représentation qui peut, malgré l'apparente linéarité de la diégèse, figurer la suspension du jugement sans pour autant la trahir en la fixant. Le récit est à l'image d'une Widerstreit intérieure, il propose les modalités d'un dialogue au sein même d'une situation d'énonciation qui ne présente aucune duplicité ni aucune diffraction. L'écriture est ainsi à l'image d'une confrontation intérieure: elle témoigne d'une identité différentielle, et d'une responsabilité vis-à-vis d'un autre absent, qui est toujours l'objet d'une quête, que celle-ci soit ou non thématifiée. L'éthique se loge d'une part dans la fidélité à une forme de quête heuristique, qui refuse l'assertion et suit le mouvement dialectique, et d'autre part dans la relation à l'Autre qui se loge précisément dans cet interstice. Or Emmanuel Lévinas a précisément considéré le scepticisme comme seule démarche heuristique capable de préserver la relation éthique à autrui[2]. En effet, à la fin de Autrement qu'être ou Au delà de l'essence, il évoque le scepticisme, spectre que la philosophie ne saurait chasser, comme la pensée à même de préserver la signifiante de ce qu'il appelle l'un-pour-l'autre. Le scepticisme ne serait pas une nouvelle négation qui entrerait dans l'ordre du discours philosophique, mais, par son refus de l'assertion, il constituerait bien une faille, une mise à mal de cet ordre même. Or cette faille maintiendrait le hiatus essentiel, le différend entre ce qu'il nomme le Dit et le Dire, qui est aussi condition d'une éthique comme ouverture à l'autre. Le Dit est le contenu du discours. Le Dire en est le geste même, l'ouverture à l'autre, l'adresse. Or ce Dire n'est pas thématifiable dans un Dit: il ne s'agit pas d'un discours virtuel qui trouverait sa réalité dans la métamorphose en paroles, mais d'une ouverture qui doit rester telle, perpétuant son différend essentiel avec le Dit, ce que Lévinas appelle la diachronie. La relation à autrui se loge dans ce que Lévinas nomme « la trace du Dire » pour souligner son impossible réalisation, l'éthique est dans la perpétuation de ce hiatus diachronique. Le scepticisme ainsi envisagé prend le risque de se trahir par sa formulation théorique même. Le récit littéraire est peut-être alors l'expression qui se rapproche le plus, de façon asymptotique, d'un accomplissement paradoxal de ce scepticisme de l'impossible assertion, par le dialogue qu'elle instaure sans cesse avec elle-même et les écarts structurels et stylistiques qui ne cessent de déplacer toute résolution. [1] Jacques Rancière, La parole muette. Essai sur les contradictions de la littérature, Hachette Littérature, 1998, p.175. [2] Emmanuel Lévinas, Autrement qu'être ou Au-delà de l'essence, Paris, Martinus Nijhoff, 1974, Le livre de Poche 1990, pp.257-266.

Biography: Clélie Millner

Ancienne élève de l'ENS de Lyon en Lettres modernes. AMN de littérature comparée à l'Université de Paris III-Sorbonne Nouvelle de 2005 à 2008 puis ATER à l'Université de Nancy II, j'ai soutenu une thèse en cotutelle entre l'Université Paris III et l'Università degli Studi de Florence, sous la co-direction de M. Philippe Daros et Mme Anna Dolfi le 11 novembre 2011, qui a pour titre: "L'oeuvre-trace: questionnement de la présence dans les récits d'Antonio Tabucchi, Peter Handke et Pierre Péju".

Je suis cette année enseignante dans le secondaire et chargée de cours en littérature comparée à l'Université de Versailles-Saint Quentin en Yvelines.

S1: SCRIPTURAL REASONING AND COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

RELIGIONS AND UNIVERSITIES IN THE TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY: SCRIPTURAL REASONING, COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND A CHINESE CHALLENGE

D. Ford

University of Cambridge

Abstract: After surveying the origins and development of Scriptural Reasoning, and its institutional and disciplinary settings in Europe and North America, the paper will discuss issues raised by the development of Scriptural Reasoning in China, both institutional and disciplinary.

UNIVERSALITY OF PRACTICE AND THE GLOBAL SELF: CREATIVE ENCOUNTER BETWEEN CHINA AND THE WEST

O. Davies

King's College London

Abstract: The introduction of Scriptural Reasoning into China offers an invaluable opportunity for significant encounter between China and the West. SR is more 'Chinese' than typically Western in its relativisation of potentially divisive differences in interpretation through the common practice of reading. But it reflects a decisively Western history in its experience of religion as defining difference to be overcome. Chinese history shows an identity forged precisely through the reconciliation of religions.

At the core of the China-West encounter is the question of how the influential dualism of recent Western history is to be overcome. SR envisages this through reconciling 'meeting' in a shared practice of reading authoritative texts. This paper proposes however that a further step is required for reconciliation or harmony in a globalised world. This is the re-orientation of thought to the priority of practice as such, as the intelligent form of our material life in the world. This in turn is an argument for the priority of language itself as material sign, and so also as world.

This paper supports the argument that it is traditional Chinese insights, in interaction with apophatic Christianity, and as informed by contemporary neuroscientific conceptions of 'embodied cognition', that can offer the best possibility of a truly global hermeneutic. Traditional Christian apophysis affirms the capacity of language to bring the Creator God to expression linguistically beyond the reach of purely conceptual meanings. Language itself, as transformative material form, encompasses the 'hermeneutical circle': being both 'within' and 'without'. Language is what we have humanly in common, beyond the diversity of its meanings. The celebration of language as material form is characteristic of the universalism of world religions, including the 'abrahamic' religions (through chant, calligraphy, music and movement). This paper argues therefore that in a global context, the practice of reading in SR calls for a reversal of the Lindbeckian 'world in the text' theory to a new, Chinese optic of 'text in the world'. In this way, the sense of sharing a common practice of reading can be broadened out into the sense of sharing a common world. This paper argues that with such a re-orientation, the relativising of the individual 'determinacy' through its peaceful multiplication in SR can evolve into the global hermeneutics of a common relativisation of the hermeneutical circle itself, within the ever more powerfully emergent recognition of a shared world.

Biography: Oliver Davies is Professor of Christian Doctrine at King's College London. He has specialized in theological hermeneutics, textuality and world, and has worked on the role of cosmology in shaping Western thought ('The Creativity of God', 2004; 'Transformation Theology: Faith, Science and Globalisation', forthcoming). His present work is in the area of the evolution of Western culture through the social reception of contemporary neuroscience. He is working with others on the development of a global account of the human precisely in our capacity for managing consensual change ('Religion, Politics and Ethics: Towards a Global Account of Social Transformation', Frontiers of Philosophy in China, 7(4), 593-618). He is Director of the newly formed Centre for Social Transformation at King's College London.

SCRIPTURAL REASONING PREFIGURED: REPUBLICAN THEOLOGIANS READING JING

C. Starr
Yale University

Abstract: Scholars in Sino-Christian theology have often been dismissive or critical of Republican era theologians, arguing that they were too concerned with Confucian values and reading patterns, and not concerned enough with the realities of war-torn China. This paper argues, however, that the experience of Republican-era thinkers and their reading between Ruist and Christian scriptures is of great relevance to current debates on Scriptural Reasoning in China. A comparison of Zhao Zichen's Life of Jesus and Wu Leichuan's Christianity and Chinese Culture shows how traditional scholarship could be marshalled to very different ends by two different writers. In comparing and contrasting the reading of the Chinese classics by two well-known Republican-era theologians, the paper explores how the classics informed their model of Bible reading, and suggests ways in which what they were doing in the 1930s prefigures a Chinese version of 'Scriptural Reasoning' as advocated by Yang Huilin. Both Wu Leichuan and Zhao Zichen frequently referenced the classics in their writings to highlight and comment on the contemporary situation, and to illuminate meaning in Christian scriptures. Their very different styles and modes of reading limit the parameters of such comparative readings, and prompt such questions as whether one set of scriptures must necessarily be subordinate to the other in these readings, and how the lines between illumination and distortion might be drawn. Zhao's exegesis can be characterized as associative, fashioning a creative and imaginative but largely unstated set of associations; Wu's is much more directive, drawing meaning from the frame of the Chinese classics and producing more forced readings which play between genius and anathema.

HOW TO BUILD THE "INTERPRETIVE CONSTRUCTS" OF CHINESE CULTURE: A DISCUSSION ON DAVID HALL AND ROGER AMES'S INTERPRETIVE PRINCIPLES OF CLASSICAL CHINESE CULTURE

Y. Liu
Shanghai Normal University

Abstract: David Hall (1937-2001) and Roger T. Ames (1947-) are outstanding scholars known in American academia successively in the 1970s and 1980s. David Hall is famous for his research of Whiteheadian Process Philosophy, many ideas of which had promoted him to find the affinities between Chinese and Western cultures although he has no acquisition of Chinese language. Since the 1980s, David Hall co-authored a series of works with Roger T. Ames, a profound Chinese culture scholar. In these works, Western and Chinese cultures are understood in the light of each other and their elaborations are quite heuristic and enlightening. Their works, therefore, also contain a wealth of comparative culture methodology resources worthy of further exploration. Hall and Ames claim that current cultural phenomena can be validly interpreted because they are rooted in the history. In other words, in the history there hide the keys to its own secrets. But different from other scholars with like opinions such as Max Weber, Karl Jaspers, Talcott Parsons, and Alfred N. Whitehead, they argue that the prototype of Western culture took shape in the long period from the very beginning of western civilization to the 5th century, culminating with the work of Saint Augustine (354-430). Furthermore, they elaborate their assertion of "interpretive construct", namely, the historically constructive elements of western culture and some basic principles. Likewise, they also explore Chinese culture's "interpretive constructs" and its principles, arguing that Chinese culture's "interpretive constructs" were formed in the period of pre-Qin period and Han Dynasties. Entirely based on the above assumptions, they present their intercultural comparisons as follows: different from the West, "First Problematic Thinking" dominates classical Chinese culture. This mode of thinking is analogical or correlative, accepts the priority of change or process over rest and permanence, presumes no ultimate agency and no separation between Being and beings. In contrast, "Second Problematic Thinking", also called causal thinking, is the mode which comes to dominate the classical West. It presupposes a single-ordered "cosmos" that evolves from chaos to order, from myth to religion and philosophy. It accepts the priority of rest over change and motion, is Being and beings divided, and pursues an ultimate agency and accuracy, etc.

The article argues that their comparison is quite inspiring, but with some defects, especially about the formation timing of Chinese "interpretive constructs". First, suppose we accept their idea of "interpretive constructs" as a finished form, then its final constitution should not have taken shape until the Late Song Dynasty (1127-1279), culminating with Neo-Confucianism, much later than Han Dynasties as Hall and Ames presuppose; Second, the Neo-Confucianism is a complicated fusion of Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism, among which Buddhism plays a determining role. That's why Neo-Confucianism is also regarded "Confucianism in appearance and Buddhism in essence" (by Zhou Yutong); third, The thought of Buddhism, fundamentally speaking, has a preference for rest over motion, just like what Sushi (1037-1101), a famous Chinese poet put in a line: "So still as to hush all stirs, so empty as to hold the myriads." Therefore, Hall and Ames's assertions contradict with these facts, and some of their opinions of "interpretive constructs" of classical Chinese culture and its forming time need to be adjusted and complemented.

Biography: Liu Yun-hua (1964-) did his undergraduate work at Soochou University (1988-1991) and Peking (Beijing) University (1998-2001); he received his MA and PhD degrees in 1991 and in 2001 respectively. Now he is Professor and Director of Center for P. R. China's National Key Project -- Comparative Literature and World Literature at Shanghai Normal University. He is the author of Hermeneutics and the Meaning-generation of Confucianist Classics in Pre-Qin Dynasty (Shanghai, 2002), Interpretive Circle: the Missionary Interpretation of the Confucianist Classics and its Chinese Native Response at Late Ming and Early Qing (Beijing, 2005/2006), Christian Culture in Chinese Writings: A Research on Sino-Western Literary Relations in Southern China at the Period of Early and Middle Qing Dynasty(1644-1840) (soon to be published) and numerous academic articles.

COMPARABLE MATERIALITIES

SOCIAL ASPIRATIONS, HUMAN BONDAGES AND THE INDIAN UPRISING-FROM SCRIPT TO SCREEN: RUSKIN BOND'S A FLIGHT OF PIGEONS AND SHYAM BENEGAL'S JUNOON

T.U. DHRUV

RJT Commerce College

Abstract: In the history of the struggle for independence against the British rule in India, the Uprising in the year 1857 has been considered the first collective attempt for freedom. It has played a key role in generating, moulding and formulating human psyche at a collective level. It heralded social aspiration for freedom. The first extensive attempt on part of the soldiers of the East India Company, when they mutinied, exposed on a vast scale the popular hatred for the English on part of the Indians. Many old smaller kingdoms joined them in the hope of regaining their territories from the English. Even in this hostile environment, gratitude, magnanimity of human values and existence did maintain their due priority in social sensitivity. Ruskin Bond, an Indian author of British descent, in his novella A Flight of Pigeons, presents the co-existence of social imagination and individual longing to possess an English young beauty, generating out of the fascination at first sight, along with creating accurate and faithful pen-pictures of contemporary fanaticism, traditions and strength of human character. The celluloid adaption of the story, Junoon, by the master art director of Indian Cinema Shyam Benegal, presents the same human magnitude with the added advantages of the cinematographic manifestation. The paper aims at a comparative study of two genres as mediums of presenting social imagination with its historical perspective, exploiting their technological and perception-oriented traits.

Biography: References: R Bond, A Flight of Pigeons, 2003,2008 Penguin Books S Benegal, Junoon movie 1981

HANDWRITING IN THE DIGITAL AGE: THE RE-EMERGENCE OF MANU SCRIPTUS

K. Brillenburg-Wurth

University of Utrecht

Abstract: This paper uses the concept of tactility and materiality as a framework to analyze handwriting as a visual intervention in the work of Louise Paillé and Simon Hantaï. Both artists indicate that paper materiality is precisely being reinvented and reinvigorated – rather than being extinguished – as a medium of the literary in our so called digital age. Their work calls for a novel approach to literariness and textuality.

Paillé is a scribe in modern times: she overwrites second-hand books with existing novels she has read – and she does this by hand. Her project Livres-livres, I argue, directs us towards the affective materiality of reading as a visual engagement with words, lines, and paper. Likewise, Simon Hataï's illegible rendering of the hand-written correspondence between Jean-Luc Nancy and Jacques Derrida in La connaissance des textes foregrounds the eventfulness of language as excessive figuration. If the literary revolves around the heightening of language, Livres-livres and La connaissance heighten our awareness of an "old" materiality of language: it foregrounds handwriting "as such", its curves and directions, its shapes, the quality of the ink, fat and fine lines, or dense overwriting. I show that both works can be approached as the visual record of a reading: a record that tells us about the presence (Nancy) of handwriting as a documentary mode (Villem Flusser). Why is this presence – in both works – made manifest as a presence of erasure/overwriting? How does this destructive mode of writing force us to reconsider the idea of literariness?

Biography: Kiene Brillenburg Wurth works as an Associate Professor with the Department of Comparative Literature at Utrecht University. In her research, she focuses on aesthetic theory, literary theory and intermediality, especially the relations between literature and music in the 18th-, 19th-, and 20th centuries. She has published on the sublime, music, British and German Romanticism, philosophy of art, and post-modern philosophy. She acquired a national research grant for the project Back to the Book (<http://backbooks.wordpress.com/>) and recently edited the volume Between Page and Screen: Remaking Literature Through Cinema and Cyberspace (Oxford University Press, forthcoming).

APPROACHING THE REAL. MATERIALITY IN DIGITAL LITERATURE

Y. van Dijk

University of Amsterdam

Abstract: Digital literature foregrounds its own medium, and it foregrounds the graphic, material aspects of language. Experiments with the new medium and with the form of language are generally presented and interpreted within a framework of the historical avant-garde or the neo-avantgarde. This paper aims to take a new perspective on the emerging digital materiality of language. The analysis of work that use digitalized typescript, handwriting or graffiti-like drawing (for example in Jason Nelson, the digital artist of hybrid works between games, literature and video) leads to the conclusion that an 'absent presence' is foregrounded. The paradoxical merging of presence and absence makes these forms of digital literature an expression of a specifically late postmodernist ambivalent stance towards representation of the 'real'. Complicity with the media-culture goes hand in hand with an ironic approach of the mediatedness of the world and the body.

Biography: Dr. Yra van Dijk is assistant professor in Modern Dutch Literature at the University of Amsterdam. Presently, she is part of a HERA sponsored European researchproject into digital communities. (www.elmcip.net). Leegte die ademt (Vantilt, 2006) was a study on the meaning of typographic blanks in the modern poem, on which she published too in Word and Image (27 (4), 2011). With Thomas Vaessens, she edited the volume Reconsiderations. The European Novel beyond postmodernism (Amsterdam University Press, 2011). Her current research focuses on the relation between culture, technology and the materiality of (digital) texts.

S1 : FORCE ET VERTU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FACE A L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE

LA COMPRESSION DU PRÉSENT : VIS ET VIRTUS DU ROMAN CONTEMPORAIN

E. Bouju

université Rennes 2

Abstract: Dans quelle mesure la « compression du présent » (Herman Lübbe) qui présiderait au régime contemporain d'historicité trouve-t-elle dans la littérature le moyen d'exercer sa puissance de représentation ? Servant d'introduction à l'ensemble du séminaire « force et vertu de la littérature face à l'histoire immédiate », cette communication évoquera certaines des modalités d'écriture romanesque de l'histoire immédiate en les rattachant à l'exercice d'une puissance pragmatique et rhétorique renouvelant l'alliance antique entre les notions de la vis et de la virtus. On envisagera en particulier le cas du roman « istorique », associé à la pratique nombreuse et radicale, dans la littérature française et européenne, de la fiction du témoignage. Et on évoquera la force diagonale (H. Arendt) par laquelle le roman prétend (illusoirement ?) résoudre les problèmes d'esthétique, d'épistémologie et d'éthique auxquels est confrontée l'écriture de l'histoire et du contemporain, du passé et du présent, du virtuel et de l'actuel.

Biography: Emmanuel Bouju est Professeur de littérature générale et comparée à Rennes 2 et Visiting Professor à Harvard. Il est l'auteur de Réinventer la littérature : démocratisation et modèles romanesques dans l'Espagne post-franquiste (préface de J. Semprún, PUM, 2002) et La transcription de l'histoire. Essai sur le roman européen de la fin du vingtième siècle (PUR, 2006). Il est responsable du Groupe phi dont il a dirigé les ouvrages collectifs aux PUR : Littératures sous contrat (2002), L'engagement littéraire (2005), Littérature et exemplarité (avec A. Gefen, G. Hautcœur et M. Macé, 2007) et L'autorité en littérature (2010).

PLANETARY DYSPHORIA

E. Apter

New York University

Abstract: This paper will examine how theories of the death drive give rise to a literary history of catastrophism in the context of landscapes of devastation, war and colonial plunder, and industrial extraction. In recent work in the field of ecocriticism, paradigms of cosmos, fossil time, negative cosmopolitanism, object-oriented materialism and Manichean kulturkampf, join premonitions of earthly extinction (Ray Brassier's "nihil unbound," Eugene Thacker's "dark pantheism"). I will draw on these eclectic yet convergent constructs in developing a literary theory of "planetary dysphoria." The aim is to emphasize psychical processes in diagnoses of planetarity, while trying to avoid a heavy-handed reliance on allegories of World System or the Planet or Capital that impute subjective personalities to political entities and geographic phantasms (as if placing them like sovereign avatars in the cosmic space-frame of a video game or turning them into epic characters subject to pathetic fallacy). In arguing for a rethinking of World Literature in terms of planetary dysphoria, we will be experimenting with an "ecology" of what Melanie Klein called "the depressive position," as it suffuses every aspect of economic and social life.

Biography: Areas of Research/Interest: 19th- and 20th-century French and comparative literatures; Francophone studies; cultural studies; critical theory. External Affiliations: Editor of a book series, Translation/Transnation, Princeton University Press, and serves on the editorial boards of PMLA, Comparative Literature, October and Signs. Fellowships/Honors: Guggenheim Fellow (2003), Mellon, Rockefeller, ACLS, NEH, College Art Association. Select Publications: The Translation Zone: A New Comparative Literature (Princeton University Press, 2006). "The Human in the Humanities", October 96 (Spring 2001). "D'une fin de siècle à l'autre" Critique 637-638 (June-July 2000). Continental Drift: From National Characters to Virtual Subjects (University of Chicago Press, 1999). Fetishism as Cultural Discourse, ed. with William Pietz (Cornell University Press, 1991). Feminizing the Fetish: Psychoanalysis and Narrative Obsession in Turn-of-the-Century France (Cornell University Press, 1991). André Gide and the Codes of Homotextuality (Stanford French and Italian Studies 48, Anma Libri, 1987).

SOIF DU REEL, CRISE DE LA FICTION ? LA FORCE DES FAITS DANS L'ECRITURE DU PRESENT

A. James

The University of Chicago

Friday, July 19, 2013

Abstract: La thématique pérenne de la mort du roman a pris dans les dernières années une nouvelle tournure, autour ce qui paraît bien constituer une crise de légitimité de la fiction—phénomène que tend à masquer, dans le contexte critique français, la formule du "retour au réel". Si ce discours du retour (au récit, au sujet, au réel) s'inscrit dans le contexte précis d'un "après-nouveau-roman", l'interrogation sur la fin de la fiction dépasse de loin cette réaction locale pour occuper un espace transculturel. En témoigne un débat de 2010 dans la presse américaine sur la prétendue inadéquation ("irrelevance") de la fiction aux yeux du public contemporain (Lee Siegel), ainsi qu'un certain nombre d'œuvres publiées récemment de part et d'autre de l'Atlantique—dont Reality Hunger du romancier américain David Shields (2010), à la fois diagnostic de la culture contemporaine et montage-manifeste qui revendique le brouillage des frontières de la fiction et l'exploitation du "réel brut" (comme ressource ou comme leurre). Si le goût de l'authentique et l'affirmation d'un dépassement du vraisemblable par le vrai caractérisent certains romans historiques qui ne se permettent qu'"une goutte de stylisation dans l'océan du réel" (Laurent Binet, HHhH, 2009), les reproches adressés au roman visent surtout son incapacité à écrire l'urgence du présent. Les œuvres inclassables de l'écrivain britannique Geoff Dyer (Otherwise Known as the Human Condition, 2011) participent à une catégorie hybride, entre journalisme et essai, où l'on pourrait aussi inscrire, du côté français, les livres récents d'Emmanuel Carrère (notamment Limonov, 2011). Écriture présente et écriture du présent, le récit contemporain se détourne souvent de la fiction pour élaborer des formes narratives complexes qui dépassent le modèle du "non-fiction novel" (dans la lignée de Norman Mailer et Truman Capote) tout en s'inspirant de sources et de modèles journalistiques—du fait divers (Carrère, Laurent Mauvignier, Régis Jauffret) au "long-form reporting" dont Dyer fait l'éloge. Hétérogènes, puisant dans des savoirs multiples, ces nouvelles modalités d'écriture sauraient-elles développer des formes de puissance littéraire qui ne se limitent pas à la fictionalité ? Le roman serait-il de trop dans un paysage littéraire où prime le réel saisi sur le vif ? Nous tenterons de répondre à ces questions tout en tenant compte de certains contre-discours qui assignent des limites à la force des faits (Luc Lang, Délit de Fiction, 2011 ; John Agata, The Lifespan of a Fact, 2011).

Biography: Alison James est professeure adjointe à l'Université de Chicago, où elle enseigne la littérature française du XXe siècle. Ses recherches portent sur le groupe Oulipo, l'écriture du quotidien, et les liens entre littérature et philosophie. Elle est l'auteure de Constraining Chance: Georges Perec and the Oulipo (Northwestern University Press, 2009) et a dirigé le numéro spécial "Forms of Formalism" de L'Esprit créateur (2008). Elle a publié des articles sur Louis Aragon, Jacques Roubaud, Harry Mathews, François Bon et le philosophe Clément Rosset.

S1 PROBLÉMATIQUES THÉORIQUES GÉNÉRALES

LE PROGRAMME DE RECHERCHE "LES ORIENTS DÉSORIENTÉS" : BILAN ET PERSPECTIVES COMPARATISTES

J. Dubost

Université Blaise Pascal

Abstract: Le programme 'Les Orientés désorientés' créé à l'université Blaise Pascal (Clermont-Ferrand II) au sein du CELIS (Centre de recherche sur les Littératures et la Sociopoétique) dans le cadre d'une thématique de recherche intitulée 'Altérité, rencontre métissage' se propose, à partir du concept de rencontre, de repenser les rapports entre Orient et Occident en partant de l'idée que la relation Orient/Occident, qui était au cœur de la démarche d'Edward Said, n'a plus été ensuite un sujet central pour les postcolonial studies. Or depuis une décennie l'évolution du monde montre qu'il n'est pas possible d'en négliger l'importance. Prenant aussi en compte le fait que de nombreuses interrogations ont ressurgi autour de l'approfondissement des recherches concernant les orientalismes dans toute leur diversité en Europe et ailleurs, le programme s'oriente aussi vers un travail en réseau sur cette question fondamentale. Il s'agit de repenser les processus de chevauchement et d'emmêlement au-delà de toute essentialisme, de travailler sur la conceptualisation de la nécessaire déconstruction d'une fausse opposition, de susciter un dialogue d'approches et de méthodes. Cette présentation se propose de rappeler l'historique des réalisations, de dégager à partir des paradigmes d'analyse de ce programme des modèles de compréhension pour le présent, de lecture pour le passé et d'esquisser le futur de cette question. L'approche comparatiste croise essentiellement les domaines suivants : littérature, philosophie et anthropologie.

Biography: Professeur émérite de Littérature générale et comparée à l'université Blaise Pascal. 1994-2001 professeur de Littératures romanes et de Littérature comparée à l'université de Stuttgart (Allemagne) Responsable du programme 'Les voi(es)x de l'Autre au CRLMC, 2011-2005 Responsable depuis 2006 du programme 'Altérité, rencontre, métissage' au CELIS en collaboration avec Axel Gasquet Responsable d'un programme Hubert Curient 'IMHOTEP' en collaboration avec l'université du Caire 2008-2009, sur la thématique du Témoignage Responsable avec Axel Gasquet du programme de recherche 'Les Orientés désorientés' Président de la SATOR (Société d'Analyse de la Topique Romanesque= Choix de publications récentes: Topographie de la rencontre dans le roman européen, Presses de l'université Blaise Pascal, 2005 En coll. avec P. Jonchière, A. Tomiche et E. Lysoe, "L'hospitalité des savoirs. Mélanges offerts à Alain Montandon", PUBP, 2011 (Manuscrit déposé en 2012) Les Orientés désorientés ou le détour de l'Occident. Déconstruire l'orientalisme (en coll. avec Axel Gasquet) Nombreuses publications en France et à l'étranger sur les littératures libertines, le rapport texte/image, les écritures poétiques, l'esthétique et le rapport littérature/philosophie, la topique romanesque, représentations de l'extrême, poésie et sacré etc. Bio-bibliographie plus complète sur le site du CELIS (www.univ-bpclermont.fr/CELIS)

PEUT-IL Y AVOIR AUTANT D'ANTHROPOLOGIES QUE DE CULTURES ? LA RÉFÉRENCE UNIVERSALISTE EN QUESTION

M. Kilani

université de Lausanne

Abstract: Dans cette communication, il s'agit de se pencher sur la question de savoir s'il est possible de développer des anthropologies à la périphérie des centres hégémoniques que sont les traditions américaine et anglaise et accessoirement française. Un tel questionnement devrait nous permettre de poser dans un premier temps la question de savoir s'il peut y avoir autant d'anthropologies que de cultures (une "anthropologie arabe" ou "musulmane" par exemple) ? Et si tel est le cas, quel serait le référentiel universaliste au soubassement de chaque anthropologie ? Dans un second temps, la question de la référence universaliste sera questionnée du point de vue épistémologique qui fonde une telle possibilité ainsi que des conditions socio-historiques qui accompagnent une telle élaboration. Il y sera enfin défendu la figure d'un universalisme critique (ou ethnocentrique) conscient de ses conditions de production et des limites qu'il devrait continuellement dépasser.

Biography: Mondher Kilani est professeur à l'Université de Lausanne et directeur du Laboratoire d'Anthropologie culturelle et sociale (LACS).

Il a effectué des recherches sur le terrain en Papouasie-Nouvelle-Guinée, dans les Alpes suisses, dans les oasis du Sud tunisien, au Niger parmi les populations hausas et peules, et plus récemment en Malaisie (à Penang et Malacca). Ses intérêts portent actuellement sur l'histoire et l'épistémologie de l'anthropologie, sur les modèles d'ethnicité et d'intégration, sur les processus identitaires et de patrimonialisation, sur la guerre et la violence extrême, sur la religion et la laïcité, enfin sur le cannibalisme et la raison sacrificielle. Parmi ses ouvrages, citons : Anthropologie. Du local au global, 2012, Paris: Armand Colin ; Guerre et sacrifice. La violence extrême, 2006, Paris: PUF; L'universalisme américain et les banlieues de l'humanité, 2002, Lausanne: Payot ; L'Invention de l'autre. Essais sur le discours anthropologique, 2000, Lausanne : Payot ; et en collaboration Le Manifeste de Lausanne. Pour une anthropologie non hégémonique, 2011, Montréal : Liber ; Figures de l'humain. Les représentations de l'anthropologie, 2004, Paris : Éditions de l'EHESS ; L'imbroglie ethnique en quatorze mots clés, 2000, Lausanne : Payot.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Lien :

<https://applicationspub.unil.ch/interpub/noauth/php/Un/UnPers.php?PerNum=720029&LanCode=37> ou

www.unil.ch/lacs/page66925.html

S1: THE ART OF NOT THINKING

IS AESTHETIC FEELING A KIND OF THINKING?

M. Chaouli
Indiana University

Abstract: Every account of aesthetic experience acknowledges that a certain feeling -- a kind of pleasure -- is involved, otherwise we would hesitate to call the experience properly aesthetic. But what sort of feeling is this exactly? In my paper, I will argue that the richest way of characterizing aesthetic feeling will not put it in opposition to thinking, understood in the broadest sense as engaging with concepts. Rather it will see this kind of feeling as being suffused by thinking, albeit a kind of thinking that is not directed at a particular issue or question or centered around a particular concept. To get a better handle on this mode of feeling, I read some passages in Kant's Kritik der Urteilskraft, in which he articulates, if only obscurely, the role of our capacity for conceptual thought in aesthetic experience. As I will try to show, aesthetic experience entails neither the full exercise of concepts nor their absence but rather their presence as a capacity of the mind. And the availability of the capacity itself changes everything about the experience.

Biography: Ballantine Hall 660, E-mail: chaouli@indiana.edu Bloomington, IN 47405 Web: michel.chaouli.googlepages.com Tel: (812) 567-3522; Fax: (812) 855-8927 EMPLOYMENT Associate Professor of German, Adjct. Professor of Comparative Literature and of Cognitive Science, Indiana University, Bloomington2005 - present Assistant Professor of Germanic Studies, Adjunct Assistant Professor of Comparative Literature, Indiana University, Bloomington2000 - 2005 Assistant Professor of German and of Comparative Literature, Harvard University1995 - 2000 Lecturer in Rhetoric and in Comparative Literature, University of California, Berkeley1994 - 1995 EDUCATION Ph.D., Comparative Literature (German, English, French) University of California, Berkeley1994 Freie Universität Berlin1982 - 1983 B.A., magna cum laude, Philosophy, Yale University 1982 Ruprecht-Karl-Universität Heidelberg1981

NOT THINKING AS A MODE OF THINKING

W. Hamarneh
University of Richmond

Abstract: One can say with some confidence that thinking is the condition of possibility for not thinking. Ontologically (if one can speak of an ontology of concepts) non thinking cannot be envisioned without thinking. Non thinking then can be conceptualized spatially as existing along side thinking and occupying a specific space the borders of which are determined or drawn by thinking. Or it can be conceptualized temporally as that which existed prior to thinking. No matter how it is conceptualized, not thinking remains as slippery as thinking itself and its opposition to thinking through the negative 'not' causes, by necessity, continuous border shifts. These and similar problems are inherent to any discussion of not thinking especially as related to literary theory. As an example, the theory that was developed in the nineteenth century about the literary as being thinking with images does problematize the thinking not thinking dichotomy as some images can be explained through analogy (which may qualify as thinking) but many other images are of a spontaneous or personal or even intuitive nature that can not be accounted for "thinkingly." In my presentation, I will try to tackle the issue by examining three texts. Two of these texts are by Borges and Calvino, two writers who are considered very cerebral and may be easily associated with the thinking camp. What I will try to show is that these two writers utilize the not thinking elements in such a way as to lay bare thinking by capturing its inconsistencies and showing how paradoxical it can be. The third text is a narrative from the Arabian Nights that utilizes the not thinking elements in order to construct a narrative bearing in mind that narrative, although by definition approximate and in its most interesting moments vague it still qualifies as one possible form of knowledge, therefore, as somehow associated with thinking.

Biography: Graduated in Comparative Lit. from the University of Toronto. Taught at Yale, Texas, and Swarthmore and is presently Associate Prpf. at the University of Richmond. Main interests: The modern Novel in Arabic, English, and German. Literary theory and philosophy, Post-colonial studies, Literary theory and the sciences.

S1: TRADUIRE OU LA DISPROPORTION INTERIEURE DES PAROLES

ANTOINE BERMAN LECTEUR DE WALTER BENJAMIN

R. Kahn
Université de Rouen

Abstract: Antoine Berman a consacré un séminaire à " La Tâche du traducteur". On connaît l'importance de Benjamin pour sa propre réflexion. Il s'agira de lire ce séminaire et d'entrevoir une possibilité de critique de la critique bermanienne, en réévaluant ou en réorientant certains aspects du texte et du travail de Benjamin.

Biography: Robert Kahn. Ancien élève de l'ENS St Cloud, agrégé de lettres modernes, docteur en littérature comparée de l'Université Paris III. Maître de conférences de littérature comparée à l'Université de Rouen. Traducteur d'œuvres de Walter Benjamin et d'Erich Auerbach

TRADUCTION-CRITIQUE ET CRITIQUE DES TRADUCTIONS : QUELQUES REFLEXIONS A PARTIR D'ANTOINE BERMAN

V. Sommella
Ens de Lyon

Abstract: Quels sont les rapports entre traduction et critique ? Y-a-t-il une tension irréductible entre ces deux « destins » des oeuvres, ou plutôt une parenté structurelle ? Peut la traduction être considérée elle-même un acte critique ? Quel est la place qu'une « critique des traductions » peut occuper à l'intérieur du discours de la critique littéraire ? Est-elle seulement une sous partie de la critique littéraire qui a pour objet ce qu'on appelle la « littérature traduite », ou bien faut-il accorder à cette partie de la critique tout le sérieux qu'on accorde à la critique des oeuvres ? La lecture critique d'une traduction peut-elle révéler quelque chose d'inédit sur l'oeuvre elle-même ? Dans ma contribution j'aborderai ces questions à partir de la pensée traductologique d'Antoine Berman. Berman a réfléchi passionnément sur les rapports entre critique et traduction dans plusieurs lieux de son oeuvre, et notamment dans son dernier ouvrage – Pour une critique des traductions, John Donne (Paris, Gallimard, 1995) – où il a essayé de montrer la nécessité de l'institution d'une critique des traductions comme partie fondamentale de la critique littéraire et d'en exposer les traits principaux.

Biography: Valentina Sommella Cursus : Doctorat en cotutelle en « Sciences Philosophiques » et « Sciences du langage » à l'Université de Naples « Federico II » (avec allocation de recherche) et à l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales de Paris (Centre de Recherche sur les Arts et le Langage). Directeurs : M. Domenico Jervolino et M. Yves Hersant. Master en Philosophie à l'Université de Naples « Federico II ». Mémoire de master en Philosophie du Langage. Titre du mémoire : « Antoine Berman, penseur de la traduction » dirigé par le Prof. Domenico Jervolino. Thèse : Le visage de la lettre. Antoine Berman lecteur de La tâche du traducteur de Walter Benjamin. Domaines de recherche : Herméneutique et théorie de la traduction, philosophie du langage, études européennes. Langues de travail : français, italien, allemand, anglais.

Publications :

- 1) V. Sommella, « Antoine Berman, pensatore della traduzione », in Studium, n°1, Rome, janvier/février 2005, p. 27-36.
- 2) V. Sommella, « Marcel Danesi, Lingua, metafora, concetto. Vico e la linguistica cognitiva, Edizioni del Sud, Bari, 2001 », recension in Bollettino del Centro di Studi Vichiani, XXXV 2005, p. 214-217.
- 3) V. Sommella, « La finalità etica del tradurre : eticità e letteralità nella traductologie di Antoine Berman », in Tradurre e comprendere. Pluralità dei linguaggi e delle culture, actes du XII^e Congrès annuel de la Société Italienne de Philosophie du Langage, éditions Aracne, Rome, 2006, p. 401 – 413.
- 4) Antoine Berman, L'Âge de la traduction. La Tâche du traducteur de Walter Benjamin, un commentaire, texte établi par Isabelle Berman et Valentina Sommella, Paris, Presses Universitaires de Vincennes, 2008.
- 5) V. Sommella, « La traduction comme épreuve de l'étranger », in Le Même et l'Autre. Identité et Différence, actes du XXXI^e Congrès International de l'ASPLF (Association des Sociétés de Philosophie de Langue Française), publiés par la Société Ongroise de Philosophie de Langue Française et par l'Université ELTE de Budapest, février 2009, p. 745 – 750.
- 6) V. Sommella, « Walter Benjamin, lingua e traduzione », in M. Castagna, S. De Carlo, (édité par), Lo spazio della parola, EDI, Naples, 2010, p. 207-214.
- 7) Antoine Berman, Jacques Amyot, traducteur français. Essai sur les origines de la traduction en France, texte établi par Isabelle Berman et Valentina Sommella, Paris, Belin, 2012.

LE TRADUCTEUR EN PORTE-PAROLE : UN ETHOS D'ETRANGER A SOI-MÊME ?

M. Suchet
ENS Lyon

Abstract: La conception de la traduction comme passage suggère l'existence d'une langue source et d'une langue cible aussi stables et distinctes que les deux rives d'un fleuve. L'analyse énonciative d'une traduction révèle pourtant les traces d'un travail qui relève moins d'une opération de transfert que de représentation, ce qui explique qu'une traduction fonctionne comme un substitut du texte de départ. Le traducteur serait-il moins un passeur qu'un porte-parole ? Nous mettrons à profit la puissance de contraste d'un comparatisme différentiel pour examiner la posture d'énonciation de l'instance traduisante telle qu'on la devine dans les produits de l'acte de traduire : les textes traduits. Notre hypothèse est que l'ethos du traducteur consiste à se poser « soi-même comme un autre » en utilisant l'outil de comparaison dans le sens fort d'une implication ; non pas seulement « à la manière d'un autre » mais bien « en tant qu'autre ». Nous envisagerons donc les aspects poétiques de la traduction mais aussi ses implications éthiques et politiques, en nous appuyant sur des textes dont le choix définitif se fera en fonction des corpus de travail de l'ensemble des participants à l'atelier. A nos yeux en effet, une littérature comparée invitant à l'auto-comparaison est une littérature comparée qui se pense à plusieurs !

Biography: Myriam Suchet est actuellement attachée temporaire d'enseignement et de recherche (Ater) à l'École Normale Supérieure de Lyon et membre du CERCC, Centre d'Etudes et de Recherches Comparées sur la Création. Elle a soutenu en 2010 un doctorat de littérature comparée intitulé Textes hétérolingues et textes traduits : de « la langue » aux figures de l'énonciation. Pour une littérature comparée différentielle, qui a reçu le prix de la meilleure thèse en cotutelle France-Québec et la médaille d'or du Gouverneur Général du Canada. Une étape antérieure de la recherche a paru en 2009 aux éditions des Archives Contemporaines sous le titre Outils pour une traduction postcoloniale. Intéressée par les littératures écrites à la croisée des langues et par les problématiques liées à la traduction, elle souhaite désormais interroger plus frontalement les répercussions politiques et sociales de l'imaginaire hétérolingue.

TRADUIRE LES QUESTIONS IDENTITAIRES DANS LE ROMAN POLICIER CONTEMPORAIN

R. Richard-Battesti
Université de Corse UMR CNRS LISA 6240

Abstract: Dans le cadre d'une recherche en cours, je propose une étude comparative entre différentes traductions de romans policiers à caractères identitaire, appartenant à des périodes et des cultures distinctes. Entre le détective métis du bush australien Napoléon Bonaparte par Arthur Upfield initiateur du genre policier dit « ethnologique » et le commissaire Armand Pierucci de Marie-Hélène Ferrai (2005), la mondialisation a modifié les enjeux et politiques éditoriales : les échanges interculturels toujours plus diversifiés incitent à s'interroger sur l'évolution de la tâche du traducteur, notamment face à ces questions identitaires qui pénètrent de plus en plus le genre le plus diffusé aujourd'hui. Cette problématique concerne à la fois la traductologie, la réception des langues et cultures minorées et l'éthique de la traduction.

Biography: RICHARD-BATTESTI Romain – 28 ans Doctorant 2^{ème} année richard-battesti@univ-corse.fr 10^{ème} Section : Littératures Comparées Sous la direction de Pr GRAZIANI Françoise, Mcf ISOLERY Jacques « Insularité et roman policier moderne, les influences de la mondialisation sur la traduction » UMR CNRS Lieux Identités eSpaces et Activités 6240 Identités et Cultures, les Processus de Patrimonialisation ICPP

L'HYPOTHESE TRADUISANTE. ECRIRE ET LIRE "EN TRADUISANT"

M. Verger
Université Paris 8 Saint-Denis

Abstract: L'hypothèse traduisante. Ecrire et lire en traduisant. L'hypothèse traduisante s'interroge sur la valeur et l'extension théorique possible de la traduction comme paradigme central de la création littéraire. Elle comprend le geste de la traduction comme opération à la fois interne et externe à l'écriture littéraire et pose la question de la problématique (re)définition de ce qu'est, de ce qui fait une oeuvre littéraire. L'hypothèse traduisante serait double et prendrait en considération le geste de l'écriture autant que l'acte de la lecture : 1) en écrivant, en traduisant : une tentative de définir une "poétique du texte en mouvement", à deux niveaux différents (A. Dispositif interne, ou la langue en mouvement : l'écriture étant toujours déjà travaillée de l'intérieur par l'autre de la langue voire par la langue étrangère : l'écriture se définirait alors comme un impossible monolingue, l'échec de la seule langue maternelle) (B. Dispositif externe, ou le lieu dynamique de l'oeuvre : relocaliser l'oeuvre hors du seul texte original pour l'étendre jusqu'à sa survie à travers différentes formes d'actualisations auxquelles participent les traductions) ; 2) une tentative de proposer un nouveau mode de lecture : en lisant, en traduisant, comme si un Louis Wolfson pouvait fournir un nouveau paradigme productif de lecture critique. Il s'agirait de montrer comment le geste de la traduction innervait certaines poétiques a priori monolingues, et de tenter une lecture inouïe des textes qui sache entendre les résonances d'une présence fantomatique de la langue. Faire de la traduction le lieu même de l'écriture et de la lecture - comme le dissemblable est le site de la langue. Autrement dit : comment Finnegans Wake n'est pas une anomalie monstrueuse de la littérature mondiale, mais un modèle d'écriture poussé à son point d'incandescence - et une invitation à un mode de lecture créatif. Il s'agirait de bien entendre ce que des Joyce, Derrida ou Cixous ont pu écrire sur / en des langues toujours déjà en traduction, qui s'inventent dans le miroir et la hantise de la langue étrangère, qui se forment dans le geste de la traduction. Relisons encore une fois "Le monolingue de l'autre", littéralement, à la lettre. Nous proposons de relire, de dé-lire des corpus a priori "monolingues" et de repenser leur stylistique particulière en termes de traduction. Les mots anglais de Mallarmé, le français-traduit-du-latin ou le devenir-anglais de la langue de Rimbaud, la hantise de la langue arabe de textes maghrébins dits "francophones" sont aujourd'hui bien connus de la critique. Les études post-coloniales ont définitivement inscrit le métissage et l'hybride comme des notions centrales de la pensée de la littérature et des langues aujourd'hui. Nous aimerions poursuivre et étendre une écoute polyphonique de textes a priori monolingues en allant au-delà de ce qui est étudié aujourd'hui à travers les altérités et altérations de la langue (les Artaud, Khlebnikov, Thomas Kling, Paul Celan, Oskar Pastior) ou défigurations des langues par parasitage ouvertement plurilingue (par massacre de la langue d'écriture ou par le jeu du plurilinguisme, de l'alternance codique, façon Juan Goytisolo) afin de relire certains textes dont la langue est subtilement travaillée, minée de l'intérieur non seulement par la langue étrangère, mais par le geste même de la traduction. Des micro-lectures de quelques auteurs (Rimbaud, Céline, Jean Genet, Hervé Guibert, Thomas Bernhard, etc) nous permettront de définir l'écriture et la lecture comme des pratiques de traductions, des "appels à la traduction", alors même que la langue étrangère semble absente des textes. Par le jeu de mots translinguistique, l'anagramme, ou ce que nous nommons le "signifiant-luciole" (en mémoire du nez du grand-père de Leopold Bloom) lisible en plusieurs langues en même temps, littéralement et/ou dans tous les sens, nous proposons de faire de "l'hypothèse traduisante" un concept critique permettant de repenser les gestes d'écriture et de lecture, qui permettrait parallèlement de proposer une théorie alternative de "la langue". Ce n'est pas un hasard, et cela a déjà été dit, si la traduction et les translation studies sont aujourd'hui cette pratique et ces lieux qui obligent les modèles de la linguistique structurale à se repenser - comme si le discours de la linguistique avait rigoureusement oublié de penser la permanence de la traduction et des contacts interlinguistiques au-delà de la seule diversité des langues. L'hypothèse traduisante, si elle se propose d'être une critique de la poétique des textes et de la lecture, implique parallèlement (nécessairement) une autre pensée de la langue (hors de ses formalisations nationales par exemple). Et ce changement de paradigme dans la théorie de la langue implique quant à lui évidemment des reconfigurations dans la pensée du politique. Ou comment l'écriture et la lecture en traduction aimeraient aussi fonctionner comme une pratique politique du littéraire, ou une pratique littéraire du politique. De même que toute pensée de la communauté et que toute politique, comme partage du sensible, impliquent une théorie de la langue, une théorie de la "langue sans qualités" (Cécile Canut) nous permettrait de reformuler autant une éthique linguistique de la désappartenance qu'une politique post-identitaire, post-nationale et post-humaine (pour reprendre un terme que Joyce a pu appliquer à sa Molly Bloom). Il s'agirait de réviser les définitions dont nous disposons des termes centraux "homme" et "langue" afin d'insister sur ce qui les traverse et les déstabilise infiniment. Comment penser une langue et un sujet toujours déjà en traduction ? Et comment, à partir de cette "hypothèse traduisante", énoncer ce que pourrait valoir une comparaison entre une poétique de la langue traduisante et une politique radicalement trans- ou queer ? Bref, il s'agirait de penser la traduction et le transfert comme des paradigmes poétiques et politiques, mais aussi comme des modèles possibles d'écriture et de lecture. On pourrait finalement dire aussi : quand et comment politiser le signifiant ? Ou encore : comment la traduction peut-elle offrir un modèle de transaction littéraire (écrire et lire) autant que le lieu de l'invention d'une politique radicale ?

Biography: Ancien élève de l'Ecole Normale Supérieure Lettres et Sciences Humaines, agrégé de Lettres Modernes, Mathias Verger est actuellement doctorant contractuel avec mission d'enseignement, inscrit en deuxième année de doctorat de Littérature Comparée (sous la direction de Tiphaine Samoyault) à l'Université Paris 8 Saint-Denis. Ses publications incluent : "Barthes. Le mystère de la chambre claire" (La Quinzaine Littéraire, Aout 2010), "Jean Genet - His Ha(s)te of and for the 'Mother Tongue'" (Parallax, vol.18, n.3, 2012).

S1 HISTORIES, THEORIES AND FUTURES OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

WEAVING AND UNWEAVING THE RAINBOW: THE COMING OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE TO BRITAIN, 1800 AND AFTER

E. Shaffer
University of London

Abstract: Weaving and unweaving the rainbow: the coming of comparative literature to Britain, 1800 and after Biography: Elinor Shaffer, FBA is Senior Research Fellow, Institute of Germanic & Romance Studies, University of London; Director of Research and Series Editor, The Reception of British and Irish Authors in Europe.

WORLDING COMPARATIVE LITERATURE: THE METHODS AND STAKES OF NEW COMPARATIVE STUDIES

S. Bahun
University of Essex

Abstract: This paper will address the debates surrounding comparative literature and world literature in the past decade, debates that ranged from bitterly acrimonious to benevolently playful. The paper will argue for methodological apertures with which this situation provides us, and zoom in on one of them - the spectrum of theories of entangled or crossed histories.

Biography: Sanja Bahun: Assistant Professor at the Department of Literature, Film, and Theatre Studies, University of Essex. Her area of expertise is international modernism, and her research interests include comparative literature and film, psychoanalysis, and women's and gender studies. She has published articles and book chapters on a variety of related subjects, and she is author of Modernism and Melancholia: History as Mourning-Work (2011) and joint editor of The Avant-garde and the Margin: New Territories of Modernism (2006), Violence and Gender in the Globalized World: The Intimate and the Extimate (2008), From Word to Canvas: Appropriations of Myth in Women's Aesthetic Production (2009), and Myth and Violence in the Contemporary Female Text: New Cassandra (2010).

CHRISTINE BROOKE-ROSE AND THE INDETERMINACY OF COMPARISON

M. Reynolds
University of Oxford

Abstract: The starting points for this paper will be Brooke-Rose's critical book, Stories, Theories & Things, and her wandering, trans-lingual novel Between. I will suggest that translation can have the interesting side effect of making visible what is untranslatable in the source, and consequently of opening it to critical understanding. Translation failures can therefore be heuristic successes. Since translation and interpretation overlap, this fact about translation has some consequences for the way we construct the objects of our critical attention and the kinds of comparison we make between them. I will conclude with some observations about the rhetoric of our discipline.

Biography: Matthew Reynolds is a fellow of St Anne's College Oxford. Among his publications are The Poetry of Translation: From Chaucer and Petrarch to Homer and Logue (2011); The Realms of Verse: English Poetry in a Time of Nation-Building (2001); Dante in English (co-editor, 2005); Manzoni's The Betrothed and the Column of Infamy (co-editor, 1997); and some fiction: Designs for a Happy Home: A Novel in Ten Interiors (2009) and The World Was All Before Them (2012).

S1 APPROCHES COMPAREES DES GENRES LITTERAIRES / COMPARATIVE APPROACHES TO GENRE

"ICH HABE DAS GEFÜHL ABZUBRÖCKELN": CONSTRUCTING AND DECONSTRUCTING THE CHILD NARRATOR IN CONTEMPORARY NOVELS

S. von Sehlen
Universität des Saarlandes

Abstract: Children and childhood have been increasingly brought into focus of the public and academic spheres over the last decades. Starting from Philippe Ariés historical study L'enfant et la vie familiale sous l'ancien régime (1960), initially developmental psychology and pedagogy made the most contributions to this issue. These approaches have been criticized since the 1980's from a sociological point of view: children were treated as "adults-to-be" rather than "beings" (see Hungerland and Luber 2008, 13). Chris Jenks compares the academic treatment of children to a line of prominent forerunners. He argues that our image of childhood is just as constructed and in need of critical reflection as before it the three categories class, ethnicity, and gender, which have already been deconstructed as products of ideological discourses (see Jenks 1996, 4). According to Jenks, it is the "ideology of development" (1996, 4) that determines every examination of childhood. This paper will argue that the theories of discourse analysis, as they are expressed in current sociological studies, are translated and thus narrated through specific literary means in contemporary novels with child narrators. Already this movement away from a "mere" representation as a character in a novel to narrator, which gives the child a voice, can be read in accordance with current sociological research that argues for the idea of agency for children (see Hungerland and Luber 2008, 10). In literature, this is not only expressed through the new narrative situation, but also through its esthetical representation (e.g. through the use of parataxis and metaphors). These techniques are employed to construct the child narrator as such. At the same time, he or she is also deconstructed in accordance to the sociological theories outlined above through different discursive strategies. Again, this is achieved using certain literary techniques: Jonathan Safran Foer draws in his novel Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close (2005) on a intertextual net of texts and images, whereas Aglajy Veteranyi uses narrative techniques in Warum das Kind in der Polenta kocht (1999) in order to show the shift from her narrator's speech to numerous other discourses (e.g. her mother's, idioms). Finally, Niccolò Ammaniti's novel Io non ho paura (2001) gains its complexity through another narrative strategy by merging narrated and narrating I. Bibliography: Jenks, Chris. Childhood. London: Routledge, 1996. Hungerland, Beatrice and Eva Luber. "Einführung." Angewandte Kindheitswissenschaften: Eine Einführung für Studium und Praxis. Eds. Eva Luber and Beatrice Hungerland. Weinheim: Juventa, 2008: 9-28.

Biography: seit SS 08: wissenschaftliche Hilfskraft am Lehrstuhl für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft an der Universität des Saarlandes (Prof. Manfred Schmeling) seit SS 09: wissenschaftliche Mitarbeiterin am Lehrstuhl für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft an der Universität des Saarlandes (seit WS 09/10: Prof. Christiane Solte-Gresser)

CRIMINAL AND INVESTIGATIVE DIMENSION IN LITERATURE: A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF POPULAR FICTION

V.G. Chaturvedi
Delhi College of Arts & Commerce, University of Delhi

Abstract: Criminal and Investigative Dimension in Literature: A Comparative Study of Popular Fiction
One of the primary thrusts of the paper is to offer a comparative analysis of two criminal/investigative works of fiction which have come out of geographically antipodal locations-both of which delineate protagonists taking on the morally ambiguous role of a vigilante who takes the law in his/her own hands vis-a-vis an increasingly criminal society and delivers justice according to his/her own strict code of morality. Steig Larsson, the Swedish writer's Millenium Trilogy(2004) has created a deeply ambiguous and curiously amoral heroine Lisbeth Salander who has her unique system of doling out justice for the moral aberration she encounters in society. The American crime fiction writer Jeff Lindsay's Dexter Series(2004-2007) shows the hero as a serial killer with a difference-he liquidates only the socially undesirable elements. Both Dexter and Salander defy the normal classification of protagonists and redefine morality. Both are social misfits and both abide by their special moral and ethical code of conduct.They challenge the accepted norms of society and compel the reader to question the validity of man-made societal norms and conventions. Both of them take on the role of avenging angels to purge the society- in Dexter's case, the America of drug peddlers and paedophiles; while Salander pledges sorority by waging war against sadists,brutes and all those horrible perpetrators of crime against women who so shockingly constitute a large proportion of the Swedish male population(journalist/novelist Larsson provides some very disturbing statistics of crime against women) Both the works of fiction have been turned into successful screen adaptations- Dexter novels are turned into immensely popular television serial and Hollywood production of The Girl With The Dragon Tattoo has earned critical acclaim. Their huge success worldwide underscores the reader/viewer's curious sanction of this almost Senecan hero-villain protagonist who is a product of not some inequitable society but a seemingly sanitised first world culture. The paper would closely examine the paradigmatic shift in the reader's reception, across cultures, of this avenging protagonist, for whom not poetic justice but silent adulation awaits.

Name: Dr. Vinita Gupta Chaturvedi Email: vinitagc@yahoo.co.in Office Address: Associate Professor, Department of English Delhi College of Arts & Commerce (University of Delhi) Netaji Nagar, New Delhi 110023, India Contact Address: E12/35, D.L.F. City, Phase 1, Gurgaon 122002, India Phone: +9109810420641 Res. +9101244377221

Biography: Dr. Vinita Gupta Chaturvedi has been teaching English Literature in Delhi College of Arts & Commerce, University of Delhi, India since 1991. She has done her undergraduate, master's and M.Phil programme in English literature from Delhi University. Her doctoral thesis is on the 19th century British novelist George Eliot. Her special area of interest is the 19th century women writers of England.

PARODISTS' INTERPRETIVE COMMUNITIES AROUND THE RUBAIYAT

M. Bahrevar
Yasouj University

Abstract: Since Edward FitzGerald has creatively rendered the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, it has influenced constantly on the modern cultural atmospheres of Europe and the literary minds of British and American readers. Parodists, as both public and active readers, responded to the Rubaiyat variously depend on their age, class, occupation, experience, and in Stanley Fish's words, on their "interpretive communities". Such an interpretive mockery and literary reception, as a dynamic process of reading-making of the literary phenomenon, is studied here by the socio-psychological theories in reader-response criticism. Multiplicity, individuality, similarity, or difference in parodying the Omar-Fitz's Rubaiyat is due to the parodists' dependency on their content of identical communities through the humorous reading experience of an oriental-occidental work. As the comparative and orientalist result the author tries to apply a postcolonial comparativism not via Edward Said's centre-periphery relations, but by the means of Homi Bhabha's colonized-colonizer hybridity. Key-words: Comparative Literature, Orientalism, Rubaiyat, Reception, Parodying

Biography: Since Edward FitzGerald has creatively rendered the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, it has influenced constantly on the modern cultural atmospheres of Europe and the literary minds of British and American readers. Parodists, as both public and active readers, responded to the Rubaiyat variously depend on their age, class, occupation, experience, and in Stanley Fish's words, on their "interpretive communities". Such an interpretive mockery and literary reception, as a dynamic process of reading-making of the literary phenomenon, is studied here by the socio-psychological theories in reader-response criticism. Multiplicity, individuality, similarity, or difference in parodying the Omar-Fitz's Rubaiyat is due to the parodists' dependency on their content of identical communities through the humorous reading experience of an oriental-occidental work. As the comparative and orientalist result the author tries to apply a postcolonial comparativism not via Edward Said's centre-periphery relations, but by the means of Homi Bhabha's colonized-colonizer hybridity.

Key-words: Comparative Literature, Orientalism, Rubaiyat, Reception, Parodying

S1 LITTÉRATURES NATIONALES ET MONDIALISATION / NATIONAL LITERATURES AND GLOBALIZATION

KOREAN CLASSICAL LITERATURE AND EROS

X. Lin, J. Xu

Université des Études Internationales du Sichuan

Abstract: The origin of the human is by the start of the sex. The human can multiply smoothly so far just because the intercourse between the woman and man. Therefore, the sexuality called the basic content of anthropology is beyond dispute. The sexology is generally thought to be the prototype of the literature when we call the literature anthropology. The history of literature at all times and in all countries can prove it thoroughly, and just because of this, it is not strange that there is so much criticisms on sexual literature. However, it is uncertain that something must be the sex literature when some words like sexual psychology and sexual behavior appear only when have several conditions as follows. Firstly, in the era of existing, sex is no longer a secret but known by people. Secondly, it should reflect the writer from the perspective of mental consciousness. Thirdly, literature itself should have the psychological unity. Actually, sex and love, just like two sides of the penny, is very easy to confuse and go beyond to each other. According to the different perspectives, sex can become love, also love can be sex, and sometimes they will be mixed with each other. In such a dictatorship, with the solid nation and age, the sexual literature has variety of characters such as straightforward or euphemism, indirect and direct, but meanwhile, it is not surprising that some fixed characters also appears. It is also fully known that the different opinions among different national culture on the comparative study of sexual literature. According to the <research the sexual literature from different types>, which is the main part of this paper, we can know there exists so many similar characteristics between South Korea and China on ancient sex culture. First, aside from that it is called sex by all ages and all countries, it is almost not different, just because the most basic human nature accompanies the most smallest change on human universality, just like the saying 'People with this body, the heart is also the same.' 1. <sexual literature that reflect the original state of human> and 4 <unconscious sexual literature> can be thought to be the prototype. 'South Korea and China, with the similar historical process and the same Han culture circle, so the attitudes are similar, too. In other word, the same characteristics can be seen from the 2< Sexual literature that criticized as vulgar literature by social> and 3<Sexual literature indulged in sex>. And according to the history process of sexual literature, the rise and decline is similar with each other. For example, the period when Confucianism was thought as the guiding ideology of the whole society, avoiding of sex made sexual literature depressed but when modern times coming, the sexual literature got start to flourish. It is clear that sexual literature was much fuller of vigor than that in rigorous aristocracy. But from the whole, Chinese classical sexual literature is obviously plentiful than Korean classical sexual literature. We can know it from poetry of the Tang Dynasty, Chinese Song Poems and Yuan songs which are Chinese classical literature, Chinese classical sexual literature was getting more and more prosperous and open. If involves some difference between China and South Korea on ancient sexual literature, that is there were some unusual talents just like Heo Gyun and Lin Zhi in South Korea certainly but there were not so many talents someone like Han WU and Liu Yong who can made one type of poetry constantly. In addition, during the middle age and end period of Korea, though some special genre appeared something like Shidiao, pansori novel and so on by the common people, but it was lack of some professional schools of literature. On the contrary, at the same age, there were professional schools and genres of sexual literature in China. Though just only reading the Chinese Song Poems, we can know many sexual stories from the anmut style which evolved from the school of mandarin duck and butterfly in the late Ming and early Qing dynasty. Meanwhile, from the genre, the descriptions of sex are mainly concentrated on Song Poems, story-teller's script, and Yuan songs. Here, the content of poems are mainly something about the story between literati and prostitutes, and the written novels, recorded much dissolute and shameless sexual life of emperors for a long time. And the popular novels mainly described something about daily life and sexual life between common woman and man, instead, Yuan songs concentrated on all about women and men. Thus, we can know that Chinese sexual literature has been formed a certain scale and tradition. This paper starts from the comparative study of different types on ancient sexual literature between China and South Korea, and at last please forgive me a lot for so many deficiencies.

Biography: J'ai obtenu un diplôme de littérature coréenne à l'Université de Yanbian en 1985, un diplôme de master de littérature coréenne à l'Université de Andong en Corée en juin 2003, un diplôme de doctorat de littérature coréenne à l'Université d'Inchon en février 2007. Maintenant, je suis à la tête des domaines de la langue et littérature afro-aistique à l'Université des Études Internationales du Sichuan. Je suis à la fois professeur de Coréen au département des langues asiatiques, directrice du master et directrice du centre de recherche de Corée du sud - Corée du nord. Depuis 2007, Je deviens membre du jury de Manuel d'enseignement supérieur national, professeur titulaire de l'Université des Économies Internationales du Hunan, membre de l'association de traduction de Chongqing, l'association de littérature des coréens internationals, l'association de corée international, l'association de littérature coréenne et chinois, l'association de coréenne en Chine, l'association des romans antiques, l'association de recherche de la littérature comparée et membre du conseil de l'association de recherche de Coréenne en Chine. Mes orientations de recherche sont littérature comparée, littérature coréenne, littérature classique et littérature du peuple coréenne. Les cours d'enseignement de licence sont Panorama culturel de Corée, Histoire de littérature coréenne, Audiovisuel coréenne (coréenne touristique, coréenne commerciale, coréenne générale). Ceux de master sont Critique de la littérature coréenne, Histoire de littérature coréenne, Critique du cinéma et littérature, Education de la langue coréenne, etc.

MURAKAMI HARUKI BEYOND THE NATION AND THE GLOBE

M. Mori
University of Georgia

Abstract: When Jay Rubin, a Harvard professor, published in 2006 Rashomon and Seventeen Other Stories, which is a new, English translation of short stories by Akutagawa Ryunosuke (1892-1927), Murakami Haruki (1949-) contributed an introduction of nineteen pages, titled "Akutagawa Ryunosuke: Downfall of the Chosen," for Rubin who is one of the American translators of his own works. Before commenting on the Akutagawa pieces included in Rubin's book, Murakami begins by speculating on what authors would qualify as "ten most important 'Japanese national writers'" since the Meiji Restoration in 1868, with Akutagawa considered an unquestionable candidate. He then enumerates three conditions for a writer to be placed in the select list. Apart from the persistent rumor that has opted him as a possible recipient of the Nobel Prize in Literature for several years, it is worthy to note that Murakami, whom some critics and established authors, Japanese or otherwise, regard as a pop writer of inconsequential merit, entertains the question of a writer's canonization. To examine Murakami's list of canonized writers will help us understand his notion of modern Japanese literature, criteria by which to measure literary merit, and possible biases in his judgment, as well as what he might aspire to be as a writer, challenging the demarcation between national and world literature while retaining identity as a Japanese novelist.

Biography:

M.A. in English from Tohoku University, Japan in 1984. Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from the Pennsylvania State University, USA in 1990. Associate Professor, Comparative Literature Department, The University of Georgia, USA, 1997-current.

YOKO TAWADA ET LE RAYON JAPONAIS

C. Lévy
Université de Limoges

Abstract: Les fictions de Yoko Tawada sont proposées aux lecteurs dans le rayon japonais des librairies et des bibliothèques, mais elles ne sont pas toutes écrites en japonais, car cette auteure les compose bien souvent en allemand.

Le cas d'une écrivaine bilingue comme Yoko Tawada pose le problème de la pertinence des définitions nationales et linguistiques des différentes littératures. En nous interrogeant sur le monde que Tawada et d'autres auteurs japonais contemporains représentent, tels Murakami Haruki, Murakami Ryu ou Nakagami Kenji, on étudiera la pertinence du projet de la géocritique (Bertrand Westphal, 2007, 2011) face à des œuvres qui transgressent les frontières culturelles, nationales et linguistiques.

Biography: Né en 1977, docteur en Littérature générale et comparée (2008), co-éditeur de Regards croisés sur l'expérience, Limoges, PULIM, 2006 et L'Étrangeté des langues, Saint-Étienne, PUSE, 2011. Mes recherches portent sur la géocritique et la représentation du monde chez différents auteurs, dont Thomas Pynchon, Italo Calvino et Yoko Tawada.

NEW DIRECTIONS IN CONTEMPORARY JAPANESE LITERATURE: LEVY HIDEO AND YANG YI

K. Nakano

John Carroll University, Ohio, U.S.A.

Abstract: Moving across the borders, more transnational authors have been writing their works in their adopted languages at the age of globalization. For example, in England, Salman Rushdie, who identifies himself as Indo-Anglo, writes his novels in English. In France, Tahar Ben Jelloun, though born in Morocco, writes his works in French. Similarly, Milan Kundera, born in former Czechoslovakia writes some of his works in French. This emerging literary trend also can be seen in Japan, as Ekkyo Bungaku (Border Crossing Literature.) Japan is no longer an exception able to retain a national literary homogeneity. Some transnational writers, who transgress cultural and linguistic boundaries, are redefining Japanese literature that has been considered historically and conventionally as “the literature written by Japanese people in Japanese language.” These writers include Hideo Levy, David Zoppetti, Arthur Binard, and Yang Yi, who together can be said to be pushing the borders of Japanese literature. This paper comparatively explores Hideo Levy’s autobiographical trilogy book, The Room Where the Star-Spangled Banner Can’t be Heard and Yang Yi’s A Morning When Time Blurs. It focuses on their literary choice and their journey of searching for their “home.”

Hideo Levy is a Jewish American writer who writes his works in Japanese, his “stepmother tongue” (using his words.) Levy, “crossing/beyond the border” (ekyyoo in Japanese) from the outside of Japan into its inside, writes the story of becoming the Japanese language writer. This autobiographical novel received prestigious Japanese literary award, Noma Literary Award for New Writers, in 1992. The Room Where The Star-Spangled Banner Can’t be Heard is the story of exile both from his country and from his father, reconstructing his identity and searching for “home.” . For Levy, as an “outsider” in Japan, Japanese is a powerful literary weapon employed in his battle to secure a space for home “inside” Japan. Like Levy, Yang Yi writes her works in Japanese. She came to Japan as a student in 1987 at age of 22. The native of Harbin in northeastern China caused a sensation in Japan when, in July, 2008, received the prestigious literary award, Akutagawa Prize for her second book, A Morning When Time Blurs. She became the first Chinese national and the first non-native speaker to win this prize. A Morning When Time Blurs is set during and after China’s democratization movement and centering on the 1989 Tiananmen massacre. It follows a Chinese man who lives through those times and later moves to Japan, still holding on to his ideals. Yang inserts Chinese idiom and poems in Chinese in the Japanese main text. This literary hybrid is effective to imply ambiguous sense of “home” even though he is married with a Japanese woman with two children.

Thus, for these two Ekkyo(Border Crossing) writers, their literary choice of “step mother tongue” is a powerful literary weapon for their stories of seeking for their “homes” where they are able to feel a sense of belonging.

Biography: She is a full time instructor of Japanese, Department of Classical and Modern Languages and Cultures, John Carroll University, Ohio, U.S.A..

She teaches all levels of Japanese and Japanese popular culture.

M.A. in English literature at John Carroll University, and Ph.D (ABD) at Penn State University

S1 LE GENRE COMME PROBLÉMATIQUE TRANSNATIONALE / GENRE AS A TRANSNATIONAL PROBLEM

WHO AM I ? THE SILENT VOICE OF WOMAN TODAY

M.P. Rao
JAIN UNIVERSITY

Abstract: Identity of a human being is a sum total of the confluence of politico- socio-cultural factors existing in any period. Though it is not necessarily limited to any period or time-frame and has the potential to be carried-forward into decades and ages. In this context the WOMAN holds a very unique position in the society which is an extension of the dilemma inherent in the question ' WHO AM I?' Especially the woman of modern India seems to be going through a phase of dilemma of identity due to all these factors. In India like anywhere else there exists a microcosmic reality in the macrocosmic environment. There is the woman who is educated and the illiterate; the urban and the rural; the marginalised or the minorities and is the way in which a woman responds to these situations and the dimensions that it adds to her personality. Culturally, though woman in India is revered in various forms she seems to be the most suppressed and oppressed in the patriarchal set-up. She has always had to fight many wars to express and assert herself. These covert and overt wars have been a subject of portrayal in many writings. These writings exhibit the dilemma of the Indian woman. Though the personality of woman has evolved over the ages, it has not been able to reach the ultimate culmination due to the various impediments created mainly due to the cultural factors. Sometimes she seems too tired to fight, sometimes goes the other extreme of obliterating herself in this quest or then there are forms of silent protest. All these have found an expression in literature. I would be taking representative stories of women writers of hindi, kannada and English . Through this paper I will try to assimilate and understand the journey of the woman who is trying to find herself. Also is there a connect with the woman of the other parts of the world who seem to be similar situations. Is this quest only about finding oneself in a particular cultural framework or is there a larger dimension which encompasses the whole world? The Indian Writer, today, is cosmopolitan and eclectic, globally popular and multicultural yet draws strongly on native sources and references. Especially the woman writer of the world is trying to lay bare the multivocal worlds of different societies and different cultures. As the paper will explain, within the traditional bindings of the society and family the woman is trying to move towards self-perception, self – determination and self expression.

Biography: I am a student of Hindi Literature. I have been teaching since 19 years. I am also currently the Dean of languages and the Campus Director for the School of Science and Humanities under our University. My interest in research began only in the past couple of years and I am discovering a new world through my attempts. In this direction I attend conferences and seminars and present papers. I am also trying to get my papers published. I am very keen about exploring the various avenues that Comparative literature offers. Therefore I have understood that if I have to exhibit the richness of indian literature I have to express it in the language that the world understand.

BREAKING THE SILENCE: TRAUMA IN EVERYDAY LIFE OF ASIAN QUEER

S. Mahasupap
Independent Scholar

Abstract: Queer lives in Asia are mostly represented in form of the object of popular culture and exploited their lives and existence as the part of colorful lives. Although their lives are more tolerant in certain countries such as Thailand, the representation of queer lives are radically romanticized and nonchalantly ignored the bias, prejudice and trauma they have been suffering before descending to the shade of being visible in the society. Their agencies to tell their own experience, memory are obviously is limited in the public space. Therefore, the literary space and genre such as autobiography are well employed to voice their experience, story, memory, body and importantly their trauma that has been haunting them. This paper tries to shows how to use the approach of comparative literature to decode and show the critical complexity of queer lives, narrated in form of autobiography. Besides, it also questions the definition and concept of trauma and shows its ambivalence that, on one hand, could be shared amid the queer lives in Asia and, on the other hand, could only impact on specific experience, differentiating from variety of culture, religion, society. Apart from that it also tries to presents the movement and change of current trend and concept of being queer in Asia. While homosexuality and queer lives has been conceptualized by western discourses, Queer lives in autobiography tries to adjust, adept and encapsulate the novel concept of queer selves, based on their own agency. This change seems to implicitly create the chaos of homosexuality in certain region. The five autobiographies are selected to use in this paper: Yolada Komgong's I am a woman (Thailand), Jin Xing' s Crossroad or Rien N' Arrive Par Hasard (China), Nu Nu Yi's Smile as they bow (Burma) and Revanthi's The Truth about Me: Hijara Life Story (India).

Biography: Saran Mahasupap is an independent researcher. He is awarded his B.A (German) and M.A. (Comparative Literature) from Faculty of Arts, Chulalongkorn University, Thailand. His interests are gender studies, queer studies, autobiography and popular culture.

INHABITING SPATIAL FISSURES: MARGINAL SUBJECTS AND THIRDSAPCES

A.L. Avalos, N. Der-Ohannesian
Facultad de Lenguas. Universidad Nacional de Córdoba

Abstract:

The concept of space has undergone a significant transformation in the last decades. Its definition has expanded, to consider it not merely as a vacuum, geographical area where events take place, but rather as a complex arena of interrelated layers of meanings, in which social practices are performed and identities asserted. Thus, and following the thoughts and ideas of theorists Edward Soja, Lefevre and Foucault, we consider space as a social construction which is always politically contested and in which meanings are inscribed. It is in this social construct where subjects interrelate and perform their practices, and in which the struggles for power are materialized. Our focus of analysis will –hence- be on the construction of spaces of resistance and subversion of the given social order. In our work, we set out to explore the construction of spaces of resistance in Annie Proulx's "Brokeback Mountain" (1999) and Edwidge Danticat's "The Bridal Seamstress" and "The Funeral Singer" (2004). We propose an in-depth analysis of the construction process of different hegemonic social orders represented in the stories, as well as the counter-spaces which result of these and the different strategies in relation to spatiality that the characters employ in order to subvert the hegemonic order. We propose the following working hypothesis: within any society marginal subjects construct alternative sites which try to counter the impositions and restraints on their practices. These spaces are varied in terms of Firstspace, that is in their materiality, and Secondspace, that is their conception. In the works analyzed, Thirdspace is constructed in the wilderness, in enclosed, urban spaces and in the some of the characters' perpetual nomadism, which highlights the dynamic nature of the lived space.

Key words: social construction, hegemonic society, marginal subjects, Thirdspace.

Biography: Nadia Der-Ohannesian got her degree as a teacher of English in 2001. She has taught at university level since 2007. Currently she teaches the subject An Introduction to English Literature at Facultad de Lenguas, Universidad Nacional de Córdoba. She has participated in several research groups since 2005. She is a PhD candidate in the same institution her research project, entitled "The Representation of Space, History and Gender in the Work of Three Caribbean Women Writers", is directed by Dr. Cristina Elgue.

S1 COGNITION ET EMOTION: DE NOUVELLES VOIES POUR LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE? / COGNITION AND EMOTION: NEW VISTAS FOR COMPARATIVE LITERATURE?

PRE-CONSCIOUS AFFECTIVE AMBIVALENCE, ITS REGISTERING IN CONSCIOUSNESS, AND THE LITERARY RENDERING OF WHAT WE KNOW WE CAN'T HELP FEELING

D. Wehrs
Auburn University

Abstract: Involuntary affective understanding of others has been linked to specialized pre-motor neurons that, whenever we perceive or imagine another doing something, mirror spontaneously neural activity demanded by the action (Iacobini; Rizzolatti and Sinigaglia). While the neural mechanisms registering our own pain are directly engaged in observing or visualizing others' pain, co-experiencing another's psychological or social feelings appears much less neurologically immediate (Immordino-Yang et al., 8024-25), and so more susceptible to socio-cultural strengthening or weakening. Jamil Zaki and Kevin Ochsner note that, despite neural overlap between self-pain and other pain process in in the anterior insula (AI) and anterior cingulate cortex (ACC), self-pain tends to activate areas associated with body-state monitoring, whereas others' pain activated areas associated with socialization, representation, and deliberation (25-26). Zaki and Ochsner hypothesize that in circumstances where one's own goal[s] and those of someone else directly conflict, "it may be an adaptive advantage for perceivers to turn off otherwise automatic reactions to the pain of others (e.g., during athletic competitions or, more extremely, during war)"; indeed "both autonomic and neural activity evoked by watching others in pain is reduced or reversed when the people are in an adversarial or competitive relationship with a perceiver" (26). By contrast, "watching others feeling pain or expressing emotion engaged motor cortex, which [through neural mirroring] may help us understand intentions underlying others' actions, but "only other pain causes ACC and AI to become functionally connected [my emphasis] with the mPFC, an area associated with mental state inference" (29). Collectively, such research suggests that neural mirroring elicits somatic fellow feeling in evolutionarily anterior parts of the brain (the ACC and AI), where "neural overlap" may describe how body-state monitoring mechanisms are recruited or hijacked in our registering of another's pain. Indeed, upsurges of primordial (ACC and AI rooted) empathy (other pain registering), as opposed to body-state monitoring, allow ACC/AI activity to enter into contact with the mPFC area, associated with mental state attribution. Thus, the neural mirroring underlying "primary empathy" (overlapping ACC and AI activity for self and others), while initially disrupting PFC/FC processing, may stimulate forms of mPFC activity associated with attributing full humanity to others (Harris and Fiske 123-43). On the one hand, neural mirroring underlying "primary empathy" breaks in upon categorizing and deliberative activity, like a call of conscience or "a still small voice" (1 Kings 19:12), prompting forms of connectivity with the mPFC that may redirect or reshape PFC/FC processing away from the selective inhibiting of mPFC attention that is integral to dehumanization. On the other hand, much research on the imbrication of emotion and cognition suggests that in-group privileging is normative within human intentional consciousness. Disturbingly, such biases within intentionality appear to be reinforced by pre-conscious neural mechanisms inhibiting empathy toward those perceived as competitors, threats, or just outsiders. Literary rendering of the consciousness such pre-conscious ambivalence produces extend from Gilgamesh to contemporary postcolonial fiction. Naturalization of in-group privilege and the naturalness of conjoined ethical-aesthetic repudiation of the effects of such naturalization go, paradoxically, hand-in-hand. Whereas naturalization is commonly associated with legitimation, in diverse historically-culturally divergent narratives (Gilgamesh, the Ramayana, 1 Kings, Pericles, A la recherche du temps perdu) perception of naturalization induces disgust, and disgust triggers an ethics of revolt against idolizing in-group interests. Comparative literary studies of the interplay between aesthetic cognition and iconoclastic affectivity may intersect with cognitive studies of how disgust, often associated with antisocial feelings such as racism and misogyny, is bound up with ethical repudiation of the naturalness of naturalization.

Biography: Ambady, Nalini and Reginald B. Adams, Jr.. Us versus Them: The Social Neuroscience of Perceiving Out-Groups; In Social Neuroscience: Toward Understanding the Underpinnings of the Social Mind. Ed. Alexander Todorov, Susan T. Fiske, and Deborah A. Prentice. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011. 135-43. Avenanti, A., D. Bueti, G. Galati, and S. M. Aglioti. Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation Highlights the Sensorimotor Side of Empathy for Pain. Nature Neuroscience 8 (2005): 955-60. Bloom, Paul. Descartes' Baby: How the Science of Child Development Explains What Makes Us Human. New York: Basic Books, 2004. ----- The Moral Life of Infants, New York Times Magazine, May 5, 2010, www.nytimes.com/2010/05/09/magazine/09babies-t.html. Carr, L, M. Iacobini, M. C. Dubeau, J. C. Mazziota, and G. L. Lenzi. Neural Mechanisms of Empathy in Humans: A Relay from Neural Systems for Imitation to Limbic Areas. Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences 100 (2003): 5497-5502. Carruthers, Peter. The Architecture of the Mind: Massive Modularity and the Flexibility of Thought. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2006. Chemero, Anthony. Radical Embodied Cognitive Science. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 2009. Damasio, Antonio R. Descartes' Error: Emotion, Reason, and the Human Brain. New York: Putnam, 1994. -----. The Feeling of What Happens: Body and Emotion in the Making of Consciousness. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1999. -----. Looking for Spinoza: Joy, Sorrow, and the Feeling Brain. Orlando, FL: Harcourt, 2003. Damasio, Antonio R. and Hannah Damasio ;Minding the Body. Daedalus 135 (Summer 2006): 15-22. Fauconnier, Gilles and Mark Turner. The Way We Think: Conceptual Blending and the Mind's Hidden Complexities. New York: Basic Books, 2002. Fiske, Susan T., A. J. Cuddy, and P. Glick. Universal Dimensions of Social Cognition: Warmth and Competence. Trends in Cognitive Science 11 (2006): 77-83. Fiske, Susan T., A. J. Cuddy, and J. Xu. A Model of (Often Mixed) Stereotype Content: Competence and Warmth Respectively Follow From Perceived Status and Competition. Journal of Personality and Social Psychology 82 (2002): 878-902. Gallagher, Shaun. How the Body Shapes the Mind. Oxford: Clarendon, 2005. Gibbs, Raymond W. Jr. Embodiment and Cognitive Science. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006. Goldman, Alvin L. Simulating Minds: The Philosophy, Psychology, and Neuroscience of Mindreading. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006. Harris, Lasanna T. and Susan T. Fiske. Perceiving Humanity or Not: A Social Neuroscience Approach to Dehumanized Perception. In Social Neuroscience: Toward Understanding the Underpinnings of the Social Mind. Ed. Alexander Todorov, Susan T. Fiske, and Deborah A. Prentice. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011. 123-134. Hogan, Patrick Colm. Affective Narratology: The Emotional Structure of Stories. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2011. -----. The Mind and Its Stories: Narrative Universals and Human Emotion. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003. -----. On Being Moved: Cognition and Emotion in Literature and Film. In Introduction to Cognitive Cultural Studies. Ed. Lisa Zunshine. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2010. 237-56. -----. Understanding Nationalism: On Narrative, Neuroscience, and Identity. Columbus: Ohio State University Press, 2009. -----. What Literature Teaches Us about Emotion. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011. Hutchinson, W. D., K. D. Davis, A. M. Lozano, R. R. Tasker, and J. O. Dostrovsky. Pain-related Neurons in the Human Cingulate Cortex. Nature Neuroscience 2 (1999): 403-05 Iacobini, Marco. Mirroring People: The New Science of How We Connect with Others. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2008. Immordino-Yang, M. H., A. McColl, H. Damasio, and A. Damasio. Neural Correlates of Admiration and Compassion. Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences 106, 19 (2009): 8021-26. Meltzoff, Andrew N.; Elements of a developmental theory of imitation; In The Imitative Mind: Development, Evolution, and the Brain Bases. Ed. Andrew N. Meltzoff and Wolfgang Prinz. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002. 19-41. Rizzolatti, Giacomo, and Luciano Fadiga, Leonardo Fogassi, and Vittorio Gallese, From mirror neurons to imitation: Facts and speculations. In The Imitative Mind: Development, Evolution, and the Brain Bases. Ed. Andrew N. Meltzoff and Wolfgang Prinz. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002. 247-66 Rizzolatti, Giacomo and Corrado Sinigaglia. Mirrors in the Brain; How Our Minds Share Actions and Emotions. Trans. Frances Anderson. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008. Singer, Tanya, B. Seymour, J.; Doherty, H. Kaube, R. J. Dolan, and C. D. Frith.; Empathy for Pain Involves the Affective but Not Sensory Components of Pain. Science 303 (2004): 1157-62. Singer, Tanya, B. Seymour, J. O. Doherty, K. E. Stephan, R. J. Dolan, and C. D. Frith. Empathic neural responses are modulated by the perceived fairness of others. Nature 439, 7075 (2006): 466-469 Thiele, Leslie Paul. The Heart of Judgment: Practical Wisdom, Neuroscience, and Narrative. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006. Wehrs, Donald R. Placing Human Constants Within Literary History: Generic Revision of Romance and Affective Sociality in The Winter's Tale and The Tempest; Poetics Today 32, 3 (2011): 519-570. Zaki, Jamal, K. Ochsner, J. Hanelin, T. Wager, and S. C. Mackey. Different circuits for different pain: patterns of functional connectivity reveal distinct networks for processing pain in self and others; Social Neuroscience 2, 3 & 4 (2007): 276-291. Zaki, Jamal and Kevin Ochsner, You, Me, and My Brain: Self and Other Representation in Social Cognitive Neuroscience. In Social Neuroscience: Toward Understanding the Underpinnings of the Social Mind. Ed. Alexander Todorov, Susan T. Fiske, and Deborah A. Prentice. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011. 14-39.

EMOTIONS, THE NATYASAstra AND ETHICS

A. Bhela

DCAC, University of Delhi

Abstract: Aristotle, Plato and many western writers have spoken about the value of emotions in literature and though they have individually expressed the value of different emotions, yet no coherent theory of emotion based literature has emerged. Nor does there exist a theory that explicitly states which emotions are important and why or how to differentiate between emotions and passing moods or whether some emotions can be classified as permanent and others as transitory. Emotion in Literature is an emerging area of study and this paper will focus on Bharata's Natyasastra, the ancient Indian treatise on the dramatic arts, composed between 200 BCE and 200 CE, as it can make a significant contribution towards understanding literary emotions as well as literary genres and their effects. The treatise is divided into thirty six chapters, of which, chapters six and seven deal with emotions in drama. The Natyasastra identifies eight/nine basic emotions, thirty-three transitory states and eight involuntary expressions. It elaborates on permanent emotions - their importance; how they can be created and evoked; and who can experience them. It also elaborates on gestures, colors, situations and appropriate environment through which the permanent emotions can be evoked. It calls the pleasurable, aesthetic, disinterested emotion experienced at the end of an emotion based dramatic presentation rasa and uses the metaphor of food to describe it. The ethical purpose of a dramatic presentation as enumerated in the Natyasastra is to teach and delight. Its composer calls it the fifth Veda as it reveals a harmony between aesthetic and ethical values. Bharata's theory is unique in that it is meant for and can be/has been applied to most of the arts- drama, poetry, dance, music and by extension even architecture, sculpture and painting.

Biography: Dr. Anita Bhela is Associate Professor, Department of English, Delhi College of Arts and Commerce, University of Delhi, India. She has published articles in reputed national and international journals and delivered the keynote address at various conferences. She is an active member of various professional bodies and has organized a number of academic conferences and workshops. She is the India representative for the Asia Association for Global Studies and is a member of the editorial board of the Asia Journal of Global Studies (AJGS). Bhela's recent publications include Preserving India's Intangible Cultural Heritage: Issues and Challenges, International Journal of the Humanities (2010), Aesthetics of Romance: An Intercultural Perspective (2011) and Globalization, Hinduism, and Cultural Change in India, Asia Journal of Global Studies (2011), and forthcoming: Ancient Hindu Society and Eliot's Ideal Christian Society, CLCWeb: Comparative Literature and Culture 14.2 (June 2012). Her areas of special interest are Shakespeare, Comparative Studies, Religion and Culture, Indian Writing in English and English Language Teaching.

IMAGE SCHEMATA - A COGNITIVE-PSYCHOLOGICAL THEORY OF MENTAL REPRESENTATION OF SPACE AND ITS EMOTIONAL IMPACT

S. Wege
LMU München

Abstract: My talk would introduce Image-Schemata-Theory as a promising theoretical foundation and analytical tool to approach the problem of depiction and especially reception of space in literature and its possible emotional impact on readers. „An image schema is a dynamic, recurring pattern of organism-environment interactions.” (Johnson 2007: 136) An Image-Schema (IS) is a permanent mental representation of mostly sensorimotor and very basic spatial experience anchored in the brain. To give an example: Diverse preverbal physical experiences of altitude in early childhood, such as learning to walk upright, building sand towers etc., will contribute to establish and manifest the mental concept, that is the IS verticality (capitalized by convention). This cluster of neuronal activity is activated when we have verticality-related experiences and it is also evoked by language: „Image-schematic structure is the basis for our understanding of spatial terms and all aspects of our perception and motor activities.“ (Johnson 2007) When we write or read descriptions of spaces, landscapes etc., Image-Schemata such as verticality or others will be evoked and enable us to process spatial information. Thus, the process of IS-activation is the foundation of our mental conception of real space as well as space in fiction, evoked by language in the brain of the reader. The major space related so called orientational IS are: up/down, verticality, container, front-back, near-far, path, source-path-goal, centre-periphery and cycle. The concept of IS is a theorem developed by Cognitive Psychology (e.g. Hämpe/Grady 2005, Gibbs 2006, Oakley 2007). It is widely acknowledged by other disciplines:[1] Cognitive Grammar Theory (e.g. Ungerer/Schmidt 2006, Schubert 2009) shows, that IS play a significant role in the grammatical systems of language, especially for closed grammatical classes. For example, in order to understand a spatial preposition such as “above”, readers will mentally activate the IS up. IS-Theory is also the major building block of Cognitive Metaphor Theory (groundbreaking Lakoff/Johnson 1980): This theory views metaphor not as a rhetoric figure but an evolved cognitive tool of thinking and abstract reasoning. They describe understanding of figurative language as based on IS. In conceptual metaphors, so called image-schematic concrete domains (such as space) serve to structure abstract domains (such as emotion). For example, the spatial metaphor “Hochstimmung” or “I’m high” is based on the conceptual metaphor happy is up (Lakoff). The concrete space domain (hoch, orientational IS up) makes the abstract domain, in this case emotion (Stimmung, Gefühl), more physically accessible. In this case, the metaphor is drawing on the mostly positive emotions associated with up. Whereas in Germany this particular line of cognitive research is still to gain foothold, the fairly popular field of Cognitive Literary Studies (cognitive poetics, narratology) in the UK and the US to date have produced a number of papers on the application of IS-Theory, mostly in context of Cognitive Metaphor Theory (e.g. Gavins/Steen 2003, Richardson/Spolsky 2004), see for example Hart (2004) and Crane (2001) on the concrete and figurative use of particular IS in Shakespeare's plays. In my Phd-Thesis “Wahrnehmung – Wiederholung – vertikalität: Zur Theorie und Praxis der Kognitiven Literaturwissenschaft (KLW)”[2] I give a comprehensive summary of IS-Theory, Cognitive Metaphor Theory and Cognitive Linguistics. Moreover, I also have applied those theories to the analysis and interpretation literary texts, namely to landscapes/interiors and their emotional impact on readers in texts by Adalbert Stifter, Heinrich Heine, Friedrich Schiller and Thomas Mann. One main focus of my thesis was the strategic evocation and aesthetic function of verticality and their metaphorical dimension in those literary works. The questions discussed in my work are also relevant for topic of “Affective Spaces”: Is there a dominant and systematic use of IS in the particular literary texts, how is it evoked, what is its plot function, and what (often ambivalent) effect and/or emotion does it convey or trigger in the reader? I defended my PhD in February 2011 at LMU München, it has received summa cum laude and will be published in summer/fall 2012 (1st advisor Prof. Sven Hanschek, 2nd advisor Prof. Karl Eibl). To summarize: Image-Schemata are considered transcultural cognitive universals. They are dynamic, strongly schematized essentials of our experience with space that enable us to build a coherent, structured mental model of verbalized space. My argument is, that IS-Theory can be a significant analytical tool for analyzing fictional space. It already is a major topic in Cognitive Literary Theory, as it can explain and describe how readers construct mental representations of literary space. In my talk I would outline the basic components of the theory. Considering the focus on emotion, I would discuss the complex issue of the relation of IS and emotion activation, giving some examples. Here I could concentrate on IS that are particularly relevant for the conceptualization of interior spaces, e.g. the IS container, which is closely associated to the emotion of anxiety/claustrophobia. This proposal concentrates on the Theory in general and would therefore fit best into the 1st panel. However, modification would be possible.

[1] There has also been some transdisciplinary research between Cognitive Neuroscience / Mirror-Neuron-Theory and Cognitive Metaphor Theory (e.g. Gallese/Lakoff 2005). The concept of Image-Schemata has also been recognized by neuroscience and Anthropology (e.g. Tomasello 2002). [2] „Perception – Iteration – Verticality: On Theory and Practice of Cognitive Literary Theory“

Biography: Selected Literature Crane, Mary Thomas 2004: ‚Fair is Foul‘. Macbeth and Binary Logic. In: Richardson / Spolsky (Hg.) 2004, Aldershot, S. 107-125. Gavins, Joanna / Gerard Steen (Hg.) 2003: Cognitive Poetics in Practice. London. Gallese, Vittorio / George Lakoff 2005: The brain's Concepts. The Role of the Sensory-motor System in Conceptual Knowledge. In: Cognitive Neuropsychology 22, S. 455-479. Gibbs, Raymond W. 2006: Embodiment and Cognitive Science. Cambridge. Hampe, Beate / Joseph E. Grady (Hg.) 2005: From Perception to Meaning. Image Schemas in Cognitive Linguistics. Berlin. Hart, Elizabeth F. 2004: Embodied Literature: A Cognitive-Poststructuralist Approach to Genre. In: Richardson / Spolsky 2004, S. 85-106. Johnson, Mark 2007: The Meaning of the Body. Aesthetics and Human Understanding. Chicago / London. Lakoff, George / Mark Johnson 1980: Metaphors We Live By. Chicago. Oakley, Todd 2007: Image Schemas. In: Dirk Geeraerts / Hubert Cuyckens (Hg.): The Oxford Handbook of Cognitive Linguistics. S. 214-235. Richardson, Alan / Ellen Spolsky 2004 (Hg.): The Work of Fiction. Cognition, Culture and Complexity. Aldershot. Schubert, Christoph 2009: Raumkonstitution durch Sprache. Blickführung, Bildschemata und Kohäsion in Deskriptionssequenzen englischer Texte. Tübingen. Tomasello, Michael 2002: Die kulturelle Entwicklung des menschlichen Denkens. Zur Evolution der Kognition. Frankfurt/M. Ungerer, Friedrich / Hans-Jörg Schmid 2006: An Introduction to Cognitive Linguistics. Harlow et al.

S2 SCIENCES ET ARTS : POETIQUE ET ESTHETIQUE

LE ROMAN D'AVENTURES SCIENTIFIQUES : POUR UNE POETIQUE D'UN GENRE HYBRIDE

C. Barel-Moisan
CNRS. UMR LIRE.

Abstract: Parallèlement aux succès de Jules Verne, paraissent à partir des années 1880 de nombreux romans qui explorent un champ nouveau, sans qu'une définition théorique en soit encore donnée. Les auteurs tentent d'inventer de nouvelles catégories pour en rendre compte, unissant les termes apparemment oxymoriques de « merveilleux scientifique » (Maurice Renard) ou revendiquant un « fantastique nouveau », « en dehors de l'humanité » (Rosny aîné). Les critiques parlent quant à eux de « fantastique d'imagination scientifique » ou de romans d'« anticipation scientifique », le terme d'« anticipation » étant employé en France jusque dans les années 1950, puis remplacé par celui de « science-fiction », en même temps que s'affirme la primauté anglo-saxonne dans ce domaine. Ces romans unissent un imaginaire scientifique et technologique, une rêverie sur les découvertes scientifiques, et un cadre narratif souvent inspiré de celui du roman d'aventures. Cette proposition aurait pour enjeu de dégager une poétique de ce genre, en explorant notamment ses modalités de problématisation des théories scientifiques contemporaines. Le corpus d'étude comprendra des romans de J.H. Rosny aîné, Louis Bousсенard, Maurice Renard, Gustave Le Rouge, Guy de Téraumont, José Moselli, Albert Robida, et André Laurie.

Biography: Claire Barel-Moisan est chargée de recherches au CNRS (au sein de l'UMR LIRE à l'ENS-Lyon). Elle a publié de nombreux articles sur les poétiques romanesques de Balzac et de George Sand et dirigé deux ouvrages sur Balzac : Balzac avant Balzac, avec José-Luis Diaz et Balzac, l'aventure analytique, avec Christèle Couleau (éditions Christian Pirot, 2006 et 2009). Elle travaille actuellement sur l'insertion de la science et des savoirs dans le roman français du XIX^e siècle.

MODULATIONS POÉTIQUES DE LA SCIENCE ACTUELLE : INCERTITUDE, INDÉCIDABILITÉ, RÉCURSIVITÉ

A. Gamoneda
Universidad de Salamanca

Abstract: L'anathème jeté sur les analogies fonctionnelles entre les domaines de la science et la littérature (Bricmont, Sokal, Bouveresse) semble vouloir préserver leur étanchéité sans toutefois mettre en cause le rôle de l'analogie – l'instrument de pensée poétique par excellence – au sein des sciences. S'il y a – sous certaines conditions – une légitimité de la métaphore dans le langage philosophique (Blumenberg), on peut également considérer que des logiques poétiques soient à l'œuvre à certains niveaux de la pensée scientifique (Hallyn) – comme c'est le cas pour la représentation en métathéorie (Moulines). Ce vaste programme étant hors de portée, il s'agira ici – bien plus fragmentairement – d'interroger quelques aspects du paradigme scientifique actuel au contact d'un mode poétique de pensée. À cette fin, on proposera une réflexion autour des champs d'attraction suivants : 1) Le rapport au réel : la dilatation et l'instabilité des frontières de la réalité pousse l'objet des sciences à céder de sa réalité matérielle (e. g. le principe de superposition quantique). La notion de matière elle-même se « déréifie » (Morin) en introduisant la possibilité d'une continuité entre la réalité et l'information, et en révélant l'interdépendance entre le sujet d'observation et l'objet observé. Le langage poétique, de son côté, possède une longue tradition de représentation conflictuelle avec la réalité matérielle, tout comme de l'exploration des relations d'interdépendance au sein desquelles se construisent le sujet et l'objet. 2) Incertitude et systèmes ouverts : le tournant épistémologique représenté par le théorème de Gödel ouvre la science et ses systèmes à des postulats remettant toujours leur décidabilité à un méta-système. À son tour, le langage poétique repose sur la constitution d'un système de langage ouvert et provisoire comportant des incertitudes de sens dont la résolution déborde le système lui-même. Les lectures herméneutiques et postmodernes du texte miment peut-être un parcours gödelien. 3) Complexité : perturbation et réorganisation. La complexité scientifique repose sur une présence du non-scientifique en son sein capable de le relancer sans cependant l'annuler. Analogiquement, le trouble introduit par le fonctionnement sémiotique au sein du fonctionnement symbolique du langage (Kristeva) amorce un nouveau seuil de signifiante sans toutefois détruire le signe communicatif : ainsi se bâtit le poétique. Si les transferts conceptuels erronés entre les divers domaines des sciences sont source du progrès scientifique (Mandelbrot), c'est parce que, au-delà de l'erreur, l'analogie y introduit des propriétés de réorganisation. Analogie et métaphore sont porteuses d'une déviation signifiante qui favorise la réinscription du référent dans un autre système. 4) Récursivité, recatégorisation : la conception de la conscience supérieure selon le « darwinisme neural » (Edelman) relie le raffinement des sensations à une activité de recatégorisation où s'implique le langage. Le poétique pourrait être considéré un processus analogique mettant en scène dans le langage même l'intégration dans la conscience supérieure des aires perceptuelle primaires, dont les percepts chargés de valeurs —et sous la contrainte d'une incarnation individuelle— seraient en voie d'une catégorisation conceptuelle qui prend le nom de signifiante.

Biography: Amelia Gamoneda Lanza (León, Espagne, 1961) est Profesora Titular de Littérature Française à l'Université de Salamanca. Elle a également été critique littéraire de littérature française à Revista de libros pendant 12 ans. Ses traductions à l'espagnol comprennent des essais —Cioran : Desgarradura (2004)—, des romans —Marguerite Duras : La siesta de M. Andemas (2011)—, des opéras —Cyrano de Bergerac, St. François d'Assise— et de la poésie française : Yvon Le Men : El país más allá de la pena (1988), Mallarmé : Herodías (2006), Jacques Ancet : Se busca a alguien, La quemadura (2008). Elle a fait paraître deux essais littéraires : Marguerite Duras. La textura del deseo (1995) et Merodeos. Narrativa francesa actual (2007), ainsi qu'une centaine d'articles et d'études sur des auteurs tels que Quignard, Noël, Sampiero, Michon, Stétié, Tournier ou Pennac. Ses articles de théorie littéraire portent sur la traduction, la critique littéraire et la pensée poétique. Ayant développé pendant dix ans une recherche sur les poétiques du corps, elle dirige actuellement le projet ILICIA. Inscripciones literarias de la ciencia: ámbitos interdiscursivos, transferencias conceptuales y procesos semióticos à l'Université de Salamanca.

LE SAVOIR DE LA COULEUR. QUELQUES ESTHÉTIQUES DU NOIR & BLANC JAILLI D'UN MONDE EN COULEUR

J.A. Peslier

Université de Franche Comté

Abstract: Le savoir de la couleur. Quelques esthétiques du noir & blanc jailli d'un monde en couleur. (Littérature & cinéma). La couleur est un champ du savoir et du sensible passionnant, difficile et vaste, à la croisée des sciences et des arts. Partant, elle s'annonce comme un terrain d'investigation comparatiste fort, entre des cultures, des langues, des univers symboliques, des époques et des industries toujours en mouvements, mais également entre des approches disciplinaires qui la définissent de façon plus ou moins stricte (optique, physique, esthétique, histoire de l'art, etc.), et entre des pratiques artistiques qui la travaillent selon des supports très divers pour dire le sujet et le monde, les passions et les chagrins, les cycles de la vie et de la mort. Notre propos sera de montrer comment un certain savoir de la couleur se déploie dans la littérature et au cinéma selon des esthétiques contrastées du noir et blanc, du sépia et de la couleur, depuis la modernité entendue au sens large (autour de la querelle entre Newton et Goethe notamment), jusqu'aux développements plus récents de la photographie et du cinéma et de leurs techniques. Nous privilégierons ici des oeuvres qui font jaillir un univers noir et blanc dans un monde en couleur, comme un fragment d'une séquence plus archaïque, pour questionner ce motif d'un trouble de la vision et la façon dont il vient activer le principe d'incertitude, inquiéter notre regard et mettre en péril nos perceptions sensorielles afin de reconfigurer le savoir sur le vivant et ses seuils. Au coeur de cette bascule entre des univers chromatiques autonomes ou raréfiés jusqu'au monochrome, est en jeu la puissance de la littérature et du cinéma à traverser des mondes et des limbes, d'ici et d'ailleurs, entre des enfers et des paradis, et à nous réancrer dans la vie. Filmographie indicative : Alain Cavalier, Thérèse ; François Leterrier, Un roi sans divertissement ; Mickael Powell et Emeric Pressburger, A matter of Life and Death ; les frères Quay, The Piano Tuner of Earthquakes. Corpus littéraire : Victor Hugo, L'Homme qui rit ; Joseph Conrad, Heart of Darkness ; Jean Giono, Un roi sans divertissement ; Vladimir Nabokov, Speak memory (ainsi que d'autres oeuvres de Nabokov) ; Pierre Bergounioux, La Maison rose ; Jacques Roubaud, Si quelque chose noir et Alix Cléo Roubaud, Journal ; Alain Fleisher, Faire le noir.

Biography: Maître de conférences en littérature comparée à l'Université de Franche-Comté, elle est l'auteur d'une thèse sur La Pensée à l'oeuvre, Chantiers de Faust ouverts par Goethe chez Pessoa, Valéry, Mann et Boulgakov, soutenue en 2007, à l'Université de Paris 8, où elle a enseigné pendant 5 ans. Elle a réalisé l'édition critique de Paul Valéry, Peri tôn thoû theoû, ou Des Choses Divines (Kimé, 2005) et dirigé le volume Reviviscences de Faust (revue "Coulisses", 2011). Ses travaux portent sur la cartographie faustienne, la bibliothèque, la philologie et la traduction ; et sur les dispositifs labyrinthiques et les esthétiques de la couleur en littérature et cinéma. Elle travaille actuellement à la création de la revue "Scénographie, Coulisses des arts vivants et des scènes émergentes" (Université de Franche-Comté, équipe Elliadd).

THE GEOMETRICAL FIGURE AND HOBBS'S POLITICAL "SCIENCE"

P. Lawler

Bogazici University

Abstract: My paper investigates the significant connections between geometric method, political science, and poiesis as figural world making, in the writings of Thomas Hobbes. Recent work by historian of science Steven Shapin reconsiders Hobbes's rejection of the experimental methods of Boyle and the early Royal Society, in favor of a scientific method based on rational argument, unified consensus, and a productive conception of truth. Building on this picture of Hobbesian science, I reexamine Hobbes's turn to geometry as a model scientific method concerned as much with the communication and construction of truth as with the process of its discovery. Rejecting Cartesian (i.e., analytic or coordinate) developments in geometry, which quantified space and allowed for its translation into symbolic formulae, Hobbes insisted on a Euclidean method that relied on the presentation of figures, alongside the explication of their principles in language. He argued that only such visible and linguistic demonstrations would produce the necessary figural "evidence" in the minds of geometry's students/readers, thereby allowing them to effectively grasp its truths. This understanding of Hobbes's ideal scientific method, as dependent on the imaginative presentation, analysis, reconstruction and transformation of figures, is crucial for grasping his important analogy between geometric science, which reasons from "lines and figures...drawn and described by ourselves," and the demonstrations of civil philosophy, or sciencia civilis, by which "we make the commonwealth ourselves." Whereas squares and circles constituted the primary elements of Euclidean method, the star "figure" of Hobbes's political demonstrations is clearly the body itself. I show how the dependence of Hobbes's political science on bodily figures - i.e., textual demonstrations, visible or rhetorical, which invite the reader to variously envision the form(s) of man - in turn depends on and significantly develops his singular conception of Euclidean geometry. The striking presentations of bodily figures in the Leviathan's opening image and subsequent text allow the reader to envision the complex relations of (subject) parts to each other, and to the (sovereign) whole. Such figures thereby give imaginary structure to the space or field of sovereign relations, allowing readers to grasp the abstract relations and proportions that undergird the Leviathan's ideals of law and justice, distribution and redistribution. One important difference between Hobbes's geometry proper and his political geometry is that the latter's primary figures can be imagined as looking like - or as similar to - the reader himself, a distinction with far ranging implications for the reader's imaginative participation in the text's demonstrations. Hobbes's insistence that a man must constantly imagine himself in place of some other, and to imagine that other in his own place, delineates the primary imaginative act needed to bring the Leviathan's speculative truths (regarding equality, justice, and even liberty as economic mobility) to life. It is also indebted to his definition of geometric equality, as a relation between figures that might take the place of each other - a controversial account whose broader (figural) implications were not lost on one mathematical critic, who complained that one might as well define a man as he that might be "prince of Transylvania." In sum, I argue that understanding Hobbes's political science requires renewed attention to his geometry, as a model method that depends on figures. My account of Hobbes's anti-Cartesian more geometrico illuminates crucial aspects of his political philosophy, such as the character of the Leviathan's materialist subjects, whose passions and intentions are expressed by, and therefore might be read from, the relative "orientations" and "attitudes" of their visible and imaginable bodily figures. Finally, I suggest how Hobbes's method of political geometry lays the foundation for the demonstrations of self-evident relations that formed the backbone of Enlightenment political discourse, as well as for practices of identification and sympathy that were key components of Enlightenment aesthetics and literary criticism.

Biography: Patricia Lawler is a Humanities Instructor at Bogazici University in Istanbul. She is interested in the intersections of aesthetics, literature and political transformation, and is currently completing a book on the figural aesthetics of Hobbes's Leviathan.

S1 CONSTRUCTING LITERATURE, CONSTRUCTING EUROPE

LOOKING BACK AT EUROPE BEFORE EUROPE: TWENTIETH-CENTURY REFLECTIONS ON EMPIRE AND CRISIS IN THE CLASSICAL WORLD

L. Boldrini

Goldsmiths, University of London

Abstract: If the development of comparative literature is linked to the rise of European nineteenth-century nationalisms and, as a consequence, to European imperialism, then one of the central questions that European comparative literature must face concerns the very idea of Europe, how this is constructed in literature and in literary studies. This is clearly far too large a question to be addressed in a single paper. In my contribution to the REELC-ENCLS's workshop, I wish to consider a particular perspective on this question, afforded by a selection of twentieth-century representations of historical figures who lived at significant moments of ancient Rome's history (for example, the national epic poet Virgil, the exiled epic poet Ovid, the emperor Hadrian), and whose stories have been written by twentieth-century authors from different European areas (e.g., Broch, Yourcenar, Horia, Ransmayr) who had come through phases of historical crisis, such as the Second World War (arguably, a consequence of the same nationalisms that formed the context for the development of comparative literature) or the collapse of the Soviet bloc; or else by novelists (like the Australian David Malouf) who write from the margins of what had been until recently the largest modern European empire. Their novels can be read as more or less direct reflections on the history of Europe, its imperialisms, its historical crises, its construction of an idea of civilization, on the very construction of "Europe", and on the utopia of a different future.

Biography: Lucia Boldrini is Senior Lecturer in the Department of English and Comparative Literature at Goldsmiths, University of London. She has been General Coordinator of the REELC-ENCLS (2005-2009) and is a member of the BCLA and ICLA.

Her publications include Biografie fittizie e personaggi storici: Auto)biografia, soggettività, teoria nel romanzo inglese contemporaneo (1998); Joyce, Dante, and the Poetics of Literary Relations (2001), Medieval Joyce (2002, as editor), and Autobiographies of Others: Historical Subjects and Literary Fiction (2012).

TOWARDS COMPARATIVE NARRATIVE STUDIES: STORIES OF THE BEGINNING AND STORIES OF THE END

M. Grishakova

University of Tartu

Abstract: Comparative literature has an inherent capacity for self-revision and self-reflection, but due to the lack of a stable disciplinary framework it also involves a deal of disciplinary insecurity. The growing influence of cultural studies has prompted comparatists to look for new approaches, models and methodologies. Highlighting the role of transfer and transmission as the most important factors of cultural production, Susan Bassnett has proclaimed translation studies the paradigmatic model for literary comparatism. Other scholars have envisaged the necessity of accommodating comparative literature in the postcolonial paradigm (e.g. Homi Bhabha) or in comparative media studies (Katherine Hayles). In adding another theoretical framework to a series of already established models, I see the narrative approach as a perfect match to the cross-cultural and interdisciplinary propensities of the discipline and as a stimulating field for international teamwork. The idea of comparative narratology, overlapping with comparative poetics, was propounded by Jose Angel Garcia Landa and Susana Onega in the introduction to their 1996 narratological anthology. Recently, narratology has been undergoing rapid change and is fast becoming a truly interdisciplinary enterprise. Narrative is regarded as being grounded in the human embodied mind while also diversified through cultures and communities and integrated into various ways of world-making. The shared worlds of storytelling that emerge in various media, transmitted through various semiotic channels and embedded in various cultural contexts, create competing versions of reality and open access to the social world of human intentionality, joint action and shared emotion. The proposed paper provides an outline of possible developments and research perspectives in comparative narrative studies: *the study of various traditions and conventions of storytelling, typology of plots and characters, migration of stories across cultures and their impact on cultural sensibilities; *the study of storytelling acts, types of storytellers, narrating voices and the communal values they epitomise, e.g. Pushkin's or Walter Scott's simpleminded narrators who often find themselves between two antagonistic camps and, due to this, able to provide an ideologically unbiased account of events; *comparative analysis of the concept of fictionality and its variegation across cultures (e.g. specific forms of "porous" autobiographical fiction, such as French autofiction or Japanese shishosetsu, which encourage the reader to see the fictional and the referential space as a continuum); *the study of various forms of narrativity and user-engagement across media; affective and cognitive aspects of storytelling and reception of stories. The proposed paper focuses on two basic types of narrative, the stories of the End and the stories of the Beginning - from popular apocalyptic stories to autobiographical writing, - their migration across cultures and their formative impact on the European consciousness.

Biography: Marina Grishakova. Associate Professor of Comparative Literature, Institute of Cultural Research and Fine Arts, University of Tartu; General Coordinator of the ENCLS/ REELC (2011-2013), Project Leader and Coordinator of the Nordic Network of Narrative Studies, Member of the Executive Committee of the International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA). Research interests: comparative literature, film theory, cognitive narratology, semiotics. DAAD scholar (2007), Fulbright senior scholar (2009), British Academy Visiting Scholar (2011-2012). Delivered guest lectures in the Universities of Kiel, Tampere, Aarhus, Hamburg, Groningen, Bournemouth and in Czech Academy of Sciences (Prague). A keynote speaker at the inaugural conference of Irish Association of Comparative Literature (Cork, June 2012). Organized and chaired panels at the international conferences, most recently the panel "Cognitive Film Studies II" at the annual conference of the International Society for the Study of Narrative in Washington University in St. Louis. Selected Publications (the total number 83) M. Grishakova. Postmodernist Fiction as a Cognitive Challenge: Explorations into Alternative Forms of Selfhood and Experience. In: M. Bruhn and D. Wehrs (eds.). Cognition, Literature and History. Cognitive Approaches to Literature and Culture, Austin: U of Texas Press, 2012 (forthcoming) M. Grishakova, M.-L. Ryan (eds.). Intermediality and Storytelling. Narratologia, 24. Berlin-New York: De Gruyter, 2010. Beyond the Frame: Cognitive Science, Common Sense and Fiction. Narrative 2009, 17: 2, 188-199 M. Grishakova (ed.). Semiotics, Communication and Cognition 1. J. Lotman. Culture and Explosion. New York-Berlin: Mouton de Gruyter, 2009 M. Grishakova. The Models of Space, Time and Vision in V. Nabokov's Fiction: Narrative Strategies and Cultural Frames. Tartu Semiotics Library 5. Tartu: Tartu University Press, 2006. 324 p

S1 DIGITAL AESTHETICS

THE DIGITAL AND THE EKPHRASIS OF EXPERIENCE

N. Shiel

Dublin City University

Abstract: In modern theory, the term 'ekphrasis' has typically been applied to studies on textual representations on visual representations (as per Heffernan 1993). In recent years, new academic interest has been piqued by ekphrasis as practiced in the Antiquity as a rhetorical technique intended to create vivid imagery in the mind of the listener (Webb 2009). This paper intends to expand on the new perspectives on ekphrasis by considering an 'ekphrasis of experience', a vivid delivery intended to evoke, not simply describe, an experience, rather than a static scene. As a full experience must consist of sensory input that is not restricted to visual alone, this paper will consider how effective ekphrasis can be achieved using material relating to additional senses such as hearing, touch and movement. Another layer of the experience that will be of relevance here will be affect: how ekphrasis seeks to awaken a desired emotional state in the listener/reader. This ekphrasis of experience will be specifically considered in context of material relating to the digital world: examples such as digital texts or virtual worlds. This paper will demonstrate that the ludic, dialogic and immersive nature of such material makes experiential ekphrasis a relevant approach in literary and digital studies. Comparative studies have long been interested in the relationship between text and image; in the 21st century, it will be argued, mere 'image' with its static connotations is no longer enough.

Biography: Nina Shiel is a PhD Researcher in Comparative Literature in the School of Applied Language and Intercultural Studies, Dublin City University. She gained BA (Mod) (2001) and M.Litt (2007) in Trinity College Dublin, followed by MA in Comparative Literature in DCU (2011). Her doctoral research into literary representations of virtual worlds is supported by the Irish Research Council for Humanities and Social Sciences. She is a member of the Comparative Literature Association of Ireland Executive Committee.

QUELQUES ÉLÉMENTS ESTHÉTIQUES DANS L'ACTUELLE LITTÉRATURE NUMÉRIQUE BRÉSILIENNE

A. Luiz dos Santos

Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina

Abstract: On peut déjà parler sans doute d'un système littéraire brésilien constitué d'oeuvres numériques qui entretiennent avec la tradition de l'imprimé des rapports à la fois d'approche et d'éloignement. Si l'on considère que le numérique, plus que dépasser, parvient à assimiler et à déplacer l'imprimé, les descriptions esthétiques des oeuvres littéraires numériques se doivent de prendre en compte et les spécificités du numérique et les spécificités de la tradition littéraire en langue portugaise (ce qui comprend à la fois les avant-gardes des années 50 et la production de poèmes visuels baroques des XVII^{ème} et XVIII^{ème} siècles). En somme, ce travail a pour but de présenter un cadre le plus étendu possible, des oeuvres littéraires numériques brésiliennes, en essayant de les organiser en une typologie issue de quelques constantes esthétiques relevant de la lecture interactive qui leur est propre.

Biography: Alckmar Luiz dos Santos est né à Silveiras - SP, Brésil ; diplômé en ingénierie électronique par l'Université de Campinas (1983), a fait une maîtrise en théorie littéraire et en histoire à l'Université de Campinas (1989) et un doctorat en études littéraires à l'Université Paris VII (1993). Il est actuellement professeur de littérature brésilienne à l'Université Fédérale de Santa Catarina et coordinateur du Centre pour la Recherche en Informatique, Littérature et Linguistique (NUPILL, centre de recherche de l'excellence du CNPq depuis 2008). Il a été chercheur invité à l'Université Paris 3 - Sorbonne Nouvelle (2000-2001) et à l'Universidad Complutense de Madrid (2009-2010). Il travaille sur la littérature brésilienne et sur la théorie littéraire, en mettant l'accent sur la théorie du texte, la littérature et la philosophie, les littératures numériques, et sur la poésie en général. Il est aussi poète, romancier et essayiste. Auteur de "Leituras de nós" et «Dos desconcertos da vida filosoficamente considerada» (essai et poèmes, respectivement ; Prix Transmídia - Instituto Itaú Cultural), "Rios Imprestáveis" (poèmes; Prix Redécouverte de la Littérature Brésilienne du Magazine Cult), "Ao que minha vida veio..." (roman, Prix Salim Miguel), entre autres. On lui a décerné, en 2011, un prix de chercheur d'excellence de son université.

COMMENT CONSOLIDER UNE CRITIQUE POUR LES LITTÉRATURES NUMÉRIQUES.

C. de Sales

Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina -UFSC

Abstract: La création littéraire a transbordé il y a plus de deux décennies (dans le cas du Brésil) le milieu imprimé et elle a intégré les écrits du milieu numérique. N'il s'agit seulement d'utiliser les ordinateurs comme outil de diffusion ou d'édition hypertextuelle de la littérature, il s'agit de proposer une expérience esthétique à partir de les signes inhérents à l'ordinateur. Cela nous appelons littératures numériques. Par conséquent de cette production artistique qui privilégie le mot pour principal champ de possibilités on peut déjà observer, même timide et sans organisation, certaines esquisses de critique littéraire dirigée pour ce type de création. Cependant, ce qui n'est pas possible d'observer encore dans ces essais et esquisses critiques c'est un effort pour consolider une critique pour cette littérature numérique. En admettant qui consolider une critique est, entre autres, établir critères (de composition et de lecture) qui organisent la réflexion sur ce type de littérature, le présent article propose pour critère possible de jugement de la littérature numérique le rapport entre le mot et les possibilités créées par la technologie numérique. C'est important percevoir de quel façon les deux, mot et technologie numérique, elles sont modifiées à partir d'entrelacs et de quel façon cela peut dire quelque chose d'original à la littérature. Le corpus que nous avons utilisé pour analyser cette question couvre une part de la production littéraire numérique qu'on fait au Brésil dans les dix dernières années.

Biography: Cristiano de Sales a doctorat en littérature (Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina – Brésil – avec Stage doctorale à Paris 3). Actuellement Il fait un stage postdoctoral à l'Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina (Brésil) et à l'Universidade Presbiteriana Mackenzie (São Paulo-Brésil), où Il est aussi chercheur invité. Il concentre ses recherches dans la littérature numérique, la théorie littéraire et dans la littérature brésilienne.

L'ŒUVRE D'ART NUMÉRIQUE : CORPS ET ESPACE

C. Grijó Vilarouca

Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina

Abstract: Afin de mieux comprendre le modus operandi des œuvres d'art numériques, ce travail propose une réflexion sur deux de ses aspects essentiels, à savoir, l'interactivité – considérée à partir de la notion de corps, dans la perspective phénoménologique de Merleau-Ponty – et la notion d'espace, en refusant certains présupposés. Parmi ceux-ci, nous trouvons celui qui prône l'existence d'une autre dimension spatiale physique – qui évoque une idée d'espace dualistique, similaire à la dichotomie médiévale dans laquelle coexistaient, dans l'imaginaire, « deux mondes », deux espaces, selon l'analyse de Margareth Wertheim. Cette division n'est qu'une illusion et une adhésion au transcendantalisme, puisqu'il s'agit d'une croyance à l'existence d'une autre dimension au-delà du monde vécu.

La réponse à la question 'pourquoi croit-on généralement à l'idée que l'espace du virtuel se trouve sur un autre plan physique, différent du nôtre ?' peut être trouvée, d'après cette proposition, grâce à la compréhension des mécanismes de perception des images (à l'écran) et de ceux de l'illusion produits par le « corps propre », reconsidérés à partir de l'habitude, perçue comme une manière dont le sujet s'approprie le monde, l'espace. L'interactivité, donc, dans le numérique, apparaît comme étant fondée sur nos expériences dans le monde vécu et dans les rapports qu'elles entretiennent avec les objets technologiques, ce qui implique notre corporalité. Cela veut dire que l'espace doit être compris, lui aussi, d'après l'habitude qui nous permet de posséder le monde et l'œuvre d'art et d'après les actions du sujet dans ce monde vécu.

Biography: Licenciée en Lettres Modernes - Français, docteur ès Lettres (théorie littéraire) et enseignante contractuelle de théorie de la littérature, littérature occidentale et langue française au Département de Langues et Littératures à l'Université Fédérale de Santa Catarina.

Sa recherche porte sur la spatialité structurelle des récits littéraires contemporains et sur les œuvres d'art numériques. Membre du groupe de recherche NUPILL (Núcleo de pesquisas em Informática, Literatura e Linguística) - recherche du numérique, littérature et linguistique - depuis 2008, à l'Université Fédérale de Santa Catarina.

S1: LECTURES CONTEMPORAINES DU CONCEPT D'ANTHROPOPHAGIE

LE DEFI DE LA LITTÉRATURE MONDIALISÉE

E.M. De Souza

UNIVERSIDADE FEDERAL DE MINAS GERAIS

Abstract: Cette communication a pour but la discussion sur l'héritage littéraire de J.L. Borges pour les écrivains du XXI^{ème} siècle. L'anthropophagie, concept revitalisé par l'écrivain brésilien Oswald d'Andrade à la fin des années 1920, pour interpréter les rapports entre le national et l'étranger, s'actualise aujourd'hui de façon inversée, dans la mesure où la culture soi-disant périphérique se transforme en modèle à être dévoré par l'européen. Vila-Matas, auteur espagnol contemporain, produit une oeuvre qui a pour principe la poétique borgésienne, c'est-à-dire, la littérature comme thème et la métalangage comme procédé artistique. L'influence latino-américaine sur l'écrivain espagnol renverse le geste anthropophagique du modernisme et s'impose comme conquête culturelle subie par les cultures périphériques.

Biography: Professeur de Littérature Comparée de l'Université Fédérale de Minas Gerais - Brasil. Docteur en Littérature Comparée (Sémiologie) - Paris VII. Chercheur du Conseil National de Recherche Scientifique (CNPq). Auteur, entre autres ouvrages, de A pedra mágica do discurso, O século de Borges, Crítica cult e Janelas Indiscretas- ensaios de crítica biográfica. Professeur Invité Senior de l'Université Fédérale de São João del-Rei. Minas Gerais- Brésil. Ex-président de l'Association Brésilienne de Littérature Comparée (ABRALIC).

GENEALOGIES DE LA THEORIE DE L'ANTHROPOPHAGIE

A.L.L. Aguiar

Universidade Federal do Rio de Janeiro (UFRJ)

Abstract: Si la puissance de l'anthropophagie a sa naissance avec Oswald de Andrade, pendant la décennie de 1920 au Brésil, son espérance de vie est encore loin de sa fin, dans la mesure où les articulations critiques et théoriques ont été envisagées, d'un point de vue rentable, et toujours en visant une compréhension vaste du concept de culture et de ses rapports à l'heure actuelle. Puisqu'il s'agit d'une des propositions pour redéfinir la culture contemporaine, selon Rocha et Ruffinelli, l'anthropophagie apparaît comme une alternative créative d'appropriation de l'autre et de tout ce qui l'entoure, et on confirme ainsi, l'assertive poétique de Rimbaud (je est un autre). Au même moment, elle actualise son concept, si nous prenons comme point de référence des analystes symboliques comme Darcy Ribeiro, Glauber Rocha, Haroldo de Campos, et, plus proches et contemporaines, les réflexions philosophiques d'Eduardo Viveiros de Castro et les topographies critiques sur les tropicalistes et les anthropophagiques faites par Caetano Veloso. Si l'on pense au grand héritage de l'imagination théorique de l'altérité, ce travail prétend aborder aussi les processus d'indigestion anthropophagique – des espaces dans lesquels cette théorie ne trouve pas son assimilation, lui permettant de percevoir ses bénéfices symboliques, et même ses coûts.

Biography: Biographie

Je suis dans mon stage postdoctoral à l'Université Fédérale de Rio de Janeiro, à l'École de Communication, et mes études ont proposé l'organisation des photos et des images par la méthode warburgienne de l'Atlas Mnemosyne, et dans ce cas, la recherche s'oriente vers la collection d'images du cinéaste brésilien Glauber Rocha. Je suis diplômée en littérature à l'Université Fédérale de Uberlândia (2003), avec la Maîtrise (2006) et le Doctorat (2010) à l'Université Fédérale de Bahia

LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE ET L'ART CANNIBALISTE DU PRESENT

R.E. Lima

Universidade Federal da Bahia

Abstract: Le travail vise à analyser, à partir d'une perspective comparatiste, comment certaines œuvres de la littérature brésilienne contemporaine font l'articulation entre l'identité / altérité, national / étranger, local / global, en observant dans quelle mesure elles s'approchent ou se distancient de la proposition anthropophagique d'Oswald de Andrade. S'appuyant sur la reprise des mythologies reconstruites par "l'imagination historique" (Hayden White), comme dans les romans d'Alberto Mussa et Milton Hatoum, ou sur des discours métanarratifs, tels que les œuvres de João Gilberto Noll et Bernardo Carvalho, la complexité des contacts interculturels reste encore un leitmotiv pertinent dans la littérature du Pays. Toutefois, dans le contexte de la mondialisation, en plus d'une esthétique de la violence inhérente à la métaphore inventée par l'écrivain "pauliste", la littérature du présent peut également nous conduire à récupérer l'utopie d'un "vivre dans les autres" (Sergio Buarque de Holanda), si prisée par Oswald, le "cannibal cordial" (Jary Cardoso).

Biography:

Professeur de Littérature Brésilienne à l'Institut de Lettres de l'Université Fédérale de Bahia (UFBA), Brésil. Docteur en Littérature Comparée à l'Université Fédérale de Minas Gerais (UFMG); post-doctorat à l'Université Paris XIII. Directrice de mémoires de Master et de thèses de Doctorat. Cheurcheuse du Conseil National de Développement Scientifique et Technologique (CNPq), Brésil. Occupe actuellement le poste de Coordonnateur du Programme de Master et Doctorat en Littérature et Culture de l'Université Fédérale de Bahia.

S1: AKHMATOVA ET LES POÈTES EUROPÉENS

POÉTIQUE COMPAREE DU "REQUIEM" D' ANNA AKHMATOVA ET DU "REQUIEM" DE PHILIPPE JACCOTTET.

M. Finck
Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: Anna Akhmatova et Philippe Jaccottet écrivent tous deux , à une date historiquement proche, une oeuvre poétique qu'ils nomment "Requiem". Cette coïncidence est d'autant plus remarquable que Akhmatova et Jaccottet sont tous deux des lecteurs et des traducteurs de Rilke qui a lui-même écrit un "Requiem". Il s'agira de mettre en relief et d'analyser les affinités et les contrastes entre le "Requiem" d' Akhmatova et celui de Jaccottet. La comparaison. permettra de réfléchir à ce que Tatiana Victoroff a appelé un "Requiem européen" et de faire ressortir la qualité distinctive des deux arts poétiques confrontés.

Biography: Professeur de littérature comparée à l'université de Strasbourg

"SANS LE BOURREAU ET L'ÉCHAFAUD / IL N'Y AURAIT PAS DE POÈTE SUR TERRE". UNE RÉSISTANCE POÉTIQUE EUROPÉENNE : ANNA AKHMATOVA, PAUL CELAN ET RENÉ CHAR

E. Kaess
UFR des Lettres

Abstract: « Pourquoi empoisonnez-vous l'eau et mêlez-vous mon pain à l'ordure ? Pourquoi de l'ultime liberté Faites-vous un coupe-gorge ? Parce que je n'ai pas bafoué la mort amère de mes amis ? Parce que je suis restée fidèle à ma triste patrie ? Soit. Sans le bourreau et l'échafaud Il n'y aurait pas de poète sur terre. A nous les chemises de pénitents, à nous, bougie à la main, de marcher et hurler. » (1) Ces vers furent écrits par Anna Akhmatova en 1935. Le 22 octobre de cette même année, son époux, Nicolas Pounine, et son fils, Lev Goumiliov, furent tous deux arrêtés. Elle se mit alors à composer, pour le tiroir, son « Requiem » et n'hésita pas à se jeter « aux pieds du bourreau » (2) pour tenter d'obtenir leur libération. La figure du bourreau apparaît également sous la plume de Paul Celan, dans « Gemurmel der Toten » (« Murmures des morts ») (3), un poème écrit à Czernowitz en juillet 1941. Au mois de juin, en une nuit, 3800 habitants de Czernowitz - dont plus de la moitié étaient juifs - avaient été arrêtés par des unités du NKVD et déportés en Sibérie. En 1941, « en dépit de l'adversité » (4), René Char travaillait au recueil « Seuls demeurent » et convoqua à son tour le bourreau, dans un poème intitulé « La liberté ». Surveillé et recherché, il se replia dans un petit village des Basses-Alpes, Céreste, où il commença à organiser un premier réseau de résistance. Par l'entremise de ce bourreau et de ses différents avatars qui surgissent épisodiquement dans leurs œuvres, Anna Akhmatova, Paul Celan et René Char semblent entretenir un dialogue secret sur le rôle du poète et les conditions de la création poétique « face à l'extrême » (5). Ils se retrouvent, au delà des frontières, en menant conjointement une réflexion poétologique, en élaborant une œuvre qui accueille l'événement, qui réagit à l'événement et qui se voit transfigurée par l'événement et en érigeant une parole poétique européenne résistante qui se déploie entre silence et hurlement. (1) Vers cités et traduits par Tatiana Victoroff, « J'entendis une voix qui m'appelait. Le dialogue d'Anna Akhmatova avec les émigrés », in « Figures de l'émigré russe au XIXe siècle et XXe siècle, Fiction et réalité », sous la direction de Charlotte Krauss et de Tatiana Victoroff, Amsterdam, New York, Rodopi, 2012, p.488 (1) Traduction personnelle, en l'absence de traduction française de l'ensemble du poème. Anna Akhmatova, « Victoire sur le destin II, poème, Moscou, 2005, C.112 (2) Anna Akhmatova, « La Victoire sur le destin, autobiographie et mémoires en prose poème de temps en temps », Moscou, 2005, C.353 (3) Aucune traduction française n'existe à ce jour. Paul Celan, « Gemurmel der Toten », « Aus dem Nachlass publizierte Gedichte », « Das Frühwerk (Edition von 1989) », « Die Gedichte », Kommentierte Gesamtausgabe in einem Band, Herausgegeben und kommentiert von Barbara Wiedemann, Frankfurt am Main, Suhrkamp Verlag, 2003, S.392-392 (4) René Char, « Billets à Francis Curel », I, 1941, « Recherche de la base et du sommet », « Œuvres complètes », Paris, Gallimard, 1983, p.632 (5) Tzvetan Todorov, « Face à l'extrême », Paris, Seuil, 1991.

Biography: Professeur de Lettre Modernes (depuis 2001) IUFM - Université de Strasbourg (depuis 2009) Chargée de cours à l'Institut de Littérature Comparée (depuis 2005) Inscrite en Doctorat de Littérature Générale et Comparée sous la direction du Professeur Pascal Dethurens (depuis 2009)

S1 PROCHE-ORIENT, ORIENTALISME ET COMPARATISME

EDWARD SAID, ORIENTALISTE ET COMPARATISTE

Y. Clavaron

Université Jean Monnet St-Etienne

Abstract: Edward Said occupa une chaire de littérature anglaise et comparée à Columbia University et sa spécialisation en littérature comparée informe ses œuvres, à commencer par sa thèse sur Joseph Conrad, même si celle-ci relève d'un comparatisme interne ou monolingue. S'il a pu être attiré par l'approche théorique de l'American Comparative Literature Association, Said admire les grands comparatistes européens, inspirés de la tradition philologique comme Auerbach. L'Orientalisme est, avec Culture et Impérialisme, le lieu où Said développe une pratique comparatiste personnelle, qui mêle approche théorique (recours aux théories foucaaldiennes comme la dyade savoir/pouvoir et la discursivité) et pratique philologique (approche des textes en langue originale). Said part d'une paradoxe : la littérature comparée, censée permettre de sortir des bornes étroites et provinciales des littératures nationales et constituer un remède aux idéologies nationalistes, se trouve étroitement liée à l'impérialisme européen du XIX^e siècle. Le but de la communication est de montrer comment la littérature comparée, « fille de l'Empire » selon Said, peut néanmoins permettre de subvertir les rapports centre / périphérie, Orient/Occident et de redonner la parole à l'Autre, le subalterne, l'Oriental. La question est finalement de savoir dans quelle mesure le discours de la littérature comparée déjoue ou rejoue le discours orientaliste.

Biography: Yves Clavaron,

Professeur de littérature comparée à l'Université de Saint-Étienne

"L'AVENTURE OCCIDENTALE" DANS LA LITTÉRATURE ARABE (EGYPTE)

M. Chatti

Université de la Nouvelle-Calédonie

Abstract: La littérature arabe demeure, ainsi que le note Edward Said, « marginale aux yeux des lecteurs occidentaux, pour qui Fuentes, García Márquez, Soyinka et Rushdie ont acquis une autorité culturelle essentielle »¹. Dans le champ critique français, la littérature arabe ne saurait rester cette « modernité oubliée ». La littérature arabe moderne et contemporaine offre certaines spécificités, liées particulièrement à la représentation de la temporalité arabe : les Arabes apparaissent comme les habitants du temps et non pas comme les bâtisseurs des villes. Le temps de la mythologie, de l'épopée, de l'éternité semble indestructible, quant à l'espace, investi par le réel et la violence historiques, il est l'objet d'une dégradation fatale, d'une destruction inexorable. Une tension énonciative caractérise des oeuvres arabes importantes (comme Les jours de Taha Hussein, Les fils de la médina de Naguib Mahfouz) qui sont engagées dans la déconstruction et la démystification des grands récits de l'histoire et de l'héritage arabes. À cet égard, Yves Clavaron écrit à propos de la poétique et de l'éthique du roman postcolonial : « À la manière du postmodernisme, la théorie postcoloniale démystifie les grands récits, c'est-à-dire les narrations à fonction légitimante. Nul récit n'est plus crédible, d'où l'apparition d'une multitude de petits récits qui édictent leur propre norme, abolissent les références uniques. [...] Malgré – ou en raison de – cette méfiance affichée envers les “grands récits”, le récit demeure le vecteur principal de la formation romanesque postcoloniale et il n'a rien de “gratuit”. Le roman postcolonial raconte une histoire, refuse les jeux abstraits du roman européen tout en inscrivant le débat – moral et politique – au coeur du récit. » La littérature arabe invite à réfléchir au statut et à la notion même de littérature, à la fonction et à la perception de la littérature et des arts en situation postcoloniale ; elle invite aussi à proposer des remaniements notionnels qui s'appliquent aux mondialisations anciennes et contemporaines, dans le cadre de pluralité des imaginaires en recomposition et en négociation. Il s'agira de travailler à l'observation de l'influence et des intertextes des héritages, arabo-islamique et occidental, dans la littérature arabe en leur appliquant une lecture de type postcolonial ; par exemple, un travail autour de l'adaptation arabe des tragédies grecques (comme celle d'OEdipe par Tewfik al-Hakim) permettrait d'éclairer les enjeux poétiques et éthiques de l'émergence, ou de la naissance, de la tragédie dans le champ littéraire arabe. Plus largement, l'étude de « l'aventure occidentale » dans la littérature arabe moderne, qui permet de renouveler les recherches sur l'exotisme et l'imagologie, révélera des ramifications poétiques et éthiques originales. En effet, le voyage en Occident dans la littérature égyptienne moderne et contemporaine a donné lieu à des oeuvres d'une grande valeur esthétique : Les jours (troisième volume publié en 1955, traduit en français par La traversée intérieure) et Adîb de Taha Hussein (1935), Un oiseau d'Orient de Tewfik Hakim (1938), mais aussi Amrikanli de Sonallah Ibrahim (2003), Chicago d'Alaa al-Aswany (2007), et d'autres encore³, autant de récits qui offrent l'opportunité d'étudier le « contre-voyage » (pour citer Yves Clavaron), ou la relation entre la littérature arabe et l'ailleurs. Car le récit du voyage en Occident – singulièrement en raison des relations internationales et des profondes transformations géopolitiques de l'histoire et de l'espace contemporains – constitue un genre dans le champ littéraire arabe où se posent avec acuité le rapport à l'héritage arabo-islamique et européen, et la question de l'identité arabe et de l'altérité.

Friday, July 19, 2013

1 Edward Said, Réflexions sur l'exil et autres essais, (Reflections on Exile, 2000), Arles, Actes Sud, 2008, p. 416.

2 Yves Clavaron, Poétique du roman postcolonial, Saint-Étienne, Publications de l'Université de Saint-Étienne, 2011, p. 103.104.

3 On peut penser, par exemple, au roman de Tayeb Salib (Soudan), Saison de la migration vers le nord.

Biography: Mounira CHATTI (Maître de conférences de Littérature comparée à l'Université de la Nouvelle-Calédonie)

S2: ETHNOLITERATURE AND ETHNOPOETICS

PRIMITIVISM AND LITERARY MODERNITY

E. Schüttpelz
Universität Siegen

Abstract: "Primitivism" has been used successfully as an art historical term and a concept of art criticism since the 1930s; and Arthur Lovejoy developed a preliminary concept of "primitivism" in his "history of ideas". Nevertheless, it has been difficult to establish a consistent concept of a "literary primitivism". The talk will develop a new concept of "literary primitivism", especially for the period between 1870 and 1960, stemming from the now obsolete modern anthropological use of that term, its postcolonial deconstruction, and its literary heritage.

Biography: Erhard Schüttpelz, Dissertation the theory of rhetorical figures (Bonn 1993), "Figuren der Rede. Zur Theorie der rhetorischen Figur" (Berlin 1996). Second Thesis ("Habilitation") on modern world literature and anthropological primitivism (Konstanz 2003), "Die Moderne im Spiegel des Primitiven" (Munich 2005). Professor for Media Theory at the University of Siegen, Germany.

ETHNOLITERATURE AND THE POETICS OF PRIMITIVISM

N. Gess
Universität Basel

Abstract: In my talk I would like to address the ethnographical dimension of modern literature with respect to the question of primitivism. I will argue, that literary primitivism in the early 20th century is based on the literary adaptation of the anthropological concept of "primitive thinking", as it is constructed in ethnology and psychology of the time, and I will show, what the poetics of this primitivism might consist in. Secondly, I will ask, if and how Alfred Döblin's literary writings can be put in this context, focusing on the one hand on his essay on the primitive, on the other hand on his Amazonas-novel, which relies heavily on Döblin's reading of ethnological, historical and geographical texts.

Biography: Prof. Dr. Nicola Gess
Deutsches Seminar
Departement Sprach- und Literaturwissenschaften
Universität Basel
Nadelberg 4
CH-4051 Basel

THE SACRED, THE LITERARY, AND THE RAW IN THE CORRESPONDENCE OF GEORGES BATAILLE AND MICHEL LEIRIS

D. Goldberg
York University

Abstract: Members of the group of surrealists, atheologists, and immoralists that formed around Georges Bataille and Michel Leiris had found out, one way and another, that they were part of a lower-case-'c' culture: and they were angry. Thus, the interwoven themes of knowledge, feeling, and betrayal run throughout the decades-long conversation that Bataille and Leiris pursued in their correspondence. As James Clifford writes in his 1981 essay "On Ethnographic Surrealism", Bataille and Leiris cultivated a continuous play of the familiar and the strange that they hoped would bring them to a reality that would no longer be only artificial; this play relied on bringing 'foreign' cultural concepts to ground in inter-war Paris. My paper will report on those letters, with particular attention to how the two interlocutors pulled together their own experience with the imagined experience of the Other in their attempt to reclaim the sacred, myth, and the right both to feel and to know within the artificial worlds created by newly self-conscious ('self-conscious' in the sense of a teenager with acne) cultures of the West. As well, my focus on the letters of Bataille and Leiris will provide another layer of complexity to the question of comparison 'beyond' literature that was posed by the original Call for Papers for the 2013 ICLA Congress. This third dynamic, hinted at in the opening sentence to this proposal, is the personal. Leiris and Bataille were not simply great thinkers, they were reactionaries who were emotionally, experientially, and existentially invested in the problems that they posed. I propose here to analyze Bataille and Leiris' correspondence, therefore, with particular attention to the fact that letters, as a literary genre, pit the dimension of thought and motive up against that of practice, relationship, and the everyday in a particularly 'emphatic' problematization of the boundaries of the literary, the literal, and the raw.

Biography: Daveeda Goldberg is a PhD candidate in York University's Humanities program. She holds an MA in Anthropology from Brandeis University and an MA in Writing and Publishing from Emerson College.

UNE COLLABORATION CROISÉE : LÉVI-STRAUSS ET ANDRÉ BRETON AUX ETATS-UNIS

S.J. André

Université de la Polynésie française

Abstract: Lors de la deuxième guerre mondiale, Cl. Lévi-Strauss et André Breton se sont retrouvés dans le navire qui les amène à New-York. Ils vivent alors dans le même cercle d'intellectuels expatriés. On lira Tristes tropiques (1955) comme le résultat d'échanges avec Breton et les écrivains, où la forme et l'apport littéraires sont omniprésents pour évaluer l'originalité et les apports du texte anthropologique lui-même. Dans cette oeuvre Cl. Lévi-Strauss s'interroge plus particulièrement sur toutes les formes de récits de l'Ailleurs et sur les conditions de la connaissance scientifique des sociétés humaines. Dès les premiers articles intégrés par la suite dans l'Anthropologie structurale (1958) il développe des définitions intéressantes de l'activité créatrice à propos des mythes. En miroir, on peut apprécier l'importance de la rencontre de l'ethnologue pour A. Breton et la vision de l'Art qu'il développe à cette époque: un art dont la dimension sociale est de plus en plus affirmée. Au contact de l'ethnologie et de Lévi-Strauss, Breton conçoit et développe son appel à la nécessité de la création d'un mythe social contemporain qu'il appellera "les grands transparents". En 1955 il lui soumet un questionnaire pour la préparation de l'Art magique. On verra que le dialogue entre littérature et ethnologie a été extrêmement productif pour les deux.

Biography:

Professeur à l'université de la Polynésie française. Directeur de recherches à l'université de Paris-Sorbonne Nouvelle. Spécialiste des littératures exotiques et francophones. S'inspire des cultural Studies et des études postcoloniales. Nombreuses missions dans les universités du pacifique (Auckland, Nouvelle Calédonie, Vanuatu, Hawaii...) Derniers ouvrages: Le Roman autochtone dans le Pacifique Sud (2088); Le Récit, perspectives anthropologique et littéraire (2012)

S2 GLOBAL SHEN CONGWEN

AMERICAN SHEN CONGWENS: A SEARCH FOR "TRANSLATORS"

G. Zhou

Louisiana State University

Abstract:

American Shen Congwen: A Search for "Translators" This essay looks at scholars, translators, and writers who helped introduce and translate Shen Congwen into the United States. When in 1961 C.T. Xia published his ground breaking A History of Modern Chinese Fiction, 1917-1957, Shen Congwen was one of the exemplar writers he enthusiastically promoted based on his Anglo-American Humanistic criterion. Blaming the majority of modern Chinese writers' "obsession with China," Xia praised Shen for his literary excellence as well as his ability to deal with moral and religious issues in concrete and aesthetic terms. In the following three decades, Xia's paradigm for modern Chinese literature played significant role in the field of modern Chinese literary studies in America. However, the 1990s saw remarkable changes in the field. The newly re-oriented US China field mainly forgot Shen Congwen and moved on to new subjects and matters. What deserves our attention here is that the reception of Shen Congwen in the US is not merely a story of Shen Congwen and his work, but also a tale of American academic culture. In a way, to be read or translated, Shen Congwen had to be able to function well in his new host cultural context. Ironically, although Shen Congwen was not able to function well in the 1960s and 70s in mainland China, his original home context, his rebirth in America advanced him dramatically as a great writer of modern China.

Biography: Gang Zhou teaches at Louisiana State University. Her book Placing the Modern Chinese Vernacular in Transnational Literature was published last year. She has also co-edited a critical volume entitled Other Renaissances: A New Approach to World Literature.

THE TRANSLATION AND RECEPTION OF SHEN CONGWEN IN FRANCE

I. Rabut

Institut national des langues et civilisations orientales

Abstract: My aim is to give a general picture of the translation and reception of Shen Congwen's works in France. In one sense, the story of Shen Congwen in France is that of an aborted reception, since his belated (re)discovery during the 1980's has been largely overshadowed by the emergence of young authors, especially those of the « root-seeking school ». Actually, the meaning of his work goes well beyond the category of regionalist literature which he has often been assigned to, and he definitely deserves to be considered a « global » writer, as I will try to show.

Biography: Professor of Modern Chinese Literature at the Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales, Paris. Translator of many modern and contemporary Chinese literary works. Director of the collection "Chinese literature" (Actes Sud publishing house).

SHEN CONGWEN IN JAPAN

H. Kojima

Meikai University

Abstract: Shen Congwen was first introduced into Japan in 1926; his short story "Mother" was translated into Japanese by Harugasumi that year. Influenced by Zhou Zuoren, who highly praised Shen Congwen during his visit to Japan in 1934, Japanese scholars Okazaki Toshio, Matsueda Shigeo started translating and studying Shen Congwen's work. Okazaki in one of his important lectures entitled "Laoshe and Shen Congwen" (1935) calls Shen Congwen "a most gifted writer with unique and refreshing style." In 1938, Matsueda translated Shen Congwen's eight stories, including his most beloved novella "Border Town." Specialized study of Shen Congwen in Japan did not start until the second half of the 1980s. Representative scholars from that period include Hisayo Kojima, Shiroya Takeo and others. Inspired by Jeffrey Kinkley's comparative research on Shen Congwen and William Faulkner, Shiroya carried out his comparative research on Shen Congwen and Japanese writer Nakagami Kenji. Hisayo's analysis on the intriguing textual relationship between some of Shen Congwen's work and Buddhist stories was highly valued by Shen Congwen specialists in mainland China. Since the 1990s, a younger generation of scholars (Ko Airei, Saito Hiroki, Fuke Michinobu, Imaizumi Hideto, Nakano Tomohiro, and Tsumori Aki) has made further contribution. Their research center on Shen Congwen's life in Shanghai and Beijing, as well as his relationship with Lu Xun and other writers. Some of them also apply narrative theories in their discussion of Shen Congwen's work.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Professor Hisayo Kojima taught modern Chinese literature at Meikai University for more than twenty years. She has published numerous articles on Shen Congwen. Her monograph Shen Congwen: The Author and the Work was published in 1997. She is also a known translator of Shen Congwen's work into the Japanese language.

S2 COMPARATIVE EPISTEMOLOGIES AND PERSPECTIVES ON "REALISM"

REALISM AND LOSS OF REALITY

S.E. Larsen
Université d'Aarhus

Abstract: The paper belongs to the panel organized by Margaret Higonnet "Comparative epistemologies and perspectives on "Realism"" which seems not to appear on the list?? Realism and loss of reality Does the Chartreuse de Parme belong to realism? Is labeling meaningful at all for a composite and heterogenous worklike Stendhal's novel? Or: is its heterogeneity, even contradictions, the essence of its realism? If so: what kind of reality allows to call such a work realistic? This set of questions invites to a reflection on historical context, literary form and conceptualization of realism as constitutive of its interpretation of reality. With La Chartreuse as my basic material I will show how a reconsideration of realism must take all three dimensions into account at the same time with Adorno's catch phrase on Balzac: Realismus aus Realitätsverlust as my starting point. If modern realism is rooted in a deep sense of "Realitätsverlust", then the understanding of the aftermath of 19th century realism in the following century will be affected. The question is: will the continuation of realism into the 20th century consist mainly of works modeled after the literary form of the great novels of the 19th century, establishing a realist tradition, or consist of new forms reflecting a new realism of a new sense of "Realitätsverlust"? My example will be Imre Kertész' novels and reflections on the interpretation of WW II and Holocaust. My paper will mainly point to the problems of reconceptualizing realism to make it a fruitful concept both for studying 19th century literature and its later transformations.

Biography: Svend Erik Larsen, Professeur de littérature comparée, Université d'Aarhus. Secrétaire du Comité de Coordination de AILC: Comparative History of Literatures in the European Languages.

THE "ARCHIVE ART" AND ITS TIES WITH LITERARY REALISM

A. Vaupotič
University of Nova Gorica

Abstract: The paper proposes to approach the issue of literary realism through the prism of the "archive art", i.e. the artworks that are archives of objects, documents, statements, even other artworks by other artists etc. The preservation of the otherness of an entity, which is subsequently taken up and preserved in an archive, is one of the key challenges involved in such projects. The second task of an archival artwork is to construct an encompassing totality that correlates with the authorship and the significance of the artwork-archive as a whole. Apart from the theories of archive the main references are Aby Warburg's Mnemosyne Atlas (1928-29) and Walter Benjamin's Arcades Project (1927-40). Benjamin H. D. Buchloh's notion of the "archival aesthetics" foregrounds the differences between montage of preexistent elements, which emphasizes discontinuities between parts of the whole, and the archive-like ordering of elements in an artwork. The paper scrutinizes possible links between the archival approaches to art production in the 20th and 21st centuries and the practices of realist writing beginning in the 19th century. The survey of representative works crosses medial boundaries between literature, the visual arts, and the narratives in technical media, such as film or television.

Biography: Aleš Vaupotic is a literary comparatist and new media artist. He is Ass. Prof. at the School of humanities, University of Nova Gorica, Slovenia. He is a member of the executive committees of European Network for Comparative Literary Studies (REELCS/ENCLS) and of Slovene Comparative Literature Association and the president of Society for Connecting Art and Science ArtNetLab. In his work he combines artistic and scholarly approaches. His areas of research include the theory of discourse, theory of new media and theory of literary realism.

FROM EXPERIMENTAL REALISM TO POST-REALISM: TRANSITIONAL LITERATURE IN THE ECE REGION

M. Cornis-Pope
Virginia Commonwealth University

Abstract: This paper explores challenges to traditional forms of realism, as they developed often side by side with canonical realism in East-Central Europe. This alternative paradigm, which could be called experimental realism would include, for example, the fantastic prose of Eminescu, Macedonski, or Mircea Eliade, the psychological (psychoanalytic) realists of the 1930s, the magic realists of the mid 1960s, the women's lyrical realism of the 1970s, the postmodern self-reflexive writers (the "textualists") of the 1980s, or the postcolonial (Baltic and Balkan) writers of the last 2-3 decades. The author of this paper is particularly interested in the degree to which the very definition of realism is expanded in the process to the point where its basic premises are being challenged and revised.

Biography: Marcel Cornis-Pope is Professor of English and Media Studies at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, USA. His publications include Anatomy of the White Whale: A Poetics of the American Symbolic Romance (Bucharest; Univers, 1982), Hermeneutic Desire and Critical Rewriting: Narrative Interpretation in the Wake of Poststructuralism (London and New York: McMillan Press/St. Martin's Press, 1992), The Unfinished Battles: Romanian Postmodernism before and after 1989 (Iasi: Polirom Press, 1996), and Narrative Innovation and Cultural Rewriting in the Cold War Era and After (New York: Palgrave Press, 2001). In 2010 he completed with John Neubauer the editing and publication of a four-volume History of the Literary Cultures of East Central Europe: Junctures and Disjunctures in the 19th and 20th Century, which explores East Central European literatures from a comparative-intercultural perspective. Dr. Cornis-Pope is currently putting together an international collection of essays on Literature and the New Media, to be published in 2013 by John Benjamins Press. His awards include a Fulbright teaching and research grant (1983-85), an Andrew Mellon Faculty Fellowship at Harvard University (1987-88), a year-long Fellowship at the Netherlands Institute of Advanced Studies (1999-2000), and the CELJ Award for Significant Editorial Achievement (1997) for his work as editor of the journal The Comparatist.

NARRATIVE AUTHORITY AND POLITICAL REALITY IN LATE YUGOSLAV PROSE

T.Z. Longinovic
University of Wisconsin-Madison

Abstract: This project investigates the relationship between the realms of the literary and the political in the period preceding the violent events that would eventually lead to the dissolution of the common state of the South Slavs in the Western Balkans, once known as Yugoslavia. I will foreground the concept of authority in its narrative form as articulated within the institutional framework of literature, focusing on the 1970s, a period of Yugoslav literary history that ostensibly did not carry within itself the seeds of imminent doom, but was actually fraught with hope that a multiethnic state of this kind could represent a model for different forms of political organization worldwide. The literature of the 1970s called into question many of the established principles of communist literature developed during the decades following World War Two. During that period Yugoslavia embraced the materialist assumption that history is the arena of class struggle culminating in various kinds of wars and conflicts. The National Liberation war led by Tito and the Communist party who fought against the German Nazis and the Italian Fascists became the dominant thematic and ideological source of literary production in the early Yugoslav period, during the 1940's and 1950's. This required a form of narration based upon strategies of traditional realism, charged with the task of representing the officially sanctioned historical realities of WWII. Authors were called upon to accept this model during the early years of socialist Yugoslavia, yielding to a local form of formulaic narration parallel to the doctrine of socialist realism which had been already imported wholesale in other communist-dominated parts of Eastern Europe. The prose was to reflect the stability of facts and the objectivity of history by providing a literary formulation of the immediate past as it is was interpreted and represented by the official historiography. This was very much in tune with György Lukács's understanding of realism. Those who dared offer a different interpretation of history were censored by the political power during this early period, since socialist reality demanded that officially sanctioned historiography be treated as a stable and immutable source of narrative authority. Needless to say, this understanding of narrative interrogates neither the mechanism of its own construction, nor the way in which the meanings are articulated and related to historical representation, thus strengthening the traditional concept of mimetic literature and reaffirming its totalizing implications regarding the status of reality and truth. This is the literary and ideological tradition challenged by the writers of the 1970s. Published in Zagreb, Croatia, Danilo Kis's Grobnica za Borisa Davidovica (The Tomb for Boris Davidovich, 1976) became the best-known example of the problematization of the narrative approach. Kis himself included this work in the genre of the "political pamphlet," downplaying its literary character. Interestingly, Zagreb was also the location where the first prose works interrogating narrative authority were published in the late 1960s and early 1970s by a group of writers that Branimir Donat later labeled the hrvatski borhesovci (the Croatian Borgesians). Besides Danilo Kis, we will discuss Borisav Pekic who, in How to Quiet the Vampire (Kako upokojiti vampira; 1977) stretched the boundaries of traditional narrative focusing on the bloody practices of mutual extermination at the root of not European identity in general and the Yugoslav one in particular. Through these examples and others, I will focus more broadly on an entire generation of writers who came of age after WWII and began to develop a more complex poetics of prose, rejecting the overt historicism of the previous generation. Deconstructing the logic inherent in monolithic interpretations of the past and their violent effects on the present became the most important task of this new generation. The notion of accurate historical representation was suddenly substituted with the search for the principles by which the "historical" was constructed and articulated in narrative.

Biography: TOMISLAV LONGINOVIC is Professor of Slavic and Comparative Literature at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. His books include Borderline Culture (1993), Vampires Like Us (2005), co-edited and co-translated volume, with Daniel Weissbort: Red Knight: Serbian Women Songs (1992), edited volume: David Albahari, Words are Something Else (1996). He is also the author of several books of fiction, both in Serbian (Sama Amerika, 1995) and English (Moment of Silence, 1990). His new book Vampire Nation: Violence as Cultural Imaginary was published by Duke University Press in 2011. His research interests include South Slavic literatures and cultures; Serbo-Croatian language; literary theory; Central and East European literary history; comparative Slavic studies; translation studies; cultural studies.

S2: PRESIDENTIAL PANEL — COMPARATIVE LITERATURE/WORLD LITERATURE : RECONSIDERED / LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE/LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE : NOUVEAUX EXAMENS

COMPARING WORLD LITERATURES

T. D'haen
University of Leuven

Abstract: What is World Literature to one man, period, nation or continent, is a prime case of myopia, presentism, nationalism or region-centrism to another. The same thing pretty much goes for Comparative Literature. Recent re-orientations of both World Literature and Comparative Literature aim to remedy what are conceived as damaging constraints. However, a comparative analysis of some leading instances of such new constellations reveals that they risk re-instating or even strengthening other limitations inherent to the very practice of WL and CL. The solution, I argue, lies in a staggered approach, reading literary works and phenomena differently according to the different but related levels in which one situates them.

Biography: Theo D'haen, Professor, University of Leuven – KU Leuven

QUAND LA TRADUCTION DES NOMS OUVRE UNE VOIE HERMENEUTIQUE A LA RECHERCHE DES UNIVERSAUX

L. Block de Behar
Universidad de la Republica

Abstract: Dans l'écriture littéraire les noms deviennent une voie d'interprétation qui imagine l'universalité par le biais de la traduction.

Biography: Lisa Block de Behar, Professeur, Universidad de la Republica, Montevideo

TRANSLATION AND COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

M. Valdès
University of Toronto

Abstract: Literature in translation has been a valuable secondary source for comparative literary studies, but recently it has become a euphuism for cultural imperialism.

Biography: Mario Valdès, Professor Emeritus, University of Toronto

S2: BOOK – MATERIAL – TEXT

LITERARY TEXTS AS MATERIAL AND/OR VIRTUAL ENTITIES

M. Schmitz-Emans
Universitaet Bochum

Abstract: 'Movable' novels presented as collections of single pages in a box respectively of books without binding can be regarded as an extraordinary and challenging genre of fictional literature. Similar to them, literary texts that suggest non-linear readings resist to conventional reception and request specific strategies of approach, physically as well as with regard to interpretation. (Structurally both kinds of texts correspond with that kind of (mainly) musical artworks that Umberto Eco labelled as "opera aperta".) In a very evident way such phenomena expose their materiality and provoke questions concerning 'appropriate' and 'inappropriate', if not even 'possible' or 'impossible' reading processes. Two questions from the workshop description will serve as guidelines for my approach to such phenomena: (1) "How does the medial change affect the process of reading?" ... (2) "Will the book (...) more and more turn into an art object worth collecting?" - Following the first question, it might be discussed whether at least some novels in such an 'open' form – by their form referring to recent medial changes that question the traditional books' form and cultural functions – should rather be regarded as ironical reflections to these developments than as a result of mimicry and assimilation. In other words: Instead of celebrating the 'hypertext', they may by the way of negation demonstrate the advantages of conventional books. The second question opens up another perspective: Are there examples of 'movable novels' that are not in first respect meant to be read in a conventional sense but rather to be experienced as a piece of material and visual art? Or is there a 'virtual text' not simply hidden behind but in a way even opposed to the material text?

Biography: Monika Schmitz-Emans (*1956) studied in Bonn where she received her Doctorate degree in 1984 for her study on Jean Paul. In Bonn she also qualified for a professor title with the monograph "Schrift und Abwesenheit. Historische Paradigmen zu einer Poetik der Entzifferung und des Schreibens".

From 1992 to 1995, she was Professor for European Literature of the Modern Times at the Fernuniversität Hagen. She is a C-4 Professor for General and Comparative Literature at the Ruhr University in Bochum since 1995. From 1999 to 2005, she was the head of the DGAVL (German Association for General and Comparative Literature). Since 2007 she is the chairwoman of the Jean-Paul-Gesellschaft (Jean Paul Society). Since 2005 she is a member of the Academia Europaea.

Field of research and publications include: General literary theory and poetics, opus and poetics of individual authors, the relationships between literature and philosophy, literature and the arts, literature and music.

READING PLEASURE, ALTER IN PRINT: A "COMPARATIVE" EXPLORATION INTO BOOK HISTORY IN BANGLA

A. Dutta
Jadavpur University

Abstract: Roland Barthes' Le Plaisir du texte (1975) connected the term 'pleasure' to the idea of 'text'. This idea of pleasurable consumption corresponds to the extent of being texte scriptible, thereby involving this essentially scriptocentric archetype or the physical form of the 'book' with the conceptual scheme of reader's response, or the theory of reception as a whole. To conceive the printed Bangla text itself as an 'art-object' produced and consumed within various complex social and political binaries of colonial forces under the British Empire is the primary focus of this proposal. After being sustained by a well-received manuscript-culture for centuries, Bangla texts had an encounter with the new [art-object] mode of dissemination - the printed book with move-able characters. During the nascent decades - barring few previous attempts in Lisbon - London became the major hub of Bangla printing; even often bearing the claim "Pressed in the capital city, London" on the title-page. That eventually led to the printing of first-ever Bangla 'move-able' characters in the geographic location of Bengal, by two Englishmen namely Halhed and Wilkins. While working under multiple operational forms of artistic, cultural, political agency this new art-object did engage with certain aesthetic-choices and, in turn, paradigmatically shifted the age-old horizontal reading practice to a vertical one that eventually revolutionized and altered the entire schematic format of Bangla poetry. This change - although concerning more with the physical-art-form than anything abstract - problematized within and differed across various questions of artistic identity and reception vis-à-vis the rubrics of power equations in British 'Empire'. This paper would interrogate these problematics of this so called 'transnational' changes in Bangla Book-History with respect to present author's archival-findings on the Indo-British colonial connection and complexity within print-culture and reading-practice, that has still been present in terms of 'horizontal' 'religious' reading and 'vertical' 'secular' one. The very question of literary and cultural production in a multilingual geopolitical domain called India, and its constant negotiation with various other distant 'locations' - such as Portugal, United Kingdom etc - can be interrogated from within the disciplinary framework of 'comparativism' only, which has not yet been deployed within the discipline of Book history till now. This proposal would locate within aesthetic-paradigms the essential questions of reception and its role in physical-form of the art-object - essentially apropos the 'comparative' methodology of present discussant's own academic-discipline.

Biography: Arnab Dutta Postgraduate student in the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, India. Areas of interest: Comparative Literature Methodology, History of Printing and Publishing in Colonial British India, Orality. Languages known: Bangla, English, German, French, Sanskrit, Latin. Selected publications: 1. Firiwālār Dāk: A linguistic enquiry on the peddler's trade-cry in and around Kolkata", Coalescence, edited by Abhijit Debnath & Tariq Khan, Hyderabad: University of Hyderabad, 2012 2. "Pressed in the Capital City, London": An Enquiry from Bengali Book and Printing History" in The London Reader 1, edited by Phillip Drummond, London: The London Symposium, 2012 [Forthcoming in June 2012]

CONTINGENCY, THE NOVEL, THE PAGE

C.J. Lupton

University of Warwick

Abstract: This paper takes a claim made by Niklas Luhmann, about modernity's being made up of systems, and applies it to a description of the history of the relationship between the novel and the page. In Luhmann's account, modern social systems operate independently of each other, as discrete entities providing sets of rules and parameters. They can be compared, as Mark Seltzer has shown, to games, in which participants operate under the restraint of rules that they acknowledge, but nevertheless understood to be rules of a game, rather than of life in general. Luhmann has described this paradox in terms of the 'Kontingenzerfahrung' that characterizes modern experience: every system is palpable as being neither necessary nor impossible. It fuses the sense that boundaries are absolute with the sense that they could have been drawn otherwise. In my account, this sociological model is useful in thinking historically about what it has meant to have codex be the primary way of housing narrative. Historically, readers who have been exposed to the novel as a world that is given, even fixed and foreseeable, have also been presented with the book as something negotiable and open to interaction at the level of its materiality. The combination of codex and the novel captures this paradox in a very particular way: without making of the reading experience anything explicitly interactive, pages maintain fixity AND permeability in a single object. Authors have commented on this ever since the mid-eighteenth-century, and I will introduce very briefly examples from Jane Austen, Laurence Sterne, and Friedrich Nicolai to support this. But I will focus here on a contemporary novel, Tom McCarthy's Remainder, which theorizes quite explicitly the idea of the narrative being a system in which repetition is possible, but is also complicated by the contingency that arises with its pages being turned and put into operation. Finally, I want to ask, what does it mean that we are now departing from this way of reading narrative, on the page, as part of a discrete but manipulable set of elements? Do more dramatic forms of interaction promised by the digital novel increase our awareness of contingency, or does the very nature of 'Kontingenzerfahrung' belong to narrative as it is experienced in its older forms of mediation?

Biography: Associate Professor (Reader), University of Warwick, UK (from 2012) Has taught at the Universities of Michigan (2009-2012) and British Columbia (2004-2009), been a A.V. Humboldt Fellow in Hamburg and Bonn, and a visiting scholar at the University of Lund. Works on eighteenth-century literature in the context of media history, theories of the novel, it-narratives and material cultural studies. She is the author of Knowing Books: the Consciousness of Mediation in Eighteenth-Century Britain (Penn Press, 2012) and editor of volume 3 of "British It-Narratives, 1750-1830" (Pickering and Chatto, 2012). Her work has appeared in journals including New German Critique, Modern Language Quarterly, MLN, Eighteenth-Century Studies, ELH, NOVEL, and Criticism. Currently working on a project called "Reading Systems," which takes its cues from Habermas, Luhmann, and Latour in focusing in new ways on eighteenth-century reading practices and their aftermath.

S2: COMPARATISME ET INTERMÉDIALITÉ

PASSIONAL CHRISTI ET FAICTZ DE JESUCHRIST : DEUX VERSIONS D'UNE MÊME ICONOGRAPHIE DE LA PAROLE AU DÉBUT DU XVII^E SIÈCLE ? (TERRITOIRES GERMANIQUES ET SUISSE ROMANDE)

J. Colbus
Paris IV

Abstract: Publié en 1521 à Wittenberg, mais également à Erfurt ou encore à Strasbourg, le Passional Christi vnd Antichristi est un ouvrage de propagande religieuse particulièrement original. Ce pamphlet, illustré de 26 bois attribués à Lucas Cranach, dénonce avec virulence les turpitudes de l'Eglise romaine et du pape assimilé à l'Antéchrist. En visualisant, sur deux gravures opposées, la simplicité de la vie évangélique en regard de la corruption de l'Eglise actuelle, cet ouvrage donne à voir la « vérité réformée ». Le texte qui accompagne chacune de ces gravures, longtemps attribué à Luther lui-même, est constitué de multiples citations bibliques qui viennent encore renforcer le pouvoir des images : ainsi naît, de l'interaction de l'iconographie et de la Parole, un outil particulièrement efficace de diffusion de la foi nouvelle. Or, une dizaine d'années plus tard, à la fin de l'année 1533 sans doute, est publié à Neuchâtel, chez Pierre de Vingle, une traduction de cet opuscule visualisateur sous le titre Les Faictz de Jesuchrist et du Pape dont les gravures sur bois sont imitées de celles du Passional. L'objectif de ce travail est de comparer non seulement les gravures de ces deux éditions – ainsi que de quelques éditions postérieures publiées au milieu du XVI^e siècle – mais aussi d'analyser avec précision le texte qui les accompagne afin de déterminer la relation qui unit l'iconographie et son « illustration textuelle » et de mesurer ainsi l'importance d'un éventuel glissement par suite de ce transfert dans une aire linguistique et culturelle différente.

Biography: J.C. Colbus, MCF Paris-IV Sorbonne

Ancien élève de l'Ecole Normale Supérieure de Saint Cloud, agrégé d'allemand, ancien professeur de Chaire Supérieure en Lettres Supérieures et Première Supérieure.

Après un doctorat portant sur la conception de l'histoire chez Sebastian Franck (1499-1542), mon travail de recherches se concentre sur la période charnière de la fin du XVe et du début du XVIe siècle. Si les travaux sur l'historiographie à cette époque, en particulier chez les opposants à Martin Luther, constituent toujours mon domaine de prédilection, mes projets actuels s'intéressent surtout à l'iconographie protestante et catholique : la place de l'image et de l'imaginaire dans l'histoire des idées et l'influence de l'évolution de l'imaginaire individuel et collectif sont les pivots de mes axes de recherches actuels.

DU SCULPTEUR A L'AUTEUR. LES METAMORPHOSES DE PYGMALION

J. Genz
Universitaet Tuebingen

Abstract: Dans ma contribution je voudrais analyser la réflexion des écrivains du 18^{ième} siècle comme Condillac, Diderot, Rousseau, Winckelmann, Lessing etc. sur les arts plastiques. Sera discuter dans quelle mesure ces réflexions servent à long terme à développer des nouvelles techniques de représentation littéraire. En effet, on trouve dès 1800, dans les textes littéraires, une accumulation de techniques artistiques dérivant de ces réflexions intermédiaires. Je défendrai la thèse que la littérature utilise les prémisses sur les arts plastiques et sur la peinture - comme par exemple le moment fertile (fruchtbarer Augenblick) de Lessing - afin de créer un effet d'animation de la matière morte et de motiver psychologiquement la confusion entre la sphère de l'art et celle de la vie. De surcroît, je montrerai comment le sculpteur Pygmalion se transforme peu à peu en un auteur.

Biography: 2012 Professeur de littérature allemande à l'université de Cologne

2010-2012 Professeur de littérature allemande à l'université Duisburg-Essen

2009-2010 Maître de Conférence à l'université de Tuebingen (littérature comparée et littérature allemande)

Habilitation à Tübingen en 2009 (Titre: Diskurse der Wertung. Banalität, trivialität und Kitsch. München: Fink 2011)

FRAMING THE PORTRAIT. TOWARDS A METACRITICAL APPROACH?

C.M. Patey

Università degli Studi, Milano, Italie

Abstract: The portrait is notoriously a rewarding territory of intermedial research, poised as it is between words on the page and signs on the canvas. It is also worth reminding that the art of portraiture was at the core of an intense debate on aesthetic forms and aims, in Great Britain at least, staging Joshua Reynolds on one side and Thomas Gainsborough on the other; and to underline that the pictorial discussion quickly transited towards the world of the novel. Most ostensibly, therefore, the portrait is a staple feature of the novel, either as a formal pattern or sub-genre or as a narrative ingredient (suffice it to remember Balzac's Le chef d'oeuvre inconnu, Henry James's The Madonna of the Future or Portrait of a Lady, Woolf's To the Lighthouse and an indefinite number of portraits and self-portraits of artists). In this paper, I shall try to assess the formal and cultural quality of the verbal/visual interactions in portraits, articulating the investigation in two directions:

A. How does the portrait relate to the various forms of life-writing, if at all? How has the visual/verbal dialectics evolved over the years and how is it affected by digital culture?

B. Could the portrait be used as a tool of analysis in a comparative perspective? Portraiture has different social, political and cultural implications as we move from one country to the other: while for example it flourishes freely in Italy in the 16th century, it is heavily codified in England when not marginalized in the work of miniature. Portraits follow different routes according to their cultural context but share a similar grammar and vocabulary: could they offer a paradigm for intercultural and interlinguistic explorations?

Biography: Caroline Patey has read English and Comparative literature in Paris (Paris III), Dublin UCD and the Università degli Studi, Milan, where she is now professor of English literature. Her research has oscillated between the two poles of Renaissance and Modernist Studies and recently become increasingly comparative in scope and methods, focusing on visual and textual modernity in Joyce, Ford, Woolf, Conrad and Eliot; following the trail of anthropology and literature, and also concentrating on urban culture and literature, in the works of Henry James, Conrad, Ford, and Isherwood. Among her last investigations, the intersection between museums and literature; in this area of research she has recently co-edited The Exhibit in the Text. The Museological Practices of Literature (Oxford, Peter Lang, 2009) and edited the Italian translation of Sir John Soane's Crude Hints towards an History of my House (Per una storia della mia casa, Palermo, Sellerio, 2010). She has also lately promoted the research project on literature and nomadism and co-edited the proceedings of the related conference, Transits. The Nomadic Geographies of Anglo-American Modernism (Oxford, Peter Lang, 2010). In 2010, Caroline Patey has co-organized the conference Provence and the British Imagination and is currently working on the proceedings. In December 2011 she has hosted in Milan an international conference to investigate the inheritance of Virginia Woolf and James Joyce in the seventieth anniversary of their death: Parallaxes. Virginia Woolf meets James Joyce.

CONFRONTING OTHERNESS IN BRITISH ROMANTIC INTERMEDIAL DESCRIPTIONS

L.H. Eilittä

University of Helsinki

Abstract: ICLA CONFERENCE 2013: Literature and Intermediality

Comparatisme et Intermedialité

Leena Eilittä:

Confronting Otherness in British Romantic Intermedial Descriptions

In this paper I will examine certain British Romantic intermedial descriptions which depict works of visual arts originating in other cultures. My intention is to show that such descriptions may be fruitful for our concerns about intermedial relations from comparative point of view.

Some of the most interesting descriptions of visual arts in British Romantic narratives have their origins in Classical civilization. The most well-known of these works is probably John Keats's "Ode on a Grecian Urn" (1820). The poem consists of five strophes in which the poet speaks to the urn, which he, in fact, addresses at the beginning of the poem as a woman ("Thou still unravished bride of quietness-"). The poet encourages the urn to reveal her secrets and to help him to tell the stories that are embedded in the images on the urn. The first image depicting young lovers evokes the poet's emotions about Romantic love, which he would like to see continuing forever. But the following images, which apparently depicts people arriving for a sacrificial rite, puts an end to his Romantic fantasies. Instead of euphoria these images initiate a confused state in the poet and the urn relapses to a "-silent form-". At the end of the poem, the poet has to admit his inability to understand the paradoxes of ancient culture, which the mysterious images on the urn mediate, and he is forced to conclude his poem with the phrase: ""-Beauty is truth, truth beauty, - that is all/ Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know-"".

Somewhat similar difficulties in depicting a work of visual art emerge in Percy Bysshe Shelley's poem "On the Medusa of Leonardo da Vinci, in the Florentine Gallery" (1819). From the very beginning the poet describes the figure of Medusa via contrasts such as that possessing both "divine" beauty and horror. Despite "- the agonies of anguish and of death -" mediated by Medusa's figure the poet continues to approach her image due to the "grace" that at least initially weighs in his perceptions more than her "horror". Eventually the poet retreats from his intention to clarify the figure of Medusa who emerges as an "ever-shifting mirror/ of all the beauty and the terror there". The poet's attempt to grasp Medusa's contradictory qualities is repeatedly frustrated in the poem, which recalls the poet's fear and admiration of the ancient mythological figure whose being may not be described in terms of concepts or categories known to him. Similar situations come up in Lord Byron's Child Harold's Pilgrimage (1824), in Keats's "On Seeing the Elegiac Marbles" (1817) and in Shelley's "Ozymandias" (1818).

The works of visual arts from the ancient civilizations inspired the Romantic poets to expand their narrativity to a more universal mode by providing topics and ideas from cultures which were geographically/ temporally far away. However, in the Romantics' intermedial descriptions the difficulties to depict the work of visual art remain a constant theme. This shows that these puzzling works of art gave poets considerable problems in elaborating their aesthetic otherness to a Romantic framework.

Biography:

Eilitta, Leena (DPhil, Oxon) is adjunct professor of comparative literature at University of Helsinki. Her current research focuses upon intermedial relations, particularly in Romantic literature. She has co-edited the volume Intermedial Arts: Disrupting, Remembering and Transforming Media (2012). Her other publications include monographs Approaches to Personal Identity in Kafka's Short Fiction (1999), Ingeborg Bachmann's Utopia and Disillusionment (2008) and several articles and conference papers. She is a board member of FILLM (International Federation of Modern Languages and Literatures) and Romantik - Journal of Romantic Studies in Scandinavia.

Dr Leena Eilitta

Department of Comparative Literature, Box 3, SF-00014 University of Helsinki, Finland

@:leilitta@hotmail.com, @:leena.eilitta@helsinki.fi

S2: CONCEPTS AND COMPARATIVE CRITICISM

IS COMPARATIVE FILM STUDIES A FORM OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE?

J.K. Lund
University of Pittsburgh

Abstract: What is the paradigmatic relation between Comparative Literature—as discipline, field and mode of thought—and Film Studies? Is Film Studies always comparative? What are the possibilities and limits of thinking about a radically visual form (film) in terms that have evolved through the study of texts (literature), and most prominently the novel? On the one hand, the two fields have traditionally stood in a (sometimes uneasy) relation of methodological and institutional collaboration: both work through and between distinct national traditions, and in the US, many Film Studies programs are housed in Comparative Literature departments. On the other hand, from its inception the short history of the cinematic arts has been radically internationalist in its production and narrative style in ways that literature is not: the collaborative nature of film has made multi-nationalism the rule, and its form (sound, subtitles, visual cues, theatrical context) invites a multi-lingualism that is immediate relative to the more limited possibilities of prose fiction. In short, if modern literature has conformed to national contours with relative comfort until very recently, then film has been confined within those same parameters, if not always against its will, then at least in spite of its own logic of production (national film boards notwithstanding). In this presentation I address these questions, tensions, and their potential fallacies, in two steps. First, I briefly outline the relational history of the two fields, with special attention to the aporias that present themselves through methodological cross-application. Second, I explore these limits by attempting a comparative analysis of two films that explicitly deal with peripheries of capitalism in international contexts: Werner Herzog's Stroszek (1977; Germany, USA) and Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu's Babel (2002; Morocco, USA, Mexico, Japan).

Biography: Joshua Lund works at the University of Pittsburgh, where he teaches courses in literature and cultural politics as an Associate Professor of Spanish and Director of Graduate Studies in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures. At Pittsburgh he holds faculty affiliations in the Film Studies Program, the Graduate Program in Cultural Studies and the Center for Latin American Studies. Lund is the author of The Mestizo State (University of Minnesota Press, 2012), The Impure Imagination (University of Minnesota Press, 2006), and he is the co-editor of Gilberto Freyre e os estudos latino-americanos (IILI, 2006). His recent essays appear in Qui Parle, Revista Hispanica Moderna, and PMLA. His current project deals with comparative film traditions and their relations to capitalism.

CONCEPTS OF INTERMEDIALITY: TRANSMEDIATION, REMEDIATION AND METAPHORIZATION OF AESTHETIC CONCEPTS

C.R. Johansson
Stockholm University

Abstract: My paper is a metatheoretical study of intermedial concepts, that is, concepts used, in disciplines such as narratology, semiotics, aesthetics, intermedia studies and media theory, to describe or define how different media and art forms are related to each other. My main concern is the transmediation of concepts, that is, concepts that are presented as designating important, common qualities of, and/or distinguishing differences between, two or more media. These concepts usually come in two different varieties: one term concepts like text, or narrative, and compound concepts like mimesis and diegesis, or conceptual and perceptual media. One term concepts describe common qualities, the transmedial. Compound concepts, or intermedial conceptual oppositions, usually designate what is thought to be differences between arts and media. Transmediated concepts often also entail a remediation of concepts, that is, concepts are, so to speak, moved from one medium and applied to other media. This remediation of concepts usually brings about what I would like to call a metaphorization of concepts: a certain medium is discussed and analyzed in terms of another medium, which means there is mapping: features and properties associated with one medium, the source domain, is mapped on to another medium, the target domain. I will try to illustrate the logic of intermedial concepts by concentrating on the narratological concept of narrativity, and the related classic distinction between mimesis and diegesis, or showing and telling.

Biography: Christer Johansson, PhD, post-doctoral fellow/research assistant in Literature at Stockholm University. My dissertation deals with concepts of intermediality, such as sign, representation, iconicity and fictionality, and the interrelations of narrative prose fiction and narrative fiction film. I have also published articles on intermediality and narrative theory and is currently working on a new project about concepts of intermediality (medium, iconicity, narrativity/fictionality (showing and telling,) metaphor, symbol and expression, and so on).

CONCEPTS OF CRITICISM AND THE SCIENCES: IDEOLOGY, THE TWO CULTURES, SCIENCE WARS, AND INTER-/TRANSDISCIPLINARITY

M. Juvan

Research Centre of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts

Abstract: Explained as a cognitive and discursive mechanism that shapes communal mental representations of reality through sets of socially shared and verbally conveyed beliefs, concepts, schemes, and attitudes (cf. van Dijk), ideology gives perspective and helps organize knowledge. In this way it provides social groups with cognitive cohesion, empowering their signifying practices. Literary criticism, too, exists as a specific practice performed by and relevant only to certain agents, communities, and institutions. Scholarly discourse is thus in permanent need of wider social recognition; it has to legitimize itself not only self-referentially, but also by reacting to ideologemes circulating in the global public space. These factors affect the production and reproduction of concepts of criticism. In legitimizing a disciplinary discourse, whose social position is not certain in itself, science ideology operates through intertextual and metatextual recourse to discourses that figure in the global context as more credible or appealing to the society and the media. Consequently, literary criticism's affinities for linguistics, mathematics, cybernetics, physics, genetics, and statistics are evident in a range of interdiscursive transfers and travelling concepts (Bal). Aside from being merely a stylistic or marketing ornament, citations of scientific terms like "evolution" have been used in the literary criticism primarily as cognitive metaphors or analogies. As such, they enabled a new articulation or focalization of a particular knowledge domain. The paper will explore how the concepts of criticism, transplanted from the sciences, were involved in the late modern relations between literary studies and the sciences. On the one hand, these relations evolved from the clash of the "two cultures" to "science wars," on the other hand, however, they established several forms of inter- and transdisciplinarity (e.g., cognitivism), in which the notion of "interface" plays an important role.

Biography: Marko Juvan (1960, Ljubljana), senior researcher and head of the Institute of Slovenian Literature and Literary Studies (Research Centre of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts) and Professor of Slovenian Literature at the University of Ljubljana. His current areas of interest include literary discourse, intertextuality, Slovenian literature and world literary system, cultural nationalism in romanticism, and spatial literary studies. He is in editorial boards of Primerjalna književnost, CLCWeb, Context and Slavica litteraria and co-edits the series "Studia litteraria." 2002–06 he was president of the Slovenian Comparative Literature Association, 2007–11 member of the Executive Committee of the REELC/ENCLS, since 2008 he is in the ICLA Committee on Literary Theory. His recent publications include three books and one edited volume: Literary Studies in Reconstruction: An Introduction to Literature (Frankfurt/M. etc.: Peter Lang, 2011), History and Poetics of Intertextuality (West Lafayette, IN: Purdue University Press, 2008), Literarna veda v rekonstrukciji (Ljubljana: LUD Literatura, 2006), Primerjalna književnost v dvajsetem stoletju in Anton Ocvirk (Comparative Literature in the 20th Century and Anton Ocvirk), ed. by Marko Juvan and Darko Dolinar (Ljubljana: Založba ZRC, 2008).

S2: THE UPS AND DOWNS THAT WESTERN LITERARY CONCEPTS HAVE EXPERIENCED ON THEIR WAY TO THE EAST

LIANG QICHAO AND THE INAUGURATION OF SHORT-STORY IN LATE QING CHINA

X. Xia
Peking University

Abstract: Liang Qichao and the Inauguration of Short-story in Late Qing China XIA Xiaohong, Peking University It is not until Late Qing period did the modern narrative genre "short-story", which never appeared in traditional Chinese literary categories, actually come into existence as a concept in parallel with novel or chapter driven fiction (Zhanghui Ti). In the recent few years, several researchers such as Xu Dancheng from the University of Nagoya and Zhang Lihua from Peking University have devoted their in-depth discussion on the discovery and development of Chinese short-story from the perspective of modern fiction genre's consciousness. The purpose here is to explore a little further into the role of Liang Qichao (1873-1929) in this process, since Liang himself was the advocate of Fiction Revolution (Xiaoshuojie Geming) in Late Qing China. After the failure of 1898 Restoration, Liang Qichao had spent thirteen years in exile in Japan, which brought his direct contact and earnest sensation into the Meiji period culture. Such a special intercultural experience had left a deep mark on Liang's thinking and works during his stay in Japan, and even influenced the formation of short-story concept in Late Qing China. Liang's concern on short-story was actually related to his identity as a periodical (or newspaper) editor. Either from the magazines Xinmin Congbao and Xin Xiaoshuo which Liang managed by himself, or from the newspaper Shibao founded with his assistance, we can measure both the change of Liang's opinion about the short-story concept and his achievement of short-story writing or translation, in which the impact of Meiji Japanese literature can be clearly seen. On this basis, in 1906 there was a sudden boom of Chinese short-story, which made short-story an important rookie in Late Qing fiction family.

Biography: Xia Xiaohong is Professor in the Department of Chinese Language and Literature of Peking University. She was born in Beijing in 1953. Focused on Liang Qichao study and Late Qing period culture, she has published extensively on early modern topics, covering not only literary history but also women studies and comparative literature. Her main works include Enlightenment or Eternity: Liang Qichao's Literary Way (1991), Late Qing Social and Culture (2001) and Late Qing Women and Modern China (2004).

TRANSLATING THE NOVEL WITHIN THE TRADITION OF YANYI IN LATE QING AND EARLY REPUBLICAN CHINA

L. Zhang
Peking University

Abstract: This thesis intends to discuss the normative power of yanyi ("explanations of words or stories"), a literary tradition primarily represented by the genre Chinese Long-length Vernacular Fiction (Zhanghui Xiaoshuo) upon the process of translating the novel, originally a western genre, into Chinese during late Qing and early Republican period.

Although a large amount of foreign novels had been translated into Chinese in the last decades of the Qing dynasty, the very concept of novel as a modern genre was not transmitted to China immediately. Most of the translated works in target text deviated from their original forms and styles, which had been always attributed to the mainstream of "free translation" in late Qing by former scholars. I will argue in this thesis that quite a lot of deviations or so-called "mistranslations", however, was resulted from the translator's conscious modifications in order to line up with the literary conventions of "target" genre, that is the Chinese Long-length Vernacular Fiction, a genre originated from the oral explanations of Buddhist scriptures and well-known for its high uniformity of narrative styles.

Furthermore, I will argue that, the inner character of this genre, i.e. the tradition of yanyi enabled the original words or stories to be constantly re-narrated in different manners, had also shaped the understanding of "novel translations" for many translators during that period. In their opinion, to translate a foreign novel into Chinese is like an omniscient narrator re-telling a foreign story to his Chinese audience in a different way. In this sense, the concept of "translation" was different from its western thinking that "faithfulness" was the dominant criterion, but similar to "anuvad", a Sanskrit word for translation, which etymologically and primarily means "saying after or again, repeating by way of explanation, explanatory reference to anything already said" (Monier-Williams, Sir Monier, A Sanskrit-English Dictionary Etymologically and Philologically Arranged, Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass, 1997, p.38).

As Andre Lefevere has pointed out in his essay "Chinese and Western Thinking on Translation"(Bassnett, S. and Lefevre, A. eds., Constructing Cultures: Essays on Literary Translation, Shanghai: Shanghai Foreign Language Education Press, 2001, pp.12-24.) the Chinese understanding on translation tends to be oral in nature and be close to the interpreting situation, I will further argue in the thesis that this tradition in late Qing and early Republic were not represented by Yan Fu and Lin Shu's classical Chinese translations, but by Liang Qichao and other enlightenment intellectuals who were engaged in the popular education through novel translations with the media of vernacular Chinese.

The thesis will explore these questions by concentrating on three translators, Liang Qichao(1873-1929), Wu Jianren(1867-1910) and Sun Yuxiu (1871-1922).

Biography: Dr. Zhang Lihua joined Peking University in Aug. 2011. She is the assistant professor of Dept. of Chinese Language and Literature. She got her B.A. (2001), M.A. (2004) and Ph.D. (2009) degree at the Dept. of Chinese Language and Literature, Peking University. From Dec. 2005 to Aug. 2007, Zhang Lihua was a junior visiting scholar at the Institute of Chinese Studies, Heidelberg University, Germany awarded by Daimler and Benz Foundation. From Aug. 2009 to Jul. 2011, Dr. Zhang was the research fellow at the Centre of Liberal Art and Social Sciences, HASS, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore.

Her research interests mainly focus on the Literature, Culture and Society in Late Qing and Republican China. She has published several journal papers, including " 'Times' and the Comments Short Story in Late Qing Dynasty"(Literary Review, 2009'1), "Genre Transformation during the Translation of Foreign Fictions in Late Qing China"(Modern Chinese Literature Studies,2009'2), "From 'Story' to 'Fiction': Lu Xun's The Nostalgia (1912) as a Fable of Genre Formation"(Lu Xun Research Monthly,2010'9), "The Silent 'Spoken Language': a Study of Zhou Zuoren's Ideal of Vernacular Writings (Baihua Wen) by focusing on his Gushi Jinyi (1917)"(Modern Chinese Literature Studies, 2011'1) and so on. She is the author of The Rise of "Short Story" in Modern China: On Perspective of Genre Formation (Beijing: Peking University Press, 2011).

JOSE RIZAL'S NOLI ME TANGERE: A FILIPINO ANTI-IMPERIALIST SERIAL NOVEL

J.A. Walker
Rutgers University

Abstract: The novel is a traveling genre, a literary form originating in Europe in the seventeenth century that was carried on the currents of imperialism and colonialism, from the mid-nineteenth century onward, to the countries of Asia, Africa, and the Middle East. The novel, of all the genres that traveled from Western to Eastern countries, was the most important one, providing countries exposed to Western imperialism and colonialism a vehicle for writing back to Europe and a forum for exploring crucial issues of individualism, nationalism, and political and social modernity. Eastern countries displayed a wide variety of novel forms in the first period of literary contact with the West, depending on which novels, of which country and which writer, the Eastern author came into contact with, the traditional concepts of fiction that shaped the encounter with Western novels, and the particular issues that preoccupied the writer. I argue in what follows that the Filipino writer Jose Rizal's novel Noli Me Tangere (1887) executed a creative misreading of the serial novel of Eugene Sue (Les Mysteres de Paris, 1842-43) and other such writers, employing the techniques of melodrama with the goal of bringing to the consciousness of his countrymen, and Europeans, the issue of the crushing domination of Spanish rule. Eastern novelists emulating the Western novel typically studied and assimilated the techniques of novels written twenty to forty years earlier, novels that they had been exposed to during their formative years. Thus, Rizal, while he was studying medicine in Europe in the 1880s, read novels of a kind perfected by Dumas and Sue that, according to Franco Moretti, were the staple of European readers throughout the second half of the nineteenth century: the serial novel, or roman-feuilleton (The Atlas of the European Novel, 176-77). This kind of novel typically evoked a character's suffering but delayed again and again the revelation of the hidden reasons behind that suffering, and the links between the stories of the numerous characters that made up the novelistic world. It was a novel form characterized by what Peter Brooks has called the "melodramatic imagination": a rhetoric that portrays the "polarization of good and evil" (The Melodramatic Imagination, 28). Rizal structures his novel around the polarized characters of the idealistic nationalist Ibarra and the imperialist priest Padre Damaso, dwelling along the way on a number of other characters suffering under the type of colonialism that was particular to the Philippines: the domination of the Spanish Catholic Church. Furthermore, Priya Joshi, in her study In Another Country: Colonialism, Culture, and the English Novel in India (2002), has argued that nineteenth-century Indian readers who knew English enthusiastically read novels of the English-language equivalents of Sue and Dumas, in particular, the melodramatic serial novelist G. W. M. Reynolds, which voiced the sufferings of the oppressed classes of London, as novels vicariously giving voice to their own feelings of oppression under British colonial rule. Thus, Jose Rizal, in his Noli Me Tangere (and in its continuation, El Filibusterismo, 1891), has created a novel form that emulates the European serial novel in its multi-charactered structure and melodramatic rhetoric, but, writing his novel in a period when colonialism was at its height, utilizes this form for quite a different purpose than Sue and Reynolds: to express the modern aspirations of his countrymen for freedom from the oppression of Spanish colonial rule.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Janet A. Walker teaches courses on world literature, the novel in its European and non-Western manifestations, postcolonial literatures and theories, and modern Japanese literature at Rutgers University. She is the author of The Japanese Novel of the Meiji Period and the Ideal of Individualism (1979) and co-editor of The Woman's Hand: Gender and Theory in Japanese Women's Writing (1996). In addition, she has published essays on, among other topics, modern Japanese fiction writers, the classical Japanese female writer Izumi Shikibu, van Gogh and his image of Japan, and autobiography in Western and Japanese literature.

S2: PLURILINGUISME LITTÉRAIRE 1900

COMMENT INTERPRETER LA PRESENCE DE CITATIONS EN LANGUE ETRANGERE DANS LES ŒUVRES DE VALERY LARBAUD ET ROMAIN ROLLAND ?

S. Katrib

Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: Romain Rolland (1866-1944) et Valery Larbaud (1881-1957) sont des écrivains français qui ont intégré des citations en langue étrangère dans leurs œuvres. Tous deux étaient polyglottes, ont beaucoup voyagé et ont voué un intérêt profond à la littérature étrangère. Rolland a écrit une biographie de Tolstoï en 1911, Larbaud a traduit en français les œuvres de Samuel Butler, a supervisé la traduction d'Ulysse de Joyce et s'est intéressé au travail de transition que constitue « l'art de la traduction » dans son ouvrage Sous l'invocation de Saint Jérôme, en 1944. Tous comme les personnages de voyageurs cosmopolites de leurs romans, ils circulent entre les œuvres de différents pays et de différentes époques, s'y confrontent et envisagent la littérature comme un lieu de dialogue et d'échange. Cependant, cette conception a une résonance politique, puisqu'elle correspond à une certaine idée de l'Europe au début du 20^e siècle. Dans quelle mesure les œuvres littéraires de Romain Rolland et de Valery Larbaud imaginent-elles un espace culturel européen qui estompe les frontières et dans quelle mesure ces choix vont-ils de pair non seulement avec des idées politiques sur l'Europe mais aussi avec une certaine conception de la littérature comme instrument de pacification entre les peuples ? La présence de citations en langues étrangères peut certes être interprétée dans un sens politique, mais on peut aussi l'étudier d'un point de vue poétique : il s'agit pour les deux auteurs d'inscrire dans la langue française une forme d'étrangeté et de musicalité. Enfin, cette présence correspond également à une contestation de l'idée de langue maternelle, la véritable langue natale pouvant être « intérieure » dans certains écrits de Larbaud (A.O. Barnabooth, son journal intime), ou « musicale » dans Jean-Christophe de Romain Rolland.

Biography: Sarah Katrib est agrégée de lettres modernes et doctorante en littérature comparée à l'université de Strasbourg.

PAN-AMÉRICANISME ET PLURILINGUISME DANS L'OPÉRA AU BRÉSIL AUTOUR DE 1900.

B. D'Angelo

PUCRS

Abstract: Cette communication s'occupe des rapports intersémiotiques de l'Opéra au Brésil autour de 1900, avec un objectif spécifique : le plurilinguisme et le pluriculturalisme italo-brésilien autour de l'œuvre littéraire et musicale "O Guarani", respectivement de José de Alencar et Carlos Gomes, compris les traducteurs pour l'italien, qui ont fait le libretto pour Carlos Gomes, Antonio Enrico Scalvini et Carlo d'Ormeville. L'opéra remporta un énorme succès, surtout pour l'exotisme du sujet amérindien et pour la musique riche en "barbarismes" inspirés aux instruments indiens. Peut-être le trilinguisme et triculturalisme de l'opéra que Carlos Gomes présenta le 19 mars 1870 au Teatro alla Scala de Milan, avec son irradiation jusqu'à nos jours – en effet, l'ouverture de l'opéra ouvre encore aujourd'hui les émissions de la Radio "Voz do Brasil" –, configure un projet de pan-américanisme qui occupait les intérêts des intellectuels latino-américains.

Biography: Biagio D'Angelo est actuellement Professeur de Théorie de la Littérature et Littérature Comparée à l'Université Catholique de Rio Grande do Sul (PUC-RS, Brésil) De 2010 à 2012 il a été Professeur agrégé (Egyetemi Docens) au Département d'Études hispaniques, Institut d'Études romanes, Université Péter Pázmány, Pilicsaba, Budapest, Hongrie. De 2007 à 2009 il a été Professeur agrégé, Département de Littérature et critique littéraire, Faculté des Arts et Lettres, Université catholique de São Paulo (PUC, SP), Brésil. De 2001-2007 il a été Professeur titulaire, Faculté des Sciences de l'éducation, Université catholique "Sedes Sapientiae", Lima, Pérou. Diplômé en langues étrangères et la littérature de l'Université de Venise Ca' Foscari (1988) avec une maîtrise en langues et littératures étrangères de la même université (1992). Il obtint son doctorat en littérature de l'Université Russe d'Études Humanistiques (RGGU, 1998). Il a été élève du professeur Eleazar Meletinski. Il a obtenu, aussi, un Post-Doc par la Katholieke Universiteit Leuven, où il a développé une recherche sur le néo-baroque dans la littérature latino-américaine et où il a travaillé avec le Dr Nadia Lie, Directeur du Département des études espagnoles et latino-américaines. Membre fondateur de l'Association péruvienne de littérature comparée et professeur de littérature latino-américaine et de littérature comparée à l'Université catholique "Sedes Sapientiae". En 2008, il a été nommé président de l'Association brésilienne d'études américaines (ABEA). Il est membre de Abralic et de l'AILC (Association internationale de littérature comparée). Président du Comité international d'études latino-américaines (2007-2010), il travaille actuellement dans le domaine de la théorie littéraire et des questions de relations culturelles post-coloniales en Amérique latine. Ses intérêts concernent principalement le voyage en littérature, la mythologie, la théorie littéraire, la littérature comparée et la littérature par rapport aux médias de communication. Il a été professeur invité dans diverses universités à l'étranger (Université Nacional del Littoral, Santa Fe, Argentina, Universidade Federal de Juiz de Fora, Brésil, Université de Porto). Dans le cadre de ses publications, Oriundo das palavras. Machado de Assis, Guimarães Rosa e a meta da literatura. Porto Alegre: Editora UFRGS, pp. 174 (2011); Comparaciones en vertical. Conflictos mitológicos en las literaturas de las Américas, publié en co-autorité avec Paola Mildonian. Venezia : Supernova, 234 p. (2009); Las babas del sabio. Ensayos sobre la dislocación de la escritura. Lima: Fondo Editorial UCSS, p.188 (2008), Borges en el centro del universo (Lima, 2005), Nuevas cartografías literarias en América Latina. Entre la voz y la letra (Lima, 2007), Letras de Derrida (2007), et Un río de palabras. Ensayos sobre literatura y cultura de la Amazonia, organisée avec Maria Antonieta Pereira (Lima-Belo Horizonte, 2007).

CASE STUDIES OF LITERARY MULTILINGUALISM: EXPRESSING ALTERITY IN A SELF-REFERENTIAL RECOURSE TO THE MOTIF OF THE DOUBLE

G. Bär
Universidade Aberta

Abstract: Case Studies of Literary Multilingualism: Expressing Alterity in a Self-Referential Recourse to the Motif of the Double

Gerald Bär, Universidade Aberta / CECC (Univ. Católica) / Portugal

Many authors, such as Conrad, Kafka, Rilke, Andreas-Salomé and Pessoa, grew up bi- or multilingual, or lived in linguistically and culturally hybrid regions. Several of these writers have fictionalized their cultural encounters not only in their 'mother-tongue', but in the language of their region's socially dominant population or in their host country's language. Some have successfully translated their own works, gaining thus a valuable awareness of themselves and of the host culture.

My contribution focuses on the common tendency of these authors of developing new concepts of the self, by exploring the frontiers of alterity. In a social context, which is often experienced as uncomfortable, or even threatening, the strangeness of their literary characters, frequently expresses itself in a double- or hetero-social consciousness, articulated in the same narrative. In this creative process, fantasies of fragmentation take the shape of the 'other', double selves and heteronyms. What may have started as a writing strategy had repercussions in other arts which resulted in cultural transformations. Not only in literature, theatre and painting, but also in the cinema and in internet the motif of the double has recently had an enormous impact (cf.: Cameron's blockbuster Avatar (2009) or 'Second Life' in internet).

The high degree of public interest and acceptance that narratives from authors, such as Conrad, Kafka, Rilke and Pessoa achieved in their host countries is equalled by comparable contemporary writers with migrational background whose works have a considerable impact on cultural diversity. Impressive numbers of their sold copies corroborate these stories of success and may be indicators of how alterity derived from literary multilingualism has become increasingly attractive. However, many aspects of the dynamics between cultural integration and cultural difference mirrored in these works remain to be analysed.

Biography: Gerald Bär

Assistant Professor at Universidade Aberta (Open University of Portugal); Senior Researcher at the Research Center for Communication and Culture, CECC (Catholic Univ. of Portugal)

M.A. at the Albert-Ludwigs-Universität of Freiburg / Germany (1987).

1991-1996 Lecturer at the Universidade da Madeira / Portugal in the area of German Studies.

Since 1996 working at the Universidade Aberta / Portugal, where he obtained his PhD with the thesis: Das Motiv des Doppelgängers als Spaltungspantasia in der Literatur und im deutschen Stummfilm (2003). Currently lecturing German and comparative literature.

2006-2009 Vice-Coordinator of the course Languages, Literatures and Cultures (Foreign Languages).

At present Vice-Coordinator of the courses Applied Languages and European Studies.

Member of Associação Portuguesa de Estudos Germanísticos (APEG) and Internationale Vereinigung für Germanistik (IVG).

Member of the international project CEFES - Creating a European Forum in European Studies (1999-2000).

Co-author (in collaboration with the Goethe-Institute) of a multi-media course which was shown on Portuguese State TV (RTP 2): Einblicke. Ein Multimedia - Deutschkurs im Fernstudium. Língua Alemã II (manual, 10 videos, 1 CD), Lisboa: Universidade Aberta 2003.

(Co-)Organization of the international conferences: Ossian and the 'national epics' in the age of globalization (2010 / Univ. Católica Portuguesa), Jornada sobre Henry Fielding (Univ. Aberta, 2007) and Jornada sobre Bertolt Brecht (Univ. Aberta, 2006).

Author of the documentary film about the theme of early flight in Literature: Bartolomeu de Gusmão e a Arte de Voar (Universidade Aberta, 2009), on Portuguese TV (RTP2). Selected Publications (2011) "Fantasies of Fragmentation in Conrad, Kafka and Pessoa: literary strategies to express strangeness in a hetero-social context", Amaltea. Revista de mitocrítica. vol. 3 (2011, 'The Double Self'), Facultad de Filología. Edificio D. Despacho 02.363. Universidad Complutense 28040 Madrid (España): <http://www.ucm.es/info/amaltea/revista/num3/bar.pdf>.

(2010) Ausprägungen des "chronischen Dualismus": Von Ginkgoblättern und Doppelzwillingen zum Clone und Avatar, in: Hanenberg, P. / Capelo Gil, I. / Viana Guarda, F. / Clara, F. (eds.), Kulturbau. Aufräumen, Ausräumen, Einräumen. (series passagem, Vol. 4), Frankfurt / M., Berlin, Bern, Bruxelles, New York, Oxford, Wien: Peter Lang, pp. 257-274.

(2010) Poesias de Ossian: Antologia das traduções em português, Lisboa: Universidade Católica Editora.

(2008) "(In)adequate Forms of revealing the Secrets of a Soul on Celluloid", in: Torres, Mário Jorge (ed.), ACT 17 – Não vi o livro, mas li o filme (Série: Alteridades, Cruzamentos, Transferências) / Centro de Estudos Comparatistas, Ribeirão: Ed. Humus, Lda., pp. 167-194.

(2006) "Perceptions of the Self as the Other: Double-Visions in Literature and Film", in: Schönfeld, Christiane with Rasche, Hermann, (eds.), Processes of Transposition: German Literature and Film, Amsterdam, New Jersey: Rodopi, pp. 89-117.

(2005) Das Motiv des Doppelgängers als Spaltungsphantasie in der Literatur und im deutschen Stummfilm, Amsterdam, New York, NY: Rodopi (Reihe: Internationale Forschungen zur Allgemeinen Literaturwissenschaft 84).

PLURILINGUISME ET IDENTITE LITTERAIRES : LE CAS DE FERNANDO PESSOA

I. Simões Marques
University of Coimbra

Abstract: Au début du XXe siècle, l'écrivain portugais qui est sans doute le plus connu et le plus emblématique en ce qui concerne le plurilinguisme littéraire est certainement Fernando Pessoa. Plusieurs études sur l'usage de ses langues lui sont consacrées. Son anglais est influencé par le latin, car il apprend ces deux langues avec le même maître et en même temps. Certains de ses hétéronymes sont étrangers, notamment Alexander Search, qui est anglais, et Jean Seul de Meluret, qui est français. Fernando Pessoa revient à l'âge de 17 ans au Portugal et tous ses poèmes sont écrits en anglais. Il décide de les envoyer à une maison d'édition anglaise qui les refuse. En 1917 il envoie Mad Fiddler à Londres et le manuscrit est également refusé. Il publie alors à son compte au Portugal ses poèmes anglais 35 sonnets et Antinoüs en 1918 et publie Epithaths et Epithalamium en 1921. Ces poèmes seront réunis des années plus tard par Jorge de Sena (1974) sous le titre de Poemas ingleses. Anne Terlinden (1990) parle de l'idéalisme mystique de Mad Fiddler. Pour Eduardo Lourenço (1990) les poèmes en anglais font référence à la musique, à la puissance évocatrice de l'ailleurs, à une obsession du symbolisme et des sons. En effet, l'anglais est pour Fernando Pessoa un moyen d'expression plus intellectuel et plus sophistiqué qui est réservé à l'écriture avec ce que cela comporte d'opacité. Fernando Pessoa considère l'anglais comme une langue plus scientifique et plus intuitive que les autres, d'ailleurs sa production adolescente est très abondante dans cette langue. De plus, la langue anglaise de l'auteur est une langue « impossible » qui contient des lusitanismes et qui est contaminée par le portugais et réciproquement, son anglais est ainsi peu idiomatique, érudit, émaillé de termes rares ou archaïques. L'écrivain s'autorise des poèmes érotiques en anglais dans Epithalamium et Antinoüs alors que ses poèmes portugais - même avec les hétéronymes - sont très chastes. Ceci est possible car c'est justement la langue anglaise qui permet à Fernando Pessoa d'exprimer son intimité : L'intimité dévoilée n'est seulement possible que parce que la langue anglaise, par son « étrangeté », protège la conscience de Pessoa du regard d'autrui, aussi mortel pour son extraordinaire pudeur que la corne du taureau. Caparaçonné dans cette langue qui n'est pas charnellement la sienne, et encore moins celle de son entourage, il aborde les domaines interdits, il se risque à tout dire, à avouer l'inavouable; et il le fait sous son vrai nom, à visage découvert, sans déléguer à un autre moi la responsabilité de l'aveu. (...) Tout se passe comme si dans la « coterie » que forment toutes les figures de Pessoa, le poète de langue anglaise était lui aussi un hétéronyme, aussi différent du poète « orthonyme » (Pessoa lui-même, en langue portugaise) que de Caeiro, de Reis ou de Campos. Il est celui dont le masque n'est pas une personnalité, mais la langue elle-même. (Bréchon, 1992 : 12-13) Nous verrons dans notre communication que Fernando Pessoa a écrit et publié en anglais, en français et a eu recours au latin à travers son hétéronyme Ricardo Reis. Nous verrons quelle place et quel rôle ont occupé les différentes langues de l'auteur dans son parcours littéraire.

Biography: BRÉCHON, Robert, « L'échec et la gloire » in PESSOA, Fernando, Le violon enchanté : écrits anglais (vers et prose), traduction par Olivier Amiel, Dominique Goy-Blanquet et Patrick Quillier, Paris, Christian Bourgois, 1992, p.7-31. FREIRE, Luisa, Fernando Pessoa entre vozes, entre linguas, Lisboa, Assirio & Alvim, 2004. LOPES, Teresa Rita, Pessoa por conhecer, Lisboa, Editorial Estampa, 1990. LOURENÇO, Eduardo, Pessoa: L'étranger absolu, Paris, Éditions Métailié, 1991, PATRACIO, Rita, PIZARRO, Jerónimo, Obras de Jean de Seul de Méluret. Edição crítica de Fernando Pessoa, Lisboa, INCM, vol. VIII, 2006. PESSOA, Fernando, Poemas ingleses, traduções, variantes e notas de Jorge de Sena, traduções também de Adolfo Casais Monteiro e José Blanc de Portugal, Lisboa, Atica, 1974. TERLINDEN, Anne, Fernando Pessoa: the bilingual portuguese poet: a critical study of "The mad fiddler", Bruxelles, Publication des Facultés Universitaires St Louis, 1990.

S2 MALENTENDUS FRANCO-ALLEMANDS, AUTOUR DU ROMANTISME

NERVAL ET JEAN PAUL : QUEL MALENTENDU?

A. Moïoli
Paris Ouest

Abstract: « La parole est moitié à celui qui parle, moitié à celui qui écoute », écrit Montaigne dans les Essais (livre III, chapitre XIII). Nous proposons une étude de cas qui montrera comment la réception d'un auteur étranger par un écrivain est traversée de biais multiples. Elle donnera lieu à une réflexion sur le commentaire et l'écoute comparatistes. On connaît la fascination de Gérard de Nerval pour l'Allemagne dont les légendes et les poètes hantent les œuvres. Jean Paul est l'un des écrivains allemands auquel Nerval fait directement référence dans ses textes. Un poème imité de Jean Paul, intitulé « Le Christ aux oliviers », est inséré dans les Petits Châteaux de Bohême (1853) puis dans Les Chimères (1854). Le poème avait été précédemment publié dans L'Artiste avec le sous-titre « Imitation de Jean Paul ». Le mot « Imitation » disparaît dans les œuvres poétiques. Seul reste le nom « Jean Paul » (qui est un pseudonyme) comme signe ultime de la réécriture, du « vol des mots » de l'étranger, selon la belle expression de Michel Schneider dans Voleurs de mots (1985). Lorsqu'il rédige Aurélie, Nerval confie à Liszt qu'il écrit « je ne sais quel roman-vision à la Jean Paul » qui « sera plus clair pour les Allemands que pour les Français... ». Que signifie ce nom propre, Jean Paul, lorsque l'on sait que Nerval n'a pas lu Jean Paul dans le texte ? L'inscription du nom propre est source et signe d'un malentendu. Ce malentendu est :

1) d'ordre historique : il est lié à la réception des œuvres étrangères à l'époque romantique, à la circulation et à l'organisation du champ littéraire franco-allemand. Nerval lit et réécrit Jean Paul à travers les traductions tronquées de Mme de Staël dans De l'Allemagne (II, 28). Il ne pourrait pas lire les originaux en raison de sa faible connaissance de l'allemand et de la difficulté de la langue jean-paulienne ; 2) d'ordre théorique. Le malentendu est constitutif de la lecture des autres et de leur réécriture - qu'elle se nomme imitation, traduction, citation, etc. Il a à voir avec la manière dont un écrivain s'approprie les mots des autres. Cette lecture-réécriture de l'étranger est une interprétation qui contient le risque du biais et du contre-sens. En témoigne l'antonomase employée par Nerval qui écrit « à la Jean Paul ». Le nom propre est déjà une interprétation, une idée, dissemblable à son référent. En citant Jean Paul, Nerval hérite d'une certaine image de l'auteur que les Français se font à l'époque : celle du « visionnaire », que Claude Pichois a mise en évidence dans L'image de Jean Paul Richter dans les lettres françaises (1963). La présence de Jean Paul dans la production nervalienne soulève bien des questions sur le sens du mot « malentendu » : il peut signifier non-entendu, entendu de biais ou en partie, interprétation. Il ne concerne pas seulement la lecture que Nerval fait de Jean Paul. En tant qu'il est interprétation, le malentendu concerne aussi le commentaire critique. Philippe Forest a montré la « beauté du contre-sens » à propos de sa lecture de la littérature japonaise (2005) – faisant du malentendu non pas seulement la condition a priori de la lecture, mais aussi un mode possible de critique revendiquant l'écart de la subjectivité lisante : le malentendu devient alors une opération construite et assumée par le commentateur. L'étude de cas nous permet ainsi d'interroger la valeur productive et critique d'une démarche comparatiste pensée comme malentendu. Au-delà de l'enquête historique et de l'étude de réception, quel est le travail du comparatiste ? Comment et pourquoi lire ensemble Nerval et Jean Paul ? Il nous semble important de souligner que le malentendu n'est pas ici le contraire d'un bien entendu ou d'une bonne lecture. La recherche comparatiste ne consiste ni à établir "la" vérité ni à essentialiser les œuvres. Sa chance est bien de les mettre en mouvement – démarche heuristique qui parie sur le rapprochement des œuvres dans l'espoir de produire de nouvelles ententes. La comparaison est un geste d'écart par rapport au consensus critique sur une œuvre mais aussi par rapport à l'œuvre elle-même dans un refus d'établir « une » vérité définitive de l'œuvre. Le malentendu de notre méthode consistera à faire entendre une autre voix du rêve romantique, autre que celle qu'Albert Béguin a entendue lorsqu'il rapprochait Nerval et Jean Paul dans L'âme romantique et le rêve (1939) : le rêve chez ces deux auteurs (utopie ou idylle) est une manière de réinscrire le sujet dans une communauté politique et sociale.

Biography: Aurélie Moïoli est doctorante contractuelle avec mission d'enseignement à l'université Paris Ouest. Ancienne élève de l'École Normale Supérieure (Lyon), agrégée de Lettres modernes, elle prépare une thèse de littérature comparée depuis 2010 sous la direction du Professeur Karen Haddad sur "Le récit de soi chez Ugo Foscolo, Gérard de Nerval, Jean Paul et Stendhal". Elle est membre du laboratoire junior pluridisciplinaire "Imag'his" de l'ENS de Lyon. Un de ses articles est en cours de publication dans la revue Conserveries mémorielles : "Le récit de vie comme trajectoire. Étude comparée des (auto)biographies de Jean Paul et de Stendhal".

COMPARAISON DU CARACTÈRE FIGURATIF DES MOTS ET DE LEURS TRADUCTIONS – UNE POSSIBILITÉ DE MULTIPLIER LES PERSPECTIVES

Y. Fauser

Université Paris-Sorbonne

Abstract: Sur la base de traductions françaises (1802 – 1868) du roman Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre de Goethe, cette analyse examinera des notions difficiles à traduire, comme p.ex. « Stimmung, Verstimmung, etc. » (des concepts médicaux empruntés au domaine de la musique au départ), et leurs connotations multiples. En même temps, ces traductions montrent les changements de compréhension et d'attitude des lecteurs français à l'égard de la littérature et de la culture allemande, ainsi que l'importance de ce changement pour chacune de ces traductions. Mais surtout, on s'ouvre par cette comparaison de nouvelles approches et ainsi de nouvelles possibilités de compréhension dans chacune de ces deux aires linguistiques/ de ces deux langues.

Biography: expérience professionnelle:

à partir de septembre 2012 Maître de langue à l'UFR de Langues Etrangères Appliquées à l'Université Paris-Sorbonne

2010 - 2012 lectrice du DAAD à Sciences Po Paris - campus européen franco-allemand à Nancy formation:

thèse en cours: "L'ennui dans la littérature allemande et française de 1830 à 1850

études germaniques et philosophie à la Philipps-Universität Marburg publication: Die Vorwegnahme der medizinischen Erkenntnis von manisch-depressiven Störungen in der Literatur - dargestellt an Büchners Lenz und Leonce und Lena. In: Georg Büchner Jahrbuch 11 (2005-2008). Edition de Burghard DEDNER, Matthias GRÖBEL et Eva-Maria VERING. Tübingen, 2008. pp. 63 – 80.

conférences:

29/11/2007 L'ennui, les nerfs et le changement du style de penser dans la première moitié du XIXe siècle (Colloque international: L'Ennui. XIXe-XXe siècles. Approches historiques (29.11. – 1.12.2007) Université Paris I Panthéon-Sorbonne)

13/10/2006 Die Vorwegnahme der medizinischen Erkenntnis von manisch-depressiven Störungen in der Literatur – dargestellt an Büchners »Lenz« und »Leonce und Lena«. (»Georg Büchner – Erkenntnis und Inszenierung«.) Jahrestagung der Georg Büchner Gesellschaft Marburg 2006. 13. – 14. Oktober 2006)

LA FORTUNE DU "ROMANTISME ALLEMAND" DANS LA CRITIQUE FRANÇAISE ET INTERNATIONALE: MALENTENDU PRODUCTIF ET AMNESIE SELECTIVE

H. Roland

FNRS - Université catholique de Louvain

Abstract: En 1949, la rédaction des Cahiers du Sud se décida à rééditer le numéro de 1937 sur Le romantisme allemand, qui avait tant marqué la génération des écrivains de langue française de l'entre-deux-guerres. Albert Béguin se livre dans la préface de cette réédition à un curieux mea culpa, portant sur l'absence de dimension politique du numéro original, paru pourtant quatre ans après l'installation du régime hitlérien. Béguin explique ainsi le parti-pris initial de ne pas avoir voulu mettre l'accent sur "la ligne de décadence et de successive trahison", qui relia historiquement les penseurs romantiques et leurs "disciples vulgarisateurs" (Nietzsche, Wagner), puis "les formes basses du mysticisme allemand" à connotations raciales et racistes. Le combat le plus efficace contre ces dernières, explique encore Béguin au nom des concepteurs du cahier initial, passait par cet oubli et par la mise en valeur exclusive des "formes supérieures" du romantisme (quête de sublime et de réalité indicible, nostalgie de l'absolu, etc.). Une telle tension entre "le moment romantique" comme sommet de l'histoire culturelle et la problématique d'une "indisciplinable âme allemande" demeure sous-jacente à la critique spécialisée sur le romantisme. Elle est peut-être verbalisée de façon plus explicite dans la critique allemande elle-même (comme dans l'ouvrage de Rüdiger Safranski, Romantik. Eine deutsche Affäre, 2007) que dans la critique française et internationale, qui peine à vouloir égratigner son image idéale du romantisme allemand. Cette amnésie sélective va, selon moi, de pair avec ces formes de "malentendu productif", qui ont permis la réception du romantisme allemand comme appropriation originale, tributaire des attentes de la culture d'accueil. La mise en évidence des synergies entre romantisme allemand et surréalisme dans les années 1930 fut à cet égard tout à fait exemplaire. La présente contribution s'attachera, sur base de cet objet, à préciser dans ce sens l'apport de théories comme les transferts culturels et l'esthétique de la réception à une historiographie comparée de la littérature.

Biography:

Hubert Roland est chercheur qualifié du Fonds de la Recherche Scientifique/FNRS belge et professeur de littérature allemande et comparée à l'Université catholique de Louvain (UCL). Principaux domaines de recherche: le réalisme magique dans la littérature allemande et européenne, transferts culturels et littéraires franco- et belgo-allemands, historiographie comparée des avant-gardes.

S2: LITTÉRATURE ET PHILOSOPHIE

EZRA POUND ET HENRI BERGSON

J.M. Pollock
Université de Perpignan

Abstract: Comme toute sa génération Ezra Pound a baigné dans le bergsonisme. Wyndham Lewis, co-fondateur et malin génie du Vorticisme, témoigne de la profondeur de cette influence — tout en la récusant — dans son livre de 1927, Time and Western Man. Lewis consacre deux chapitres au « cas exemplaire » d'Ezra Pound : « Ezra Pound, etc. » et « A Man in Love with the Past ». Il nous invite ainsi à rapprocher le flux poétique des Cantos du concept de durée élaboré par Henri Bergson : ils forment tous les deux des multiplicités fusionnelles qui, loin d'estomper et d'égaliser l'hétérogénéité de leurs éléments (dans un écoulement régulier, ou laminaire), en procèdent. Le flux dérive d'une différentielle ; il découle du seul effet de l'interaction en jeu entre ses composantes. D'où vient-il que le jeu des différences génère un flux, ou une durée ? Et comment le texte des Cantos se rapporte-t-il au flux ? On peut donner deux réponses, selon qu'on adopte une perspective bergsonienne, ou qu'on emprunte à Pound sa référence au Dao chinois.

Biography: Jonathan Pollock est professeur de littérature anglo-américaine à l'Université de Perpignan-Via Domitia. Il est l'auteur de Qu'est-ce que l'humour ? (Paris, Klincksieck, coll. Études, 2001), Le Moine (de Lewis) d'Antonin Artaud (Paris, Gallimard, Foliothèque, 2002), Le Rire du Môme : Antonin Artaud et la littérature anglo-américaine (Paris, Kimé, coll. Détours littéraires, 2002), Déclinaisons. Le naturalisme poétique de Lucrèce à Lacan (Paris, Hermann, coll. Fictions pensantes, 2010).

PENSER PAR LA VOIE DES RYTHMES : BECKETT, MICHAUX, DELEUZE

A.C. Malufe¹, S. Ferraz²
¹PUC-SP, ²UNICAMP

Abstract: On peut créditer au poète et peintre Henry Michaux l'invention d'une catégorie d'art inusitée. Ni poème, ni peinture, ni musique. Dans ses livres Par des traits et Par la voie des rythmes on trouve des séquences d'idéogrammes sans significations précises, une musique-poème dont le rythme est le seul conducteur. Ces petites partitions pour les yeux peuvent nous rappeler les cours de Paul Klee sur le rythme musicale dans les arts visuelles et, encore, nous inviter à une conversation avec les derniers textes de Samuel Beckett : sa prose extrêmement rythmique où le son, les images et les mots sont aussi rapportés à la musique en créant des partitions vocales (dans par exemple Comment c'est, Pas moi, Cap au pire, Mal vu mal dit ou Compagnie). Ce réseau que relie la littérature à la musique et aux arts visuelles est le centre de cette proposition qui prend le concept de rythme, tel que proposé par Gilles Deleuze dans Francis Bacon logique de la sensation, par principal opérateur dans l'effort de démontrer le voie d'interférence et contamination mutuelle entre les arts. Figure « multisensible », le rythme serait pour Deleuze « une puissance vitale que déborde tous les domaines et les traverse ». Au delà des organes du sens, donc, le rythme met en relation les domaines empiriquement distincts des arts. Ainsi, en même temps qu'il est la condition de possibilité pour des arts hybrides, c'est aussi l'instance qui nous permet de rencontrer toute une spécificité d'une pensée des arts. Une pensée par la voie des rythmes.

Biography: Annita Costa Malufe (1975) est née à São Paulo (SP), Brésil. Poétesse et chercheuse, a écrit plusieurs livres de poèmes, entre lesquels Quando não estou por perto (Ed.7Letras/Petrobras, 2012) et Como se caísse devagar (Ed.34/Secretaria de Estado da Cultura SP, 2008) ; est docteur en théorie littéraire (Université de Campinas) et actuellement réalise une recherche de post-doctorat à l'Université Catholique de São Paulo (PUC-SP) ; est auteur des essais de critique littéraire, portant sur les rapports entre poésie et philosophie : Territórios dispersos: a poética de Ana Cristina Cesar (Ed. Annablume/FAPESP, 2006) et Poéticas da imanência: Ana Cristina Cesar e Marcos Siscar (Ed.7Letras/FAPESP, 2011). Compositeur et musicologue, Silvio Ferraz (1959) est professeur de composition à l'Université de Campinas (Brésil). Après un doctorat en sémiotique qu'il obtient à l'université Catholique de São Paulo, et habilitation en composition musicale à l'université de Campinas, il est chercheur à la FAPESP (Fondation d'aide à la recherche de l'état de São Paulo) et au CNPQ (Centre National de Recherche du Brésil). Directeur du Festival International d'Hiver de Campos de Jordão et de l'École de Musique de l'Etat de São Paulo, en 2009. Autant que compositeur ses compositions sont régulièrement jouées aux principales festivals de musique contemporaine au Brésil et Amérique Latine. Auteur de Musique et répétition : la question de la différence dans la musique du XXème siècle et Livre des Sonorités (publiés en portugais) et « La formule de la Ritournelle », publié récemment dans le numéro spécial de la revue Filigrane concerné à Gille Deleuze.

POUR UNE PHILOSOPHIE DES FLUX, DE D.H. LAWRENCE A DELEUZE

J. Feyel

UNIVERSITE PARIS OUEST NANTERRE LA DEFENSE

Abstract: L'admiration de Deleuze pour D.H. Lawrence est bien connue. Souvent, le philosophe cite l'écrivain anglais dans ses propres œuvres, il en fait l'un des écrivains et des poètes sur lesquels il appuie ses développements théoriques. Il rédige même en 1978 la préface de la première traduction en français (Fanny Deleuze) du dernier essai de Lawrence, rédigé en 1929, Apocalypse (traduction revue et corrigée par Fanny Deleuze, éd. et avant-propos Camille Dumoulié, Paris, Desjonquères, 2002). Il existe une indéniable affinité entre les deux auteurs, parfaitement mise en valeur par le nombre et la fécondité des approches critiques lisant l'œuvre de Lawrence à la lumière de la pensée deleuzienne. Toutefois, éclairer le texte littéraire à l'aide de l'explication philosophique ne revient-il pas à entretenir l'assujettissement philosophique de la littérature ? En partant du postulat inverse, nous tenterons de lire Deleuze à la lumière de Lawrence et de proposer un exemple de contamination du discours philosophique par l'écriture littéraire. Rapprocher ces deux auteurs conduit à réfléchir au type de dialogue interdisciplinaire qui se tisse entre eux et à se demander de quelle nature est l'innutrition lawrencienne dans l'œuvre de Deleuze. S'agit-il d'un emprunt à la philosophie de Lawrence ? Dans ce cas il serait bon de se demander de quelle manière se fait le transfert d'une discipline à une autre. Ici, Deleuze deviendrait un passeur et un traducteur philosophique de la langue littéraire de Lawrence. Est-ce que Deleuze isole ou construit des philosophèmes lawrenciens ? De quelle façon lit-il Lawrence, de quelle manière ses hommages répétés éclairent ou infléchissent-ils la pensée de l'écrivain ? Mais Deleuze est aussi un philosophe qui écrit. Si les philosophes professionnels eux-mêmes ont éprouvé le besoin d'emprunter à l'herméneutique ses méthodes (cf. Les Styles de Deleuze, éd. Adnen Jdey, Paris, Les Impressions nouvelles, coll. Réflexions faites, 2011), c'est bien parce que Deleuze démontre bien plus que d'autres à quel point, même en philosophie, style et théorie sont consubstantiels. Nous essaierons alors de déterminer si Deleuze se serait également nourri de la poétique lawrencienne pour inventer sa propre écriture.

Biography: Normalienne et agrégée, Juliette Feyel a soutenu une thèse de doctorat consacrée à l'érotisme et au sacré chez D.H. Lawrence et Georges Bataille sous la direction de Camille Dumoulié (Université Paris Ouest Nanterre).

TABLE RONDE

PARTICIPATION AUX TRAVAUX DE L'ATELIER MONTAIGNE

E. de Dampierre
Université Bordeaux 3

Abstract: Présentation des résultats des travaux élaborés tout au long de l'année dans le cadre du programme de recherche Traductions littéraires et politiques de la mémoire de l'équipe TELEM

Biography: MCF Littérature comparée

PARTICIPATION AUX TRAVAUX DE L'ATELIER MONTAIGNE

D. GACHET
Université de Bordeaux

Abstract: Participation aux travaux de l'atelier Montaigne: la traduction comme essai

Biography: Docteur en littérature comparée
Maître de conférences à l'Université de Bordeaux
Traductrice de littérature italienne

PRESENTATION DES RESULTATS DES TRAVAUX ELABORES TOUT AU LONG DE L'ANNEE DANS LE CADRE DU PROGRAMME DE RECHERCHE TRADUCTIONS LITTERAIRES ET POLITIQUES DE LA MEMOIRE DE L'EQUIPE TELEM

I. Poulin¹, A. Metzger-Rambach²
¹*Université Michel de Montaigne Bordeaux 3*, ²*Université de Bordeaux 3*

Abstract: Présentation des résultats des travaux élaborés tout au long de l'année dans le cadre du programme de recherche Traductions littéraires et politiques de la mémoire de l'équipe TELEM

Biography: Présentation des résultats des travaux élaborés tout au long de l'année dans le cadre du programme de recherche Traductions littéraires et politiques de la mémoire de l'équipe TELEM

PRESENTATION DES RESULTATS DES TRAVAUX ELABORES TOUT AU LONG DE L'ANNEE DANS LE CADRE DU PROGRAMME DE RECHERCHE TRADUCTIONS LITTERAIRES ET POLITIQUES DE LA MEMOIRE DE L'EQUIPE TELEM &RAQUO;

V. Partensky
Université Bordeaux3-Michel de Montaigne

Abstract: Présentation des résultats des travaux élaborés tout au long de l'année dans le cadre du programme de recherche Traductions littéraires et politiques de la mémoire de l'équipe TELEM

Biography: Maître de conférences à l'université Bordeaux en littérature comparée

TRAVAUX DE L'ATELIER MONTAIGNE

I. Poulin
Université Michel de Montaigne Bordeaux 3

Abstract: Présentation des résultats des travaux élaborés tout au long de l'année dans le cadre du programme de recherche Traductions littéraires et politiques de la mémoire de l'équipe TELEM

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Ancienne élève de l'E.N.S. de Fontenay / Saint-Cloud, agrégée de Lettres Modernes, Isabelle Poulin est Professeur de Littérature comparée. En tant que Directrice adjointe de l'Ecole Doctorale Montaigne-Humanités plus spécialement chargée des formations transversales et des relations internationales, aussi bien qu'en tant que responsable de la nouvelle Licence Culture Humaniste et Scientifique, elle s'efforce de mettre au service de ses missions les enjeux mêmes de son domaine de recherche, qui est celui de la transmission (à partir de l'œuvre bilingue de Nabokov, porté au cours du présent quinquennal par le programme « Traductions littéraires et politique de la mémoire » de l'EA TELEM).

S2: SCRIPTURAL REASONING AND COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

RETURNING TO THINKING THEOLOGICALLY

D. Jasper
University of Glasgow

Abstract: Christian theology is facing huge challenges after the traumas of the twentieth century, the crisis of secularisation in the West, and the development of theological thinking on a global scale, not least in China. As we engage with theology, we need to recognize shifts in theological thinking in the growing exchanges between the Christian scriptures and the sacred texts of China, resulting in new forms of scriptural reasoning and hermeneutics.

Biography: David Jasper is Professor of Literature and Theology at the University of Glasgow and has been Changjiang Chair Professor at Renmin University of China. He holds degrees from the universities of Cambridge, Oxford, Durham and Uppsala and was the founding editor of the journal Literature and Theology. His most recent book is The Sacred Community (Baylor University Press, 2012).

THE AXIAL AGE AND COMPARATIVE STUDIES IN RELIGION AND LITERATURE

E.J. Ziolkowski
Lafayette College

Abstract: “The Axial Age and Comparative Studies in Religion and Literature.”

This paper makes two suggestions on the basis of Karl Jaspers’s theory of the axial age. First, regardless of whether the axial age theory is accepted, the research done in pursuit of it (primarily by historians and sociologists) constitutes a rich, potentially fruitful ground for exploration by scholars of theology, religion, and literature interested in the sort of interdisciplinary studies in “scriptural reasoning” expounded by Yang Huilin. Secondly, rather than to think of ourselves as inhabiting a second axial age or even a global village, it may be more appropriate, at least as humanists contemplating religion and literature in a cross-cultural perspective, to think of our times as the “age of comparison.” This is because, in our proverbially “shrinking” world, engagement in cross-cultural dialogical studies of the sort envisioned by Guyatri Spivak becomes something not simply desired but inevitable, perhaps casting doubt upon the suitability of her construal of comparative literature as metaphorically moribund.

Biography: Eric Ziolkowski is the Charles A. Dana Professor of Religious Studies at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania. He is author of many books, articles, and book chapters in religion and literature, an area in which he has lectured widely in the United States and Europe, as well as in China. He is also a main editor of the Encyclopedia of the Bible and Its Reception, a prospective 30-volume resource published by De Gruyter (Berlin), and co-editor of the book series Religion and the Arts, published by Brill (Leiden). Formerly the North American General Editor of the journal Literature and Theology (2004–2012), he currently co-chairs the Arts, Literature, and Religion Section of the American Academy of Religion.

S2 : FORCE ET VERTU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FACE A L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE

LA CONSTELLATION ROMANESQUE D'OCTOBRE 1970. L'ENGAGEMENT A LA LUMIERE DE LA MISE EN RECIT.

A. Mercier
Université Laval

Abstract: La littérature québécoise a vu paraître un certain nombre d'œuvres inspirées plus ou moins directement de la «Crise d'octobre 1970», épisode marqué par différents actes terroristes commis par le Front de libération du Québec. Le roman La constellation du lynx de Louis Hamelin (Éditions Boréal, 2011) constitue pour l'instant la fiction la plus récente mais aussi la plus imposante sur ces événements. Ma communication analysera la mise en récit que propose La constellation du lynx à la lumière d'autres romans parus à distance variable de la «Crise d'octobre 1970», dont Un rêve québécois de Victor-Lévy Beaulieu (Éditions du Jour, 1972) et L'enfirouapé d'Yves Beauchemin (La Presse, 1974), ainsi que Le coup de poing de Louis Caron (Boréal, 1990) et Un dernier blues pour Octobre de Pierre Turgeon (Libre expression, 1990). Si dans tous ces romans la fiction est clairement revendiquée, il semble que dans La constellation du lynx elle soit plus étroitement liée à une posture esthétique et éthique contemporaine. La notion d'engagement s'y verrait redéfinie par le travail de mise en récit.

Biography: Andrée Mercier est professeure au département des littératures à l'Université Laval et directrice du Centre de recherche interuniversitaire sur la littérature et la culture québécoises. Avec Frances Fortier, elle a dirigé différents projets de recherche (subventionnés par le Conseil de recherche en sciences humaines du Canada) sur le récit littéraire québécois, de même que sur l'autorité narrative et la vraisemblance dans le roman contemporain. En ce moment, elle travaille sur des questions de problématisation de la transmission narrative dans le roman. Elle est également membre d'une équipe interuniversitaire (subventionnée par le Fonds québécois de la recherche sur la société et la culture) qui mène une recherche de poétique et d'esthétique comparée des littératures narratives française et québécoise actuelles. Elle a récemment codirigé avec Frances Fortier le livre La transmission narrative. Modalités du pacte romanesque contemporain (Éditions Nota Bene, 2011), et avec Robert Dion le dossier «Narrations contemporaines au Québec et en France : regards croisés» (Voix et Images, no 106, automne 2010), de même que le dossier «Vraisemblance et fictions contemporaines» dans la revue en ligne Temps zéro (no 2, 2009), avec Pierre-Luc Landry et Christine Otis.

LE LABORATOIRE MONSTRUEUX DE BRIAN EVENSON

J. Chassay
Université du Québec à Montréal

Abstract: Les romans de Brian Evenson mettent en scène des monstres et des monstruosités : personnages qui se torturent, se découpent, assassins fanatiques. Il s'agit de notre monde et pourtant, a priori, on a l'impression d'un univers en vase clos, univers de fanatiques et de sectes - Evenson a lui-même été contraint de quitter l'église mormone à cause de la nature de son œuvre. Aucun de ses livres, pourtant, ne suggère une si complète perte de repères que Baby Leg - traduit par Heloise Esquie et publié aux éditions du Cherche midi en 2012. Temps cyclique, personnages au(x) rôle(s) ambigu(s), roman situé entre une forêt inhabitée et un laboratoire où se déroulent des expériences dont on ne comprend le sens, Baby Leg propose une réflexion sur le pouvoir et même sur la démence du pouvoir, hors de l'Histoire et, pourrait-on dire, hors du sens. Cette communication voudrait pourtant analyser le monstrueux dans ce roman en démontrant sa contemporanéité. Loin d'une fiction-politique proche du journalisme ou du vécu qu'on rencontre couramment, Brian Evenson propose plutôt de s'en éloigner avec un roman qui offre des chimères - à la fois au sens de créature mythologique, d'illusion et d'organisme possédant des cellules d'origines génétiques différentes. La question du pouvoir et de la force y apparaît avec d'autant plus de densité et nous ramène à la question du politique aujourd'hui.

Biography: Professeur au Département d'Études littéraires de l'Université du Québec à Montréal depuis 1991. S'intéresse à la sociocritique ainsi qu'au discours scientifique et à la figure du savant dans la fiction et le discours social. A publié 25 livres (essais, romans, anthologies, actes de colloques). Derniers ouvrages parus: Si la science m'était contée. Des savants en littérature (Paris, Seuil, 2009) et La littérature à l'éprouvette (Montréal, Boréal, 2011). Il vient de terminer un livre sur l'imaginaire de la génétique.

2666 DE ROBERTO BOLAÑO : L'EXCÈS ET L'HISTOIRE

E. Etemad Kasaeyan
université Rennes 2

Abstract: 2666 de Roberto Bolaño traverse l'ensemble de l'Histoire du XXe siècle, des deux conflits mondiaux à la violence transfrontalière actuelle entre Mexique et Etats-Unis. La représentation littéraire de l'Histoire s'appuie sur une esthétique de l'excès, dont nous interrogerons les mécanismes et les finalités.

Biography: Emilie Etemad-Kasaeyan, agrégée de lettres modernes et doctorante en littérature comparée à l'Université de Rennes 2, achève actuellement une thèse portant sur la filiation dans l'oeuvre de Roberto Bolaño, sous la direction d'Emmanuel Bouju.

LE WINTERLICHE REISE DE PETER HANDKE EN SERBIE (1996) : L'ÉCRIVAIN FACE À LA PRESSE

C. Chaudet
Paris IV Sorbonne

Abstract: En 1995, l'écrivain autrichien Peter Handke effectue un voyage, en Serbie, dont le récit est publié en janvier 1996 dans le quotidien allemand Süddeutsche Zeitung, sous le titre Gerechtigkeit für Serbien. Eine winterliche Reise zu den Flüssen Donau, Save, Morawa und Drina. [1] Précédé d'un essai critique envers la représentation de la Serbie dans les médias occidentaux, ce récit de voyage soulève alors de violentes controverses : Peter Handke est accusé, dans une bonne partie de la presse européenne, de « défendre les Serbes ». [2]

Handke pose un problème politique en évoquant le problème de la transmission médiatique des conflits yougoslaves. On lui reprocha d'avoir nié ou minimisé la gravité du massacre de Srebrenica. [3] Mais Handke, en demandant dans son ouvrage pourquoi ce massacre se déroula dans le rayon d'action des casques bleus, au vu et au su de l'opinion publique mondiale, indiquerait la raison des mauvaises lectures de son texte : il suggérerait en effet par là l'extrême difficulté de porter un jugement sur les atrocités serbes tant que tous ceux qui participèrent aux crimes ne se trouveraient pas sur le banc des accusés. [4] Anne Lindner relie cette polémique à une collision entre la position de Handke et tout un ensemble de déclarations et de paroles : « eine (intellektuelle) europäische Öffentlichkeit präsentiert sich und ihre Länder als Bannerträger der freiheitlichen, humanen und aufgeklärt-informierten Mustergesellschaft, während ihre Staatengemeinschaft nachweislich an einem Krieg konkret mitschuldig ist. » [5] Le débat public autour de Handke serait ainsi partie prenante du problème politique posé par les conflits yougoslaves. [6]

La polémique entraînée par la publication du Winterliche Reise a donc contribué au débat sur la scène européenne. Handke a touché un point sensible, comme le souligne la violence des nombreuses critiques adressées contre lui. A ce titre, il est intéressant de constater que ce ne sont pas uniquement les passages tenant de l'essai, mais le Winterliche Reise dans son ensemble qui aboutit à la polémique – polémique qui touche notamment au rôle des puissances occidentales dans les conflits yougoslaves. Or cette polémique se poursuivra dans les années suivant la publication du Winterliche Reise, surtout à partir de l'intervention concrète de l'OTAN en Yougoslavie.

Ma proposition aurait ainsi pour but de mettre au jour comment le Winterliche Reise, qui mêle essai critique et récit de voyage, apporte un éclairage immédiat, audacieux et fécond sur les guerres de Yougoslavie, que ce soit d'un point de vue historique, politique ou esthétique – la démarche de Handke se caractérisant simultanément par la dénonciation, la retenue, les questionnements socratiques et la poétique du secondaire qu'elle met en œuvre, afin de « die Völker aus ihrer gegenseitigen Bilderstarre zu erlösen » (« libérer les peuples de leur réciproque imagerie figée ») [7].

[1] Le texte est paru le 5/6 et le 13/14 janvier 1996 dans le Süddeutsche Zeitung sous le titre Gerechtigkeit für Serbien. Eine winterliche Reise zu den Flüssen Donau, Save, Morawa und Drina oder Gerechtigkeit für Serbien. Les éditions Suhrkamp, qui publient le texte également en 1996, le publient sous le titre Eine winterliche Reise zu den Flüssen Donau, Save, Morawa und Drina oder Gerechtigkeit für Serbien. Cette inversion du titre choisi par l'éditeur (en accord avec Handke) permet de mettre l'accent sur le récit de voyage en tant que tel, qui se trouve alors placé dans la première partie du titre.

[2] Précisons que l'on se trouve alors à un moment précis du conflit : Handke publie son récit de voyage moins d'un an après le massacre de Srebrenica (juillet 1995), où environ 8 000 Bosniaques ont été massacrés par l'Armée de la République serbe de Bosnie sous le commandement du général Ratko Mladic. Les positions ouest-européennes envers le gouvernement serbe se sont alors nettement radicalisées.

[3] Voir Lindner, Anne: Peter Handke, Jugoslawien und das Problem der strukturellen Gewalt, Wiesbaden: Deutscher

Universitätsverlag, 2007, p. 18.

[4] Voir Lindner: Peter Handke, Jugoslawien und das Problem der strukturellen Gewalt, op. cit., p. 18–19.

[5] « Une présence publique (intellectuelle) se présente elle-même ainsi que ses Etats comme porte-bannières d'une société modèle, libre, humaine et éclairée-informée, alors que leur communauté d'Etats est manifestement et concrètement complice d'une guerre. » Voir Lindner: Peter Handke, Jugoslawien und das Problem der strukturellen Gewalt, op. cit., p. 18–19.

Lindner ajoute dans sa note de bas de page 11: « Diese Gemeinschaft und ihre Öffentlichkeit befinden hoheitlich über Fragen von Schuld und Anklage und darüber, was an Fragen zulässig und was unzulässig ist. « [« Cette communauté et sa présence publique statuent en haut lieu au sujet des questions de responsabilité et d'accusation et au sujet des questions que l'on peut poser ou non. »]

[6] Voir Lindner: Peter Handke, Jugoslawien und das Problem der strukturellen Gewalt, op. cit., p. 19.

[7] Handke, Peter : Eine winterliche Reise zu den Flüssen Donau, Save, Morawa und Drina oder Gerechtigkeit für Serbien, Frankfurt a. M.: Suhrkamp, 1996, p. 49.

Biography: Chloé Chaudet, née le 8 avril 1985 à Beauvais, France. Titulaire d'un baccalauréat littéraire européen allemand, j'ai effectué toutes mes études (littérature comparée, littérature française, philosophie et histoire de l'art) en Allemagne, auprès de Manfred Schmeling, ancien directeur et professeur émérite de l'UFR de littérature générale et comparée de l'Université de Sarrebruck. J'ai également travaillé, de 2006 à 2009, en tant qu'étudiante-assistante auprès de lui, le secondant notamment dans la traduction en français de discours et exposés réalisés dans le cadre de sa fonction de président de l'AILC.

J'ai ensuite travaillé, de mai 2009 à septembre 2011, sur ma thèse (Dynamiques internationales de l'engagement littéraire des années 1980 à 2010), dirigée en cotutelle par Manfred Schmeling et Anne Tomiche (Paris IV). Une version brute de ma thèse est actuellement entre leurs mains. Après avoir travaillé, parallèlement à mes travaux de recherche doctorale, comme lectrice pour les éditions Suhrkamp, Je prépare depuis septembre 2011 le CAPES et l'agrégation de lettres modernes à Paris IV.

S2: THE ART OF NOT THINKING

THE INTERIORIZED EXTERIORITY

V. Biti
Universität Wien

Abstract: Theory was from its Greek origins constantly confronted with misunderstandings that questioned its high pretension on the truth. This misunderstanding makes the gist of the famous anecdote on Tales and the Thracian maid, recounted by Socrates in Plato's Theaetetus, whose numerous transformations Hans Blumenberg investigated in his path-breaking study Das Lachen der Thrakerin (1987). The Greek word theoros designated a special envoy of the community sent to elected inter-communal religious ceremonies to request divine wisdom and transfer it, with tranquilizing and consecrating effects, back to community members. Yet this envoy's homecoming was everything but triumphant as the sublime truth that was detected abroad had to be reconfirmed by the down-to-earth judgment at home. Due to such reemerging exposure to a delusion that was expected to be exposed itself, theory, instead of being a solitary insight into the divine truth, proved to be a public performance addressed to a suspicious audience. Without ever completely succeeding in bracketing out this mocking external perspective of "non-thinkers", theory was from its very beginning destined to cope with it. Should the communal verification of its truth be scornfully dismissed, as suggested for example by the "elitists" Nietzsche and Heidegger, or should the communal horizon be educationally extended as advocated for instance by the "democrats" Husserl, Arendt and Blumenberg? In the shape it came to the fore, this dilemma itself was significant. As testified by de Man's ambiguous coinage, a prominent form of coming to terms with the non-thinking "resistance to theory" in the twentieth century's theory was the anticipating dialogic incorporation of the latter. In view of the renewed worldwide resistance to theory, some recent forms of the assimilation of this "extramural" opposition to reflection will be analyzed.

Biography: Vladimir Biti, Professor of South Slavic literatures and cultures at the Faculty for Literary and Cultural Studies, University of Vienna. Author of eight books, Literatur- und Kulturtheorie: Ein Handbuch gegenwärtiger Begriffe, Reinbek: Rowohlt, 2001 among the others, he also edited or co-edited six readers as well as published over hundred articles in a wide international range of journals and readers. He was visiting professor in Graz (1997), Vienna (1998) and Berlin (2003). From 1996-2004 member of the Executive Board of the International Association for Semiotic Studies; from 2001 to 2005 Chair of the Committee on Literary Theory of the International Comparative Literature Association; from 2004-2010 member of the Executive Bureau of the same Association. He is member of the editorial board of several international journals, Journal of Literary Theory and Journal for Literature and Trauma Studies among the others. 1998 Great Award of the Croatian Academy of Sciences, 2000 Award for Science of the Matrix Croatica, 2001 Award of the Faculty of Philosophy for an extraordinary contribution to the research and teaching activities of the Faculty. From 2007 he is member of Academia Europaea.

UNTHINKING OF YOU

C. Mihailescu
Western University

Abstract: The university – and the hermeneutical machines associated with it – has gone through important changes during the past century. To the university of culture there corresponded the jargon of authenticity (Heidegger as viewed by Adorno), lived experience, the "I-Thou" relationship (Buber), dialogism (Bakhtin, Levinas), and an elegiac atmosphere of loss (Benjamin, Th. Mann). To the university of excellence of the recent decades (e.g. Bill Readings, The University in Ruins, 1996), there corresponded a postmodern half-serious melancholy for the previous age, a backward gaze of humanities, which were progressively marginalized – within the half-corporate make up of North American universities – with respect to the professional schools (Medicine, Law, Business), the techno-sciences and its own, less text- and language-based ideologies. As the new millennium kicked in, we have entered a radical stage of the university of excellence: that of the university of quantity. Here the hermeneutics practised in the humanities are allowed to survive as passable, yet misplaced and, by and large, marginal exercises of service to other areas of – applied and thus justified – knowledge. What literary interpretation, indeed, what literary theory can one fathom for these present, dürrtig Zeiten, when poetry does not sell anymore and literature seeps into the un-paper age? This quick take on the problem will propose: (i) a radical depersonalization of literary interpretation; (ii) the abandoning of melancholy objects of desire, such as the ones carried by the university of culture; (iii) a cynical approach to the love of literature, and its unavowed monotheistic bearings; and (iv) the notion of "unthinking," drawn both against Plato's architectonics of Phaedrus and for a Baroque gaze-within-the-glance view of literature. The text is polemical, strategic and merciless (Machiavelli, Schmitt).

Biography: Calin-Andrei Mihailescu

(b. in Bucharest in 1956) is a writer and a Professor of Comparative Literature, Critical Theory, and Spanish at the University of Western Ontario in London, Canada. He holds an BA in Romanian and Spanish from the University of Bucharest, and an MA and a PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Toronto. He writes (in English, French, Romanian and Spanish) in a variety of established genres (essay, poetry, short prose, and academic monographs, articles and reviews), or in mixed formats (calendar books, essais-en-poème, multilingual mummyfestos...). He has done radio and television work and has given papers and public readings on five continents.

THOUGHT CENSORSHIP UNDER TOTALITARIANISM: PRECARIOUS RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THOUGHT AND VOICE IN MANDELSTAM

T. Yokota-Murakami
Osaka University

Abstract: Mind/thought-control is a technique developed by the Chinese intelligence agency, but its prototype was recognized and utilized in earlier totalitarian regimes such as Stalinist Russia. In thought-censorship, the first goal has been to prohibit anti-institutional thought by threat and terror and to create void in mind, into which conformist ideology is then easily implanted. Many literati under Stalin's reign faced such thought control. Their reactions differed, but the dominant mode was to yield to oppression, self-censor their resistant ideas, compel upon themselves silence, and weave out submissive words. Mandelstam thus writes in one of his poems: "The word I forgot/ Which once I wished to say/ And voiceless thought/ Returns to shadows' chamber." Mandelstam experienced a delicate relationship with Stalin who was about to launch into his notorious "Anti-cosmopolitanism" (viz. anti-Semitic) campaign, but was reluctant to liquidate the celebrated poet. In this relationship Mandelstam was forced to "forget the word" and make his "thought voiceless." Can we say, then, that Mandelstam was simply exercising a silent, but resilient resistance to oppression? Did his silence compliment the fullness of inner, voiceless, challenging thoughts, when Stalinist repression aimed at silencing not only the anti-institutional voices, but also the resistant thinking itself? Vygotsky in the chapter "Thought and Word" in Thought and Language, which carries the above-cited quote from Mandelstam as an epigraph, points to the two theoretical positions, concerning the relationship between internal and external languages. The first, solipsistic position insists on the primacy of the internal language, which subsequently is externalized as enunciation as an end product of "thought." The second, realistic position insists on the primacy of the external language, whereby the internal language is simply voiceless enunciation. According to the former, Russian dissident literati might be represented as conscious rebels, silently concealing a hidden rebellious thought; according to the latter, as victims, threatened to be deprived of subversive thought itself by the forced silence. Vygotsky proposed to sublimate these two positions as he considered that internal and external languages determine each other in a dynamic and dialectic manner, where thought is realized (but not expressed) in language. This paper is an attempt to re-examine the literary activities of the early Soviet dissident literati, their (apparently) silent submission to totalitarian thought control and their abandonment of insurgent ideas in the light of the Vygotskian dialogic formulation of inner and outer voices and of thought (non-thought) and language.

Biography: Princeton U. PhD. 1994.

S2: TRADUIRE OU LA DISPROPORTION INTERIEURE DES PAROLES

WILLIAM CHAPMAN ET ACHILLE FRÉCHETTE : CREATION LITTÉRAIRE ET TRADUCTION OFFICIELLE AU CANADA, OU LE SOI ET L'AUTRE

D. Merkle

Université de Moncton

Abstract: Le français ne jouit pas de la même valeur symbolique que l'anglais au Canada, et ce, depuis la Conquête. Le corpus de cette étude remonte au tournant du vingtième siècle, quand certains traducteurs officiels, dont William Chapman et Achille Fréchette, sont également littéraires. Dans cette étude nous nous donnons la tâche d'explorer le comportement traductif de ces deux sujets traduisants qui se trouvent obligés de composer avec l'inégalité sociolinguistique et politique de leur époque. Comment leur rapport à l'autre et au soi se manifeste-t-il dans leurs produits traductifs et littéraires? Dans le cadre de cet atelier, nous voudrions explorer "les lignes de partage" entre l'autre "dominant" et le soi "dominé", telles qu'exprimées dans la rédaction française et dans la traduction de l'anglais au français de Chapman et de Fréchette. Nous prenons la définition de littérature au sens large dans cette étude. Si notre corpus est surtout littéraire, il nous arrivera de nous référer à la presse et aux textes officiels. Dans le but de comparer l'auteur avec lui-même, nous limitons notre analyse aux traducteurs officiels qui sont par surcroît écrivains dans le but de trouver des éléments de réponse aux questions telles que : Ces auteurs sont-ils "soi" quand ils reproduisent les valeurs de leur culture? Sont-ils "autres" quand ils assument le rôle de traducteur officiel (c'est-à-dire "passeur" du discours de la culture dominante).

Biography: Denise Merkle est professeure de traduction et de traductologie à l'Université de Moncton (Nouveau-Brunswick, Canada). Elle est titulaire d'un Ph. D. en études françaises et publie les articles dans les revues de traductologie (p. ex. TTR, Babel) et d'études françaises (p. ex. Cahiers naturalistes), entre autres, de même que les chapitres dans les collectifs. Elle a dirigé (ou co-dirigé) plusieurs numéros de revues savantes (TTR, Alternative francophone) et plusieurs collectifs (p. ex. The Power of the Pen, co-dirigé avec Carol O'Sullivan, Luc van Doorslaer et Michaela Wolf).

SEMPER FLUENS, SEMPER FIDELIS? QUE DISENT LES RETRADUCTIONS SUR LE TRADUCTEUR ET SUR SON TEMPS?

K. Talviste

Université de Tartu

Abstract: Je propose d'étudier les procédés et les conséquences de la retraduction dans un corpus de textes dont la réécriture a été imposée au traducteur par les changements de situation politique et/ou linguistique aussi bien que par l'évolution de sa propre pensée et poétique. Il s'agit de traductions de poésie du français vers l'estonien par Johannes Semper (1892-1970), écrivain, traducteur et critique d'une grande influence et homme politique controversé. Aujourd'hui apprécié surtout pour sa contribution à la traduction et à la présentation de la littérature française en Estonie, Semper a produit principalement des traductions de textes en prose. Il s'intéressait aussi à la poésie contemporaine et à celle du XIX^e siècle, dont il était un bon connaisseur ; sa propre production littéraire est d'ailleurs plus intéressante dans le domaine de la poésie que dans la prose. Pourtant, le nombre de poètes francophones qu'il a traduits reste relativement modeste : Verhaeren (1911, 1929), Rimbaud (1926), Baudelaire (1926), Villon (1926) et Verlaine (1929). C'est clairement l'œuvre de Verhaeren qui l'avait le plus impressionné : en 1929, il publia un recueil entier de ses poèmes, alors que pour les autres il s'était contenté de quelques textes, publiés dans les revues littéraires. Or, ces textes ne furent pas oubliés. Après la Seconde guerre mondiale, sous l'occupation soviétique, ils furent republiés : dans la presse (Verhaeren), dans les œuvres choisies de Semper (Verhaeren, Baudelaire, Rimbaud), dans des recueils d'auteur (Baudelaire) et dans des manuels de littérature étrangère (Rimbaud, Villon). La position qui leur fut ainsi accordée dans le canon littéraire estonien se justifie principalement par deux arguments. Premièrement, les traductions de qualité illustrant l'œuvre de ces auteurs n'étaient pas nombreuses, et le nombre de traducteurs capables d'en produire était limité lui aussi. Pour cette raison, les retraductions étaient (et restent toujours) rares en Estonie. Deuxièmement, Semper, qui avait participé à l'instauration du régime soviétique en Estonie, avait gardé une position d'autorité dans la vie littéraire, qui lui assurait (avec l'exception de la période des répressions stalinienne les plus sévères, soit la fin des années 1940 et le début des années 1950) une certaine facilité pour publier ses œuvres, y compris des traductions datant d'avant la guerre. Depuis la première publication de celles-ci, la langue littéraire estonienne avait considérablement évolué. En effet, Johannes Semper faisait encore partie de la génération qui n'avait pas eu la possibilité de faire des études, à part les plus élémentaires, en estonien. L'estonien littéraire moderne fut inventé par cette génération, mais cela veut dire que leur propre maîtrise de la langue évolua avec le temps ; les nouveaux standards et ressources qu'ils développaient causaient simultanément le vieillissement rapide de leurs propres textes et plusieurs auteurs, parmi lesquels Johannes Semper, ressentaient le besoin de les réviser avant de les republier. Ce contexte peut expliquer pourquoi Semper retraduisit « ses » poèmes français et belges, mais il n'explique pas l'ensemble des modifications que Semper a faites dans ces textes. Évidemment, il y a des corrections linguistiques (au niveau de la syntaxe, de la morphologie, du vocabulaire) et aussi idéologiques (interprétation de figures et choix du vocabulaire conformes aux valeurs soviétiques). Mais il y a aussi des modifications qui indiquent que Semper cherchait, d'un côté, à mieux comprendre les nuances sémantiques et structurales de l'original, et de l'autre à approfondir et à concrétiser sa propre interprétation de chaque poème. Ses retraductions ne suivent pas un programme simple et univoque, ce sont des tentatives de saisir de nouveau la logique d'un texte une fois déjà vécu et compris, et de la réactualiser. Mon objectif est de montrer comment le travail de retraduction peut être influencé par le contexte politique et culturel, mais surtout comment il reste en même temps indépendant de ce contexte : il ne se conforme pas uniquement à la nécessité linguistique et idéologique, mais mobilise et fait évoluer l'esprit du traducteur comme n'importe quel autre acte créatif. L'écriture poétique d'un auteur engagé dans une cause extralittéraire (sociale, politique ou culturelle) reste toujours poétique, et elle se nourrit de toutes les ressources de cet auteur, non pas seulement de son programme d'engagement. Il est possible que la poétique et l'individualité de l'auteur soient plus faciles à distinguer dans son travail du traducteur que dans son œuvre originale : les textes étrangers qu'il relit et retraduit fournissent des repères qui permettent de comparer les différentes étapes dans l'évolution de sa pensée et de sa poétique. C'est cette hypothèse que je souhaite développer d'après l'exemple des traductions de Johannes Semper. Son cas n'est pas isolé : tous ses contemporains en Estonie se trouvaient dans la même situation. Leur œuvre était le lieu de la création de la langue littéraire, à la fois d'une grande influence et sans longue tradition sur laquelle s'appuyer. Leur œuvre fut aussi profondément marquée par le régime totalitaire, d'une manière ou d'une autre : écriture interrompue à cause des persécutions, intégrité compromise à cause de la collaboration, poétique entière mise au service d'une résistance discrète. Dans leurs traductions, ces tensions et ambiguïtés sont aussi présentes, mais moins prononcées. Les dialogues avec les auteurs étrangers, surtout les dialogues repris plusieurs fois sous forme de retraductions, font souvent entendre leur voix plus clairement que leurs propres textes. Mon étude cherchera à dégager cette voix dans les traductions de Johannes Semper et posera la question de la pertinence de cette approche chez d'autres auteurs et dans d'autres littératures qui ont connu des situations historiques et des auteurs similaires.

Biography: Katre Talviste, née en 1978, est chercheuse à l'Université de Tartu. Elle est spécialisée en histoire de la littérature estonienne et de la traduction en estonien. Elle a soutenu sa thèse en littérature comparée à l'université Paris 12 (aujourd'hui Paris-Est) en 2007 et publié une version révisée de la thèse, "La poésie estonienne et Baudelaire" (Paris, L'Harmattan, collection Bibliothèque finno-ougrienne), en 2011. Elle est membre de l'Association estonienne de littérature comparée et membre associé du Centre d'étude de l'Europe médiane (Paris, INALCO). Actuellement, elle travaille sur l'histoire de la traduction de poésie francophone en Estonie et participe à la rédaction d'une histoire de la traduction littéraire en Europe médiane (www.histrad.info).

ENTRE APORIE ET FLUX DE CONSCIENCE : FINNEGANS WAKE ET SES TRADUCTIONS FRANCAISES

L.Y.A. Quintin
Université de Provence

Abstract: La problématique qui nous intéresse concerne la traduction. Alors que la terminologie même de « traductologie » n'est pas encore de place consacrée au sein de nos enseignements, nous nous demandons comment appréhender ce motif. Notre domaine se situe au cœur de la littérature ou plus précisément au sein de ce que les modernes ont dénommé poésie métaphysique. Or, face à ce postulat, se dressent déjà deux interrogations : La première concerne l'inscription de James Joyce au sein du moderne. Les œuvres de jeunesse du poète irlandais y correspondent sans équivoque ; même Ulysses s'y inscrit. En revanche, Finnegans Wake pose problème. Et la tentative de situation contextuelle des différentes traductions de Finnegans Wake ne fait que corroborer l'inscription du récit joycien au sein du postmoderne. Une situation, donc anachronique, mais au sein de laquelle nous définissons avec plus de précision la place occupée par le récit wakien. Ce positionnement, déjà trouble, se confirme dès lors que nous appréhendons le wake en contexte. Nous ne pouvons penser Finnegans Wake sans l'inscrire au cœur des problématiques de l'intériorité. May Sinclair, la première à faire place à ce concept philosophique, doublé par son appréhension poétique, oriente sans délai notre réflexion vers l'aporie. Ainsi, l'aporie de la langue, avant le caractère aporétique de la saisie du flux de conscience représente, à l'échelle de l'œuvre polymathique l'un des sujets de nos interrogations. André du Bouchet, au sein de sa préface de Lire Finnegans Wake ? , s'interroge quand au rapport du lecteur à la matière textuelle : « La phrase qui surgit, illisible, et dont nous tirons argument pour interrompre notre lecture n'est pas toujours plus obscure que celles que nous avons déjà parcourues. Mais notre refus, à lui seul, convertit la page déchiffrable en page illisible... Ainsi, Finnegans Wake se pose seule comme œuvre à déchiffrer et donc, à traduire. En effet, la linguistique notamment de Roman

Jackobson nous apprend que traduire est avant tout une interprétation d'un signe ou d'un ensemble de signes. Philippe Lavergne, comme André du Bouchet, ne font qu'appréhender l'idiomatique joycienne au sein de ce cumul linguistique. A ce processus s'y ajoute, au moins un second : celui du traitement du stream of consciousness. C'est par là même que se pose toute la problématique traductologique, au sujet de Finnegans Wake : quelle place accorder aux motifs des sujets traduisant ? De même, jusqu'à quel point devons nous inscrire les visées de traduction des relecteurs subjectifs, au sein de notre analyse du texte initial « anglais » livré par James Joyce. Ou encore, jusqu'à quelle mesure ces traductions peuvent-elles réécrire le motif prépondérant du flux joycien ? Jacques Derrida, au sein de Ulysse Gramophone nous indique que l'à-traduire du traductible ne peut être que l'intraduisible. Notre volonté ici est donc de comprendre les visées de nos traducteurs, mais également de monter comment les choix établis par André du Bouchet et Philippe Lavergne constituent peut être à eux seuls le lieu de réflexion idéal au caractère aporétique du langage joycien ; de même qu'à l'appréhension de l'intériorité, traitée en traduction. Leïla Quintin

Biography: -JOYCE, James, Finnegans Wake, Penguin books, Modern Classic, 1949, ed. 1992 -JOYCE, James, Finnegans Wake, Gallimard, coll. Du monde entier, trad., Philippe Lavergne, 1982 -JOYCE, James, Finnegans Wake, Gallimard, coll. Folio, 1982 -DU BOUCHET, Andre, Lire Finnegans Wake, Fata Morgana, 2003

RETICENCE ET RESERVES? TRADUCTION ET AUTO-TRADUCTION D'YVES BONNEFOY

L.M. Roesler
Ecole Normale Supérieure de Lyon

Abstract: « Peut-on traduire un poème, non. », cette accroche lapidaire et intransigeante qu'Yves Bonnefoy appose au seuil de l'essai « La Traduction de la Poésie » est démentie, comme chacun le sait, non seulement par une abondante œuvre de traductions de poésie (notamment de Shakespeare, Donne, Yeats, Leopardi et Pétrarque), mais également par une réflexion théorique relayée par de nombreux essais et entretiens qui traitent des problèmes de la traduction. Comment concilier ces deux positions quelque peu contradictoires ? Ce qui permet, in fine, à Bonnefoy de transformer ce « non » inflexible en « peut-être » plus mobile, c'est le changement qu'il opère sur le vocabulaire : on ne peut traduire un poème, car celui-ci n'est qu'une forme figée qui se referme sur elle-même, mais on peut traduire la poésie, vaste étendu métaphysique où peuvent se rencontrer les réalités et les êtres les plus divers. Dès lors, la traduction de la poésie s'intégrerait pour Bonnefoy dans une « tradition altruiste », visant à rendre accessible des mondes poétiques qui demeureraient sinon forclos. Ainsi se résume, de manière très succincte, la position que construit Bonnefoy lui-même et qu'il est soucieux de partager, comme en témoigne son livre de 2000, La Communauté des traducteurs. Dans cette lignée, certains critiques ont commencé à proposer des travaux extrêmement pertinents sur la manière dont le poète aborde l'acte de la traduction, l'interrogeant en particulier sur l'exigence de fidélité formelle – maintien de rimes, d'échos prosodiques, etc.—que celle-ci requiert du traducteur. Fabio Scotti suggère ainsi que les choix de traduction d'Yves Bonnefoy témoignent de sa conviction que « la traduction poétique appartient à titre plein à l'œuvre du poète-traducteur. » Mais qu'en est-il alors de la traduction non pas faite, mais « subie » ? Car malgré l'intérêt considérable des travaux critiques sur Bonnefoy-traducteur, il semblerait que l'on ne se soit encore réellement interrogé sur la relation que Bonnefoy entretient avec la traduction de sa propre poésie. Celle-ci étant traduite dans un grand nombre de langues dont, bien sûr, l'anglais et l'italien, on peut s'interroger sur le fait qu'en dépit de sa maîtrise parfaite de ces deux langues, Bonnefoy ne se soit jamais livré à l'exercice de l'auto-traduction. En effet, ses textes sont invariablement traduits par d'autres poètes et critiques, ce qui suscite un certain nombre de questions : quels sont les contacts que Bonnefoy a pu établir avec ses traducteurs ? Quelles pourraient être les raisons de son refus de l'auto-traduction ? La traduction, reconnaît-il à plusieurs reprises, est un terrain de concessions où on est parfois contraint d'adopter une solution qu'on pourrait, en détournant Winnicott, qualifier de « good enough ». Mais on ne peut ignorer que la poésie de Bonnefoy est profondément imprégnée d'une pensée à forte consonance ontologique. Dès lors ses réticences ne pourraient-elles s'expliquer par l'impossibilité de perdre ne serait-ce qu'une parcelle de la pensée philosophique qui sous-tend son œuvre ?

Biography: Agrégée d'anglais, Layla Roesler enseigne à l'Ecole normale supérieure de Lyon. Elle est membre de l'équipe de recherche CERCC (Centre d'Etudes et de Recherches Comparées sur la Création). Elle prépare pour Princeton University une thèse de doctorat sur les rapports entre essai, poésie et philosophie dans l'œuvre d'Yves Bonnefoy. Ses recherches portent plus largement sur l'articulation entre littérature et philosophie à l'époque moderne et contemporaine.

S1 LITERARY AND CULTURAL INTER-RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN INDIA, ITS NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES AND THE WORLD

INTRODUCING THEME : LITERARY & CULTURAL INTERRELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN INDIA, ITS NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES AND THE WORLD

C. Mohan

Comparative Literature Association of India

Abstract: This workshop aims to study the travel of ideas, people and objects across cultures across geopolitical boundaries that separate the subcontinent into different nation states. In the theoretical milieu of discrete 'national' literatures or an aggregative 'world literature', this panel will emphasize the value of comparativism in both theory and practice to understand our common past and move towards a shared future. It will include scholars from India and its neighboring countries and the world, whose academic engagement with the multilingual literary culture, shared languages and literary histories proceeds from a comparative perspective. The workshop's main aim is to explore the links between the lives and cultures as evidenced in the histories of writing and orality across the subcontinent, emphasizing that Comparative Literature provides a methodology for studying the contactual relations that contribute to the formation of the plural culture which is characteristic to the subcontinent. This is an endeavor arising from the interactions of the ICLA Research Committee entitled Literary and Cultural Inter-relationships between India and its Neighboring Countries and the World. The papers contributed to this workshop would focus on the many potential sites for work and showcases diversity of the ongoing research using comparative methodology being collaboratively carried out by scholars in these areas, as part of the activities of the project. As such, the workshop articulates the activities of Comparative Literature in India with the pressing issues of theory and practice in the discipline globally, as evidenced by the concerns of this congress.

Biography: Dr. Chandra Mohan, Advisor International Higher Education CUG, Gandhinagar, General Secretary, Comp. Lit. Assn. of India

AMAN KI AASHA: INITIATIVES FOR PEACE AND NARRATIVES OF HEALING IN THE SUBCONTINENT

J. Jain

Institute for Research in Interdisciplinary Studies

Abstract: The present paper proposes to explore the possibilities for better relations which are being generated by the people of the subcontinent as a counter discourse to official positions and recurring tension on the borders with the hope of supporting a bridging of differences. Inheritors of similar histories and cultures, of shared languages and memories, of myth and narrative traditions but now separated by borders and restrictions, hostility and terrorism, what do these efforts signify? In 2008, the Pakistani newspaper Jung and The Times of India from India, launched a project Aman ki Aasha, in hope of peace and they have been regularly organizing meets between writers, poets, singers of both countries. SAARC, FOSWA is again a regular feature where intellectuals and creative artists meet to exchange views and strengthen the desire for peace. In addition to these, retrospection, nostalgia and a sense of loss all together have generated a new kind of thinking. There is an existential search for peace. Will this be strong enough to contest the opposing political centres within each country? And will it be strong enough to persist in the face of hostility?

The literary discourse has a longer life span than media and survives through translation, comparisons and criticism. This is another parallel discourse towards peace, a reaching out to readers across time and space. Sanwal Dhama's 'Malham' ('Ointment', Punjabi), Rajee Seth's 'Ruko', Intezar Hussain's ('Wait, Intezar Hussain', Hindi) from India, and Tahira Iqbal's 'Desha Nun' ('To Countries', Urdu-Punjabi), Intezar Hussain's 'Mornama' ('Chronicles of the Peacock', Urdu), Sorayya Khan's 'Noor and 5 Queens Road', (in English), are all narratives of healing, looking back at the past and diffusing the sense of other-centred evil and de-linking the massacre from individual action, re-examining the concept of guilt, absolving others of individual guilt, looking clinically at the madness of the moment and the hysterical reaction and transferring it to unknown pressures. The question they ask is whether it is possible to live within a circle of hatred and revenge and loss, or is there a need to remember and forgive? In this they also de-link forgetting from forgiving. Khan's 'Noor' looks closely at Pakistan's '71 war with its eastern wing and the possibility of crossing the prejudices of language, colour and belief. The emerging discourse of forgiveness is located in sub-continental tradition and thought and explores the possibilities of resisting violence, acquire an agency to interrupt this circumstantial forces. It is Arjuna's attitude in the Bhagwad Gita, which is explored and which redefines dharma. The paper works at three levels: literary working with memory and myth; Political, as the ideological conflicts are explored and as a counter-discourse to legalistic positions of guilt a, punishment, responsibility and forgiveness.

Biography: Prof. Jasbir Jain, Director, Institute for Research in Interdisciplinary Studies, Jaipur, India.

LOVE SONGS TO THE DIVINE: SUFI MUSIC IN INDIA AND PAKISTAN

A. Rahman

Jamia Milia Islamia (Central University)

Abstract: This presentation would begin by defining Sufi Music as musings of love addressed to the divine. It would refer, in this process, to its essential nature, its addressee(s), the sites of its performance, its singers/performers, as well as the emergence and remarkable development of this genre in India and Pakistan of our times.

In discussing the aspects mentioned above, it would be argued that sufi music may be read, both together and separately, as texts of literature, performance, faith, and culture. It would be shown that even while it has a certain ameliorative/therapeutic function and has a definite contemporary relevance; it interrogates the agencies of languages and communities, texts and traditions, sects and regions, faiths and beliefs. In this manner, sufi music strives to evolve and strengthen a syncretic tradition, characteristic of the religio-philosophical cultures of the East.

In building the penultimate argument, it would be posited that even while sufi music is addressed to Allah, His last prophet, as well as the pir, or the unseen master; it is also sung and performed for a variety of addressees. These addressees include the singers/performers themselves, as also the spiritually inclined, morally stricken, emotionally ravaged—the egalitarian and the elitist, the philistine and the philosopher, the anguished and the afflicted.

With reference to these arguments, a case would, finally, be made to show that there are striking resemblances and differences in the manner sufi music has evolved and matured in India and Pakistan. This would be argued in relation to the evolving forms of sufi music, the sites of its performance, and the variety of performers. It would involve an examination of the relationship between word and image, music and message, singer/performer and listener/onlooker, apart from the common tropes of Indo-Pak culture(s). On the whole, the presentation would appraise the context, meaning, and structure of sufi music as a genre, its socio-political function, and finally, its emergence as a fine blend of medium and message that combine divergent traditions of the oral, the folk, the popular, the elitist, and the filmic. To bring the argument to a close, it would be posited that sufi music aspires to perform a unique cultural function, apart from the spiritual and therapeutic ones, and that it has its immense relevance for the two nations of India and Pakistan, ensnared in complex plots of politicking today.

Biography: Prof. Anisur Rahman, Professor of English, Department of English, Jamia Milia Islamia (Central University),
New Delhi-110025.

LA COMPARAISON : ENJEUX PHILOSOPHIQUES / THE PHILOSOPHY OF COMPARISON

L'ESSENCE MATHÉMATIQUE DE LA LITTÉRATURE

M.S. Arouimi

Paris

Abstract: De grandes oeuvres littéraires ont été analysées par certains chercheurs comme des systèmes clos, mathématiquement organisés. Leurs intuitions favorisent l'idée d'une loi mathématique, qui s'exerce en effet dans les effets de récurrence lexicale (sur tous les plans du texte), soulignant la structure harmonisée de l'oeuvre. Dans certaines de ces oeuvres (chez Eichendorff, Conrad, Carlo Levi), le thème du "code chiffré" ou simplement du comptage révèle une semi-conscience de ce phénomène: quelque chose comme "le Nombre et l'Harmonie" selon Rimbaud. Le passéisme de cette pratique de l'art, qui échappe au calcul conscient, se nuance par la remise en cause paradoxale dont elle est l'objet. Au premier plan de la diégèse, la violence dualiste semble trahir la nature profonde des forces qui se canalisent dans l'espace harmonisé de l'oeuvre, entendue alors comme l'exorcisme d'une violence ou d'une contradiction très reculée, cernée par René Girard avec des arguments dont ces oeuvres mêmes vérifient la pertinence. Cette remise en cause déborde le cadre de l'esthétique littéraire: quand le sens de l'oeuvre oscille entre la métaphysique du Nombre et le "règne de la quantité" si désastreux, qui prend le visage du "progès" humain. Après Rimbaud, Ernst Jünger a su faire une synthèse poétique de ces problèmes dans son "lance-pierres", roman à clef où cet objet meurtrier s'impose comme le chiffre du règne de la symétrie dans l'espace textuel de ce roman Biography: Michel Arouimi Maître de conférences habilité, Littérature comparée, Université du Littoral a publié une centaine d'articles et plusieurs ouvrages, dont: LEs APocalypses secrètes (L'harmattan, 2007), Magies de Levi (Schéna, 2006), Vivre Rimbaud (Orizons, 2010), Jünger et ses dieux (2011).

CRITICISM AND THE "EVENT" OF LITERATURE: RECLAIMING THE LOST WITNESS

W.D. Melaney

American University in Cairo

Abstract: The basic assumption of the paper is that the critical paradigm that is dominant today limits the critic from understanding the 'event' of literature as a literary witness. The paper argues that (1) this paradigm can be traced back to T. S. Eliot's autotelic model and its long afterlife, but that (2) more recent critical models only vary, without replacing, this paradigm, so that (3) a new paradigm should be developed in which the 'event' of literature allows the critic to bear witness to what is both inside and outside of literature.

Eliot's autotelic model assumes that the work of criticism is 'about' literature rather than equivalent to literature as such. Thus, in "Hamlet and His Problems," Eliot argues that Shakespeare fails to provide a convincing "objective correlative" that would justify Hamlet's emotional response to his father's death and his uncle's usurpation of the throne. According to this reading, Hamlet's attempt to "express the inexpressibly horrible" runs counter to the ideal adequacy of literary form and verbal meaning. What this example really demonstrates, however, is that the autotelic model tends to confuse formal-aesthetic with evaluative criteria. Eliot's reading of Hamlet provides a test case for autotelic criticism, which severs the relationship between the 'event' of literature and the critic's reflections on literary form.

In the wake of Eliot and the New Critics, literary readers have been offered alternative models that have had the intention of freeing criticism from a concern with objective meaning, or of re-inventing criticism as a quasi-scientific discipline. Nonetheless, both tendencies perpetuate a basically Kantian paradigm that turns the 'event' of literature into an unknowable thing-in-itself. Poststructuralist critics allow the literary text to constitute the basis for creative variation in a critical mode, whereas cultural and historicist critics usually revive the autotelic model in a new guise. Poststructuralist critics have the advantage of responding to this crisis in a manner that undermines the whole notion of adequacy, but that also perpetuates (against its own deepest insights) the opposition between criticism and whatever that lies beyond literature's borders. Criticism, we might argue, is not about things but about texts; however, texts can embody events that both encompass language and exceed the scope of verbal inquiry.

The final part of the paper is concerned with the possibility of re-inventing criticism as a witness to the 'event' of literature.

This event (which might be theorized in terms of Lacan, Derrida and Nancy) is inscribed in texts, so that Hamlet, for instance, can be appreciated as a play that is about the "inexpressibly horrible." This does not mean that criticism should merely 'describe' an event that exceeds the framework of textual production. On the contrary, criticism bears witness to what occurs as an 'event' that requires literature but cannot be assimilated to literature. There is no event without literature, and yet the critic must demonstrate how literature is redefined whenever the event erupts in the text of writing.

Biography: William D. Melaney is Associate Professor in the Department of English and Comparative Literature at the American University in Cairo. He holds an MA in the English Language and Literature from the University of Chicago, and a PhD in comparative literature from Stony Brook University. He served as Chair from Fall 2004 to Spring 2006 and directed 20 MA theses during the past nine years. His current teaching responsibilities include upper-level courses in 19th-century, European literature, the history of literary criticism and modern critical theory. He normally offers a different version of the literature/philosophy interface in the spring term of each academic year.

Professor Melaney has published more than 35 articles in the fields of modern literature, philosophy and literary theory. He has published two books on modernism. "After Ontology: Literary Theory and Modernist Poetics" (SUNY Press, 2001) employs deconstruction and hermeneutics to reread some of the key texts in Anglo-American modernism, while "Material Difference: Modernism and the Allegories of Discourse" (Amsterdam and New York: Rodopi Press, 2012) focuses on European and transatlantic literature in tracing the origins of modernism to two philosophical discourses that suggest how the allegorical imagination mediates between art and time.

AN IRRECONCILABLE CONTRADICTION? COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND THE INCOMPARABILITY OF AESTHETIC AUTONOMY.

M. Eggers

University of Cologne

Abstract: Are there boundaries for comparative thinking and for comparisons of literary texts? Is there such a thing as an incomparable literary or aesthetic object? To give an answer to these questions, I propose to draw on historical material and go back to the beginnings of aesthetic theory. The idea that art and the aesthetic experience should be something that has its own rules and reasons of being comes up in German theory and philosophy of the late eighteenth Century. In the writings of Karl Philipp Moritz and Immanuel Kant, art is seen as autonomous and free of any determining influence from without. This leads both thinkers to their theoretical versions of the aesthetic experience as something that is strictly incomparable. In Moritz' definition, the beautiful can only be created spontaneously and without any previous reflection or concept. Therefore it lacks any point of comparison - both in the making and in its reception: to contemplate a work of art we need the capacity of taste as a counterpart to the spontaneous creative force of the artist. Both capacities have to be regarded as irrational and beyond the reach of any comparative contemplation ("Über die bildende Nachahmung des Schönen", 1788). Only two years later, in his ground-breaking "Critique of Judgment" (1790), Kant summarizes the rationalist theory of comparison as one of the most basic intellectual activities. Comparing objects allows us to classify and determine them. At the same time, Kant defines the aesthetic experience as being free of any interest and excludes the notion of the sublime from intellectual reasoning. It is his claim that the sublime is beyond the reach of comparison. Romantic theory remains within this conceptual framework, for instance in Friedrich Schlegel's history of literature and the arts, where he describes the beautiful and infinite as incomparable. Wilhelm Heinrich Wackenroder claims emphatically that we must behold an artistic masterpiece without any side glances, as a single and individual entity. According to his fictitious alter-ego, the "art-loving friar", even language, being a reflective medium, is incapable to adequately represent great works of art. Therefore, we should look at one work of art at a time, without thinking of other things to compare it with.

What conclusions can we draw from these highly influential idealistic and romantic positions? Do we have to take the alleged incomparability of art and the sublime into consideration when we critically observe literary texts and traditions, i.e. when we practise literary history within the methodological framework of comparative literature? Assuming that literature, the object of our discipline, is an art form, two options have to be discussed: Either the idealist claim of aesthetic autonomy is no longer relevant. It must be seen as an historical error that leads to a false or illusory way to think of works of art and can be explained with reference to the idealist and romantic discourse around 1800. Or, second option, we must conceive possibilities to integrate aesthetic autonomy into comparative literature's methods. And indeed, there are more recent positions that promote aesthetic autonomy under modern conditions (Adorno, Lyotard). They emphasize notions of modern literature and art that no longer try to represent reality or serve as mediums for specific meanings. Instead, they prefer works of art that seem to represent the irrepresentable and the unsaid. Whether positions like these can be stimulating for comparative discussions of literary texts, whether they might even suggest alternative methods of comparison or whether a comparative approach to literature rules out notions of aesthetic autonomy and the sublime in general will be the in the focus of the concluding reflections of my paper.

Biography: PhD 2002 University of Cologne; Since 2007 Wissenschaftlicher Mitarbeiter at the Institut für deutsche Sprache und Literatur, University of Cologne Publications include "Texte, die alles sagen. Erzählende Literatur des 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts und Theorien der Stimme" (2003); "Wissenschaftsgeschichte als Begriffsgeschichte. Terminologische Umbrüche im Entstehungsprozess der modernen Wissenschaften" (2009; ed. with Matthias Rothe); "Von Ähnlichkeiten und Unterschieden. Vergleich, Analogie und Klassifikation in Wissenschaft und Literatur (18./19. Jahrhundert)" (ed., 2011). Current research project about the history and epistemology of comparison in science and literature, 17.-19. century.

THE PROBLEM OF TECHINCIZATION OF KNOWLEDGE AND DIVISION OF LITERATURE AND PHILOSOPHY IN HEIDEGGER AND PIRANDELLO

P. Piredda
University of Oxford

Abstract: Since Plato, art and philosophy have remained distinct from the other sciences, yet at the same time they have also been paradoxically conjoined with them, like the two faces of Janus. In fact, they were fundamental constituents of paideia, i.e. the Greek education, although they pursued different and complementary aims. Philosophy, of which the natural sciences were part, was rooted in the pursuit of that objective knowledge known as episteme, i.e. the knowledge of all laws that rule over nature and therefore over mankind as part of it. On the other hand, the function of art was to unveil non-objectifiable knowledge, such as the ethical, which was fundamental for the formation of the personality (or the "self"), according to the Delphic motto which stated the main human duty: "know yourself" (Γνῶθι σεαυτίεα), that is, your feelings, your body, your history and above all your limits. For a long time, although the diverse areas of knowledge gradually tended to separate, the sciences remained united and represented the fundamental structure of the cultural and intellectual formation of the human being: several scientists and intellectuals, from Leonardo to Galilei, from Descartes to Vico, from Einstein to Levi rejected the division of the sciences as useless and harmful. Since the late nineteenth century, following the rise and establishment of Positivism, there has occurred the radical change that has caused Western society to separate art from philosophy and to consider the first as inferior. Martha Nussbaum has blamed this development on the scientific revolution and highlighted the original relationship between the sciences and other disciplines. Starting from such premises, in this paper I intend to investigate the connection between science and literature by outlining, through the comparison of Heidegger's philosophical speculation on technics to Pirandello's aesthetic speculation on literary creation, the substantial difference between humanistic and technical behaviour. The first investigates every problem from its origin, by rehabilitating Greek thought and by questioning the function of technics and its connection with diverse forms of knowledge (such as mathematics, physics, the Humanities and the arts). The other inherits the philosophical methods of Positivism and Utilitarianism, which consider science as technique and consequently claim that the Humanities should apply certain techniques in order to study the human sphere. I will develop my reflections on literature and philosophy by comparing Heidegger's notions of the problem of technicality, of the relationship between man and his world, and of the concepts of autonomy and originality with Pirandello's works, in particular his critical essays, in which he critiques the intrusion of the positive sciences into the domain of the arts, and at the same time claims that true works of art spring from feeling but live in philosophical reflection. Only under such circumstances can Pirandello consider artistic creation to be possible, which means that according to him literature consists in discovering new ways to represent and interpret the world in which we live. Otherwise, one must talk about empty reproductions of literary models, i.e. of literature as canon. In my argumentation I will also take into account the Greek conception of art as techné poiétique, i.e. the skill in using practical means and techniques to imitate life sub specie formae, with particular emphasis on Plato and Aristotle.

Bibliography Aristotle, The Complete Works of Aristotle, Princeton-Guildford: Princeton University Press, 1984. Martin Heidegger, Introduction to Metaphysics, London: Yale University Press, 2000. ----, On the Way to Language, New York: Harper & Row, 1971. ----, The End of Philosophy, New York: Harper & Row, 1973. ----, What is Called Thinking?, New York: Harper & Row, 1972. Werner Jaeger, Paideia: the Ideas of the Greek Culture, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1986. Martha C. Nussbaum, Love's Knowledge. Essays on Philosophy and Literature, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990. Luigi Pirandello, Saggi, poesie, scritti vari, Milan: Mondadori, 1993. ----, Tutte le novelle, 2 vol., Milan: Rizzoli, 2007. ----, Tutti i romanzi, 2 vol., Milan: Mondadori, 2007. ----, Tutto il teatro, Milan: Bompiani, 2004. Plato, The Dialogues of Plato, New Haven-London: Yale University Press, 1985.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Patrizia Piredda was awarded her first degree in Arts (Literature) by the University of Rome “La Sapienza” in 2001 with a thesis on Metastasio, and she was awarded her second degree in Philosophy by the same Institution in 2010 with a thesis entitled The Origin of the Mask of the Dandy: George Bryan Brummell. At present she is editing this thesis in order to publish it as a book. She earned her PhD in 2008 with a thesis on The Feeling of Tragic and Contemporary Aesthetics. At present she finishes to write her MLitt research at the University of Oxford entitled The Aesthetician, the Superman, the Warrior and the Mystic. A Nietzschean Interpretation of the Rhetorical Construction of Self-Myth in D’Annunzio and she delivers seminars for graduate students at the University of Messina (DAMS). Major publications: “Rapporto tra Estetismo e cultura di massa fin de siècle: dall’Inghilterra all’Italia”; “Filosofia e arte in Pirandello. Tra l’opera testuale e la rappresentazione attoriale”; “Enrico IV di Pirandello: l’attore, il personaggio, la metafora”; “L’idea dell’etica dell’artista di Pirandello nella rappresentazione tragica dell’Enrico IV”; “Interventionism in 1915 and the Man of Letters: The Ethical Commitments of Serra and the ‘Armed Poet’ D’Annunzio”; “La costruzione retorica e le implicazioni etiche dell’uso dell’immagine dell’eroe nel discorso interventista di Quarto di Gabriele d’Annunzio”.

S2 APPROCHES COMPAREES DES GENRES LITTERAIRES / COMPARATIVE APPROACHES TO GENRE

LA NOTION DE COMPARABLE ET DE L'INCOMPARABLE DANS LA LITTERATURE FANTASTIQUE

N. Daftarchi

Université de Tabriz

Abstract: Le «fantastique» est un aspect connu et en même temps méconnu dans la littérature de toutes les époques. Il réside sur la création d'un climat singulier sans référence extérieure. Cette notion littéraire s'ouvre sur un univers à la fois sacralisé et maudit et provoque ainsi la réflexion profonde. Les frontières de cet univers fantastique restent toujours indéfinies. Le fantastique est la clef de voûte de la pensée chimérique et acquiert une portée extra-cosmique vers l'au-delà. La littérature fantastique contribue aux champs cognitifs en dehors de notre esprit humain. Le royaume fantastique reste impénétrable à la compréhension humaine qui s'attache à la raison. Le fantastique conjugue le mélange des formes circulaires et des formules illimités émanées du mystère et de la magie inconsciente des fantômes narrées. L'univers fantastique fascine l'esprit humain et exerce les modèles d'une nature terrifiante et abstraite où les êtres et les choses participent dans le jeu virtuel des inversions. L'univers fantastique est situé géographiquement au carrefour d'une envergure entre la réalité quotidienne et l'invraisemblable.

L'homme a toujours rêvé de dépasser les limites de la réalité dans l'objectif d'exprimer la condition humaine d'une manière symbolique. La littérature est une sorte de représentation de la vie quotidienne. Les frontières de l'univers fantastiques ne sont pas parfaitement saisissables. Les techniques stylistiques fournissent normalement une base pour la construction de cet univers. Il est inévitable donc de trouver les aspects comparable et incomparable dans les profondeurs de cet univers magique. Dans cet article, nous avons l'intention de souligner les notions de «comparable» et de «l'incomparable» dans la littérature fantastique et de montrer l'utilité de ces aspects dans ce registre littéraire.

Biography: Nasrin DAFTARCHI Doctorante, Université de Tabriz

FICTION AUTOBIOGRAPHIQUE ET AUTOBIOGRAPHIE FICTIONNELLE

J. Oeri

Universidad Complutense de Madrid

Abstract: Le deuxième axe du congrès « Comparables et incomparables ? » nous propose de réfléchir sur la pertinence du comparatisme dans les études monographiques. La littérature comparée se définit en général comme la comparaison d'œuvres de différents auteurs, de différents pays, de différentes langues ou de différents arts. Cependant, notre but dans cette communication c'est de comparer deux œuvres du même auteur, mais en différentes langues. Nous voudrions démontrer la pertinence de l'étude comparée dans une analyse monographique à travers la comparaison de deux romans de Hector Bianciotti. D'origine piémontaise, né en Argentine, Bianciotti a commencé à écrire ses premiers romans en espagnol, il en a publié sept entre 1955 et 1983. Cependant, il vit à Paris depuis 1961 et commence à publier ses œuvres écrites directement en français à partir de 1985. Même si ce changement de langue a été déterminant pour sa carrière et son style littéraires, nous pouvons trouver dans tous ses romans des traits communs, notamment les sujets autobiographiques. De ce point de vue, la fiction autobiographique La busca del jardín (1977) écrite en espagnol et l'autobiographie fictionnelle Ce que la nuit raconte au jour (1992) en langue française nous offrent deux visions ou plutôt deux manières de décrire le même thème : l'enfance. Dans cette communication nous voudrions proposer la comparaison de ces deux textes mentionnés de la façon suivante : premièrement, nous voudrions comparer les romans à l'aide d'une analyse narratologique et, deuxièmement, nous étudierons les thèmes communs aux deux œuvres. D'une part, nous analyserons la construction et la segmentation des textes, le narrateur, les personnes, le temps et l'espace ; et d'autre part les thèmes de la mémoire, de la famille, de la mort, de l'intimité et de la solitude et leur configuration dans les romans choisis. Avec cette comparaison nous voudrions examiner l'expression de l'identité dans deux langues différentes et l'influence de cette divergence sur l'expression. Cette étude nous mènera à affirmer que la comparaison peut donner des résultats pertinents sur le fonctionnement des genres (autofiction et autobiographie) et sur l'importance du passage de la langue maternelle à la langue étrangère. Nous proposons donc l'étude comparée comme une manière de définir l'espace autobiographique de Hector Bianciotti.

Biography: Diplômée en Philologie Française en 2011 après avoir suivi ses études, premièrement à l'Université Eötvös Loránd de Budapest (ELTE) et, puis, à l'Université Complutense de Madrid. Master en cours en Etudes Littéraires de cette dernière université où l'inscription de sa thèse, qui s'intitule Poétiques de l'exil dans l'écriture des auteurs franco-hongrois du XX^e siècle : László Dormandi; Lorand Gaspar; Christine Arnothy; György Ferdinandy; Agota Kristof y Katalin Molnar, est également prévue pour octobre de 2012. Son centre d'intérêt est la littérature comparée, plus exactement l'écriture des auteurs bilingues. Ses premières publications : Compte-rendu de Les écrivains face à la doxa de Jean-Pierre Martin, Revue Thélème de la Universidad Complutense de Madrid (en presse) et l'article « Conflictos entre Occidente y Oriente: Endre Ady en París y la creación de un mito », Peter Lang (en presse). Participations à des congrès: Xenografías II (organisé par la Société Espagnole de Littérature Générale et Comparée [SELGYC] et British Comparative Literature Association [BCLA], Barcelona, septembre 2011) ; Mitologías modernas: iconos, reescrituras, arquetipos (organisé par le Master en Etudes Littéraires de l'Université Complutense de Madrid, Madrid, mai 2012). Membre du Groupe d'Investigation ESCODIS (Etudes contrastives du discours) de l'UCM et de la Société Espagnole de Littérature Générale et Comparée (SELGYC). Professeur de français à l'Académie de Langues Union Pacific à Madrid.

LE JOURNAL INTIME ET LES ESSAIS INACHEVÉS DE GUIMARÃES ROSA : PARLER DE L'AUTRE A PARTIR DE LUI-MÊME

M.F..R. Gama

Universidade de São Paulo

Abstract: Selon le point de vue de l'écrivain brésilien Autran Dourado, les romanciers brésiliens « acceptent passivement la thèse (qui leur a été imposée) selon laquelle ils devraient être tranquilles, qu'ils devraient être toujours silencieux, sans jamais théoriser, sans jamais discuter de sa production littéraire, sans jamais analyser ou expliquer ce qu'ils ont fait, pourquoi ou comme, c'est-à-dire jamais donner à voir leur poétique ». Pour l'écrivain brésilien Guimarães Rosa, auteur de Diadorim, cela était vrai dans le cas de ses publications. Cependant, son journal intime écrit en France (1949-1950) et deux essais inachevés sont très importants parce qu'ils montrent l'élaboration d'un discours critique sur autres écrivains, brésiliens et étrangers, pertinents pour penser la construction littéraire de Guimarães Rosa et sa position dans le champ littéraire brésilien. Le journal Paris, aussi appelé Nautikon, a des extraits sur sa propre pratique littéraire et sa relation avec d'autres littératures. Le remarquable de cette pratique est qu'elle se révèle une espèce de recherche fictionnel : il y a dans la bibliothèque de Guimarães Rosa beaucoup d'éditions des journaux intimes de diverses auteurs, par exemple, de Jean Cocteau; Ernst Junger; André Gide; Søren Kierkegaard; Henri Frederic Amiel; Alexis Carrel; Charles Ferdinand Ramuz; Michel de Montaigne; Jules Renard; Barbey d'Aurevilly; Johann Gottfried Herder; Julien Green; Henry Marie Beyle; Rudolf Apponyi. Quelques volumes portent des annotations de sa main, connues sous le nom de marginalia. Quand Guimarães Rosa laisse des traces et des commentaires dans un livre de philosophie est-ce différent de quand il note dans un journal? Quel genre de dialogue se mène entre lui et l'écriture intime et fragmentaire des diaristes? Guimarães Rosa montre une lecture intéressée par le discours autobiographique des diaristes et par les mécanismes de représentation qu'ils utilisent. Le journal de Julien Green (1943-1945) a été l'objet d'un récit de Guimarães Rosa parce que Green raconte un type d'événement qui a été raconté aussi par un autre écrivain brésilien, Érico Veríssimo, dans son journal publié Le retour du chat noir (écrit entre 1943 et 1944). L'événement raconté est important parce qu'il fait la mise en scène d'un problème pertinent à la littérature brésilien : la représentation de la réalité et l'engagement politique. Les essais inachevés présentent des observations sur les questions impliquées dans la création littéraire (la lecture, la traduction, la nouveauté) et sur la question de l'influence littéraire ignorée par l'écrivain, c'est-à-dire, la manière dont un écrivain peut, inconsciemment, se joindre aux autres. Je propose l'analyse des essais, un type d'écriture ouvertement critique, et aussi du texte Teatrinho [Petit théâtre], où Guimarães Rosa fait la comparaison entre le journal de Julien Green et Érico Veríssimo afin de montrer comment l'écriture sur d'autres écrivains peut être significative pour la compréhension de la littérature brésilienne.

Biography: Mônica Gama est étudiante en doctorat à l'Université de São Paulo et ses recherches portent sur le processus de création de l'écrivain Guimarães Rosa, en particulier sur l'autoreprésentation de l'auteur dans ses manuscrits et les ouvrages publiés. C'est auteur des articles tels que "L'espace scriptural de l'accumulation dans les manuscrits de Guimarães Rosa" dans la revue en ligne Recto Verso (www.revuerectoverso.com).

FIRST PAGE GENERATION - PORTUGUESE WRITERS AND INTELLECTUALS COLLABORATION IN JOURNALISM IN THE LAST QUARTER OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

I.D.V. Trabucho

Universidade Aberta

Abstract: Concerning the strong relation between Literature and Journalism during the nineteenth century we intend to analyze the importance of the press in these times, especially the feuilleton in which the chronicle remains. The newspaper must have been by then the birthplace of many writers who made use of that hybrid kind of text to convey a complex social portrait. The press correspondents abroad sent their personal views of those European cultures, through their abundant chronicle production, reporting and making comments on many and variegated aspects on the actuality caught by their own eyes. From 1875 to 1900, many writers, intellectuals and artists were press correspondents to many Portuguese and Brazilian newspapers. Their chronicles and other non-fictional prose gave the newspaper readers the traces of the time. In spite of the personal and geographical distances, names like Rafael Bordalo Pinheiro, Eça de Queirós, Ramalho Ortigão, Guerra Junqueiro, Jaime Batalha Reis, among others writers and journalists belonging to the Geração de 70 offered their Brazilian and Portuguese public readers visions of the political, cultural, literary, artistic and social views of the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

Biography:

Born 26.02.1966 in Lisbon Graduation in Portuguese Language and Literature (1989) University of Lisbon, Letras Faculty
Master in Interdisciplinar Portuguese Studies - Universidade Aberta Lisbon Pos-Graduation in Information and Libraries
Teacher and researcher in Portuguese Literature and Culture - ES Cidadela (Cascais) and Universidade Aberta (Lisbon)

S1 IDEOLOGIE, HEGEMONIE, RELIGION / IDEOLOGY, HEGEMONY, RELIGION

BETWEEN "PSIAKREW" AND "JA JA": LINGUISTIC BORDER CROSSING IN SHOLEM ALEICHEM'S MOTL PEYSI DEM KHAZNS

M. Boyden
Ghent University

Abstract: In Multilingual America (2008), an illuminating study of various non-English traditions in U.S. literature, Lawrence Rosenwald approaches Sholem Aleichem's Motl peysi dem khazns (Motl the Cantor's Son) as a "great language novel" in the vein of Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn. Since both works highlight the comical aspects of language encounters from the perspective of a boy character, Rosenwald regards them as typically American language stories, departing in significant ways from comparable European fictions. However, the attempt to isolate the distinctive American features of the Motl cycle leads Rosenwald to ignore the complexity of the first part of the novel (tracing Motl's journey from fictional Kasrilevke over the border to Brod, Lemberg, to Cracow, Vienna, Antwerp, and finally to London, where he and his family board the ship to America), which is characterized as a mere preparation for the "quasi-Platonic dialogues on language" in the American context. The main aim of my paper is to complement, if not to counteract, this perspective by showing that the opposition on which Rosenwald's analysis hinges, that between Europe as a "familiar linguistic world" (but also the place of adulthood and the ultimate destruction of Jewish culture) and America as a crucible where immigrant languages freely interact (or so it seems), fails to capture some of the deeper intricacies of Sholem Aleichem's novel, and of Jewish migrant fiction in general. Thus, I show how a couple of the more interesting linguistic encounters in Motl peysi are those occurring in transit constellations conforming neither to Motl's native shtetl Kasrilevke nor to the (equally fictitious?) American melting pot. This is the case, for instance, in a scene where Motl tries to make sense of the fact that everybody in the port city of Antwerp appears to speak German (in reality Dutch or Flemish), even while the country does not belong to the Germans. His confusion is further heightened when he notices fellow Jews uttering Turkish prayers in the Antwerp prayerhouses. The comic relief of the Motl cycle derives in large part from the protagonist's reluctance to give up his boyish assumption that the world is divided into two language groups – "mentshn" or people (speaking Yiddish) and German-speaking Gentiles –, while his experiences in transit clearly speak to the contrary. It is significant that Sholem Aleichem composed Motl during his so-called "wander years" between his removal from Russia following the Kiev pogrom and his decision to settle in New York upon the outbreak of the First World War (Berkowitz 1926). During extended lecture tours across Europe, he read from the novel to large audiences, which responded with standing ovations, as suggested by an enthusiastic report in the Antwerp-based (German-language) Zionist monthly Hatikwah that appeared after the writer's passage in the city on January 3, 1914. Drawing on such archival materials and relating them to the neglected first part of the Motl cycle, my paper offers a reconstruction of the transnational readership of Sholem Aleichem's masterpiece as well as its transnational genesis. By going beyond a nationally circumscribed reading, I hope to bring Sholem Aleichem's work into the orbit of recent theorizing about Yiddish as a mixed language, in particular David Kaplan's characterization of Reb Nakhman's writings as intrinsically deterritorialized, i.e. "unbound by national borders or political authorities" (Kaplan 2011: 29).

Biography: I am an Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Applied Language Studies at Ghent University College (Belgium). Prior to my appointment, I was a post-doctoral researcher at the University of Leuven, a fellow at the German Historical Institute and a Fulbright scholar at the Harvard University Longfellow Institute, a center dedicated to the multiple linguistic traditions of the United States. I received my undergraduate and doctoral degrees from the University of Leuven in a program that included periods of study at Queen's University Belfast, the University of Edinburgh and the University of British Columbia in Vancouver.

READING TRANSLATION AS A CRITICAL TOOL TO UNDERSTAND THE FORMATION OF SHIA IDENTITY THROUGH THE KARBALA NARRATIVES IN BENGAL

E. Halder
Jadavpur University

Abstract: Abstract for Congress Session: Sub-Theme: Comparative Literature and Translation Studies: Is Translation a Critical Approach?

With the increasingly public character of religion especially with the proliferation of new media, even a minority religion cannot be explained in isolation. Transnational communication contributed in widening the meaning of region/home where the home has lost its pure regionality in the ever-expanding arena of communication. The distance between the centre of knowledge production and reception tends to be zero within the communicative realm of a 'networked' society. Reawakening of a global-Islam envisaged a virtual community beyond the identification of nation and virtual and digital religious literacy invigorated religious subjectivities. After the Iranian revolution in 1979 and the rise of new religious sensibilities in Iraq, the creation of a new people through the channels of new media can be discerned in the efforts of Shia community as well. As new media reconfigures its audience as communities, the audience also tries to reformulate the common factors to reduce differences-within in the act of receiving. Does that mean a simple homogenization of a global knowledge emanating from the centre to reach the periphery in zero time? That global Islam is eating away the polyphony of the Islamicate worlds expressed in the conflicting and converging forms of reformist movements, popular piety and lived practices like Muharram, Milad and Urs? Or should we focus on the moments of reception of the global by the local to understand different layers of adaptability and shifts that occurred, if at all, within the Shia network society? The core ideology of the Shia community is centered on the battle of Karbala where Imam Husayn, the Prophet's second grandson, was martyred by the enemy. This battle gave rise to a sense of victimhood theosophically interpreted and socially realized throughout centuries in the commemoration of Muharram. Elegies (nawha, marsiya) are recited and battle narratives are read as a textual remembrance of the grief and pain suffered by the Imam and his companions with accompanying high physical expressions like chest beating, wailing and self-flagellation to identify with the martyr's pain. It is the circulation of these texts in the audio-visual digitized format that has brought Shia communities in Bengal, both rural and urban, in new channels of global communication. In rural Bengal with no access to high Islamic languages, from the late 1990s these texts continue to get translated into Bengali and re-digitized at local studios for further dissemination. I will try to explore translation studies as a critical tool to understand the complex transfers of theme, genre and meaning in the Shia network community where even the remotest Shia villages of Bengal are connected to the global Shia society through the dissemination of digitized religious texts imported from Pakistan (in Urdu) and Iran (tele-serials on the Karbala battle). In this paper, I shall try to engage with Translation Studies to understand 'worldly linguistic exchanges' that can help delineating post-national complexities of community identities articulated through religious literature. My line of inquiry will be to see when petty religious authorities in rural Bengal translate nawhas into Bengali, what are the politics of seeking conceptual and structural equivalence for the source text. While trying to bring an ordinary Shia mass under the structured, global, sacred schedule through this project of translation and further transmission, whether it fulfils the desire to be the same or localizes the global needs to be inquired. In the standardization of gestural and affective expressions of piety, the hegemonic is also multiplied through the act of translation. What gets translated, what remains untranslatable, what are the semantic dilemmas and differences are questions that can only offer a theoretical framework to imagine the connection between the global religious discourse of power and peripheral expressions. As Comparative Literature stands at the crossroads of moving beyond literary texts to other forms of art and also to non-literary linguistic expressions, the study of Shia religious texts after globalization and the advent of new media may answer many questions about the formation of global (linguistic) community and its aspiring local variants.

Biography: Academic Qualifications: First Class first in the Final Post Graduation Examination in Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, 2002, with 66.33% marks First Class first in the Final Graduation Examination in Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, 2000, with 61.67% marks Fellowship Obtained: Charles Wallace Short Term Fellowship 2011 Research & Documentation Fellowship, India Foundation for the Arts, to work on the contemporary Muharram traditions, 2011-2013 SRTT-Women's Studies, Jadavpur University, Field Work Grant to work on the women's majlises performed during Muharram, 2010 Papiya Ghosh Memorial Short Term Fellowship, Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta to work on the marsiya tradition of medieval Bengal, 2009 Junior Research Fellowship, University Grants Commission, India, 2004 Workshop/School Attended: National Workshop on Oral Narratives: Methods, Meanings, Ethics, organized by the Faculty of Arts, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 1-2 April, 2011 Spring School on Mahabharata, organized by the Indian Institute of Advanced Studies, Shimla, 14 -28 April, 2010 Extended Workshop on Social History on Gender, Ethnicity and Culture under the South-South Exchange Programme for Research on the History of Development organized by CODESRIA in collaboration with SEPHIS, Dakar, Senegal, 5 – 25 March, 2006 Cultural Studies Workshop on Cultures of the Body, organized by the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta in collaboration with SEPHIS and FORD Foundation, Goa, 25 -29 January, 2006 Seminar Papers Presented: Singing, Beating, Wailing: Notes on Women's majlises in North 24 Parganas, presented at the SRTT Fellowship presentation Seminar, 11 July, 2010, organized by the School of Women's Studies, Jadavpur University, Fluid Signs of Immortality: Reading Desire and Pleasure in the Mahabharata, presented at the Spring School on Mahabharata, organized by the Indian Institute of Advanced Studies, Shimla, 19 April 2010 'Exotica' or Ethics? Reviewing the Aesthetics and Politics of Contemporary Manipuri Theatre, presented at the National Seminar on Society and Literature: Interdisciplinary Transactions, 17 March 2010, organized by the Department of English in Collaboration with ICSSR –NERC Come and Listen to Me O Sister: An Ethnography of Grouping, Moving, Singing and Listening in a River-centric Ritual, delivered the Tenth Sukhalata Rao Memorial lecture organized by the School of Women's Studies, Jadavpur University, 2009 Imamere Chhari Nahi Jabo Kadachan: Syncretism in the Marsiya Tradition of Medieval Bengal, presented at the two-day conference international conference organized by the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta, 19-20 June, 2009 The Moving, Material and Maternal Body: A Reader-Response to 'Tistaparer Brittanto' by Debes Roy in the Time of Postcoloniality, organized by the Department of philosophy, Assam University Silchar, 16 March 2009 Migration of Genre and Myths in the Junghama Tradition of Bengal, presented at the Nineth Biennial International Conference on Comparative Literature, organized by

Comparative Literature Association of India, University of Hyderabad, 28-31 January 2009 Arriving at Platform No 4A: Mobility and Dwelling in the Ladies' Compartments of the Local Trains, presented at the two-day international conference organized by the Centre for Studies in social sciences, Calcutta in collaboration with the Diaspora Cities Research Team and The City Centre, Queen Mary, University of London, 12-13 December 2008 Ek Katra Pani Bine: A Mapping of the Karbala in Bengali Experience, at the Seminar on Perso –Arabic and South Asian Literatures, organized by the Centre of Advanced Study, Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, 28 February 2008 Sitting on the Dust, Singing by the Road: Writing Women in the Post-colonial Era, in Palaver VI, at the Forum for Scholars of African Studies, organized by the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 25 November 2007 "Come and Listen to Me, O Sister": Analyzing the transformations of a female-centric North Bengal ritual into a public festival, at the Eastern Region Seminar on Feminism and the Production of Knowledge, organized by the Indian Association of Women's Studies and the School of Women's Studies, Jadavpur University, 5 - 6 February 2007 Of Silk, Scrolls and Selves: Placing travelogues 'in difference' as two contemporary travelers follow Xuangzang's 7th century Bukhara-Bihar route, at the Eighth Biennial International Conference on Comparative Literature, organized by Comparative Literature Association of India and the Department of Comparative Literature, 18-20 January 2008 Nails and Seaweeds: aggression and compassion in the imagination of sexual act, at the forum on Gender-Bias in the Acts of Sex organized by Changers' Foundation Paribartak , at the Bangla Academy, 8 September 2006 Knowing How to Give Birth: the Epistemic Status of Gender-Specific Performances, at the DSA seminar on Literature as Knowledge System, organized by the DSA Programme, Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, 8 July 2005 Message of the Mute God: An Intervention in the Elitist Universe, presented at Seventh CLAI Biennial International Conference on Comparative Literature, organized by Comparative Literature Association of India and Department of Comparative Literature, Veer Narmad South Gujarat University, Surat, 15-17 March, 2005 "Where did all the water come from?": Politics of the Big Dams and An Alternative Ethics of the Local, presented at the Conference on Canadian Studies, Organized by the Centre for Canadian Studies, Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 23 March 2005 The Small God's Wisdom: Parallel Ecological Ethics in Two Worlds – India and Canada, presented at XXI IACS International Conference on Canadian studies, organized by the Indian Association for Canadian Studies at Osmania University, Hyderabad, 15 February 2005 Bangaon Local Sings Along: Bodies, Gossip and Songs in A Ladies Compartment, a presentation at the panel discussion at the Orality Today Seminar organized by the Department of Comparative Literature and the Department of English, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 5 July 2004 Global Myth and Polyphonic Lies: A Study in Development Discourse, at the Cultural Studies Seminar and Workshop, organized by the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 24 January 2004 Politics of the 'Beautiful': Reading the Politics of Colour in a Post-colonial Post- modern Context, in Palaver II, Forum for Scholars of African Studies, organized by the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 18 August 2003 Colonial Tongue and Post-colonial Slip: the Author's Position in a Bilingual Hybridity, in Sixth CLAI Biennial International Conference on Comparative Literature, organized by Comparative Literature Association of India and Central Institute of Indian Languages, Mysore, 6-8 January 2003 Bitter Fruits of Liberty: A Study in Post-colonial Senegalese Novel, in Palaver I, Forum for Scholars of African Studies, organized by the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 12 September 2002 Research Papers Published: Knowing How to Give Birth: Narrating the lives of Bagharu and Madarir Ma in Tistaparar Brittanto, in Jadavpur Journal of Comparative Literature, Volume 42, 2007 Burima Kikore Gabhur Holo: Nari, Nisarga O Noitkata :Rajbongshi Samaje Nadi-Dharana, has been published in the Bengali journal Tepantar, September 2006 Talking Tongues, Speaking Gestures: Oral Narratives as Performance Text, in Literary Studies in India: Genology, DSA Textbook on Comparative Literature, A Jadavpur University Production, 2003 Ar Bullet Geye Othe Gaan : Ngugi Wa Thiong'O evam Wole Soyinkar Likhon Rajniti, in the Bengali journal Ababhas, Oct , 2002 Muktir Teto Swad: Uttor Oupanibeshik Senegaliya Novel in the Bengali journal Kabitirtha, Aug, 2002 Books Published: Majnu Shah, a book for the young-adults on the Fakir Uprising in eighteenth century Bengal, Papyrus, Kolkata, 2001

KIM SUYOUNG, THE FIRST COSMOPOLITAN POET OF KOREA

J. Han
Gyeongsang National University

Abstract: Kim Suyoung, born in 1921 in colonial Seoul, was at the center of the turbulent period of Korea that had been quickly transformed into a modernized, westernized, and urbanized society till he faced a sudden death in 1968. He not only witnessed as a poet the rapid changes of Seoul from the emancipation of Korea in 1945 to the Korean War in 1950, to the April 19 students' revolution in 1960 and the May 16 military mutiny in 1961, but also struggled through hardships of life as a victim of Colonialism, the World War II and the Korean War. Surely, this experience of his is unusual and unique enough to shape his writing into a modernist bricolage in which the world aviation and the baggage of the local form a mutual imbrication. This paper, therefore, makes a close reading of Kim's three representative poems, "The Fall," "The Enormous Root," and "The Variations of Love Sonata" and examines his cosmopolitan poetic vision which cocoons an intense local scrutiny of his time. To be specific, this paper takes note of Kim as a translator because Kim's reading of such world writers as Andre Breton, Georges Bataille, Charles Baudelaire, Jean Cocteau, Stephane Mallarme, Paul Vallery, Steven Spender, George Scheinner, Richard Stern, Lionel Trilling, and Joseph Frank, Bertolt Brecht, Andrey Voznesensky, Vladimir Vladimirovich Mayakovsky, Boris Pasternak, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn along with Japanese Avant-garde poets, greatly affected his cosmopolitan poetics and his sense of modern subjectivity as he once said, "the secret of my poetry might be revealed when my translations are read." More focused on Kim's cosmopolitan reading rather than limited to the controversy over his intellectualism, this paper, based upon Heidegger's existential and phenomenological explorations of Being, tries to illuminate his cosmopolitan poetic simulacra of Modern Korea without forgetting to shed a light on his detailed descriptions of local geography. Ultimately, this paper tries to suggest that Kim Suyoung's poetry provides an intellectual portal to encounter polychromic cultures of modern Korea in which the West and the East collided with one another and got amalgamated into a new reality.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: JIHEE HAN is Associate professor of English at Gyeongsang National University, the Republic of Korea. She has published many essays on Adrienne Rich, Walt Whitman, and Langston Hughes, World Literature, and Korean poetry and novels. Korean translation of Collected Poems of Adrienne Rich (Moonji 2011), "Ecology and Korean Ghangho Poetics" Ecology and Poetics, ed. by Franca Bellarsi (Peter Lang 2011), "On Korea" in Cultural History of Reading, ed. by Gabrielle Watling (Greenwood 2010), "Korean Novelists and Novels" in World Novels, ed. by Michael Sollars (Facts on File 2009), "Korean Poets and Poetry" in World Poetry, ed. by Victoria Arana (Facts on File 2008).

S1 LES RELATIONS ORIENT/OCCIDENT / EAST-WEST RELATIONSHIPS

DEWESTERNIZATION AND RESINICIZATION : ON ISSUES AND METHODS OF CHINESE AESTHETICS IN GLOBAL ERA

Z. Hu
Southwest University

Abstract: Since the 1990s contemporary Chinese aesthetics has gradually fallen into depressions and became silent after its two periods of heated domestic debates in the 1950s and 1980s. Nowadays it is high time for our scholars to make reflections on these setbacks and frustrations. Firstly we need to clarify what are the real problems that contemporary Chinese aesthetics encounters. To be short, that is, the arrival of globalization has caused a series of profound turns from aesthetics to arts. With the further expansion and penetration of globalization, theoretical aesthetic subjects and relevant problems are more salient, including the shift of contemporary aesthetic research paradigm, the basic method that we borrow western theories to interpret Chinese art works and aesthetic phenomenon, the constant advancing interdisciplinary research, etc. which are seriously taken into my account. My main aim in this paper will be to enlighten on the ways and explore some workable methods, which are significant to the development of the present Chinese aesthetics in this new century.

Biography: HU ZHENGLI is a teacher at Southwest University in China.

THE DIFFERENCES OF THINKING MODE BETWEEN CHINESE AND WESTERN HERMENEUTICS

X. Deng
China Three Gorges University

Abstract: There is an obvious binary opposition between subjectivity and objectivity in the thinking mode of western hermeneutics. If we think that writer's intention and reader's interpretation are same importance, and we will find that almost various western hermeneutics always centers on texts and interpreters. Hans-Georg Gadamer and Eric Donald Hirsch are the typical representatives of the theoretical tendencies. Yi-yi-ni-zhi and Shi-wu-da-gu contain dialectical spirit which is basic principle of ancient Chinese hermeneutics. Yi-yi-ni-zhi means that reader infers writer's original intention from his own experiences, and Shi-wu-da-gu means the poem cannot be elucidated totally. Yi-yi-ni-zhi emphasizes on objectivity, because it targets to rebuilt writer's intension. Shi-wu-da-gu stress on subjectivity, because it asserts that reader participate in to construct artworks. They are quite different from the western hermeneutic. We can find a way to solve the problem of binary opposition from Ancient Chinese hermeneutic.

Biography: Deng Xinhua is a professor at China Three Gorges University, vice chairman of Hubei Literature Association. He has published 5 books and more than 80 papers.

WESTERN THEORY AND CHINESE TEXT: FROM LIFE AESTHETICS TO ENVIRONMENTAL AESTHETICS

X. Dai
Southwest University

Abstract: Mike Featherstong's "the aestheticization of everyday life" spreads in China, and again arises the dispute of the legality of western theories in China, and in fact it is a puzzle that how to deal with the relationships between Western theory and Chinese text. The aestheticization of everyday life and consumerism are closely linked and is an international phenomenon and has enjoyed a long history. Li Yu's life aesthetics grows up in China. On the one hand, it has something in common with Featherstong's theory, and on the other, both are different. The former has much more contents than the latter. It provides immense space for the study of the relationships between Li Yu and Fetherstone's theory for constructing a universal aesthetic theory which is not based on the western-center orientation.

Biography: Dai Xun is a professor at Southwest University, Chairman of Chongqing Association for Aesthetics, Vice Chairman of Chongqing Comparative Literature Association. He has published 3 books and more than 130 papers, and some of them in English. He attended the 32th Annual Conference of the Southern Comparative Literature Association (September 2006, Georgia) and the 2005 Annual Meeting of the American Comparative Literature Association (March 2005, Pennsylvania), etc

THE DIFFERENCES OF THINKING MODE BETWEEN CHINESE AND WESTERN HERMENEUTICS

D. Xinhua

China Three Gorge UNiversity

Abstract: There is an obvious binary opposition between subjectivity and objectivity in the thinking mode of western hermeneutics. If we think that writer's intention and reader's interpretation are same importance, and we will find that almost various western hermeneutics always centers on texts and interpreters. Hans-Georg Gadamer and Eric Donald Hirsch are the typical representatives of the theoretical tendencies. Yi-yi-ni-zhi and Shi-wu-da-gu contain dialectical spirit which is basic principle of ancient Chinese hermeneutics. Yi-yi-ni-zhi means that reader infers writer's original intention from his own experiences, and Shi-wu-da-gu means the poem cannot be elucidated totally. Yi-yi-ni-zhi emphasizes on objectivity, because it targets to rebuilt writer's intension. Shi-wu-da-gu stress on subjectivity, because it asserts that reader participate in to construct artworks. They are quite different from the western hermeneutic. We can find a way to solve the problem of binary opposition from Ancient Chinese hermeneutic.

Biography: Deng Xinhua is a professor at China Three Gorges University, vice chairman of Hubei Literature Association. He has published 5 books and more than 80 papers.

S2 LE GENRE COMME PROBLÉMATIQUE TRANSNATIONALE / GENRE AS A TRANSNATIONAL PROBLEM

LYRICAL EXPRESSION OF FEMINISM TRANSCENDING CROSS CULTURAL BORDERS: A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF LOVE POETRY OF HABBA KHATOON AND EMILY BRONTE

A. Shaw

Islamia College of Science and Commerce

Abstract: This paper explores how Habba Khatoon and Emily Bronte, two eminent women belonging to two disparate races, cultures, languages and milieus make an interesting and profitable subject of comparative study within the framework of comparative literature: Habba Khatoon, a woman of the Himalayan valley Kashmir in South East-Asia belonging to the sixteenth century, and Emily Bronte, a woman writer of England in Europe of the nineteenth century, in spite of this distance of time, place, and milieu, have many things common, but the most important thing common to them is that both were women poets. Apparently this common attribute of Habba Khatoon and Emily Bronte does not make a strong rationale for a comparative study of their works, but taking into consideration the theoretical notions of the well-defined discipline of Comparative Literature, the study is not only justifiable but also leading to possibilities of understanding the creative faculties of women, in general, and that of the two poets, in particular. Their expressions of self assertion and , eventually, their revolt against the patriarchal society and its ethical and cultural credos that denied freedom to women folk can be analysed in the light of the text available in the two languages. Comparative Literature as a recognized interdisciplinary discourse has a solid theoretical basis that makes it possible to undertake a comparative assessment of any two literatures of any age. Habba Khatoon and Emily Bronte, despite the ostensible differences, have many things in common; however, comparative study is not confined to exploring commonalities alone, it embraces contrasts as well. The poetry of Habba Khatoon is thus to be considered a part of a long tradition of romantic lyricism that generally assumed mystic significance through intense expression of love. At the the same time, her poetry can be best understood when Kashmiri poetry is understood as a part of the extensive range of oriental aesthetic that reached sublime heights in the songs imbued with mellifluous expressions of passionate love. Similarly, Emily Bronte's poems cannot be appreciated if a reader has no knowledge of the great tradition of the nineteenth century English Romantic poets like Wordsworth, Coleridge, Keats, Shelly and Byron. It is also to be taken as an individual voice within the framework of western aesthetic that had multifarious media of expression languages, lyrical poetry being one of such media.

Biography: Asma Shaw Assistant Professor Department of English Islamia College of Science and Commerce Hawal,Srinagar 190003. Jammu and Kashmir India # +91 9906544045

POWER PLAY AND THE SPACE IN "FEMINIST . . . MALE DIRECTOR": READING KIAROSTAMI'S TEN AND PANABI'S THE CIRCLE

A. Ghandeharion

Shiraz and Ferdowsi University

Abstract: Benefiting from the tenets of Comparative Cultural Studies, this article illustrates the role of power and patriarchal discourse in Ten (dir. Kiarostami, 2007) and The Circle (dir. Panahi, 2000). Though Foucauldian notion of power talks of 'circulation', it seems that men's realm of power-circulation is closed to women. Women are at the center of the fluid narrative in both Ten and Circle; nevertheless, they are a part of male narrative structure. That's how each discourse circulates throughout the transdiscursive network while it is affected by the power relations of other discourses. Highly acclaimed as feminist films in Occidental Cannes and Venice Film Festival, they seem to win the jury's admiration for their Oriental woman-issue approach. In these films, women can practice their power in a feminine-defined cobweb. But when it comes to patriarchal discourse, they are unable to be a link in the chain of power. Ironically, films with feministic spice are cooked by men. This systematic play of differences foregrounds the Derridan space between 'feminist' and 'male' in "feminist . . . male director" and diminishes this space in "patriarchal female director". How far a male director can stay faithful to feminism if the very first 'take' of his film is precipitating a series of "Male Gaze" during the whole course of production?! And when a film wins feminist praise, can it be dethroned on the base of the same theory? It seems that in the kingdom of dominant discourse, some narratives are rapped in a subversive foil while they are reinforcing at core; there's a degree of subversion from faithful to faith-felt, faith-fool and faith-fail. Thus, reading these films doesn't intend to be binary-oppositional. Utilizing Foucault's dictum that 'where there is power there is resistance', this paper discusses the resistance which is present at each transformation in the power structure. Keywords: Comparative Cultural Studies, Différance, Power Structure, Feminism in Film Studies, Occident and Orient, Ten, Circle

Biography: Azra Ghandeharion teaches English literature at Shiraz and Ferdowsi University. Ghandeharion's interest in research includes 'Otherness' issues, adaptation and appropriation (mostly Iranian cinema and Hollywood studies), comparative popular culture embedded in advertisement and film studies. She presented numerous articles in national and international congresses on interdisciplinary studies.

CAPTURING RACE, GENDER AND CLASS: A STUDY OF SELECT ASIAN AMERICAN WRITERS

M.S. Chadha
University of Jammu

Abstract: In recent years, many Asian American fiction writers, particularly women, have received a lot of attention and recognition for their work. Even back in the 1970s, Maxine Hong Kingston's The Woman Warrior won the prestigious National Book Critics Circle Award. However, the current wave of Asian American literature began to flourish with the critical and popular success of Chinese American Amy Tan's The Joy Luck Club as both a novel and later as a motion picture. Although there are some Asian Americans who question whether the book and movie accurately reflect Asian American life, no one can deny that it shifted significant attention to the outstanding work among Asian American writers. Some other Asian American authors who have received critical acclaim include Korean American Chang-rae Lee, Filipino American Jessica Hagedorn, Carlos Bulosan and Bienvenido Santos, Chinese American Ha Jin and Frank Chin, Japanese American Garret Hongo and Cynthia Kadohata, and Indian Canadian novelist Bharati Mukherjee and Indian American Jhumpa Lahiri, who won the 1999 Pulitzer Prize in fiction for her collection of short stories Interpreter of Maladies. These and other Asian American writers share several common themes in their writings. These include describing what it is like growing up in the United States of America, emigrating from their home country to the U.S. and adjusting to life here, finding ones own ethnic identity, love and marriage, and relationships with lovers, friends, and family, etc. In fact, these are basically the same themes that are the basis for many writers in general. The unique contribution of Asian American writers lies in the fact that they integrate their personal and their community's experiences, issues, and identity into their work. This gives them a unique perspective on the world and at the same time, brings to light what it means to be Asian American. The recent explosion of literature from Asian American writers shows that there is an abundance of topics and issues to be covered and a lot of creativity and talent in the Asian American community to fulfill that need. However, an important point to be kept in mind is that as we recognize the political, socio-economic, and cultural diversity among Asian Americans, so too should we realize that there is no single "Asian American experience" that everybody has to share and agree on. Rather, the collective and unique experiences of these writers form a mosaic that unites them, instead of dividing them. The present paper, by making a comparative study of different Asian American writers, proposes to examine how their works represent the interrelations, intricacies, and contradictions that make up Asian America.

Biography: Dr. Monika Sethi Chadha is an Associate Professor in the Dept. of English, University of Jammu. She has been teaching Literature at the Post-graduate level and also guiding research for M.Phil and PhD for the past 15 years. Her areas of specialization are Comparative Literature and New Literatures in English. She has published a book and many articles on various aspects of American, African, Australian and Indian Literature in National and International journals.

S2 COGNITION ET EMOTION: DE NOUVELLES VOIES POUR LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE? / COGNITION AND EMOTION: NEW VISTAS FOR COMPARATIVE LITERATURE?

LE LANGAGE DES EMOTIONS DANS L'EXPERIENCE TRAGIQUE DE L'ANTIQUITE DE L'ÂGE CLASSIQUE ET DU ROMAN CONTEMPORAIN

P. Mildonian
Université de Venise

Abstract: Le dépassement de l'opposition cognitif vs émotionnel, et la dimension sociale des émotions et des passions, que Dewey avait déjà soulignée et défendue à son époque, constituent les éléments les plus intéressants des thèses développées par M. Nussbaum et ont d'amples conséquences dans la définition et la périodisation des genres littéraires, à partir du genre qui constitue pour Aristote le plus haut degré de l'expérience poétique, la tragédie. Dans cette perspective, l'interrogation sur les sentiments tragiques va au-delà de l'instance subjectiviste et substantialiste du personnage (typique de la tragédie romantique), pour pouvoir récupérer les valeurs collectives de la trame (autrement dit du mythe), dont la narration est soumise au tri des mondes possibles que seule la poésie est en mesure d'inventer ou de feindre au sens étymologique du terme (lat. ingere "modeler, façonner"), en suscitant en nous la peur ou le plaisir et en nous faisant prendre part à une com-passion qui engendre une con-naissance. S'il nous est difficile de comprendre la nature de la catharsis aristotélicienne, c'est parce qu'il nous est difficile, aujourd'hui, de comprendre des sentiments et des émotions appartenant à une société éloignée de la nôtre. Ce n'est pas un hasard si les études les plus récentes sur la Poétique (A. Oksenberg Rorty 1992, Sifakis 2001) se réfèrent de manière très pointue à la doctrine des émotions, aux soins homéopathiques et allopathiques établis dans les traités de médecine antique et aux œuvres scientifiques, mais également aux ouvrages éthiques et politiques du corpus aristotélicien, sans oublier les pages rhétorico-argumentatives, car la fiction poétique exige que tout se traduise en langage et se véhicule à la fois à travers l'action scénique et l'action de la langue. Il est tout aussi possible de mener une enquête parallèle pour l'âge classique, où la tragédie va de pair avec le développement de théories des passions fort sophistiquées et fouillées (des cinq volumes de Marin Cureau de la Chambre au plus synthétique Traité de Descartes). Mais ce qui est plus important encore, c'est que les doctrines des émotions réévaluent la critique freudienne de la littérature, entendue aussi bien comme rhétorique de l'inconscient (Francesco Orlando, Stefano Agosti), que comme une enquête des profondeurs et un projet herméneutique qui développe les conflits pulsionnels et les désirs inhibés qui se cachent derrière toute œuvre littéraire. Notre analyse part d'Aristote et d'Euripide (Hippolyte), se poursuit à travers les mythes sociaux de l'inceste, avec Phèdre de Racine et Mirra de Vittorio Alfieri, pour s'achever par le rapport père-fille dans l'écriture féminine du XX^e siècle, avec une des figures de proue de la littérature contemporaine, Ingeborg Bachmann (Malina, Der Fall Franza), et un auteur moins célèbre à juste titre, mais qui ne manque pas pour autant d'intérêt, Mela Hartwig qui, dans la nouvelle intitulée Das Verbrechen, convertit résolument la tragédie en un récit criminel.

Biography: PAOLA MILDONIAN Chair Professor of Comparative Literature at Ca'Foscari University (Venice) from 1980 to 2010. She has written over a hundred essays on the following topics: methods and issues in Comparative Literature; classical tradition in modern and postmodern literature; theory and history of literary translation; travel literature and chronicles of discoveries; relationships between Near Eastern and Western culture; fictional diary; contemporary poetry. Among her most recent works, there is the monograph Alterego. Racconti in forma di diario tra Otto e Novecento, Venezia 2002; the editing of the volumes Parodia, Pastiche, Mimetismo, Roma 1997; La Porta d'Oriente. Viaggi e Poesia, Lisbona 2002; Comparaciones en vertical. Conflictos metológicos en las Americas, Venezia 2009; the CD A partire da Venezia: Eredità, Transiti, Orizzonti. Cinquant'anni dell'AILC, Venezia 2009. She is a Founding Member of SICL (Società Italiana di Comparistica Letteraria), She was Member of the Executive Council (1991-1997), then Secretary General (1997-2000) and Vice-President (2000-2004) of AILC/ICLA, she has participated in several research programmes and has chaired various administrative committees within the same International Association.

THE ETHICS OF AFFECTS IN LITERATURE

A.P. Helle
University of Jyväskylä

Abstract: The Ethics of affects in literature The question of ethics is important when thinking about literature and emotions. In literary research it is often approached by focusing on the role of the fictional characters and the readers' empathetic identification with them. This kind of research seeks to provide knowledge of emotions represented in literature and of the mechanisms of empathy in reading, often quite successfully. There are, however, other ways of conceiving the role of ethics in reading, too. There are also other feeling-related concepts (than that of emotion) such as "affect" that can be utilized when thinking about the affective sides of literature and reading. My viewpoint here derives from the philosophy of Gilles Deleuze (1925-1995) who is one of the best-known 19th century philosophers of affect. To make a rough distinction, the viewpoint of emotions usually derives from psychology while affects are more often approached from the philosophical or aesthetic points of view. Deleuze gives a very broad definition for affect as "whatever comes into being when something is affected or affects something else" (Deleuze 1978; Bourrasa 2009, 25.) Relying of Baruch Spinoza's philosophy Deleuze sees the affects as inadequate and confused on their nature. While it is often difficult to name or even recognize affects, the emotions can be classified. Susanne Keen, for example, lists the existing emotions as follows. The basic emotions are fear, sorrow, surprise, disgust, satisfaction, and happiness. The additional moral or social emotions are empathy, sympathy, shame, embarrassment, envy, regret, hatred, and the comfortable feeling of belonging. (Keen 2011.) Besides the recognizable emotions in fiction, literary research should look for affects also there where their role is not obvious. Deleuze, for example, writes about the affectivity of the literary language in his essay "He stuttered". The basic idea of the essay is that literature does not only represent affects. It also generates them through different literary styles. In Deleuze's thought, art and literature may create new ways of experiencing and conceiving the world, and in this sense the relation of literature and affects is very important. In my paper I will scrutinize the concept of affect in relation to literature. My conception is based on Deleuze but I will also consider other ways of understanding what affects are. Charles Altieri and Sianne Ngai, for instance, have written about affects and literature. I intend to reflect upon the ethical side of literature and reading from the viewpoint of affects. I also seek to explain what the role of affects in literature and reading is. By doing this I wish to provide a different viewpoint to the question of literature, affects/emotions and ethics. References Bourrasa, Alan 2009: Deleuze and American Literature. Palgrave and MacMillan. Deleuze, Gilles 1978: Lecture transcripts of Spinoza's concept of affect. Keen, Suzanne 2011: Introduction: Narrative and the Emotions. Poetics Today 32.

Biography:

Anna Helle PhD, University research fellow Literature / Department of Arts and Culture studies University of Jyväskylä, Finland. I gained my PhD in literature in 2009 in the University of Jyväskylä, Finland. My doctoral thesis concerns the advent of the post-structuralist conception of literature to the Finnish literary discourse in the 1980s. I have translated several texts from French to Finnish, including Critique et clinique by Gilles Deleuze (published as Kriittisiä ja kliinisiä esseitä in Finnish, 2007) and Histoire du structuralisme I par Francois Dosse (in Finnish: Strukturalismin historia I, 2011). My post-doctoral research focuses on the emotions and affects in the Finnish contemporary literature.

MASTERING METROPOLIS? EMOTIONAL REPRESENTATION AND PERCEPTION OF THE CITY IN FUTURISM AND NAZI LITERATURE

R. Godel

Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg

Abstract: Mastering Metropolis? Emotional Representation and Perception of the City in Futurism and Nazi Literature Modern metropolises provide an ambivalent perception, a distinct mixture of nervousness, anxiety, and the experience of a wide realm of chances and possibilities. This is well-known since James Joyce's Ulysses, John Dos Passos's Manhattan Transfer, and, in German literature, Alfred Döblin's Berlin Alexanderplatz which has been called the first novel in which the city is much more than a topic or a motif because here it speaks for itself. And the modern metropolis speaks in various tongues. On the one hand, it represents the positive corollaries of modern technological progress, it embodies the acceleration of all processes and circumstances, an all-embracing interconnectedness, and it provides the opportunity to live a life in an alternative shape and style. On the other hand, the metropolis seems to be chaotic; it seems to overload the sensual perceptual capacity of the individual. This ambivalence of the metropolis was not only a theme of literature but it also provoked new literary forms, new ways of representing this experience. These forms enabled literature to depict the rapid and steady change of external and internal impressions in the modern metropolis. They show the psychic reaction of the individual to the overwhelming perceptions of the city. This paper seeks to explore two diverging right-wing political answers to this diagnosis. Whereas Futurist ideas, following Filippo Tomasso Marinetti's claim of the chances of urban acceleration and entanglement, stressed an emotionally (and not rationally) guided form of sublimity, the Nazi Fascists had to deal with an intricate dichotomy: In 1942, Joseph Goebbels urged at the so called Weimar Poet's Meeting the authors to write about the city. But Nazi ideology itself had caused this lack of city novels. For blood and soil mythology, the decisive structure of ideological demarcation in the 1920s, had operated with the dichotomy of the good and natural rural countryside versus the bad, chaotic city. I argue in this paper that, whereas Nazi ideology tried to restrict the ambivalence of these new emotive modes of perception, European Futurism attempted to provide a junction of emotion of technology in the realm of the modern metropolis.

Biography: Rainer Godel, Apl. Prof., German Literature, Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg, Academic Coordinator and Deputy Director of the Research Center "Aufklärung - Religion - Wissen", Main research areas: 18th Century Literature, culture, and philosophy; European early modern controversies; Perception of the city in the early 20th century; Contemporary Literature; Reception of Ovid

INSPIRED BY PESSIMISM: WHY WE NEED NEGATIVE THINKING

R. Cowan

Kingsborough Community College, City University of New York

Abstract: "Inspired by Pessimism: Why We Need Negative Thinking" AILC-ICLA XXth Congress - Paris, France - 18-24 July 2013 Session 68: "New Theories: How and Why?" Robert Cowan, Associate Professor, Department of English Kingsborough Community College, City University of New York Matthew Arnold argued in The Function of Criticism at the Present Time (1864) that "the critical faculty is lower than the inventive", but wondered whether "it is true that criticism is really, in itself, a baneful and injurious employment." Criticism serves a negating function in that it emphasizes lackings, deficiencies, lacunae, and yet cognizance of these négacités, as Sartre called them, is necessary for the refinement and improvement of works of literature, as well as the development of new literary movements. Hence the idea that criticism can, and possibly should, be constructive. "Negative" philosophical tendencies such as cynicism, skepticism, pessimism, nihilism, and existentialism have been profoundly influential on what Arnold calls "the inventive". And assertions and queries similar to those Arnold makes have been posited by thinkers from Socrates to Averroes to Adorno to Spivak. Yet, the influence of philosophical thought and literary criticism on literature is not reducible to a simple thesis-antithesis-synthesis schema. While new criticism rejected the biographical and sociological contexts of literary creation and poststructuralist approaches often understood works reductively—as merely constructions of race, class, and gender—this paper will advocate for an approach that emphasizes the oscillations of the history of ideas on literary production. The discipline of comparative literature has recently encouraged a global intellectual historical approach of this kind, as it seeks to understand relations between North Atlantic theories and those of other parts of the world. Thus, this paper will explore why it is that seemingly negative systems of thought or methods of argumentation have been so influential on the creation of new literary culture, arguing that, not only does artistic production thrive on negative ideas, its very existence is entirely dependent on them.

Biography: Robert Cowan is Associate Professor of English at Kingsborough Community College of the City University of New York (CUNY). He received his Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from the CUNY Graduate Center in 2006. He is the author of The Indo-German Identification: Reconciling South Asian Origins and European Destinies, 1765-1885 (Camden House, 2010), which has been nominated for the Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst/German Studies Association Book Prize and the MLA's Scaglione Prize for Studies in Germanic Languages and Literatures. His articles have appeared in journals such as The Comparatist, German Studies Review, and The German Quarterly. He has begun research on a new monograph tentatively titled Inspired by Pessimism: Why We Love Negative Thinking and is seeking representation for his first novel, Sense will pass away.

EMOTIONAL LITERACY OF TRAUMA FICTION

S.T. Knuuttila

University of Helsinki

Abstract: My presentation considers the ways in which emotions are represented in trauma fiction over time. I start from the concept of the 'embodied mind' as developed in current social neuroscience, which supposes that emotion functions ubiquitously throughout all cognitive activity (Damasio 2000). Emotion also plays an integral role in our ethical reasoning as part of our judgement system that uses beliefs (right or wrong) about the external world, self and others (Nussbaum 2001). This function is linked to our inherent, non-verbal coping mechanism: an embodied capacity for simulating the other person's mind during an interpersonal emotional act with highly specified (mirror) neuron systems. This means that the brain/body of the viewer is activated in a similar manner to that of the other person who is seen to move, feel, or intend to do something (Hari & Kujala 2009). Reading a story activates this system as well, whereupon humans are by nature capable of empathically witnessing the other's experience (Keen 2007). From this perspective of cognitive literary research, I have explored fictionalization of trauma as a social practice which continually strives for knowledge not yet available. This is based on the idea that people universally share experiential and ethical subjectivity (Hogan 2010). For me trauma's narrativization is a case in point illuminating a specific cooperation of emotion and cognition. At the moment of an overwhelming experience involving extreme fear, verbal (narrative) memory is detached from the non-verbal, embodied and emotional, memory. When recovering, the survivor must rebuild this connection in a personal, emotional relationship with others, which brings the unverbalizable aspect of felt horror into focus. This horror is bound to some physical detail(s) in the surrounding or the survivor's body, and combined with a double belief about imminent dying/surviving. In literature this combination is typically expressed in the form of specific rhetorical figures, metonymies, which crystallize the emotional condition of the character(s). In a successive repetition variation, these affective metonymies are transformed in new textual contexts towards metaphors which adopt new narrative functions, while the original horror is abated and resolved into several protective emotions successively aiming at healing (Knuuttila 2006, 2009, 2011). As examples of this foregrounding device in critical trauma fiction, I will compare the ethical role of some central rhetorical figures in novels from recent decades (for example, Marguerite Duras, Ruth Klüger, Herta Müller), which all textualize historical traumas in different cultural and political situations. I will demonstrate how the recurring metonymical details, which in real life are deeply rooted in the human startle response characterizing traumatic memory, serve as an important outlet of immediate affects followed by cognitive appraisal. Moreover, metonymies are in these novels embedded in self-reflexive metarepresentative structures, which not only prevent the reader from retraumatization but also emphasize ethically important moments in history. For these reasons, while the handling of emotions in these autofictions arise from authentic individual experiences of traumatizing events, the ultimate point is to show that these devices function as vital models of healing from trauma through emotion, thus mapping the reciprocal suffusion of emotion and cognition.

Biography: Sirkka Knuuttila is a medical doctor and advanced cognitive therapist who holds PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Helsinki. She has also worked as a visiting scholar at the University of Alberta in the project of empirical literary research. In 2009 she defended her dissertation The Aesthetics of Marguerite Duras's India Cycle (Peter Lang 2011). Her research interests are Marguerite Duras's style, narrativization of historical trauma, Roland Barthes's semiotics, the embodied subjectivity, and emotion in literature. At the moment she is studying and translating Friederike Mayröcker's lyrics, which she has also translated from German into Finnish. On these topics she has published a number of articles and essays in Finnish, English (Signs System Studies; Cambridge Scholar's Press; Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier), French (Degrés) and German (MATRIX). She has taught several years feminist literary criticism and women's literature at the University of Joensuu, and lectured on Marguerite Duras, the aesthetics of trauma fiction, and the semiotics of Roland Barthes at the Universities of Helsinki and Tampere. In 2012 she has been running the course on trauma's narrativization and its studying as a part-time teacher at the University of Helsinki.

LA LITTÉRATURE A L'ÈRE DU NUMÉRIQUE / LITERATURE OF THE DIGITAL ERA

HYPERTEXTUAL LITERARY WRITING: STEPHEN KING'S CASE

D. Feleki

Aristotle University of Thessaloniki

Abstract: Since the introduction of hypertextual literary technologies in the 80s and the introduction of the World Wide Web in the 90s, literary writing has been irreversibly affected while its intersection with innovative computational technologies has been facilitated.

Stephen King constitutes the paragon of a popular contemporary American fiction writer who has embraced the trends in computational and digital technology for the creation of a much more digitally-driven literary effect. This presentation will aim to highlight those elements in King's electronic hypertextual writing that have marked a turning point in popular writing. I shall contend that he has managed to give new dimensions to the reading experience and has contributed towards the convergence of popular fiction writing with computational and digital technologies. My main concern is to investigate how the process of representation is conditioned by the medium of expression that the writer uses while the relationship between text and image is reconfigured.

Biography: Despoina Feleki is an appointed English Secondary Educator and is currently heading towards the completion of her Ph.D. studies in the Department of Contemporary American studies in the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. She is currently teaching Computer Literacy and Research Skills at the Department of English, Aristotle University of Thessaloniki.

Her fields of research include contemporary American literature, writing technologies as well as popular culture studies. At the moment she is investigating the convergence of literary practices with computational technologies and its impact on contemporary theories of authorship and fandom. The impact of the implementation of computer games in education is also within her academic interests.

LE ROMAN FRANCOPHONE AFRICAÏN À L'ÈRE DU NUMÉRIQUE: ASPECTS DE BOB, ROMAN RADIOPHONIQUE DE DANIEL LEURET

V. Aire¹, U. Edebiri²

¹*University of Jos*, ²*University of Benin*

Abstract: Au cours des trente dernières années, le monde a vu l'essor d'un prodigieux phénomène qui ne cesse de se propager dans tous les domaines de la vie humaine. Il s'agit du passage de l'information analogique à l'information numérique, d'où le substantif « le numérique ». Ce dernier est, selon le Nouveau Petit Robert, « l'ensemble des technologies utilisant des signaux numériques, les nouvelles technologies de l'information et de la communication ». On pourrait affirmer sans grand risque de contradiction que l'internet représente la manifestation la plus remarquable du numérique. En plus, il existe aujourd'hui déviations numériques de la télévision, de la radio, de la téléphonie, du cinéma, du DVD, du baladeur, sans oublier les MP3 et MP4. Ces nouveaux outils facilitent la vie au quotidien mais, comme il en va de toute nouveauté, non sans des inconvénients tels que la paresse, une tendance accrue au plagiat, de même qu'une menace à la lecture et à l'écriture. Comme il se doit, les écrivains, fidèles chroniqueurs et propagateurs, n'ont pas tardé à subir le charme des nouvelles technologies numériques. En marchant dans le sillage de maints romanciers pratiquant l'expérimentation romanesque, l'auteur réunionnais Daniel Leuret s'inspire du téléphone et notamment du portable pour rédiger Bob, roman rapporté essentiellement par voie téléphonique où il y a, d'un côté, des animateurs et animatrices installés dans un studio radiophonique et, de l'autre, des auditeurs qui appellent la radio depuis leurs téléphones portables. Nous voudrions donc examiner la narration et la composition des personnages dans Bob afin de déterminer, entre autres, jusqu'à quel point la forme adoptée par le romancier influe sur ces deux aspects conventionnels du roman classique.

Biography: VICTOR AIRE Department of Languages and Linguistics University of Jos NIGERIA

ET

UNIONMWAN EDEBIRI Department of foreign languages University of Benin Benin City NIGERIA

PERSONARIUM. DICTIONNAIRE ÉLECTRONIQUE DES PERSONNAGES

S. Somer, D.J.T. Freitas, C.A.A. Maciel
Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina (UFSC)

Abstract: Il s'agit, dans Le cadre de cette recherche, de produire um dictionnaire électronique dès personnages (de fiction - romans et contes) dont les éléments résultent d'um travail em collaboration - fondée sur l'expérience de Wikipédia, CE qui permet à l'usager d'insérer dès données ou encore de modifier lês contenus disponibles. L'objectif premier est de rendre disponible um outil de recherche avec des niveaux diversifiés d'information et de lecture, susceptible de servir aussi bien aux étudiants qu'aux enseignants et chercheurs et d'être accessible, de façon plus générale, à um assez large public. La base de données a ainsi été construite pour répondre à ces objectifs; les liens entre les informations disponibles et les relations qu'ont entre eux les personnages va au-delà Du modele courant fondé sur la désignation formelle du personnage. Les matériaux sont stockés sur un outil multimédia qui gere, en plus des textes, les fichiers de son et d'image, de manière à rendre possibles d'autres stratégies de lecture. Nous pouvons mentionner, à titre d'exemple, des accès simultanés à des passages différents de l'oeuvre ou intervient un même personnage (ce qui permet les comparaisons); les modèles statistiques mis em oeuvre permettent em outre de mettre en relief (d'un point de vue bien entendu numérique) les différences qui séparent les uns des autres les personnages, à l'intérieur d'une même oeuvre où lorsque sont mises face à face, le cas échéant, des oeuvres que l'on chercher à comparer.

Biography: Carlos Maciel Aujourd'hui Professeur émérite (Université de Nantes), Carlos Maciel, responsable scientifique de la base PORTEXT et depuis longtemps aussi rattaché au Laboratoire Bases, corpus et langage (CNRS - ILF - Université de Nice), est actuellement professeur invité à l'Université Fédérale de Santa Catarina (UFSC - Brésil), ou il participe notamment aux travaux du NuPILL et aux activités du programme de "Pôs-Graduação".

S2 READING AND WRITING STRATEGIES

READING COMPETENCIES IN INTERPRETING DIGITAL POETRY

M.T. Kangaskoski
University of Helsinki

Abstract: In this presentation I discuss aspects of reading competencies in interpreting digital literature. Digital literature has been an emerging practice since the 90s, although practiced already since the first computers arrived. Since and before Espen J. Aarseth's seminal Cybertext. Perspectives on Ergodic Literature (1996) there has been more and more discussion about the varying techniques of presenting a text, about its "traversal function" as Aarseth calls it. However, due to the increasing interest in the traversal functions, something has been neglected, and this is interpretation and meaning. Instead of only asking "How is this text presented?" we can and should also ask "What does this particular text thus presented mean?" The latter question is of course a broader one. It seeks to find an interpretation that encloses the technical aspect but does not forget the meaning(s) of the work. But how to interpret moving texts, navigable spaces and playable, game-like entities? It necessitates new reading competencies and challenges the practices of reading in general. I do not intend to answer the question of new competencies exhaustively, instead I will offer a few case studies in which the "new" reading competencies required are presented. These are Cia Rinne's archives zaroum (2002), Young-Hae Chang Heavy Industries' Dakota, and Talain Memmott's Lexia to Perplexia (2000). I will also argue that along the new competencies the old ones are not obsolete, instead, both are required.

Biography: I am a Ph.D Student in Comparative Literature from the University of Helsinki, Finland. I am writing a dissertation about interpretive challenges in digital poetry. I am also a part of the PhDNet for Literary and Cultural Studies coordinated by Justus-Liebig University in Giessen, Germany.

THE LIBRARY OF BABEL BY JORGE LUIS BORGES AND THE MIRROR BY MACHADO DE ASSIS: COMPARISON OF READINGS IN DIGITAL FORM USING THE TOOL DLNOTES.

I.M.B. Sandoval
Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina

Abstract: This work intends to present and discuss readings performed by undergraduate students in Arts / Portuguese through the tool of annotations to scanned literary works, the DLNotes (Digital libraries notes). This tool is an annotation platform on which notes are made in a free and semantic way in HTML files; it was developed through a partnership between the Center for Research in Computer Science, Literature and Linguistics (NUPILL) and the Research Laboratory of Distributed Systems (LAPESD), both belonging to Federal University of Santa Catarina (UFSC). In the case of the readings studied in this work, we used the short stories "The Library of Babel", by Jorge Luis Borges and 'The Mirror', by Machado de Assis, which were read and noted in a semantic way (in the sense of information science, i.e. associating descriptive metadata to words or expressions of the two texts based, in our case, in an ontology of literary theory). We intend to verify if the students acquire knowledge faster and deeper of literary theory, and can also read the texts in a more sophisticated way.

Biography: Graduate student from the Course of Arts / Portuguese in Federal University of Santa Catarina, guided by Professor Alckmar Luiz dos Santos in a research project called "Digital processing of literary works: Ontology terms of literary theory". Member of Center for Research in Computer Science, Literature and Linguistics (NUPILL). Editor of Mafuá, a magazine of literacy in internet: <http://www.mafua.ufsc.br/numero17.php> , also from NUPILL.

FROM SCRIPTURE TO PICTURE AND BOUND TO SOUND: THE (DIGITAL) LITERARY TEXT BETWEEN CONCEPTION AND PERCEPTION

U. Kuchler
Freie Universität Berlin

Abstract: The transition from analogue to digital modes of literary (re-)presentation lead to an increasing theoretical interest in the boundary between materiality and concept in linguistic and literary signs. In literary studies the 'material turn' extends from primarily text based approaches suggesting new strategies of "surface reading" (Best/Marcus 2009) to a wide range of publications on problems of (inter-)mediality, both of which strongly emphasize the interaction between the reader and the materialities of reading.

Against the backdrop of recent theoretical discussions the paper would like to introduce the issue with a short example as to how the transition from analogue to digital writing and reading has already been anticipated in the early 20th century. Back then, Bob Brown, celebrated as "The Godfather of the E-Reader" (NYT), conceived of a reading machine that was supposed to not only support the reading process but to ultimately lead to a fundamental "revolution of the word" (Brown 1930) - a wish addressed by the anthology Readies for Bow Browns Reading Machine for which famous writers such as Ezra Pound and Filippo Marinetti contributed texts "expressly written to be read on the reading machine" (Brown 1931). Whereas the reading machine challenges the reading process mainly via scripture itself, the digital age takes such claims a step further and provides a technology that turns the reading process into a synaesthetic experience. It thus (di)versifies the relation between man, machine and medium and challenges questions of authorship, the notion of a literary text and problems of reading. The paper's main focus thus lies on the discussion of how digital technologies led to a metamorphosis of the text that fundamentally influenced and changed its interaction with the recipient.

Projects such as Andy Campbell's and Judi Alston's Nightingale's Playground (2010) or Serge Bouchardon's Deprise (Loss of Grasp, 2010: <http://lossofgrasp.com/>) stage, comment and influence the interplay between a literary text's materiality and concept as well as between theory and literature from an artistic point of view. At the intersection of reader and digital medium, they explicitly address matters of literary production, at least partly, as a question of technology and artificial reproducibility, and thus raise the question of artistic individuality anew: for instance when in the first part of Deprise the sentences' letters repeatedly change into scrolling numbers and letters. They also challenge the notion of the literary text itself when developing such projects at the boundary to other multimedia means of digital expression that reach from sound to image and emphasize the text as a matter of conception as well as perception: an example is the transformation of an increasing number of sentences into a woman's picture in the second part of Deprise. Thus they finally redefine the role of readership, literally performing a literary text's de- and reconstruction that involves the reader as an agent on various levels from haptic to conceptual interaction with the text: in Deprise s/he has to cope with how the digital medium stages the loss of control the story itself tells about; for instance when story lines start to move or fall apart, when the cursor does not follow the movement of the finger anymore to generate new sentences and content, or when a click does not only create a new word but when its meaning is shaped by sounds and colors alike. Such projects both explicitly quote and denote strategies of 'analogue storytelling' and, at the same time, develop new approaches to the particulars of 'digital storytelling' inbetween scripture, sound and picture that incorporate and elaborate upon approaches such as Barthes' notion of reading as rewriting.

Biography: Ulrike Kuechler is a PhD candidate and lecturer at the Freie Universitaet Berlin (Germany) after holding positions as a research fellow at Cambridge University (UK), as a research assistant and lecturer at Eberhard Karls University Tuebingen (Germany) and as a teaching assistant at Brown University (US). She holds a M.A. in Comparative Literature, Philosophy and American Studies and currently works on artificial life and questions of mediality in works of fiction.

LE PROJET MAGELLAN : LES ÉTUDES SUR LA LITTÉRATURE HISPANO-AMÉRICAINNE À L'ÈRE DU NUMÉRIQUE

C. Ferrer

Université du Québec à Montréal

Abstract: Le but du projet Magellan est de cartographier, à travers l'exploration et l'analyse des références bibliographiques contenues dans les bases de données électroniques, le champ des études sur les lettres hispano-américaines. Du point de vue théorique, ce projet se trouve au croisement de plusieurs approches : le concept de champ de Pierre Bourdieu (1992), la scientométrie (Price 1963, Leydesdorff 1998) et le modèle d'analyse de domaines de connaissance (Hjørland et Albrechtsen 1995). En ce qui concerne la méthodologie, je travaille à trois niveaux. Au niveau macro, j'ai construit un atlas où sont répertoriées les bases de données qui contiennent des références bibliographiques sur la littérature hispano-américaine (Ferrer 2012b). Grâce à cet atlas, il est possible de comparer 10 bases de données classées selon la couverture et la transférabilité des références : la principale base internationale –ISI Web of Knowledge–, la grande base nord-américaine –Modern Language Association International Bibliography–, les principales bases européennes –DOAJ, e-Revistas, Isidore, ISOC, Redalyc– et les bases régionales –CLACSO, Latindex et SciElo. Au niveau meso, à partir d'un échantillon de plus de 69 000 références bibliographiques en provenance de la MLAIB, j'ai constitué des séries chronologiques pour chacune des 19 littératures nationales, ainsi que pour l'ensemble du sous-continent hispano-américain (Ferrer 2012b). Au niveau micro, j'ai étudié la bibliographie critique sur l'œuvre d'un auteur : Jorge Luis Borges (Ferrer 2012a); je me suis attardée sur un mouvement littéraire en particulier : le boom du roman hispano-américain (Ferrer 2011) et j'ai analysé la trajectoire d'un style littéraire : le réalisme magique (Ferrer 2012c). Lors de cette communication, je vais présenter les principaux résultats des recherches mentionnées ci-dessus afin d'illustrer la richesse que représentent les ressources numériques pour le développement des études littéraires. Finalement, nous pourrons aussi observer les complexes relations qui existent entre croissance économique, développement des connaissances et mondialisation.

Biography: Carolina FERRER est professeure agrégée au Département d'études littéraires de l'Université du Québec à Montréal. Ses recherches portent sur la littérature et la culture hispano-américaines, les dynamiques culturelles, les aspects sémiotiques des systèmes d'information documentaire, la littérature et les archives électroniques. Actuellement elle travaille sur les processus de propagation des idées dans les champs disciplinaires ainsi que sur les relations interdiscursives, notamment entre littérature, cinéma et contexte sociopolitique. En 2008, elle a inauguré le groupe de recherche Babel Borges qui a pour but l'étude de la diffusion de l'oeuvre de Jorge Luis Borges dans la culture. Récemment, elle a coédité, avec Lucille Beaudry et Jean-Christian Pleau, le volume : Art et politique. La représentation en jeu (Québec: Presses de l'Université du Québec, 2011). Depuis l'année 2012, elle est la directrice du programme de doctorat en sémiologie de l'UQAM.

S1: ANTIQUITÉ/MODERNITÉ : UN LABORATOIRE DU COMPARATISME

TABLE-RONDE / ROUND TABLE - GRIEVING LOSS. TRAGEDY AND THE DEFINITION OF MODERN IDENTITY

C. Savettieri

Freie Universitaet Berlin

Abstract: Within the modern genre system, as it was outlined in the early 19th century, no other genre fostered such a vast reflection as tragedy, even though tragedy was also in the process of losing its place in the literary system. At the root of such a reflection dwells a comparison with Greek tragedy rather than with early modern tragic models. Romantic aesthetics shows two different strands of reflection on tragedy: on the one hand, poets acknowledge as necessary the foundation of a modern form of tragedy, based on a mixture of different styles that resembles the aesthetical code of the novel and disregards theoretical principles, hegemonic in the two previous centuries, such as appropriateness and 'bienséance'; on the other, philosophers such as Hegel and Schelling start elaborating the transition from the early modern to the modern age by comparing ancient and modern tragedy and exploring the conditions of existence of the tragic in the modern age (see Szondi, Versuch über das Tragische, 1961).

My paper aims to analyse how the crisis of tragedy as a literary genre became the basis for a number of theoretical and philosophical reflections related to the crisis of traditional metaphysics and ethics. Theories of the tragic become, during the twentieth century, a philosophical genre thoroughly detached from literary practices (see Eagleton, Sweet Violence. The Idea of the Tragic, 2003). It is interesting to notice that the literary genre Plato banned from the state in The Republic, by claiming it as a danger for the social community, becomes, in the modern age, the base of a theoretical reflection that, in my view, expresses a sort of nostalgia for metaphysics and transcendence. It is at the core of the concept of the tragic itself that a double bind dwells. On the one hand, the tragic is a historical concept, several times re-worked across the centuries and, therefore, provided with several, different, sometimes in contrast with each other, historical lives. On the other hand, it is the literary concept that maybe, more than others, in the modern age ends up expressing a need of transcendence that the irreversible process of secularization, typical of modern societies after the Enlightenment, could not cancel. Essentialist outcomes of theories of the tragic are always related to a generic and idealised image of Greek tragedy, often quite distant and different from the historical phenomenon it embodied (see Vernant et Vidal Naquet, Mythe et tragédie en Grèce ancienne, 1972).

Firstly, providing some samples taken from different European literary traditions, I should like to reflect briefly on the detachment between literary practices and theoretical concepts, which, with regards to tragedy and the tragic, during the nineteenth century proves irreversible. Secondly, taking into account theoretical writings by Lukács, Heidegger, Steiner, Kaufmann, and Langer, I aim to explore how the rhetoric of the death of tragedy is strictly connected with other pivotal questions of modern poetics and aesthetics. Hence I intend to compare it with other forms of, as it were, "mournful thought": in fact, the idea of the death of tragedy might be interpreted as a form of mournful grand narrative through which modernity has marked itself out: the death of art (Hegel), the deterioration of experience (Benjamin), the death of the author (Barthes), along with the death of tragedy, are among the strongest epochal descriptions of the modern and postmodern age, in which the occluded term (art, experience, authorship, tragedy) retains a phantasmatic and compelling presence. Which are the forms of such a presence? Which historical meaning do they entail?

Biography: Cristina Savettieri (Palermo, 1978) is Alexander von Humboldt-Stipendiatin at the Peter Szondi-Institut für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft (Freie Universität Berlin, Germany). She graduated at Università di Pisa (Italy), where she also obtained her Ph.D. (2005). She worked as post-doc researcher at Università di Pisa and at Università per Stranieri di Siena. She was appointed Adjunct Professor of Italian Literature (Graduate Program) at New York University in Florence (2010, Spring Semester, Fall Semester). She has been awarded the Edinburgh Gadda Prize, Best Early Career Scholar (2010) for the book "La trama continua. Storia e forme del romanzo di Gadda", Pisa 2008.

Selected publications

C. Savettieri, Tragedia, tragico e romanzo nel modernismo, in "Allegoria", XXIII, 63, gennaio-giugno 2011, pp. 45-65

C. Savettieri, Narrare contro il reale. Anna Maria Ortese, Un paio di occhiali (1951), in "Moderna", XIII, 2, 2010, monographic issue "Un genere senza qualità. Il racconto italiano nell'età della short story"

C. Savettieri, Storia e teoria del racconto italiano del Novecento, in I. Bagni, C. Savettieri, A. Stara, A. Viti, Repertorio bibliografico, in "Moderna", XIII, 2, 2010, monographic issue "Un genere senza qualità. Il racconto italiano nell'età della short story"

C. Savettieri, Malattie del tempo, risorse del racconto, in "Allegoria", XXI, 60, luglio-dicembre 2009, p. 122-152

C. Savettieri, Il libro in questione. Le Benevole di Jonathan Littell, in "Allegoria", XX, 58, luglio-dicembre 2008, p. 239-245

C. Savettieri, La trama continua. Storia e forme del romanzo di Gadda, Pisa: ETS 2008

OEDIPUS RECONSTRUCTED: RACE AND GENDER CONFRONT AN ANCIENT GREEK TRAGEDY

S.C. Doubiago
University of San Francisco

Abstract: Rita Dove's play, The Darker Face of the Earth (1996), and Denis Villeneuve's film, Incendies (2010), reconstruct Sophocles' Oedipus Rex from racialized and gendered contexts that demand a different approach to the ancient Greek tragedy. Spanning eras, geographies, cultures, and conflicts, Dove and Villeneuve's versions of the ancient familial narrative underscore the notion that violence inevitably begets violence. These contemporary rewritings of Sophocles' canonical oeuvre, however, ultimately confront this ancient grand narrative of violence and incest by rewriting events and characters from alternative perspectives, those that reconstruct the antebellum American South, and the late 20th century Middle East. Representing Oedipus and his tragedy from racialized and gendered perspectives ultimately raises different theoretical issues about cultural production and its lasting legacy.

In this presentation I will address the ways The Darker Face of the Earth and Incendies consider transnational theoretical perspectives that confront the practice of patriarchal and colonial legacies inherent in the Oedipal model. In these contexts, Oedipus is born of two races, two religions, two worlds. Skin tone confuses, and religious and political ties that attempt to dictate oppressive measures and their resistances, backfire due to contemporary theories of race and gender. Here, the ancient reliance on character driven recognition and reversal so favored by Aristotle as a tool intended to reaffirm social order of the audience, shifts to a theoretical structure that relies on recognition and repair, a concept fundamental to politically oppressive histories such as South Africa and countries that have fueled civil wars (such as Vietnam, Lebanon, Bosnia, Rwanda, etc.). Using theoretical concepts from Todorov, Fanon, Djébar, and Gordon, I will demonstrate that this shift in positionality offers the possibility of bearing witness to past traumas and violence, and ultimately expresses that survival in the 21st century depends on our ability to fully recognize and acknowledge, and thus "confront and repair," past barbarisms.¹

Biography: Brief Biography: Shawn Doubiago's early interest in representations of war and conflict in literature and film was sparked in part by her travels, and by her need to understand human capacity for violence. Having received her Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from UC Davis, Doubiago is currently teaching Comparative Literature, Philosophy, and Film at University of San Francisco and Berkeley City College. In addition, she is co-organizer and coordinator of the "Women and Violence" Faculty Research Group at USF.

S1: WRITING THE DREAM / ÉCRIRE LE RÊVE

TOWARDS A POETICS OF THE LITERARY DREAM

M. Engel

Universität des Saarlandes

Abstract: The paper will try to sketch a poetics of the literary dream by outlining and exemplifying different types of dreams, their uses and functions in literary texts of different kinds, and devices specific to oneiric writing.

Biography: Dr Manfred Engel, Prof. of Modern German Literature, Universität des Saarlandes;

RÊVE, SCIENCES DU RÊVE ET POÉSIE LYRIQUE

B. Dieterle

Université de Haute Alsace, Faculté des Lettres et des Sciences Humaines

Abstract: L'exposé tentera de clarifier le rôle que peut jouer la notation onirique dans le cadre de la poésie lyrique, c'est-à-dire du genre littéraire le plus soumis à des contraintes formelles et donc, semble-t-il, le plus éloigné de la 'notation' authentique et spontanée des rêves.

Biography: Dr. Bernard Dieterle, Prof. de littératures allemande et comparée, Université de Haute Alsace, Faculté des Lettres et des Sciences Humaines, 10, rue des Frères Lumières, 68093 Mulhouse, France

HEINE, DORA, FREUD: DREAMS AS LITERATURE

R. Robertson

University of Oxford

Abstract: This paper argues 1) that the fictional dreams presented by Heine in Die Harzreise and elsewhere anticipate important features of Freud's dream-theory; 2) that the dreams reported in "Bruchstück einer Hysterie-Analyse" lend themselves to formal analysis as works of literature (as Philip McCaffrey has shown); 3) that Freud's understanding of the dream owes much to literature, but his personal myth of himself as rigorous scientist prevented him from recognizing this indebtedness.

Biography: Dr Ritchie Robertson, FBA, Taylor Professor of German, Faculty of Modern Languages, University of Oxford, 47 Wellington Square, GB-Oxford OX1 2JF, Great Britain

S1: LA LITTÉRATURE à L'ŒUVRE : ÉPISTÉMOLOGIE DE LA LITTÉRATURE

L'INVENTION LITTÉRAIRE DE LA PSYCHANALYSE

J. Vion-Dury

Université Paris 13- PRES Sorbonne Paris Cité

Abstract: Si Elisabeth Roudinesco voit dans Le Horla de Maupassant le texte de la découverte française de l'inconscient, et si Charcot, l'un des maîtres de Freud, s'évertue à regarder ses patientes comme autant de personnages flaubertiens, Freud, quant à lui, est peut-être le dernier romantique allemand. Dans le cadre de cette communication d'épistémologie littéraire et de poïétique sera étudiée la manière dont Sigmund Freud a inventé la psychanalyse en partie à partir de références littéraires. Il fait figurer en épigraphe de L'Interprétation des rêves des vers du Faust de Goethe. Il pense le complexe d'Œdipe à partir de l'Œdipe roi de Sophocle et du Hamlet de Shakespeare. Il obtient, en partie grâce à Thomas Mann, le prix Goethe pour la qualité de son écriture. Il suspend son suicide le temps de rédiger ce qu'il appelait son « roman du dimanche », L'Homme Moïse et la religion monothéiste. Quel rôle la littérature a-t-elle précisément joué dans le processus de découverte de l'inconscient et l'élaboration de la technique psychanalytique ? Qu'implique ce rôle sur la nature même de cette discipline et sur celle de la littérature ?

Biography: Juliette Vion-Dury est professeure de Littérature générale et comparée à l'Université Paris 13-Sorbonne Paris Cité. Elle est notamment l'auteur de Le Retour ; Au principe de la création littéraire, Paris, Garnier, 2009 et a co-dirigé un volume sur l'émergence, paru chez Peter Lang en 2011. Elle est l'auteur de travaux sur les questions de poïétique, de géocritique, et d'anthropologie littéraire. Spécialiste des relations entre littérature et psychanalyse, elle s'apprête à faire paraître un ouvrage sur l'invention littéraire de la psychanalyse.

MARIO VARGAS LLOSA OU LA THÉORIE DU ROMAN À L'ŒUVRE

R.A. Trofin

Université Politehnica Bucarest

Abstract: Il est des écrivains pour lesquels la mise en fiction de la vie, affaire de démiurge, de «supplantateurs de Dieu», créatrice d'univers parallèles plus vrais et plus touchants que la réalité elle-même s'accompagne d'une réflexion constante sur les mécanismes littéraires. Mario Vargas Llosa est l'un de ces écrivains intellectuels pour lesquels la création relève de plusieurs types d'engagement : engagement littéraire dans la mesure où le faire littéraire n'est jamais innocent mais expression d'un système théorique propre, engagement social et politique dans la mesure où la fiction est une modalité de lutter contre le mal et l'absurde de la vie et de la société, une manière de changer le monde et les hommes. Le faire narratif est sous-tendu chez Vargas Llosa par une conscience des ressorts de l'écriture, un savoir théorique globalisant, systémique. Son œuvre quelle qu'en soit la forme : roman ou essai est une articulation de la fiction sur la réalité immédiate suivant deux voies fondamentales : création déclarée de « mensonge révélateur de vérité » ou invitation à un voyage guidé dans la fiction. Ce voyage guidé a une double fonction : de donner une lecture des écrivains qui l'ont marqué comme auteur ou impressionné comme lecteur : Flaubert, Hugo, Arguedas, García Márquez, Onetti mais surtout d'explicitier les principes qui ont présidé à sa propre création. Il s'agit d'un discours métaréflexif au cours duquel l'auteur se dédouble, devenant lecteur et narrateur en même temps afin d'analyser depuis cette position les ressorts du récit. L'auteur « se raconte » et il raconte surtout sa narration, ce faisant il entraîne le lecteur réel dans l'aventure de la fiction lui dévoilant les mécanismes cachés de son fonctionnement. Le lecteur se trouve ainsi immergé dans un hypertexte, dont les parties s'éclairent mutuellement car la littérature est une profession de foi qui exige préparation et sacrifices et la fiction une construction savante, menée sciemment par un narrateur omniscient. Je me propose d'analyser dans le présent article cette entreprise théorisante du récit, menée non pas par le critique froid et détaché mais par le créateur qui, vivant par et dans la littérature, s'interroge sur la valeur de la fictionalisation et dévoile les principes de la construction romanesque. Deux idées essentielles président à cette démarche: la théorie vargas llosienne du roman permet d'appréhender selon un modèle global le récit réaliste en général mais le plus important, elle dévoile l'intentionnalité narrative de l'œuvre romanesque vargas llosienne. Elle joue de ce point de vue la fonction d'un repoussoir permettant de découvrir les ressorts cachés de la mise en récit. Disséminée dans plusieurs essais et ouvrages critiques : García Márquez historia de un deicidio, Historia secreta de una novela, José María Argueda. La novela y el problema de la expresión literaria en el Perú La verdad de las mentiras, Voyage vers la fiction Le monde de Juan Carlos Onetti, car traduisant une interrogation permanente de l'écrivain sur la logique et la portée de la fiction, la théorie du roman forme un système cohérent qui interroge la genèse de la fiction, provoquée par les démons personnels, culturels, historiques transformés en thèmes ou identifiables dans certains personnages, la structure narrative, la problématique du narrateur, la focalisation, l'intertextualité. Le deuxième volet de mon article sera consacré au roman La tante Julia et le scribouillard qui, pour être partiellement autobiographique est le roman le plus métaréflexif de Vargas Llosa racontant la naissance de l'auteur de fiction (nourri de grands modèles littéraires, fasciné par la réalité, harcelé par des « démons » mués en histoires) et la naissance même du récit par l'écriture. C'est bien le récit qui en naissant se reflète déjà dans un miroir, (les récits B du roman), qui interfère avec son double, se déploie de plus en plus, se démultiplie et reprend son cours, pour fermer finalement le cercle et s'imposer comme signe de cohérence. La théorie vargas llosienne du roman est une narration testimoniale et pédagogique dans la mesure où elle ne se propose pas de créer un système directif mais d'expliquer en racontant comment le roman re-présente un monde, celui d'une réalité filtrée par l'écrivain, comment il nous aide à appréhender le réel. Vargas Llosa nous enseigne à travers sa narration que l'univers fictif doit être foisonnant, réunir dans un même récit des histoires différentes qui s'entrecroisent et s'influencent mutuellement, avoir la profondeur et le dynamisme de la vie, qu'il doit jouer sur la temporalité et sur les niveaux de réalité grâce à une focalisation kaléidoscopique mais qu'il doit à la fin, après avoir entraîné le lecteur dans un tourbillon événementiel et narratif, retrouver l'ordre et la cohérence. Le récit à la différence de la réalité doit dévoiler finalement les principes de sa construction car il est seul capable de signifier la vérité de nos vies et de nous-mêmes ; et s'il nous plonge dans un univers complexe, ahurissant par moments, créé à l'image de la réalité immédiate c'est pour nous permettre finalement de mieux nous retrouver, de découvrir le sens de la vie. Je me propose de montrer dans cet article que la narration vargas llosienne, sous-tendue par un savoir littéraire et narratif, jamais innocente, intégrée dans un réseau intertextuel a valeur expiatoire et propédeutique dans la mesure où elle nous apprend à nous connaître et à changer.

Biography: Roxana Anca TROFIN Université Polytechnique de Bucarest Faculté d'Ingénierie en Langues Etrangères 313 Splaiul Independentei sect. 6 Bucarest , roxanaanca.trofin@gmail.com (40 744 487851 FORMATION ET FORMATION CONTINUE 1999 : Docteur en Sciences du langage, option Arts et littératures, mention Très Honorable, École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales de Paris 1983 : Licenciée ès lettres de l'Université de Bucarest, (licence + maîtrise) faculté de Langues et littératures étrangères, spécialité français - espagnol 2005 : formateur des correcteurs examinateurs pour les examens du DELF et du DALF, habilité par le C.I.E.P. STATUT PROFESSIONNEL Enseignante chercheuse, Maître de conférences Professeur à l'Institut français de Bucarest Thèmes de recherche • narratologie et roman latino-américain • didactique du FLE /FOS Sélection de Publications Volumes : 1. Trofin (Roxana Anca), Le renouvellement des catégories narratives classiques chez Mario Vargas Llosa, Presses Universitaires du Septentrion, Ville d'Asq, 2003 2. Trofin (Roxana Anca), Techniques de communication orale et écrite, Editions Cavallioti, Bucarest, 2004 3. Trofin (Roxana Anca) sous la direction de, Salvan (Mirela), Ivanuta (Ramona), Popescu (Adrian) Communication professionnelle en français, Editions Printech, Bucarest, 2004 4. Trofin (Roxana Anca), Mythes balzacien dans La Comédie humaine, Editions Printech, 2004 Contributions aux volumes collectifs : 1. «La quête de l'amour et de l'honneur dans le théâtre de Victor Hugo», dans le volume Victor Hugo, sous la direction d'Angela Ion, Bucarest, Editura Universitatii, 1985 2. Enseignement à distance Livret d'autoformation, Editions de l'Institut Français de Bucarest, Bucarest 2001 Sélection d'articles: • « Symbolisme de l'espace public- privé dans le roman contemporain » in Cahiers du Séminaire « Sciences humaines », n° 1, 1996, édité par les Services culturels, Scientifique et de Coopération de l'Ambassade de France en Roumanie, • « Le boom latino-américain - genèse et horizon d'attente » in Cahiers du Séminaire « Sciences humaines », n° 2, 1996, édité par les Services Culturels, Scientifiques et de Coopération de l'Ambassade de France en Roumanie • «Mario Vargas Llosa ou la mise en narration de la quête de soi» dans la revue Dialogos, Bucuresti, Editura ASE, n° 3, 2001 • «La fiction littéraire et ses conditionnements sociaux» dans la revue Actes de l'Association roumaine des chercheurs francophones en sciences humaines, tome II, Cluj, Editions Napocastar, 2001 • « L'ironie comme catégorie narrative» dans la revue Actes de l'Association roumaine des chercheurs francophones en sciences humaines, tome IV, Cluj- Bucarest, Idea Design & Print, 2002 • «L'enseignement du français scientifique et ses enjeux», dans la revue Studii si cercetari filologice, Pitesti, 2003 • «La vérité derrière la vérité ou mise en abîme dissimulatrice des catégories narratives dans L'automne du patriarche de Gabriel García Márquez» in Dialogos n°7 La dissimulation, Bucuresti, Editura ASE, 2003 • «Le paradoxe du fragmentaire comme globalité dans l'œuvre de Jorge Luis Borges» dans le volume Eficienta, confort, conservarea energiei si protectia mediului, Bucuresti, Editions Valvila Edinf, 2000 • «L'interculturel - mode ou composante fondamentale du français langue étrangère?» in Advanced topics in electrical engineering, Bucarest, Université Polytechnique, 2000 • « La Tante Julia et le scribouillard ou le pacte impossible » in Langage Culture and Civilisation in the III rd millenium, Bucarest, 2007 • « L'énonciation scientifique entre transparence et dialogisme ou les défis de la traduction scientifique » Colloque international La Traduction de spécialité, organisé à Bucarest 13-14 octobre 2005, par l'Académie d'études économiques et l'Union latine • « Les industries de la langue : un enjeu scientifique, technologique et culturel », colloque international, Langage Culture and Civilisation in the III rd millenium, Bucarest, 2007 • « Mécanismes narratifs de récit identitaire », in Du Panthéon National vers le Panthéon Européen: Discours de l'identité et diversité culturelle, Ploiesti, Editura Universitatii Petrol si Gaze, 2008 • « Valeur rédemptrices de la fiction dans La fête au bouc de Mario Vargas Llosa » in Limba , cultura si civilizatie in contemporaneitate, Bucuresti, Editura Politehnica Press, 2008 • « Narration et hypertexte » in Limba cultura si civilizatie Bucuresti, Editura Politehnica Press 2009 • « Compétences culturelles, interculturelles – quelles normes pour les évaluer

? » Les langues cultures à l'université colloque international organisé par l'AUF et L'Académie d'études économiques, Bucarest, 25-28 mars 2009 • « Le cours de langue et le métadiscours linguistique », in Synergies Roumanie, Revue du Gerflint, numéro 4/2009 • « Mario Vargas Llosa ou le récit expiatoire » Journées d'étude : La relation de la littérature à l'événement (XIXe-XXIe siècles) Les 2 et 3 décembre 2010, Université de Nice-Sophia Antipolis Centre Interdisciplinaire Récit, Culture, Psychanalyse, Langues, Société CIRCPLES-EA3159 Avec l'Université Lumière-Lyon II Et le Centre Langues et Cultures Européennes LCE EA-1853 • « Politique linguistique et plurilinguisme à l'université – quelles retombées sur l'enseignement du français ? » Les contextes éducatifs plurilingues et francophones hors de la France continentale : entre héritage et innovation Université de Nantes du 16 au 18 juin 2011 • « Pour une axiologie spatiale dans la fiction vargas llosienne » 79 congrès de L'ACFAS, colloque « Espace, genre et classe dans les textes littéraires et médiatiques », Université de Sherbrooke, Canada, 9-13 mai 2011 • « García Márquez et la représentation de la dangereuse altérité » Constructions de l'« Autre » : Réflexions sur l'intersectionnalité. Mondes Ibériques. Université Toulouse 2 Le Mirail, 2 mars 2012 - Journée d'études

LA FABLE APOCRYPHE AUX PORTES DU CANON BIBLIQUE. ET TOUT LE RESTE EST LITTÉRATURE...

A. Ivanovitch

Université Paris-Sorbonne

Abstract: Au commencement étaient des textes concurrents qu'il s'est agi de départager : le canon biblique distingue les textes considérés comme divinement inspirés et les autres, relégués au statut de pures inventions, ou encore de pures fictions. Et tout le reste est littérature... En définissant les contours de la Bible, l'exégèse ne fait pas autre chose que de parler en creux de littérature. Dans The Bible and the Narrative Tradition, Frank McConnell appelle donc de ses vœux une réunion de deux disciplines sœurs qui furent trop longtemps désunies : l'exégèse et la critique littéraire. En réfléchissant à la délimitation du canon biblique pendant les premiers siècles de notre ère, les exégètes ont bien fait œuvre de critique, au sens étymologique : ils ont discerné des textes parmi d'autres, renvoyés de facto au domaine de la « simple » littérature. Mais que se trouve-t-il historiquement dans les interstices entre de la Bible et la littérature, dans cette zone franche et indistincte entre sacré et profane? Les textes restés aux portes du canon biblique, autrement dit les écrits apocryphes chrétiens, ce vieux boudoir de l'histoire des idées, plein de roses fanées où gît tout un fouillis de modes hérétiques surannées. Et pourtant, ces écrits aussi mal connus que mal aimés gagneraient à être étudiés plus en détail par les littéraires. Etudier l'histoire de la formation du canon biblique revient à examiner les définitions qui furent données à ce qui n'est pas encore appelé « littérature ». « Fable », « conte », « roman », « littérature de nourrice » : telles furent les appellations données à l'autre de la Bible, autrement dit, à tout ce qui se trouvait en marge du canon biblique. Dans le cadre restreint de cette communication, nous étayerons notre propos en étudiant plus précisément la réception des actes apocryphes des apôtres.

Biography: A. Ivanovitch - Ancienne élève de l'Ecole Normale Supérieure de la rue d'Ulm, agrégée de lettres modernes, secrétaire de la Revue de Littérature Comparée, Alexandra Ivanovitch prépare une thèse de littérature comparée sur les fictions d'évangiles apocryphes au XXème siècle sous la direction de Danièle Chauvin à l'Université Paris-Sorbonne, où elle est également attachée temporaire d'enseignement et de recherche (ATER). Parmi ses publications figurent un article sur « Borges apocryphe » dans la Revue de Littérature Comparée, une contribution au numéro 20 de la revue Graphè, « Pour une poétique de l'apocryphe. Goethe lecteur de l'Historia trium regum (Jean de Hildesheim) », et un article sur « Borges ¿profesor de literatura comparada ? » dans le volume collectif Borges - Francia dirigé par Magdalena Cámpora et Javier Roberto González.

CONTEMPORARY AFRICAN LITERATURE AND THE RE-SIGNIFICATIONS OF THE NAKED FEMALE BODY

N. Diabate

Cornell University

Abstract: An overwhelming number of pre-1990 fictional narratives from West Africa feature a wide spectrum of acts of violence against female corporeal bodies. These imaginings “restage” or “perform” the paradigm of victimization of women’s lives. A female reader of these narratives may undergo an experience similar to Nnu Ego’s, the protagonist of Nigerian Buchi Emecheta’s The Joys of Motherhood (1979), in considering her self as “prisoner of her own flesh.” However, the 1990s witnessed a rise in the number of novels that problematize that centrality of the corporeal body as site of oppression. This paper argues that Nigerian T. Obinkaram Echewa’s 1990 historical fiction, I Saw the Sky Catch Fire, Cameroonian Frieda Ekotto’s novel, Chuchote pas trop (Whisper Not Much) (2001), and French-Cameroonian Calixthe Beyala’s Comment cuisiner son mari à l'Africaine (How African Women Cook their Husbands) (2000), all offer images of culturally specific ways of women's deployment of their bodies as site of contestation and empowerment against colonial and postcolonial authorities. Drawing on heterogeneous methodologies—postcolonial feminist approaches, queer theories, and cultural studies—and using what I call “naked agency,” I propose that these texts enable us to better understand the changing ways of (re)-signifying nudity, genitality, and power in the postcolonial African context.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Naminata Diabate received her Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from the University of Texas at Austin in 2011, specializing in gender, sexuality, and African Diaspora women writers. Her publications include "Re-Imagining West African Women's Sexuality: Jean Pierre Bekolo's Les Saignantes and the Mevoungou." in Development, Modernism and Modernity in Africa, ed. Ali Mazrui and Augustine Agwuele (2011), "From Women Loving Women in Africa to Jean Genet and Race: A Conversation with Frieda Ekotto" in Journal of the African Literature Association (2010), and "Rene Maran's 'Batouala and Africa: The Limits of the Alliance'" in Oral and Written Expressions of African Cultures" (2009). Naminata has received several prestigious awards and fellowships including the George H. Mitchell Award for Excellence in Graduate Research, and in 2011, the University of Texas Graduate School Outstanding Dissertation Award for her doctoral thesis, "Genital Power: Female Sexuality in African Literature and Film." She is currently a Postdoctoral Associate in the Department of Comparative Literature at Cornell University.

S1 ATELIER THÉORIQUE :

SAVOIRS ET LITTÉRATURE, XXE ET XXIE SIECLES

C. Baron

Université de Poitiers

Abstract: Si l'épistémocritique prend en compte la présence de modèles scientifiques dans les textes littéraires, en revanche, leurs modalités de représentation ont été peu étudiées pour elles-mêmes. En effet c'est rarement l'objet du savoir qui est questionné que la méthode, le lexique, voire l'histoire d'une discipline et ses débats internes lorsque l'écrivain représente un champ épistémique. Dans Palomar de Calvino, Ti con zero, les Cosmicomics et The Shaking Woman de Siri Hudsvedt, et quelques textes narratifs de Dantec les sciences naturelles et les neurosciences sont questionnées à travers des expériences d'écriture originales; description de micro-organismes, ou évocation de la manière dont un symptôme a été interprété depuis la fin du XIXe siècle, apportant des réponses variées à un cas médico-psychique. C'est la manière dont apparaît l'épistémè, son histoire, ses changements de route et leurs déterminations contextuelles qui sera interrogée à travers ces textes qu'ils prennent le savoir pour un prétexte ludique (en donnant la parole à la cellule elle-même par exemple (chez Calvino) ou qu'ils interrogent plus sérieusement ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler les « paradigmes » d'une discipline (Hudsvedt), ou encore le rapport de ces paradigmes à la littérature et aux sciences humaines (Dantec).

Biography: Christine Baron

Professeur, Université de Poitiers

Responsable du séminaire épistémocritique

« Savoirs et littérature 2, XXe et XXIe siècles

CE QUE SAVOIR, EN LITTÉRATURE, VEUT DIRE

S. Bogumil-Notz

Ruhr-Universität de Bochum

Abstract: Laurence Dahan-Gaida a bien montré dans son "Editorial. Du savoir à la fiction... et retour" que le savoir du littéraire se distingue de celui de la science. On peut en effet constater que l'énoncé scientifique est mis en perspective critique par son déplacement au niveau de l'énonciation littéraire, où l'acte de sa transposition lui-même est le premier à en subir un démantèlement immédiat. Cependant, comment un auteur peut-il légitimer le droit qu'il s'arroge de critiquer la science, si la science est autre chose, si l'auteur n'est pas un scientifique? Mais d'abord, s'en arroge-t-il vraiment le droit? Le littéraire s'approprie-t-il le savoir des savants? Ou encore, quel est le savoir du littéraire? Poser ces questions c'est poser la question du rapport entre la littérature et la science.

Le roman de Michel Houellebecq "Les particules élémentaires" se situe au cœur de ces réflexions. Il servira d'exemple pour répondre à ces questions et élucider la place de la science par rapport au littéraire au début du XXIe siècle.

Biography: Sieghild Bogumil-Notz, Dr. phil., Docteur en Littérature Générale et Comparée, Paris III, Habilitée à Diriger des Recherches (HDR), Paris III. She has been associated professor at the Department of General and Comparative Literature at the Ruhr-University of Bochum and co-opted at the Department of Theatre Studies of the Ruhr-University, professor at the universities of Wuppertal and Kassel. Her research is centered upon the theory of poetry, history and poetics of French, German, and Spanish poetry of the 19th to 20th century, the intercultural and intertextual dimension of the poetics and poetry of Paul Celan, literary theory and theory of reading, German and French theatre and women's theatre of the second half of the 20th century, European and Indian intercultural processes. Beside numerous articles in various international journals and miscellanies written in different languages, she has published "Rousseau und die Erziehung des Lesers" (1974) and co-edited "Bernard-Marie Koltès au carrefour des écritures contemporaines" (2000).

LITTÉRATURE ET INVENTION SCIENTIFIQUE

M. Cotin

Université de Franche Comté

Abstract: Mettre la littérature dans le sillage des sciences, c'est mettre la charrue devant les bœufs ! La littérature, le texte novateur, annonce sciences et techniques, au contraire. L'avion a été inventé par les Grecs, puis par Godwin, puis par Cyrano de Bergerac au XVIIème siècle pour n'être réalisé que beaucoup plus tard. Ce même auteur a d'ailleurs aussi inventé les écouteurs musicaux, etc.

Cette hypothèse a été mise en œuvre dans ma thèse d'Etat sur les rapports des sciences et de la littérature dans les voyages imaginaires de Cyrano de Bergerac au XVIIème siècle, (Université de Franche Comté, 1988).

On appliquera cette même hypothèse à un poème récent de Michel Butor « Alice retrouve Ulysse ou la berceuse du CERN » (Seize lustres, Gallimard, 2006) , un long poème pour faire comprendre que « les récits de l'univers se reprennent constamment » et que « le discours des sciences est un immense poème ». La Merveille se situe du côté de l'invention littéraire d'abord et en priorité.

D'ailleurs une étude comparée des textes littéraires existants ou non dans une langue-culture européenne donnée, montre aussi les inventions manquants ou au contraire présentes dans ces mêmes cultures.(ce point peut être aussi développé)

Biography: Martine Cotin, Université de Franche Comté

LE PARADIGME EVOLUTIONNISTE

G. Séginger

Université de Paris Est Marne la Vallée

Abstract: Le philosophe et historien des sciences américain, Thomas Kuhn, a théorisé cette notion en 1962 dans La structure des révolutions scientifiques. Grâce à elle, il pense l'histoire des sciences et les révolutions scientifiques dans une dimension collective et comme une série non cumulative de découvertes, de progrès et de figures individuelles de grands scientifiques. Un paradigme, c'est manière de voir le monde marquée épistémologiquement voire sociologiquement et idéologiquement. Le paradigme s'appuie sur une discipline de référence, sur des modèles de pensée partagés. Il nous renseigne donc sur une approche commune du réel et des sciences qui en traitent, sur l'origine des règles respectées par une communauté scientifique aux contours plus ou moins définis. Kuhn théorise cette notion pour expliquer la dynamique des sciences. Je me propose d'utiliser pour ma part cette notion dans le domaine de l'histoire des idées pour comprendre la formation d'un ensemble structuré d'idées, de représentations qui circulent, qui ne se réduisent pas à telle ou telle pensée particulière (aux théories de Darwin par exemple), qui ont parfois agi dans l'histoire des idées avant que ne soit reconnu l'importance d'un auteur bien identifié (Darwin, Haeckel ou Spencer), qui traversent souvent les textes littéraires sans qu'on puisse établir l'existence de relations intertextuelles convaincantes.

Biography: Gisèle Séginger

Professeur de littérature française

LISAA_EA 4120

Université de Paris Est Marne la Vallée

S1 SUBJECTIVITY AND EXPERIENCE IN GRAPHIC NARRATIVES

DIALOGUE IN GRAPHIC NARRATIVES

K. Mikkonen

University of Helsinki

Abstract: This paper focuses on the dialogue form in comics as a key narrative device and technique. The premise is that dialogues in graphic narratives are determined and enhanced by the multimodal nature of the medium. In other words, they should not be perceived simply as a form of verbal speech presentation. Therefore this paper will discuss the various ways in which dialogues in comics interact with the image (what is shown), graphic style (including especially the functions of speech balloons, lettering, typography and visual onomatopoeia in speech presentation) and the sequential structure of the narrative. Various examples will be drawn from innovative uses of dialogue in comics that make the reader think of the medium as a unique form of speech representation, or focus on the interaction between verbal communication and the visual and non-verbal aspects of the dialogue situation. Special attention will be given to how dialogue in comics reveals what the characters think and feel, that is, how dialogue presents fictional minds and subjectivity.

Biography: I am Associate Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Helsinki, Finland. I earned my M.A. at the University of Iowa in 1991 and Ph.D. at the University of Tampere, Finland, in 1997. I was Research Fellow at Helsinki collegium for advanced studies 2003-2006 and have served as an expert evaluator for European Research Council 2008-2012. I am the author of Kuva ja sana [Image and Word] (Helsinki: Gaudeamus, 2005); The Plot Machine (New York: Rodopi, 2001) and The Writer's Metamorphosis (Tampere University Press, 1997) as well as various articles in periodicals such as Style, Narrative, Word & Image, Narrative & Image, Marvels & Tales, and European Review. I have recently co-edited a special issue of Partial Answers (June 2008, "Narrative Knowing, Living, Telling") and CollEgium (5/2009, "Writing in Context: French Literature, Theory and the Avant-Gardes") and am editing a special issue for the journal Neohelicon on the theme of transworld travel.

NARRATIVE IDENTITY AND SERIAL NARRATIVE. THE CASE OF "DAGO"

B. Gruening

University of Bologna

Abstract: COMPARATIVE AND NARRATIVE APPROACHES IN COMICS STUDIES By analyzing from a phenomenological perspective the serial comics Dago, which is settled out in the 16th Century, I will try to illustrate how the narrative identity (e.g. Ricoeur 1990) of the protagonist changes over time. A particular attention is devoted to the dialectic between his search for a home (Heimat) and his desire to wander the world (e.g. Joisten 2003), which is also the main motor of the serial narrative and which qualified the adventure spirit of the comics. In this regard I singled out and divided the comics series (until the 150 number of the series) in three parts which correspond to three different phases of Dago's life. The first phase concerns the start point of the story, when Dago had to left Venice because of a conspiracy against him and his family. He manages to survive but he becomes slave of the pirates. In this period he decides to change his personal and family name by identifying himself with a 'dagger', which was the instrument and symbol of the betrayal of his best friends. Thus he refuses every form of social identity and his memory is marked by resentment (e.g. Tomelleri 2007). Indeed his desire of surviving depends on the goal of avenging his family. The second phases starts with his liberation and is characterized by his travels around the world and his participations to the main historical events of the century. In this phase he makes 'friendly' and 'love' relationships in every place he visits but every time he prefers to leave before of being emotionally involved. Thus in this phase his identity construction is ambiguous: on a one side Dago continues to consider himself only as a survivor, on the other side, however, he does not refuse to help the others and also to take pleasure in their company, even if only for a short time. The 'third break point' is when the protagonist finds a home in an undefined village of north Italy. He conserves however is role as 'half-outsider' in the small community. Furthermore he continues to travel, but the duration and the distance of his movements are now limited, an aspect which influences also the 'narrative rhythm' and the 'adventure character' of the story. In sum, in the paper I will argue that although we have to do with a 'serial protagonist' is moral and emotional identity as well as his memory construction change over time in correspondence to the dialectic between 'home' and 'travel' which marks the narrative. To illustrate my thesis I will analyze and make examples of both the textual and image narratives, by focusing on how the social interactions and the acknowledgment dynamics are represented and narrated in the comics series.

Biography: Barbara Gruening is a sociologist and since 2009 she is postdoc research fellow at University of Bologna. Her main research interests regard the public sphere, the urban spaces, the memory phenomena, the identity construction, and the social interactions. Among her publications: Luoghi della memoria e identità collettive (2010); Diritto, norme e memorie (2010); The art of narrating and the question of cultural acknowledgment: the case of Die Kinder von Golzow and a reunified Germany (2011); Narrating the cities in comics (2011); Kommerzielle (N)Ostalgie als Vergessensform (2012).

PUBLIC HEALTH NARRATIVES AND POSTHUMANITY IN RECENT NONCANONICAL GRAPHIC NOVELS

L. DeTora

Albany Medical College

Abstract: The role of narrative in medicine and public health has been theorized in multiple disciplines; some, like narrative medicine, take an interdisciplinary approach to the practical and ethical implications of fictional narratives in lived experience. The focus here is on the continual awareness of decision-makers on the essential experiences of and values of human feeling and experience. This type of clinical and ethical practice is at odds with a widespread cultural tendency noted by Daniel Dinello in Technophobia!: Science Fiction Visions of Posthuman Technology. Dinello notes that as popular anxieties about nuclear war were replaced by preoccupations with terrorism and infection, they contributed to a totalizing dystopian discourse of a "posthumanity" characterized by the suppression of emotions and love. This posthuman vision promises to transform humanity into viruses or machines, thus eliding the human experience. I consider representations of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) in recent noncanonical—which I define as falling outside the academic "canon" identified in The Comics Studies Reader as well as the classic superhero genre—graphic novels as simultaneously participating in both mental health and epidemic, that is infectious, discourses. These graphic novels offer a rich setting for considering bioethical approaches to narrative in settings that operate to elide human emotion. Further, because the discourses of health and medicine in these narratives blur the lines between mental and public health, they offer a new area of inquiry within comics studies, which has tended to consider the psychiatric and psychological rather than the corporeal. Jonathan Hickman's The Nightly News (2010) depicts violent events as intentionally caused by powerful men who use a homosocial secret society to manufacture terrorists and thereby alter the news. Here, PTSD poses a serious public health threat in part because altered mental functioning prevents the terrorists from remembering what they have done. Hickman constructs a diegetic space in which viral discourse suffuses all aspects of daily life and the media. Here, no truth can ever exist because "viral ideas" infect all personal and public communication. Further, the infliction of PTSD here is nearly entirely through bodily interventions (sleep deprivation and dietary control, for example), which creates a space for a very interesting reading of public health, propaganda and posthumanity. Hickman's treatment of PTSD contrasts with earlier depictions. For example, in Warren Ellis' Transmetropolitan (1997-2001), Spider Jerusalem, exhibits signs of mental unbalance resulting from personal trauma and drug use, yet is singularly able to navigate a generalized public anxiety about infectious disease, terrorism, and corporate corruption to report a "truth" based largely on his refusal to adopt an objective voice. Serious infectious disease here operates as a backdrop to the primary narrative. Bill Willingham's Fables (2002-present) treats PTSD as an individual problem resulting from specific, rather than generalized, trauma, even among closely bonded, homosocial groups, such as Gepetto's wooden soldiers. Peyo's The Black Smurfs (1963), a Smurf pandemic is ended by a combination of a cataclysmic explosion and the resultant traumatic memory loss, an event Papa Smurf indicates may have occurred in a previous generation. These books together build a picture that contributes new knowledge to two discourses: medical narrative studies, which have tended not to consider the graphic novel and comics studies which has tended to consider neither these particular novels nor the influence of corporeal illness.

Biography: Lisa DeTora is a Master's Degree student in bioethics at Albany Medical College. She holds a PhD in English from the University of Rochester. Her previous publications have appeared in various fields including writing studies, children's literature, medical humanities, and the medical sciences.

S1 MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE

COSMOPOLITANISM AND MIGRANT LITERATURE

J.E. Glesener

Université du Luxembourg

Abstract: Cosmopolitanism and Migrant Literature A cursory glance at the scientific discourse on migrant literature in Europe of the last two decades reveals that migrant literature is increasingly heralded as a 'new world literature' (Rösch 2004, Rouaud/Le Bris 2007, Strum-Trigonakis 2007). The main argument of this claim rests on the fact that migrant literature transcribes the experience of everyday life in a globalized world and reflects on the challenges of existence in multicultural and multilingual contexts. It is considered as a 'new' world literature because, unlike Goethe's original concept, it is not concerned with European literature only but includes literature with cultural imprints and influences from all over the world. Concerning the research on migrant literature, this trend towards world literature deserves to be looked at more closely especially with regard to cosmopolitanism which has always been the benchmark determining a work worthy of being considered as world literature. Mads Rosendahl Thomson (2008) has already reflected on the cosmopolitan dimension of migrant literature but has done so from the standpoint of world literature studies. The object of this paper is to address the same question but from the side of the scholarship on migrant literature. Its aim is to show how migrant literature and scholarship could actively participate in the debate on cosmopolitanism that, for the last two decades, has been one of the major preoccupations of contemporary world literature studies.

Biography: Jeanne Glesener holds a PostDoc post for Luxembourgish Literature at the University of Luxembourg. She earned her PhD in Comparative Literature at the Université de Provence and her thesis focused on the aesthetics and the reception of contemporary migrant literature in Great-Britain, Germany and Luxembourg. Her fields of scientific research are Luxembourgish literature, postcolonial and migrant literatures, the history of comparative literature and the crime novel among others. She currently works on the representation of steel industry in Luxembourgish Literature and participates in an international research project on migration and literature in contemporary Europe.

REFLECTING ON TRANSNATIONALISM IN LITERARY STUDIES

F. Sinopoli

Sapienza Università di Roma

Abstract: This proposal is aimed at the workshop "Migration and Literature in Contemporary Europe" (LITTERATURE ET TERRITOIRES / LITERATURE AND TERRITORIES). The paper aims at reconsidering the realities of transnationalism in contemporary literature and their implications for comparative literary studies, in order to better characterize types, spaces and levels of the transnational dimension in literature and in its theoretical categorization. In the age of mondialization (worldness) the multifocal and multifaced question of borders produces the fact that migration literature has to be considered beyond the simple and pure opposition of centre and peripheries and beyond of the logic of the national histories of literature. Consequently the concept of nation (and of national literature) will be considered in a dynamic way by confronting it to notions like transnation, postnation, glocal, cultural ibridity in literature, transculture, etc.

Biography: Franca Sinopoli is tenured Assistant Professor of Comparative Literature. She has taught Comparative Literature at Sapienza University of Rome since 2003. She earned the PhD in Comparative Literature at the University of Rome III (1995). The thesis, focusing on the use of comparatism in late 18th century European literary historiography, was published in 1996. In 1997-1999 she got a Postdoctoral research grant from University of Rome III and then in 2001-2003, 2003-2005 new research grants sponsored by the Sapienza University. She taught Comparative Literature at The University of Lausanne, then she was Visiting Scholar at the University of Sydney and Visiting Professor at the University of Santiago de Compostela. She is a member of the International Comparative Literature Coordinating Committee (AILC). Research areas: comparative literary history, migration literature, forms of transnationalism in contemporary criticism and literature. Among her publications, the following books: Storiografia e comparazione (single author, Bulzoni, 1996), Manuale storico di letteratura comparata (coeditor, Roma, Meltemi 1997), Il mito della letteratura europea (editor, Meltemi, 1999), Letteratura comparata (coauthor, B. Mondadori 2002), La letteratura europea vista dagli altri (editor, Meltemi, 2003), Memoire, relectures et reecritures litteraires (coeditor, Bulzoni, 2005), La dimensione europea nello studio letterario (single author, B. Mondadori, 2009), La storia nella scrittura diasporica (editor, Bulzoni, 2009); La letteratura del mondo nel XXI secolo (coauthor, B. Mondadori, 2010). She translated from English into Italian: S. Bassnett, Comparative Literature: a Critical Introduction (Blackwell 1993; Introduzione critica alla letteratura comparata, Lithos 1996), S. G. Kellman, Translingual Imagination (University of Nebraska Press 2000; Scrivere tra le lingue, Città aperta 2007), and from French into Italian: Histoire des poétiques, sous la dir. de J. Bessière et al. (PUF 1997; Storia delle poetiche occidentali, Meltemi 2001).

"LE TIERS-ESPACE N'EST PAS L'ENTRE-DEUX" : MÉTISSAGE ET HYBRIDITÉ COMME CONCEPTS DESCRIPTIFS DU TRANSCULTUREL EN LITTÉRATURE

M. Geiser

CIELAM Université Aix-Marseille

Abstract: Afin de parvenir à discerner les évolutions littéraires dans le contexte des migrations en Europe, il semble indispensable d'interroger les notions d'identité et de culture, et d'appliquer des concepts théoriques permettant de décrire les processus migratoires aussi bien dans les sociétés que dans les arts. Il importe pourtant de définir des concepts qualifiant les esthétiques transnationales au-delà des catégories d'origine et d'appartenance ethnique ou territoriale. Les dynamiques transculturelles à l'œuvre dans toutes les sociétés européennes contemporaines nous amènent au développement de nouveaux angles de vue et de méthodes de lecture innovantes. Ils font appel à des terminologies aptes à communiquer les structures et les formes observées à un niveau transdisciplinaire et supranational. L'élaboration des outils nécessaires au développement d'une « critique mondiale » souhaitée par Xavier Garnier (cf. Où est la littérature mondiale, 2005) n'est pourtant qu'à ses débuts. Dans la continuité du « tournant anthropologique » (anthropological turn) des études dites culturelles (cultural studies), et grâce à l'élargissement de l'anthropologie culturelle aux questions littéraires, de nouveaux paradigmes d'analyse de la mobilité et du mélange surgissent dans la critique littéraire. Les études postcoloniales anglo-saxonnes (postcolonial studies) proposent le concept d'hybridité, évoluant parallèlement à la notion anthropologique du métissage. Comme le souligne Serge Gruzinski « L'étude des mélanges pose [...] avant tout un problème d'outillage intellectuel : comment penser le mélange ? » (La pensée métisse, 1999). En faisant écho aux réflexions de Homi K. Bhabha autour de l'hybridité et du « third space » (The location of culture, 1994), Alexis Nouss précise : « Le tiers-espace n'est pas l'entre-deux comme l'indique le changement numérique dans la terminologie. L'entre-deux existe par la tension que provoque, à partir des frontières, la rencontre de deux entités alors que le tiers-espace accueille, hors-frontières, le déplacement de ces forces, ce qui autorise la négociation » (Plaidoyer pour un monde métis, 2005). Pour les recherches autour des phénomènes esthétiques de la migration, il s'agit de trouver et de définir des outils descriptifs dépassant les logiques et les cloisonnements nationaux de la réception littéraire. Nous proposons une étude critique confrontant les concepts d'hybridité et de métissage en les interrogeant sur leur efficacité pour évaluer les faits littéraires et les nouvelles esthétiques issus des mouvements migratoires contemporains en Europe.

Biography: Myriam Geiser est germaniste et comparatiste, enseignante au département d'études germaniques à l'université Stendhal (Grenoble 3), et membre associé au groupe de recherche EA 4235 - Centre Interdisciplinaire d'Etude des Littératures d'Aix-Marseille (CIELAM). Sa thèse en cotutelle avec les universités Mayence-Germersheim et Aix-Marseille I, soutenue en août 2010, porte sur « Le discours sur la littérature interculturelle en Allemagne et en France ». Elle a publié de nombreux articles sur l'esthétique et la réception des littératures germanophones et francophones de la migration. Ses principaux axes de recherche sont les transformations des systèmes littéraires contemporains, les concepts d'identité en littérature et les poétiques du plurilinguisme. Co-édition d'ouvrages : Grenzen der Zentralität – Zur Dynamik von Zentren und Peripherien. Limites de la centralité – La dynamique des centres et des périphéries, sous la direction de Myriam Geiser, Dominique Rademacher, Lucie Taïeb, Berlin : Logos Verlag (Collection Schriften zur Kultur- und Geistesgeschichte), 2011. 256 p. Identité en métamorphose dans l'écriture contemporaine (Actes du Symposium international à l'Université d'Aix-Marseille, 7-10 avril 2005), sous la direction de Fridrun Rinner, Myriam Geiser, Jeanne Glesener, Joanna Peiron et Annika Runte, Aix-en-Provence : PUP (Publications de l'Université de Provence, Collection Textuelles – littérature), 2006. 316 p. Monographie: Der Ort transkultureller Literatur in Deutschland und in Frankreich. Deutsch-türkische und frankomaghrebinische Literatur der Postmigration. Würzburg : Königshausen & Neumann, à paraître en 2012.

S1 EARLY MODERN CONSTRUCTIONS OF EUROPE

THROUGH THE EYES OF A TRAVELLER: EUROPE IN WILLIAM LITHGOW'S THE TOTAL DISCOURSE (1614)

K. Sandrock

Georg-August University Goettingen

Abstract: Abstract: "Through the Eyes of a Traveller: Europe in William Lithgow's The Total Discourse (1614)" If the early modern period was constitutive for the construction of national and cultural identities across Europe, then travel literature played a crucial role in advancing this development by trying to make sense of foreign cultures. By means of this signifying act, travel writing did more than making the foreign familiar to the general population at home; it produced new images of early modern Europe and, with it, new European identities. The proposed paper will investigate the role early modern travel literature played in the construction of a new European imaginary by looking at British travel narratives from the early seventeenth century. It will be argued that travel writers functioned as architects of early modern Europe's cultural landscapes, seeing as their works generated knowledge about foreign countries that helped to produce fresh pictures of Europe's national and cultural identities. Particular attention will be paid to William Lithgow's The Total Discourse of the Rare Adventures and Painful Peregrinations [...] (1614), which has often been perceived as the earliest piece of British tourist literature. Because Lithgow travelled for private reasons – rather than political or mercantile reasons – it proves to be a fruitful example for the manner in which early modern travel narratives influenced the images created of foreign European cultures for the audiences back home. On the one hand, The Total Discourse reflects the Baconian desire to gain knowledge through experience and to pass this firsthand information on to readers. Thus, parts of Lithgow's treatises of Poland, Greece, Italy and Spain are inspired by the scientific style of ars apodemica literature and by its desire to convey factual information. On the other hand, The Total Discourse is – as most early modern travel narratives – still influenced by legendary medieval travelogues and by their tales of mythical creatures and exotic customs. It will be argued that this mixture of fact and fiction in The Total Discourse is typical for the ways in which early modern British travelogues fashion Europe's cultural landscapes in a manner that is both real and mythical at the same time. In the end, it will be shown that the Europe imagined in The Total Discourse is in itself an image of a changing early modern European worldview, which evolved from being dependent upon legendary, second-hand information to be increasingly influenced by personal, firsthand experiences.

Biography: Kirsten Sandrock is Assistant Professor at the Department of English Literature and Cultural Studies at the University of Goettingen. She specialises in Early Modern Literature as well as Postcolonial and Scottish Studies. Her latest publications include the monograph Gender and Region: Maritime Fiction in English by Canadian Women, 1976–2005 (Augsburg: Wissner, 2009) as well as the articles "The Quest for Authenticity: History and Class in Ian Rankin's Rebus Novels" (Scottish Literary Review 3.1 [2011]: 153-167), "Rethinking the Region in Canadian Postcolonial Studies" (Zeitschrift für Kanada-Studien 31.2 [2011]: 78-92), and "Melancholia in the South Pacific: The Strange Case of Robert Louis Stevenson's Travel Writing" (The Literature of Melancholia: Early Modern to Postmodern, ed. Martin Middeke and Christina Wald [Houndmills: Palgrave Macmillan, 2011]: 147-159).

L'EUROPE GALANTE - THE SEMANTICS OF "EUROPE" IN GERMAN NOVELS AROUND 1700

N. Detering

University of Freiburg

Abstract: After the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, German literature entered a period of intensified reception of Italian and French literature. The phenomenon of 'Gallantry', albeit a transnational phenomenon in scope, proved particularly successful in Germany and dominated poetry as well as opera or conduct books. The 'Gallant' novel in particular hybridised the different genre conventions, partly diverged from the highly rhetoricised fashion of 'Baroque' speech, and presented a complex narrative interplay between entertaining – and often explicitly erotic – love stories and didactic digressions on court politics. But German literature in the late 17th century did not only absorb literary fashions from other European country, it also used the geographic and cultural term 'Europe' in an intriguing variety of contexts and with a frequency unseen in earlier or later periods of its history.

While the German 'Gallant novel', neglected or ridiculed for decades of evaluative criticism, has recently become the subject of a number of periodic and monographic studies on German Baroque literature, its ubiquitous reference to 'Europe', connotations, implications, and associations of the term and its discursive context, have largely been neglected. My presentation aims to look at four Gallant novels from the late 17th century that make prominent use of 'Europe' in their titles – Eberhard Werner Happel's Der Europäische Toroaan (1676), Johann Beer's Der verliebte Europeer (1682), August Bohse's Die Liebenswürdige Europäerin CONSTANTINE (1698) and Christian Friedrich Hunold's Der Europäischen Höfe

Liebes- und Helden-Geschichte (1705) –, and determine the variety of semantic aspects of 'Europe' in the texts (i. e. its association with 'verliebt' or 'Höfe'), and their reference to and construction of knowledge configurations of 'Europe' around 1700.

My talk will not only ask, why the late 1600s saw such a proliferation of the term 'Europe' in German literature, how the representation of Europe is structured (i. e. what territories, nations, and culture are claimed to constitute, border, or contrast the continent), or what its historical function for the German and European identity in a period of political instability could have been, but I will also address the textual functions of the term 'Europe' for the novels, for their generic conventions, their spatial narrative, and their specific ways of meaning constructions.

Biography: Nicolas Detering (M.St. Oxford 2010, M.A. Freiburg 2011) is a doctoral student at the University of Freiburg. nicolas.detering@germanistik.uni-freiburg.de

CLASSICAL FOUNDATION MYTHS IN EARLY MODERN ROMANCE LITERATURE

U. Hennigfeld

Universität Freiburg

Abstract: Even Roman authors such as Lucan, Velleius Paterculus and Rutilius Namationus discuss the ruins of Troy, Carthage, and Rome. From 1500 onwards, ruins as vestiges of great empires become a popular trope in European poetry. The most important precursors for European poetry of ruins are Janus Vitalis's epigram, De Roma, and Baldassare Castiglione's sonnet, Superbi colli. The conceit of the ruin facilitates a mode of thinking in transitions: ruins represent both memory and forgetting, continuity as well as a break with tradition. They are exempla and encourage the striving after future fame (fama). Ruins can be charged with ever new meanings and thus become vehicles for invented traditions of the nation and for the fashioning of collective identities. Early modern poetry of ruins is particularly suited for considerations from a transnational, European perspective, because it oscillates between the quest for national identity and intercultural exchange. It plays a central role for self-fashioning in early modern cultures: on the one hand, such texts are created to advance the fame of one's nation and vernacular and to root it in collective memory; on the other hand, they tap into a European reservoir of ideas at large (myths, tropes, conceptions of man). The paper considers the movement of European lyric poetry between national identity fashioning and intercultural exchange.

Biography: HENNIGFELD, Ursula Born: July 28th, 1977 Professor (Jun.-Prof.) Department of Romance Philology

1996-2002

Romance Philology (French and Spanish literary studies) and German studies (Heinrich-Heine-Universität, Düsseldorf)

2007
Dr. phil. (Heinrich-Heine-Universität, Düsseldorf)

2009

Jun.-Prof. (University of Freiburg)

S1: THE COLONIAL INVENTION OF THE HUMANITIES: GENEALOGY AND CRITIQUE

LANGUAGE BEFORE THE LAW

S.D. Ahmed

Lehman College, City University of New York

Abstract: Since the nineteenth century, philology has governed critical method in the humanities. Its most widely influential principle is that to know a people or a period, one must study its language historically. According to the scholarly consensus, philology's authority begins with the research university. My paper argues that its authority derives instead from colonial law, which transformed indigenous life around the world. Disciplinary histories of literary studies (e.g., the work of Michael Warner, Gerald Graff, and John Guillory) overlook the fact that, long before the research university, colonial rule instituted a historical approach to the languages and texts that were thought to contain native law. Because they enforced a Western philological understanding across the globe, colonial legal systems were responsible, perhaps more than any other institution, for producing a fundamental rupture in how societies around the world understand their traditions. In short, then, contemporary scholars often invoke philology and historicism in discussions about the future of the humanities, but have not accounted for the conditions in which they emerged. Responding to this omission, this paper begins a colonial archaeology of historical method: it traces the epistemic transformation colonial law produced in late eighteenth-century India and the language practices that colonial law would destroy. An archaeological project of this kind is, as Giorgio Agamben has emphasized, philology turned against itself--or, in other words--'the destruction of a destruction.' It is the precondition for any understanding of anticolonial, postcolonial, and poststructural approaches to language and literature.

Biography: Siraj Ahmed is Associate Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Lehman College, City University of New York. He is the author of The Stillbirth of Capital: Enlightenment Writing and Colonial India (Stanford University Press, 2012) and is currently working on a book entitled Archaeology of Babel: Critical Method and Colonial Law.

POLITICAL THEORY AND THE POLITICS OF EMPIRE

K. Mantena

Yale University

Abstract: Political Theory and the Politics of Empire Over the last two decades, there has been an extraordinary rise in scholarship on the imperial and colonial dimensions of western political theory. The paper will explore this recent intellectual trend and consider its implications for the discipline of political theory and our understanding of the legacies of empire for contemporary politics. These new discussions of empire in political theory have been enabled most notably by historical investigations and very often under the rubric of the study of the history of political thought. The cumulative impact of this work has been to demonstrate the ways in which basic political categories like sovereignty, freedom, rights, property took their recognizable shape in the period of European expansion, and thus have also been importantly shaped by that imperial experience. But the recent "discovery" of the historical centrality of empire raises questions about (1) why and how this history had become so marginal to the self-understanding of the discipline and (2) its implications for understanding and criticizing the contemporary resurgence of imperial politics. The absence of empire is especially striking in Anglo-American traditions of political theorizing, which ignored the question of imperialism even as the discipline took shape during the heyday of the mid-century struggles over decolonization. The current academic turn to empire itself coincides with a new era of global politics in which imperial politics are explicitly central. At the same time, it is far from clear if the new prominence of empire in academia or political theory more specifically has adequately grasped the challenge these political developments pose. How would the theoretical understanding of empire's past and present have to be retooled in light of our current political dilemmas? What are the lessons and legacies of the historical collusions or complicities between modern political thought and modern imperial practice? What are the most effective or viable forms of the criticism of empire today?

Biography: Karuna Mantena is Associate Professor of Political Science at Yale University. She holds a BSc(Econ) in International Relations from the London School of Economics (1995), an MA in Ideology and Discourse Analysis from the University of Essex (1996), and a PhD from Harvard University in 2004. Her book, Alibis of Empire: Henry Maine and the Ends of Liberal Imperialism (2010) examined the transformation of nineteenth-century British imperial ideology. Her current research focuses on the political theory of M.K. Gandhi.

EMPIRE AND INDIAN HISTORY

R. Mantena

University of Illinois at Chicago

Abstract: A persistent problem confronting the field of Indian history as it was shaped by and reconstituted under imperial rule has been a tendency to search for European equivalents for Indian pasts. When British scholars examined, employing the comparative method, the contemporary and past cultural, political and legal institutions of colonial societies, they sought for what they knew had already existed in European history. Quentin Skinner's challenge to historians of political thought is to reconstruct the questions that constituted the conceptual field of individual thinkers rather than be muddled by whether those thinkers were asking the right questions or be concerned with the universal applicability of their key concepts. This moves us beyond the tedious analyses of the influence or diffusion of European ideas of history on Indian thought. By reconstructing the questions that constituted the conceptual field of nineteenth-century Indian history, we can unravel the encounter between Britons and Indians, an encounter of concepts, practices, institutions and individuals. This orientation on encounters allows for an analysis of power as it frames the kinds of interactions possible between Europeans and Indians. It is my contention that a focus on encounters would allow us to simultaneously tackle two important aspects of historical inquiry: the nature of intersubjective relations as well as linguistic articulations (both social and conceptual history in the words of Reinhart Koselleck.) With the example of encounters in colonial India, we are inevitably confronted at once by the complex social relationships between Europeans and Indians, the institutions that defined those relationships, as well as the concepts (the enunciation of ideas, doctrines, practices, etc.) shaped by the social interactions.

Biography: I am an Assistant Professor of History at the University of Illinois at Chicago. I received my Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 2002 and was a Carol G. Lederer Postdoctoral Fellow at the Pembroke Center at Brown University (2004-2005) and a Kluge Fellow at the Library of Congress Kluge Center for Research (2005-2006) before joining the UIC faculty in 2006. My book "The Origins of Modern Indian Historiography: Antiquarianism and Philology, 1780-1880" was just published by Palgrave Macmillan in March 2012.

THE FRACTURED PROJECT OF MODERNIST ISLAM

T. Purohit

Boston University

Abstract: The Fractured Project of Modernist Islam Islamic Modernism (1840-1940) refers to the political movement that first attempted to reconcile the Islamic faith with modern western values, such as education, progress, democracy and women's rights. Islamic modernism coincided with the dissolution of Ottoman, Mughal and Safavid empires, and the consolidation of British, French, and Dutch rule. There were several key thinkers who provided extensive analyses and discussions about this new reformist Islam. These figures included the Iranian Jamal al-Din Afghani (d. 1897), the Egyptians Muhammad Abduh (d. 1905), and Rashid Rida (d. 1935), and the Indian Syed Ahmad Khan (d. 1898). I am interested in exploring how, despite the fact that these figures were situated in contexts as diverse as Iran, India, and Egypt, their political and religious ideas about Islam were conveyed through a discursively uniform ideas about religion and civilization theory that can be traced to the thought of 18th and 19th century European Orientalists. The modernist conception of Islam functioned as anti-colonial discourse—that is, a means to convey political and religious unity in opposition to a European "other". I argue that this logic of unity was ultimately untenable because of its secular orientation: it could not account for the culturally diverse forms of religious expression in the history of Islam

Biography: Teena Purohit is Assistant Professor of Religion at Boston University.

PRIMITIVISM AND COUNTER-INSURGENCY. JORGE DIAS AND MAKONDE VOICES

P. Israel

University of the Western Cape

Abstract: Postcolonial criticism is posited on the idea of the alignment between power and knowledge. The work of othering performed by the colonial library "fulfilled a political project in which, supposedly, the object unveils its being, its secrets, and its potential to a master who could, finally, domesticate it" (Mudimbe 1988, xii). Following this widespread interpretation, primitivism and will to power go hand in hand: the projection of the native in another time is a justification for the civilizing mission (Fabian 1983); the invention of tribalism is a masquerade for indirect rule (Mamdani 1996). This paper endeavors to question this assumption, by analyzing the work of portuguese anthropologist Antonio Jorge Dias (1907-1973). Trained in Germany between 1937 and 1949 (where he met his wife Margot, also an ethnologist) and then in the United States in the 1950s, Dias managed to displace the dominant paradigm of Portuguese physical anthropology in favour of scholarship more in touch with international debates and trends. He was especially influenced by functionalism, the culture and personality school and volkerkunde. From 1956 to 1960 Dias carried out fieldwork amongst the Makonde people of northern Mozambique together with Margot, writing a monumental monograph that is the most enduring legacy of Portuguese colonial ethnography. While doing fieldwork, Dias was charged by the Portuguese ministry of overseas (ultramar) of secretly reporting on the political situation in the Makonde plateau, which would turn into a hotbed of political rebellion in the 1960s. This blatant case of applied anthropology has been used to make a case for the "complicities" between primitivism and imperial politics (Pereira 1986, 1998, West 2004). This paper explores the opposite idea: that Dias's primitivism made him deaf to the work of counter-insurgency that he was supposed to carry out in the Mueda plateau on the eve of the War for Independence. It does so by reading against each other the passages of Dias' work that refer to the performative expression of the Makonde, and contemporary recordings of the same expressions. The paper will argue that primitivism was a hindrance to the work of counter-insurgency and that it made the anthropologist deaf, rather than enabling the operation of power that he was supposed to perform. The methodological implication of the paper is that the reading of the colonial archive should be unmoored from neo-functionalist Foucauldian assumptions concerning the alignments between power and knowledge (Sahlins 2002); and that the relationships between power, knowledge and textuality are much more complex and elusive.

Biography: Paolo Israel holds a PhD in historical anthropology from the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales in Paris. He carried out extensive research in northern Mozambique, focusing on the intersections between popular culture and politics. Paolo lives and works in Cape Town since 2008. He is currently working on two book projects: a manuscript based on his doctoral dissertation, titled Mapiko! Masquerading and people's power in Mozambique; and an edited book on South African historiography, Out of History (with Leslie Wits and Jung Ran Forte). Paolo has also worked and published on witch-hunts and occult rumours; storytelling and oral performance. His article 'The War of Lions', won an award as the best article published by a new contributor in JSAS 2009, and was highlighted by the African Studies Association (USA) as one of the 'ten most downloaded articles in African Studies' in 2009-2010. - Research interests: – Mozambique – African popular culture – Theory of history – Anthropology of belief Selected publications: 2011. "This is our Contemporary". Mozambican Masks in Cape Town, Art South Africa, 10.4 (Dec. 2011), forthcoming. 2010. 'The Formulaic Revolution: Song and the "popular memory" of the Mozambican Liberation Struggle. Cahiers d'Etudes Africaines, L (1), 197 (Mar. 2010), pp. 181-216. 2009. 'Utopia Live: Song and the Liberation Struggle in Mozambique'. Kronos. Journal of Southern African Histories, 35 (Dec. 2009), pp. 98-141. 2009. 'The War of Lions. Witch-Hunts, Idiom Occults and Post-socialism in Northern Mozambique (Muidumbe, 2002-2003)'. Journal of Southern African Studies, 35, 1 (March 2009), pp. 155-174. 2006. 'Irony, Ambiguity and the Art of Recycling. Reflections on Contemporary Rural African Art and Africa Remix'. Third Text, 82(3), pp. 585-600. 2006. "Kummwangalela Guebuza". The Mozambican general elections of 2004 in Muidumbe and the roots of the loyalty of Makonde people to Frelimo'. Lusotopie, XIII, 2, pp. 103-126. 2005. 'Mapiko masquerades of the Makonde: Performance and Historicity' in Eastern African Visual 'Traditions', Arero, Hassan & Zachary Kingdon (eds). London: Horniman Museum (Critical Museology and Material Culture series), pp. 99-121.

S1: LES CRÉATEURS, LA CRITIQUE ET LE DIALOGUE DES ARTS

LE PARTAGE DE LA MUSIQUE

V. Galíndez-Jorge
Université de Sao Paulo

Abstract: Le chant des sirènes, les matins, l'aube, le jadis, la mer, la mort. La littérature comme partage, la musique qui ne cesse de se faire entendre, de s'imposer à l'écoute des "oreilles [qui] n'ont pas de paupières". Dans Pascal Quignard la musique s'inscrit dans la recherche de l'origine, dans cette incursion dans le jadis des mots, le jadis de la voix, du verbe dont l'écriture ne saurait se passer, sans lesquels l'écriture ne pourrait voir le jour. Notre but est de comprendre ce que cache la haine de la musique comme mouvement d'attraction de l'écriture. Le travail de Pascal Quignard nous semble interroger sans cesse l'activité de création qui ne saurait se faire dans l'autonomie des discours. Ce créateur offre sans cesse une écriture qui refuse la neutralité, le calme des lieux de création connus. La violence des phrases courtes, mais aussi des formes variées que prend sa production envahissent le corps du lecteur: vers latin pour opéra contemporaine, réécriture d'Euripides pour la danse, cinéma, essais philosophiques, romans, contes, livres d'art, la publication de ses propres manuscrits. Serait-ce vraiment de la haine, ou plutôt le partage de l'amour, comme le veut Antigone? Ces mouvements d'attraction et d'effraction nous semblent constitutifs de la création de Pascal Quignard, une proposition contemporaine qui ne cesse de s'organiser à travers une interrogation systématique des créateurs de tout temps: anonymes au Paestum, nommés et directement traduits pour Lycophon.
Mots-clés : Pascal Quignard ; Littérature et arts ; Littérature Comparée ; Création littéraire

Biography: Verónica GALÍNDEZ-JORGE est professeur de littérature française à l'Université de São Paulo. Elle y dirige un groupe de recherches consacré à l'étude des rapports entre la folie, l'écriture et la littérature (GELLE). Elle développe des recherches sur la génétique et sur Flaubert et, plus récemment, sur la littérature française contemporaine. À déjà publié de nombreux articles et le livre Fogos de artifício. Flaubert e a escritura (Feux d'artifice. Flaubert et l'écriture, éd. Ateliê, Cotia-Brésil). Elle développe actuellement une recherche sur les rapports écriture/lecture de manuscrits contemporains.

"SOLIDARITÉ" ENTRE LES ARTS ET CRÉATION TEXTUELLE : BOUTÈS DE PASCAL QUIGNARD

I. Fenoglio
ITEM (CNRS/ENS)

Abstract: Pascal Quignard, dans chacun de ses livres, établit diverses « correspondances » entre des formes de création diverses. En cela, il est possible de dire qu'il textualise, en fiction, un dialogue entre les arts. La contribution s'attachera à montrer cette intrication dans Boutès (éd. Galilée, 2008) qui, sous couvert d'un propos sur la musique, inaugure la danse, tout en s'appuyant – l'observation du manuscrit nous permettra de le montrer – sur des représentations scripturales de sirènes et de plongeur ; représentations dont certaines sont autographes.

Biography: I. FENOGLIO; Paris/FR

L'ŒUVRE SANS FRONTIÈRE : POÉTIQUE DU PALIMPSESTE ET ÉCHOLALIE DES ARTS DANS LES ÉCRITS DE PIERRE MICHON

G. Noiray
Université de Cergy-Pontoise

Abstract: L'œuvre de Pierre Michon est rare, car parcimonieuse, érudite et inclassable. Son originalité tient entre autres aux perméabilités entre les genres, entre les arts qui la nourrissent. J'ai choisi de m'intéresser à cette œuvre pour découvrir les régimes de ces porosités et leurs prolongements possibles. Michon écrivain se fonde à travers de multiples personnages ; il est modelé par la pâte des œuvres et des auteurs qu'il admire (Rimbaud, Hugo, Balzac, Flaubert, Faulkner), et ses propres œuvres fonctionnent comme un palimpseste où se mêlent aux siennes des traces d'autres mains, où resurgissent d'autres voix. Ces apparitions d'autrui font émerger une écriture qui procède d'un tissage d'indistinction et de singularité. En n'effaçant rien, Michon instaure le règne de la métamorphose. Aussi peut-on repérer l'absence de frontière à des effets de traces discrètes ou voyantes, de citations explicites, revendiquées, semi-travesties, parfois masquées, qui se font écho, se composent ou se décomposent en échos d'échos, en retours de sons, de rythmes, purs, fragmentés ou altérés, de leitmotiv, de refrains parfois amputés, parfois augmentés. Michon pratique l'écho et la variation ; son œuvre passée et présente est faite de « textes brefs qui se font écho, qui s'engendrent l'un l'autre, l'un contredisant, invalidant ou au contraire amplifiant, commentant le précédent » ; « l'idée d'écho d'un texte à l'autre, je le répète, m'est essentielle : et en ce sens mes fragments mis bout à bout composent bien une unité organique » (Histoire, février 2012). Ainsi se constitue une esthétique de l'écholalie qui fusionne des échos différents. Ce faisant, Michon crée un ascendant sur son lecteur ou des connivences avec un lecteur obligatoirement actif. Par le biais de ce principe d'échos, il met en place un processus de saisissement de son propre moi, car son œuvre relève d'une autobiographie au long cours, d'une suite d'échos autobiographiques. Le dialogue continu que Michon instaure entre la littérature et la peinture de Goya, Watteau ou Van Gogh, est une forme différente de critique esthétique. En littérature, il va et vient entre récits de première ou seconde main et image(s) – peinture ou photographie –, entre faits avérés ou imaginaires, entre son œuvre et celle d'auteurs majeurs, entre les grandes figures de différentes époques (Moyen Age, Renaissance, Révolution, xix^e ou xx^e siècles), entre histoire (néolithique, le Comité de salut public), autofiction et autobiographie (Vies minuscules). Ces effets de capillarité, d'osmose, de dissolution des repères, rendent ses récits inclassables car tous les matériaux à l'œuvre se croisent, se fondent et s'enrichissent d'une réflexion sur la réception des œuvres et leur influence sur sa vie d'écrivain. Au cœur de l'œuvre de Michon sont en effet posées, via différentes métaphores, des questions liées aux mystères de la création, de ce qui préside aux grandes œuvres, à l'étonnement devant sa propre œuvre. Eroder toute frontière, jouer avec les porosités lui permet de libérer le langage, de faire surgir un espace d'écriture différent. Par glissements successifs, il peut retrouver le moment inaugural de toute création et le geste qui l'accompagne, le moment où du chaos naît le monde, naît la langue littéraire pour dire ce monde, le bonheur du créateur ou sa longue peine. Chaque récit devient un espace de mutualisation des arts. Des effets de constellation infusent et nourrissent donc un principe de co-médialité dans cette œuvre, où prend source ce que Michon appelle le « grand souffle d'émoi », qui est sa constante quête. C'est certainement parce qu'il n'y a pas de frontière entre les genres, entre les arts, que souffle et émoi sont possibles. Cette originalité traduit une singulière capacité à repenser le champ littéraire comme creuset d'intermédialité.

Biography: Geneviève Noiray est Prag à l'Université de Cergy-Pontoise depuis 1996, après avoir enseigné dans le second degré depuis 1979. Elle est titulaire du Capes et de l'Agrégation de Lettres Modernes. Ses deux mémoires de DEA, en lettres modernes et en didactique, portent sur « Baudelaire critique : le peintre de la vie moderne » (1976, université Stendhal de Grenoble) et en didactique (1994, université Diderot Paris VII). Elle a participé à différents colloques (Cergy et universités) ainsi qu'aux séminaires de poétiques de l'ENS dirigés par J.-M. Maulpoix et Y. Charnet. Elle continue à participer à de nombreuses formations en relation avec l'enseignement qu'elle dispense, dont l'Ecole de Chaillot – Cité de l'architecture. Elle a donné des cours et des conférences à l'IFITEP (Paris VI) ainsi qu'à l'Ecole Normale de Musique de Paris, sur la littérature française et la musique du XVI^e au XX^e siècle. Elle a été responsable de la communication du département Génie Civil à l'UCP et administratrice responsable des stages en entreprise. Elle a dirigé plus de cinquante projets en lien avec l'architecture et la restauration de monuments historiques

Publications :

- « Vies minuscules de Pierre Michon, une poétique oblique de la nouvelle autobiographique », La Nouvelle de langue française aux frontières des autres genres du Moyen-Age à nos jours. Actes du colloque de Metz – juin 1996, dir. Vincent Engel et Michel Guissard, Presses Universitaires de Louvain, 1996, p. 289-300
- traductions et synopsis pour la revue L'Avant-Scène Opéra (1986-1991)

YVES BONNEFOY OU QUAND L'ECRITURE N'EST PLUS ECRITURE MAIS CHOSES ET COULEURS

L. De Aguiar Costa
Universidade Federal de São Paulo

Abstract: Dans "Une autre époque de l'écriture" (1993), deux figures — un il qu'un je hésite, bien qu'il en ait l'envie, d'appeler maître — dialoguent à mesure qu'ils avancent par un sentier dans un bois. Leur sujet de conversation: l'écriture, voire le langage. Juste avant d'arriver à une cabane au bord d'un ruisseau, cet il dont la voix se fait beaucoup entendre explique à son interlocuteur que lettres et mots avaient acquis une autre évidence — et l'étymologie gréco-latine nous en dit long sur ce vocable, "evidentia", "videre", "videns", "energeia" —, capable de nous détacher "peu à peu de l'idée même de parole". Et à lui d'affirmer: "Disons qu'on inventait la peinture". Tout l'enjeu de la pratique littéraire d'Yves Bonnefoy est là: et dans son oeuvre poétique et dans son oeuvre de critique d'art, il s'agit de s'interroger sur les moyens par lesquels l'artiste invente "l'ordre du monde", et le monde même. Cela veut dire que c'est le rapport au monde — et à sa présence — qui gagne la scène de la poésie et de la prose poétique — et qu'est-ce d'ailleurs "La longue chaîne de l'ancre" sinon l'un des plus beaux exemples contemporains de prose poétique? Fini donc le monde colonisé par les mots. Il est indéniable que, malgré les périls que porte le langage (et qui hantent tous ses fidèles dévots), l'oeuvre d'Yves Bonnefoy essaie de s'en détacher par la pratique de ce que l'on pourrait appeler une désécriture. Désécriture portée vers le visible. Désécriture qui prend à sa charge de mettre en relief — et bien sûr en évidence — "toutes les dimensions de l'objet, du monde" —, avec ses odeurs, ses bruits, ses menus personnages. Cette communication proposera donc quelques "pensées détachées" sur la démarche à la fois poétique et critique qui se met en place notamment dans "La vie errante suivi de Remarques sur le dessin" (1993) et dans "La longue chaîne de l'ancre" (2008), en essayant d'en dégager tout un réseau d'images pleines de couleurs poétiques.

Biography: Leila DE AGUIAR COSTA est docteur en sciences du langage (Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales de Paris). Maître de conférences à l'Universidade Federal de São Paulo/Brésil, elle est l'auteur de "A italianidade em Stendhal: heroísmo, virtude e paixão nas Crônicas Italianas e em A Cartuxa de Parma" (São Paulo, Fundação Editora da Unesp, 2004) e de "Antigos e Modernos: a cena literária francesa no século XVII" (São Paulo, Edusp/Nankim Editorial, 2010). Co-organisatrice de "O Olhar do texto: 16 ensaios em torno do diálogo texto-imagem" (São Paulo, Algor Editora, sous presse), elle est aussi l'auteur de plusieurs articles au Brésil et en France sur les littératures française et portugaise.

S1 COMPARATISME ET MOUVEMENTS DE LA REPRESENTATION

PARIS AU NOMBRIL DU MONDE LITTERAIRE ? LE RAPPORT ENTRE L'ACADEMIE, LE MARCHÉ ET LA FRANCOPHONIE

C. Tachtiris
Kalamazoo College

Abstract: La francophonie a bien pris sa place dans l'académie, au moins en Amérique du Nord où le nombre de postes, de revues et de cours dans ce domaine témoigne de sa croissance. Si les études francophones essayent de remettre en cause la relation entre centre et périphérie, est-ce qu'on pourrait dire autant pour la marché littéraire? Pascale Casanova dans son livre controversé désigne Paris comme capitale de "La république mondiale des Lettres," où Paris servirait une fonction consécatoire pour la littérature dite mondiale. C'est Paris qui jouerait le rôle d'arbitre culturel et conférerait la littéarité aux textes qui circulent dans le marché international. Est-ce que c'est possible pour des textes francophones d'accéder à la mondialité sans passer par Paris? Quel est le rapport entre l'académie et le marché dans la réception et circulation des textes francophones? Cette communication prend pour exemple l'oeuvre de Dany Laferrière, écrivain d'origine haïtienne qui réside à Montréal.

Biography: Corine Tachtiris received her PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Michigan. She taught at Paris 7 Diderot and now holds a Mellon Postdoctoral Fellowship at Kalamazoo College. She also translates Haitian literature into English.

REPRESENTATION DES PERIODES DICTATORIALES DANS DES ROMANS LATINO-AMERICAINS

H.B. Pereira
UNIVERSITÉ PRESBITERIEENNE MACKENZIE

Abstract: Dans de nombreux pays de l'Amérique Latine, la seconde moitié du XIXe siècle est marquée par des coups d'état qui aboutissent à des dictatures militaires de droite. La représentation fictionnelle de telles périodes n'a pas encore été étudiée dans sa réelle dimension. La plupart des écrivains furent soumis à des contraintes intellectuelles ou morales, en raison de la censure et de la répression à tout matériel d'ordre culturel ou intellectuel. Davantage encore, nombre d'entre eux furent exposés à des situations de violence par l'apparat militaire discriminatoire et cruel dans les poursuites et les séances de torture, outre l'extorsion, le chantage, l'agression contre des proches et autant d'autres excès de pouvoir qui furent tolérés pendant cette période-là où l'état de droit fut annulé. La présente étude a pour but d'analyser des romans qui dénoncent telles situations, toujours dans la perspective de ceux qui ont résisté et recherché des issues. A cette fin, ont été sélectionnés : Au ralenti [Em câmara lenta], du brésilien Renato Tapajós, Étoile distante [Estrella distante] du chilien Roberto Bolaño et La fête au bouc [La fiesta del chivo] du pérouvien Mario Vargas Llosa. La perspective théorique de cette étude prend le texte littéraire en tant que construction esthétique qui est, sans se limiter à l'aspect journalistique ou informatif, porteuse de la mémoire culturelle de ces peuples, et qui rend possible (crée, instaure) une puissante réflexion sur le monde où l'on vit.

Biography: Helena Bonito Couto Pereira is a PhD from São Paulo University (Universidade de São Paulo), Professor of Brazilian Literature at the Mackenzie Presbyterian University (São Paulo, Brazil). She has edited Brazilian Fiction in 21st Century [Ficção brasileira no século XXI] (2009), and coedited Languages in classroom in the university [Linguagens na sala de aula do ensino superior] (2009). Her research interests include Latin American / Brazilian Literature and Novels to Films Adaptations. She has been Vice-President of Brazilian Comparative Literature Association (Abralic), whose Executive Council she is member. She's member of the Executive Council of the Brazilian Writers Union [União Brasileira de Escritores]. She's a ICLA member since 1997, and has participate in all congresses after this year: Leiden, Pretoria, Hong Kong, Rio de Janeiro and Seoul.

LE NECESSAIRE RENOUVEAU DE LA NOTION D'ENGAGEMENT LITTERAIRE : UNE OUVERTURE ET UN DECENTREMENT.

C. Chaudet
Paris IV Sorbonne

Abstract: « Sartre n'a certes pas inventé l'engagement, mais il reste le seul à avoir osé l'élever au rang d'un impératif littéraire absolu et à avoir mis en demeure les autres écrivains de s'y soumettre absolument », déclare Benoît Denis.[1] Même si la réception immédiate de l'engagement littéraire sartrien fut souvent critique en Europe occidentale et aux Etats-Unis, une analyse globale de la réception de la notion montre que le terme « engagement littéraire » est passé dans le vocabulaire philosophique, politique et littéraire européen et étatsunien. Mais il apparaît que le rapport sartrien au marxisme a posé bon nombre de difficultés dans l'intégration de la notion au vocabulaire des différentes aires langagières évoquées précédemment. Entre les années 1960 à 1980, on observe, en France et ailleurs, ce qui s'apparente à première vue à un rejet de la doctrine sartrienne de l'engagement, ainsi qu'un développement de réflexions autour d'un engagement de la forme : ces deux épisodes (qui tendent à se chevaucher) correspondent en fait aussi à de nouvelles manières de penser l'engagement littéraire. Dans la lignée de Barthes, qui revendiquait un engagement de l'écrivain dans la forme, des réflexions autour d'un engagement de l'écrivain par la forme se développent à partir des années 1960. Et beaucoup viennent de l'étranger, portées notamment par Umberto Eco, Theodor W. Adorno ou Peter Weiss. En outre, le lien entre engagement et langue possède une actualité particulière au sein des littératures postcoloniales. Dans ce contexte, le travail poussé sur la forme n'est définitivement plus l'apanage de l'œuvre littéraire 'autonome'. Il semble cependant que ces propositions n'aient pas été tant perçues comme des tentatives de repenser l'engagement littéraire que comme des réflexions visant à l'enterrer ; car des expressions telles que « destitution des intellectuels » ou « reflux de l'engagement » paraissent aujourd'hui, au premier abord du moins, être les mots d'ordre... L'expression « destitution des intellectuels » provient de l'universitaire Yves Charles Zarka, qui a publié en septembre 2010 un ouvrage portant ce titre-même.[2] Y. C. Zarka y explique ainsi qu'« aujourd'hui l'intellectuel est devenu un histrion sans œuvre ni autorité, mais doté d'une place dans des réseaux de pouvoir pour se maintenir dans la visibilité médiatique »[3] – vision largement partagée, en France et au-delà. Mais certaines voix gardent espoir en la notion d'intellectuel et en celle d'engagement, en préférant mettre l'accent sur le changement de statut des intellectuels plutôt que sur leur destitution. Ainsi, Benoît Denis et Gisèle Sapiro, entre autres, constatent que l'engagement littéraire n'est pas 'mort' si l'on accepte de le concevoir dans un sens large, pas uniquement idéologique, et si l'on accepte le fait que ses formes et modalités ne sont pas restées figées au stade où elles ont été synthétisées par Sartre.[4] L'Allemand Helmut Pleitsch souligne, lui, la vivacité de la notion d'engagement dans l'aire anglophone. Il évoque à ce titre l'ouvrage A Zone of Engagement de Perry Anderson (1992) ainsi que l'essai Representations of the Intellectual d'Edward Said (1994), ce dernier étant considéré comme l'une des actualisations de Qu'est-ce que la littérature ? de Sartre.[5] Didier Coste, de son côté, évoque le caractère fécond de la problématique de l'engagement dans un contexte extra-occidental, celui de l'Inde.[6] Ce que soulignent en fait ces deux derniers auteurs, c'est le lien entre l'actualisation de la notion d'engagement et l'essor des littératures postcoloniales. Jean-Pierre Durix remarque que certaines œuvres littéraires récentes, se plaçant « au carrefour du postcolonial et du postmodernisme », se distinguent justement du postmodernisme occidental par le recours au social qui les caractérise.[7] Comme le rappelle Swenta Steining, les courants postcoloniaux et postmodernes se révèlent être très liés l'un à l'autre, ceci en raison de la volonté caractéristique du mouvement postmoderne de rejeter la plupart des concepts se référant à un centre ou dérivant de la notion d'un centre.[8] Le développement de telles œuvres littéraires situées « au carrefour du postcolonial et du postmodernisme », pour reprendre les termes de Durix, n'est donc aucunement étonnant. Or ce 'rejet du centre' a une implication fondamentale : penser l'engagement littéraire en termes postcoloniaux et postmodernes n'est possible que dans la mesure où l'on aborde ce dernier en tant que phénomène transnational. Certes, la figure de l'intellectuel occidental s'est modifiée ; certes, l'engagement littéraire n'est plus possible de la même manière qu'il l'était au temps de Sartre, notamment en raison de la fin de certaines grandes utopies (dont en particulier l'utopie révolutionnaire) – en Occident du moins : il suffit de penser à l'ainsi nommé 'printemps arabe' pour se rendre compte que l'utopie révolutionnaire n'a pas été rejetée partout. Il reste aujourd'hui à se demander si la modification de certaines modalités ne peut, même en France et en Occident, tout de même donner naissance à de nouvelles formes d'engagement. Il reste de plus à examiner la figure de l'intellectuel(le) non-occidental(e), et de l'intellectuel(le) pas entièrement occidental(e). Et il reste à étudier plus en profondeur l'engagement littéraire hors des frontières de France, et hors des frontières occidentales, où la notion même d'engagement connaît actuellement une certaine vitalité. Ce sont ces pistes que j'ai suivies dans ma thèse, en m'attachant aux auteurs suivants : Waris Dirie, Taslima Nasreen, Toni Morrison, Salman Rushdie, Orhan Pamuk, Luis Sepúlveda, Ben Okri, J.-M.-G. Le Clézio et Peter Handke. Ma présentation aurait ainsi pour but de mettre au jour le renouveau – rendu possible par une ouverture et un décentrement – de la notion d'engagement littéraire, dans le cadre d'une comparaison transnationale d'œuvres publiées entre 1980 et 2010.

[1] Denis, Benoît : Littérature et engagement (de Pascal à Sartre), Paris : Seuil, 2000, p. 261. [2] Zarka, Yves Charles : La destitution des intellectuels, Paris : PUF, 2010. [3] Zarka, Yves Charles : « La destitution des intellectuels » in Zarka : La destitution des intellectuels, op. cit., p. 7–42, p. 7. [4] Voir Denis : Littérature et engagement (de Pascal à Sartre), op. cit., et Sapiro, Gisèle : La Responsabilité de l'écrivain, Paris : Seuil, 2011. [5] Pleitsch, Helmut : « Engagement/ Tendenz/ Parteilichkeit », in Ästhetische Grundbegriffe, Ed.: Barck, Karlheinz; Fontius, Martin; etc., Stuttgart : Metzler, 2000, p. 178–223, p. 178–179. [6] Coste, Didier : « Par-delà l'identitaire. Engagements romanesques indiens depuis Tagore » in Bouju, Emmanuel (Ed.): L'Engagement littéraire. Cahiers du groupe φ – 2005, Rennes ; Presses Universitaires de Rennes, 2005, p. 127–140, p. 128. [7] Voir Durix, Jean Pierre : « Littératures postcoloniales » in Encyclopédie Universalis. (Partie 1. Littératures anglophones, la seconde partie 2. Littératures francophones étant rédigée par Jean-Louis Joubert). [8] Voir Steinig, Swenta : Salman Rushdies Shame. (Postkoloniale) Geschichte und Geschichten, Diss Duisburg 1998, Libri Books on Demand, p. 144.

Biography: Chloé Chaudet, née le 8 avril 1985 à Beauvais, France.

Titulaire d'un baccalauréat européen allemand, j'ai effectué toutes mes études (littérature comparée, littérature française, philosophie et histoire de l'art) en Allemagne, auprès de Manfred Schmeling, ancien directeur et professeur émérite de l'UFR de littérature générale et comparée de l'Université de Sarrebruck. J'ai également travaillé, de 2006 à 2009, en tant qu'étudiante-assistante auprès de lui, le secondant notamment dans la traduction en français de discours et exposés réalisés dans le cadre de sa fonction de président de l'AILC.

J'ai ensuite travaillé, de mai 2009 à septembre 2011, sur ma thèse (Dynamiques internationales de l'engagement littéraire des années 1980 à 2010), dirigée en cotutelle par Manfred Schmeling et Anne Tomiche (Paris IV). Une version brute de ma thèse est actuellement entre leurs mains.

Je prépare depuis septembre 2011 le CAPES et l'agrégation de lettres modernes à Paris IV.

DIDEROT : UN EUDÉMONISME POUR NOTRE TEMPS

O. Tonneau

Homerton College, Cambridge

Abstract: Selon Freud, « le narcissisme universel, l'amour-propre de l'humanité, a subi jusqu'à présent trois graves démentis de la part de la recherche scientifique. » Ces trois blessures narcissiques furent infligées par Copernic, Darwin et Freud lui-même, le premier ayant montré que la terre n'est pas le centre de l'univers, le second que l'homme est un animal comme les autres et le dernier, qu'il n'est pas maître de ses pulsions. Ces coups portés à l'anthropocentrisme ont eu des conséquences éthiques très profondes, que nous voulons explorer en posant la question de la possibilité d'un eudémonisme contemporain.

Par eudémonisme, nous désignons une éthique dont la vérité centrale est qu'il n'y a pas de bonheur sans vertu. Pour Socrate, Platon, Aristote ou Thomas d'Aquin, cette vérité avait valeur d'axiome, et c'est pourquoi la quête du bonheur se confondait avec celle du bien pour constituer « la vie bonne ». Mais l'homme qui se sait né d'une nature sans finalité, jouet des pulsions, produit de l'histoire, peut-il encore croire en la vie bonne ? A cette question, un philosophe a répondu par l'affirmative : Denis Diderot. Or sa réponse nous intéresse d'autant plus qu'il semble avoir réussi la gageure de concilier la vision éthique aristotélicienne et la condition de l'homme contemporain, et pourrait donc jeter pour nous un pont entre l'une et l'autre. La position de Diderot dans l'histoire des idées est en effet remarquable. Fêré de culture grecque, il embrassa d'abord une vision aristotélicienne de l'homme et du monde (qu'il n'avait d'ailleurs pas découverte chez Aristote mais chez le philosophe anglais Shaftesbury), et y puisa la conviction profonde qu'il n'y a pas de bonheur sans vertu. Il se rallia cependant très vite au matérialisme en plein essor, dont il devint l'un des penseurs les plus audacieux. Il suffit pour juger de la pertinence de ses intuitions de savoir qu'il est l'auteur qu'Hegel cite le plus souvent dans la Phénoménologie de l'Esprit, que Marx le cite comme son auteur préféré, que Freud reconnaît en lui l'un de ses précurseurs et que le prix Nobel de biologie François Jacob a mis une citation de Diderot en exergue de La Logique du vivant ! Si la pensée de Diderot n'est évidemment plus à la page de la science, sa vision du monde n'en est pas moins déjà la nôtre dans ses principes. L'eudémonisme qui était le sien pourrait donc bien être tel que nous puissions l'adopter.

Biography: Olivier Tonneau

Fellow of Homerton College, Cambridge

Lecturer in French at Homerton College

Associated Lecturer at the University of Cambridge

L'IMAGE DÉCENTRÉE D'OEDIPE. VARIATIONS AUTOUR D'UN PERSONNAGE MYTHIQUE

A. Kharraz

Université de Haute Alsace

Abstract: Nous proposons d'étudier les réécritures du mythe d'Oedipe dans La Machine infernale (1934) de Jean Cocteau et dans Oedipe Roi (1949) de l'Égyptien Tawfiq el-Hakîm, dans une perspective comparatiste. Dans ces textes, la Grèce n'est plus le centre du mythe, qui va se couler dans des esthétiques contemporaines et prendre une nouvelle dimension, en résonance avec le contexte spatio-temporel qui les produit. Tawfiq el-Hakîm invite à se détacher du décor et des circonstances traditionnelles du mythe pour plonger dans un monde oriental, en le liant à des sources arabes. Il soumet ainsi la reconstruction du mythe aux références et aux exigences socio-culturelles arabo-musulmanes. Avec cet écrivain, le mythe d'Oedipe se trouve excentré par rapport à son environnement historico-culturel et forme ainsi une image décentrée de ce personnage grec. Dans La Machine infernale, le contexte de l'entre-deux guerres permet de repenser le concept de tragique et de s'interroger sur le destin. Cette universalité n'est-elle pas le propre du mythe ? La rencontre de différentes cultures autour d'un même mythe (grecque, française, arabe) en révèle toute la portée. Le transfert permet de nouvelles approches tout en mettant en valeur toute la singularité du mythe. Les réécritures sont autant de réponses aux questions posées par le mythe d'Oedipe, où l'interrogation est justement l'un des motifs essentiels. Leur théâtre leur donne toute leur portée en les posant directement aussi bien aux personnages qu'aux spectateurs. Nous proposons donc une étude comparée de ces deux oeuvres afin de révéler les différents procédés qui aboutissent au décentrement du personnage mythique d'Oedipe.

Biography: Ahmed Kharraz est Docteur de l'Université de Haute-Alsace à Mulhouse en Littérature comparée et membre de l'ILLE (Institut de Langues et Littératures Européennes). Il a soutenu une thèse intitulée L'Étalon et le voile ou L'image du corps dans le récit intime contemporain arabe et francophone sous la direction des Professeurs Éric Lysøe et Peter Schnyder, à paraître aux éditions L'Harmattan, 2012. Il a publié plusieurs articles sur le récit intime féminin et masculin ainsi que sur la francophonie.

S3: COMPARATISME ET INTERMÉDIALITÉ

VIENNE, BERLIN ET PARIS : TROIS CULTURES DE LA MODERNITÉ ET LEURS IMPLICATIONS INTERMÉDIALES

E. Werth

Université Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3

Abstract: La modernité européenne englobe divers courants dans tous les champs de la pensée et de la création – dans la littérature, la peinture, la philosophie, la psychanalyse et dans la vie en général –, si bien qu'il convient de parler d'une modernité plurielle. Les métropoles culturelles que sont Vienne, Berlin et Paris constituent des centres culturels extrêmement effervescents et pour ainsi dire les pivots des bouleversements survenus au tournant du 19^e siècle. C'est là que s'enracine la recherche des modernes qui, de plus en plus souvent, recourent à différentes formes d'expression artistiques. L'entrelacement des arts est notamment le fait de l'esprit moderniste viennois fin de siècle, enhardi par le déclin de la puissance des Habsbourg. La proximité des artistes, leurs échanges, leurs amitiés expliquent en partie que nombre d'entre eux s'essayèrent à des disciplines voisines de leur principal champ de création. Les recherches sur la modernité viennoise et de sa pratique intermédiaire servira de point de départ à l'étude des deux autres berceaux de la modernité : Berlin et Paris. Il s'agira d'examiner le degré d'interaction des médias considérés traditionnellement comme distincts dans les trois centres de culture de la modernité afin d'étudier leurs origines. Est-ce que les similitudes et les différences constatées sont affaires de culture ? La relation à l'image diffère-t-elle entre les métropoles de tradition catholique (Vienne, Paris) et la métropole protestante qu'est Berlin ? Ces traditions confessionnelles ont-elles des répercussions sur les autres médias ? Comment situer ici l'enjeu de la perception et de la représentation ainsi que celui de l'imagination permise et/ou interdite par la confession ? L'imbrication des formes d'expression artistiques de la modernité Viennoise découle en grande partie de la recherche du moi tellement bouleversé par la crise de l'identité qui secoue alors la métropole autrichienne. Qu'en est-il dans les deux autres centres culturels envisagés ? C'est à ces questions que nous tenterons de répondre.

Biography: E. Werth; Paris/FR

LE "SAUT" INTERMÉDIAL ENTRE LE DRAME ET LE THÉÂTRE : L'APPORT DU MODERNISME (MAETERLINCK ET JARRY VERSUS HOFMANNSTHAL)

A. Bosse

Université de Namur - FUNDP

Abstract: La relation entre le drame, genre littéraire, et le théâtre est trop souvent considérée comme une adaptation du premier au deuxième. Est négligé le fait qu'il s'agit effectivement d'un « saut » intermédiaire d'un média utilisant un seul système sémiotique (texte) vers un média combinant plusieurs systèmes sémiotiques (texte, image, son ...) : contrairement à la littérature, le théâtre est, depuis ses origines, un art plurimédia. Il s'appuie sur les modes d'expression les plus anciens de l'humanité, celles du corps humain, à savoir la gestuelle et la voix. Or, l'invention de l'écriture et puis de l'impression privilégiait le texte, de sorte que le théâtre se voyait de plus en plus réduit au rôle de 'servant' du drame, réduit à la scrupuleuse mise en scène d'un texte. Il fallait attendre le mouvement de la rethéâtralisation, incitée par le modernisme de la fin du 19^e siècle et du début du 20^e siècle, pour que le théâtre pût s'émanciper du drame et se réinstaurer comme un art à part entière, un art plurimédia. Les modernistes se focalisèrent e.a. sur un mode d'expression réunissant texte, image et son : l'acteur. Mais celui-ci posait un problème fondamental: Inévitablement, il se présente à la fois par son corps phénoménal et individuel et par le corps sémantique du personnage qu'il joue. Or, pour le théâtre « rethéâtralisé », rien n'importait plus que ce corps sémantique, porteur de signes propres au théâtre. Par conséquent, il fallait dépersonnaliser l'acteur jusqu'à le bannir de la scène et à le remplacer par un signe pur. Se trouver les moyens dépersonnalisants les plus efficaces devint une quête menée dans toute l'Europe. Parmi ces moyens, la marionnette, signe pur par essence et protagoniste d'une tradition purement théâtrale, joua le rôle-clé de modèle. Se redécouvrir le théâtre des marionnettes tout en profitant des traditions populaires de son pays fut un des défis majeurs des modernistes. Leur quête eut des répercussions éclatantes non seulement sur le théâtre, mais aussi sur le drame. Dans mon intervention, je propose de présenter ces répercussions en m'appuyant sur les différentes traditions belges, françaises et autrichiennes du théâtre des marionnettes et en comparant l'approche spécifique de Maurice Maeterlinck et d'Alfred Jarry, partisans d'une abstraction de plus en plus poussée, avec celle d'Hugo von Hofmannsthal, partisan d'un modernisme historicisant.

Biography: Prof. dr. Anke Bosse, professeur ordinaire de littératures germanophones et de littérature comparée à l'Université de Namur - FUNDP.

Domaines de recherche: littératures et civilisations germanophones; histoire des littératures et civilisations germanophones; littérature comparée; littérature du 18^{ième} au 21^{ième} siècle; orientalisme, intertextualité et interculturalité; théorie et pratique de l'édition, critique génétique, procédés de l'écriture littéraire; littérature et anthropologie (littérature générale); phénomènes du modernisme et des avant-gardes, théâtre, discours théâtral et intermédialité. Diverses publications et interventions dans ces domaines depuis plus de 25 ans.

Création du groupe de recherche Littérature générale et comparée à l'Université de Namur, le seul groupe en Communauté française de Belgique spécialisé dans ce champ.

Membre de la commission scientifique SHS 3 du Fonds National de la Belgique Francophone (FNRS). Experte auprès du Fonds National de la Suisse et du Fonds National de l'Autriche.

Pour de plus amples informations: http://www.fundp.ac.be/universite/personnes/page_view/01003843/

L'ÉTUDE DE L'EKPHRISIS COMME APPROCHE COMPARATISTE

O. Romanova

Shevchenko Institute of Literature, Academy of Science of Ukraine

Abstract: Le concept de l'ekphrasis a subi beaucoup de modifications avec le développement de la théorie de l'art et de la littérature. Quelle est sa place dans la littérature comparée? Est-elle en mesure d'élargir la méthode de l'étude du texte? L'ekphrasis non seulement approfondit l'étude du texte, mais elle permet aussi de construire une sorte de paradigme de la coopération du texte et de l'image (peinture), du texte et du son (musique), du texte et du mouvement (danse). L'ekphrasis est en plus un moyen pour explorer la communication interculturelle ainsi que la pénétration d'un sujet dans le texte de l'œuvre et son destin dans l'étude de ses relations intertextuelles. Dans ce contexte, je propose de mettre l'accent sur la citation d'œuvres d'art et son intégration dans le texte. Comme exemple je choisis la célèbre Gradiva, un bas-relief antique qui est sujet d'une descriptio dans le roman de W. Jensen. À son tour S. Freud a écrit une étude en se basant sur le roman de Jensen. Freud est devenu un médiateur, qui explique l'effet d'ekphrasis (Gradiva) sur l'imagination du protagoniste du roman. Puis, influencées par l'étude de Freud ont été créées les peintures de Dali, de Masson et d'autres surréalistes sur le même sujet (Gravida). Mais nous trouvons la plus vaste citation de cet ekphrasis dans le cinéroman d'A. Robbe-Grillet, "C'est Gradiva qui vous appelle", et ensuite dans son film qui porte le même titre. L'ekphrasis dans ce cas devient l'élément de liaison entre le sujet du cinéroman et du film. Il s'agit donc d'analyser les fonctions intertextuelles, c'est-à-dire le dialogue de Robbe-Grillet avec les textes de Freud, de Jensen, et avec le journal de Delacroix, et de déterminer les fonctions intersemiotiques (la transformation d'images statiques en images dynamiques).

Biography: Olga Romanova est maître de conférences à l'Université de Cherkassy (La typologie du roman chevaleresque: Chretien de Troyes, Wolfram von Eschenbach, Thomas Malory, Cherkassy, 2003), collaborateur scientifique de l'Institut de Littérature de Taras Shevchenko de l'Académie nationale des sciences d'Ukraine. Auteur d'une thèse sur le cinéroman d'Alain Robbe-Grillet (Kiev, 2008), auteur du livre L'Aspects de la synthèse des arts (2012), secrétaire exécutif de l'Association ukrainienne de littérature comparée, les articles spécialisés sur A. Robbe-Grillet, littérature du Moyen Âge et questions de l'interaction entre la littérature et autres arts (Le ciné-roman d'A. Robbe-Grillet et le ciné-recit d'O. Dovjenko; Les travaux de jeunes scientifiques, Kiev, 2008; Pro et contra dans le processus de la littérature française moderne, Revue de recherche de l'Université de Cherkassy, 2009; La chanson de la croisade contre les Albigeois: structure idéologique, Les travaux de jeunes scientifiques, Kiev, 2010; L'interaction de la littérature et du cinéma: une tentative d'analyse, Philologie moderne, Cherkassy, 2011; L'image du Moyen Âge dans le roman historique du XIX^{ième} siècle, Cherkassy, 2012).

POUR UNE ÉTUDE COMPARATISTE DE L'AUTO-ILLUSTRATION (JOSEF VÁCHAL ET ALFRED KUBIN)

H. Martinelli

Aix Marseille Université

Abstract: Josef Vachal et Alfred Kubin, comme quelques autres artistes aux talents multiples, ont illustré leurs propres textes et parfois imprimé leurs propres œuvres. Une étude comparatiste qui s'attache à circonscrire un paradigme tel que celui du livre auto-illustré se confronte aux dangers de cette discipline. L'auto-illustration est certes une tendance historiquement contextualisable, car favorisée par l'héritage du beau livre anglais, l'illustration Art Nouveau puis expressionniste et la relativisation par les avant-gardes de la hiérarchie entre les arts et même entre les genres. Il reste que le corpus qui lui est associé relève du florilège de génies, dans la mesure où il regroupe des auteurs autodidactes, solitaires et intempestifs que l'on considère parfois comme des anomalies, et qui sont le plus souvent étudiés dans le cadre de monographies. En tâchant de cerner les invariants de cette pratique, il s'agira ici d'évaluer la pertinence d'une approche comparée dans ce cadre. Nous choisirons pour ce faire d'étudier les rapports entre textes et images dans des œuvres de Josef Vachal et Alfred Kubin, en mettant en évidence deux traits spécifiques : l'antériorité potentielle de l'image sur le texte qui entraîne la glose réciproque du texte par l'image et de l'image par le texte, impliquant parfois l'ekphrasis in praesentia ; et la radicalisation du jeu sur les divergences entre l'énonciation du texte et celle des images.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Helene Martinelli, normalienne (ENS de Lyon) et agrégée de Lettres Modernes prépare une thèse en littérature générale et comparée sur "Le livre auto-illustré en Europe centrale : autour des œuvres de Josef Vachal, Bruno Schulz et Alfred Kubin" en codirection entre Aix Marseille Université et Paris IV Sorbonne. Chargée de cours à l'université d'Aix-Marseille, elle consacre ses recherches à l'illustration et à la littérature populaire, essentiellement dans le domaine centre-européen.

S3: CRITIQUE ET MALENTENDU - MALENTENDU ET HISTORIOGRAPHIE COMPAREE DU 20E SIECLE

"AS A POET HE IS KNOWN TO ALL OF RUSSIA" A QUITE FRUITFUL MISAPPREHENSION: RILKE AND SPIRIDON DROZHZHIN

A. Achilli
Università degli Studi di Milano

Abstract: Rainer Maria Rilke's interest in Russian culture and the lasting impact of his Russian trips (1899 and 1900) and readings on his own literary achievements have been a well-established topos in critical literature about the Austrian poet (if we are eager to limit his all-Europeanness to a narrow geographical definition). Scholars from both the Western academic world (P.P. Brodsky, A. Tavis, D. Reshetylo-Rothe, and H. Naumann among the others) and Russia (K. Azadovsky) have stressed the importance of Rilke's personal image of Russia in shaping the writer's poetic imagination at the turn of the century, paving the way to the development of his mature oeuvre.

Rilke's bias towards Russia is quite typical of his age. In the width of its land and in the archaic features of its peasantry he recognizes an escape from Western materialistic alienation, which he will portray a few years later in his only novel. Setting out his literary preferences in letters Rilke singles out for praise Lev Tolstoy and Spiridon Drozhzhin as the best Russian writers alive, their definitely different literary status notwithstanding. The curious juxtaposition of a worldwide famous great novelist and moral guide with a mediocre peasant poet is a shock to Rilke's Russian friends, who try in vain to persuade him of his misinterpretation. Four German versions of poems by Drozhzhin constitute part of his poetic translation corpus and have been the subject of critical studies aimed at underlining their influence on Rilke's own not large but interesting Russian-language literary legacy, which consists in a handful of highly musical but quite conventional poems (A. Tavis).

What hasn't been studied so far is the influence of Drozhzhin's pathetic lines on Rilke's great poems of the period, namely his first mature collection "The Book of Hours" (1899-1904). I contend that intensive reading of Drozhzhin's poetry in 1900 has played a key role in the shift from the rarified Jugendstil tone of the first part of the book ("The Book of Monastic Life", 1899) to the more tragic and "earthbound" second part ("The Book of the Pilgrimage", 1901), which has been written after personal acquaintance with the Russian poet. So the atemporal and mystical images of communion of the monk-poet with God-poetry in the earlier poems, which are based on the fable-like colours of an idealized Russian Orthodox atmosphere, develop into the figure of a more human Russianized pilgrim in quest of salvation. This process could be possibly understood in the light of Rilkean art's turning towards reality, which appears evident in later works such as "The Book of Images" (1899-1906).

Rilke's exaggerate appreciation of Drozhzhin's modest heritage thus proves to be thoroughly consistent with his own poetic growth.

Biography: Alessandro Achilli (1984) is currently a PhD student in Modern Languages at Milan University (specialization Slavic Languages and Literatures). After finishing high school in 2002, he has received a BA in Slavic (Russian and Polish) and Germanic Studies at Milan University, with a thesis on the Rilkean image of Russia in "The Book of Monastic Life" (2006). He has then completed a MA program in Slavic Studies (Russian and Ukrainian) at the same college, with a thesis on the image of the poet in the works of B. Pasternak, M. Cvetaeva and R.M. Rilke (2010). He is presently studying the intertextual links of the poetry of the Ukrainian writer Vasyl' Stus with German and Russian authors. His curriculum shows a distinct interest in comparative literature, with special reference to Slavic-German and inter-slavic literary dialogues. He has studied as an exchange student at Berlin Free University and attended intensive courses in Vienna, Moscow, Cracow, and Lviv. After getting his MA, he has been working as a teacher of Italian as a foreign language in Moscow and Pyatigorsk, Russia.

INSIDE THE WHALE: ORWELL'S PARIS, MILLER'S CHINA

C. Stan
Leiden University College The Hague

Abstract: On the way to Catalonia in December 1936, George Orwell stopped in Paris to try and convince Henry Miller to join the Republican cause in the Spanish Civil War. Miller refused, but gave his fellow writer a jacket, with the warning that it would not protect him from bullets; it might, however, keep him warm. Four years later, Orwell published an essay in which he ostensibly commended Miller's symbolic retreat "inside the whale", critiquing his contemporaries for their failure to acknowledge the end of Western civilization. The essay is widely acknowledged as a crucial text in the sociology of intellectuals: in Britain, the Movement writers invoked "Inside the Whale" in the 1950s to justify their refusal of involvement in politics; a decade later, with the radicalization of the New Left, revolutionaries critiqued Orwell, asserting forcefully that quietism was unjustifiable. Even Orwell's most tireless admirers took it for granted that "Inside the Whale" represented a moment of pessimistic wavering from political commitment, a weakness compensated by the resounding success of 1984. The political fortunes of Orwell's 1940 essay obscured its literary career among scholars of Miller's work. It is less known that some expressed reservations about Orwell's interpretation of Tropic of Cancer (1934), and that Miller himself felt nothing but frustration and contempt for the way Orwell understood his work. In this paper, I will shed light on the gap between these asymmetrical modes of reception – the political and the literary –, by examining the genealogy of "Inside the Whale" and its rapport with Orwell's own beginnings as a writer, recorded in Down and Out in Paris and London (1933). I will argue that at the heart of "Inside the Whale" lies Orwell's passionate misunderstanding of Miller, which in turn caused Orwell's followers to misinterpret his own political stance. A comparative reading of Down and Out...and Tropic... reveals, I will show, a clash of moral and artistic paradigms: sincerity versus authenticity (to borrow Lionel Trilling's terms), realism versus modernism, a politically committed stance versus a "cosmological", irreverent life-aesthetic.

Biography: Corina Stan is Assistant Professor of Comparative Literature at Leiden University College, the Hague. She received her Ph.D. from Duke University in 2010 with a dissertation at the intersection of literature, moral philosophy and critical theory, directed by Toril Moi. She is currently working on a book manuscript tentatively titled "The Art of Distances: a Morality for the Everyday." At LUC, she directs the Brill-Nijhoff Writing Institute.

MOUVEMENT SURREALISTE ET LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE, OU LE MALENTENDU INSTITUTIONNALISÉ. POUR UN COMPARATISME DÉMYSTIFIANT DU SURREALISME APRÈS 1969

A. D'Urso
Università del Salento

Abstract: À bien scruter nombre de volumes internationaux consacrés au mouvement surréaliste, on découvre que des deux images que Schleiermacher proposait pour illustrer les deux conceptions opposées de ce que traduire veut dire – porter le lecteur vers l'œuvre ou porter l'œuvre vers le lecteur – la deuxième se prêterait bien à expliquer la démarche dominante de la critique littéraire, s'efforçant de rendre acceptable le surréalisme aux yeux des lecteurs qu'elles prétend instruire. Ce problème sera analysé en quatre volets. Situation du surréalisme dans la critique littéraire – Si, d'un côté, les principes esthétiques, idéologiques, philosophiques et moraux du surréalisme mettent d'accord les critiques (universitaires et non) sur la singularité du mouvement inséparable de ses projets de lutte sociale, de résistance et de subversion contre l'état des choses et donc impossible à classer comme simple avant-garde artistique et littéraire, de l'autre, ils attirent les interprétations les plus diverses et les plus mystifiantes aboutissant à une réduction du surréalisme à la pure théorie esthétique (« l'œuvre d'art » surréaliste), à l'ontologie métaphysique (le surréalisme comme simple « mouvement de pensée »), ou à la phagocytose religieuse et politique. Pour continuer de reprendre des termes en usage dans la science de la traduction et dans la littérature comparée, ce genre de « malentendus » dont nous donnerons quelques exemples spécifiques sembleraient bien correspondre à des relectures, à des réécritures, voire à des véritables parodies de l'histoire surréaliste, se réduisant ainsi à une « mauvaise traduction d'un contenu inessentiel », pour le dire avec Walter Benjamin. Mais il y a pis : la tendance à prononcer prématurément l'acte de décès du surréalisme. De critiques tels Carlo Bo et Maurice Nadeau à des mouvements concurrents comme Le Grand jeu et le Situationnisme, les surréalistes n'ont cessé d'être présentés comme « morts » ; tendance qui, après Le Quatrième chant de Jean Schuster prétendant fixer en 1969 la fin du « surréalisme historique » et la persistance d'un « surréalisme éternel », s'est transformée purement et simplement en occultation historiographique, prolongée plus ou moins consciemment par la pure répétition de ce « malentendu », qui ferait autorité simplement par le fait de sa diffusion générale au niveau international. Situation de la critique littéraire face au surréalisme – Comme nous l'avons documenté depuis quelques temps par nos travaux scientifiques, toutes les Histoires du surréalisme, même des plus récentes, se terminent par la reproduction acritique de la version de Schuster, refusant implicitement ou ouvertement de considérer les activités collectives menées par le groupe rassemblé autour de Vincent Bounoure comme un effectif prolongement du surréalisme. Le nombre et la qualité de ces activités, leur originalité même et les ouvrages auxquels elles donnèrent naissance témoignent définitivement de la mystification entretenue jusqu'à présent par la critique littéraire. Mais il y a plus : le groupe susdit ne se limitait pas aux surréalistes parisiens qui eurent la chance de côtoyer André Breton ; il maintint des contacts très étroits avec les surréalistes à l'étranger, notamment avec le groupe de Prague, ce qui mena à la réalisation conjointe des dix numéros du Bulletin de liaison surréaliste (1970-1976), de l'ouvrage collectif La civilisation surréaliste (1976) et des deux numéros de la revue Surréalisme (1977), cordonnés par Bounoure, sans compter le recueil élaboré entre Paris et Prague, qui devait leur faire suite, Érotisme et surréalisme (1978), encore inédit. La fausseté de la perspective adoptée par la critique littéraire dans son historiographie du surréalisme est démontrée non seulement par la réactivation appuyée par Bounoure pendant les années 90 d'un Groupe de Paris du Mouvement Surréaliste, toujours vivant aujourd'hui, mais aussi par la persistance de groupes surréalistes dans le monde. « Comparatisme de la différence » ou différence du comparatisme ? – Dans notre communication nous préciserons que la diffusion de la version schustérienne de la fin du « surréalisme historique » n'a pas empêché les experts de parler du surréalisme (mieux vaudrait dire des surréalismes, suivant leur terminologie) dans le monde, bien au contraire : le monde entier, bien sûr, sauf Paris... Cette démarche a eu deux résultats dont nous montrerons des exemples : dans la vogue du comparatisme de la différence, on a usé de cette dernière, d'une part, pour inclure dans le surréalisme des écrivains qui n'ont rien à voir avec lui ; de l'autre part, pour exagérer la particularité de chaque groupe surréaliste dans le monde, éliminant ainsi l'aspect des relations internationales, y compris avec Paris, telles qu'elles sont attestées par les publications susdites. C'est à partir de ces dernières et des liens entre Prague et Paris que nous chercherons à endiguer ce genre de comparatisme aux cloisonnements étanches qui l'a emporté sur un comparatisme différent, c'est-à-dire, un comparatisme à même de montrer sa propre différence par rapport à l'historiographie dominante – ce qui signifie repartir de Paris. Critique comparée et comparatisme démystifiant – Nous concluons en montrant ce que la situation véritable du surréalisme comporte pour la théorie de la littérature comparée. Le défi qu'il a toujours jeté et qu'il jette encore aujourd'hui à la critique littéraire et à sa perspicacité a provoqué une défiance réciproque : Breton avait accueilli avec sympathie et bienveillance ceux qui deviendront des historiographes reconnus du surréalisme (M. Nadeau, F. Alquié, M. Bonnet), mais les conclusions hâtives et quelque peu « malintentionnées » (pour ainsi reprendre un reproche que Breton adressait à Nadeau dans ses Entretiens de 1952) qu'ils ont tirées de ses moments critiques ont poussé les surréalistes à se méfier de leurs travaux. C'est ainsi que la déviation de l'historiographie spécialisée vis-à-vis de l'histoire réelle du surréalisme appelle nécessairement un renversement de perspective : ce décalage témoigne de la possibilité d'effectuer, comme nous l'effectuons, une critique comparée des exégèses du surréalisme qui, de toute évidence, est la seule qui puisse permettre l'ouverture à une critique comparatiste crédible et rigoureuse du surréalisme international qui soit, en soi, un véritable comparatisme démystifiant tenant compte de l'histoire postérieure à 1969.

Biography: Andrea D'Urso, M.Phil., Ph.D. et Doctor Europaeus en Littérature comparée et Traduction du texte littéraire, est chargé à titre précaire de recherches et d'enseignement en Langue et Littérature Française (Université du Salento, Lecce - Italie) ; il s'occupe principalement d'histoire, théorie et critique du surréalisme international, notamment dans ses rapports à la sémiotique matérialiste, au marxisme révolutionnaire et à l'anthropologie culturelle. Il a pris part à des congrès internationaux, collaboré à l'organisation scientifique du séminaire Traduzione e Scrittura letteraria (Pensa 2009), introduit en Italie la pensée de Pierre Mabile et Vincent Bounoure, traduit Lyotard, écrit des études concernant Benjamin, Baudelaire, Breton, Jakobson, Chomsky, Rossi-Landi dans des revues telles que Athanor 13, Between 1, Cahiers de psychologie politique 20, Contretemps 2 et 5, Critique communiste 186 et 189, Crocevia 11-12, L'homme et la société 179-180, Lingue e Linguaggi 2, 5, 6, 7 (à paraître), L'ospite ingrato 2, etc. À présent, il prépare Théorie et écritures surréalistes (en collaboration avec A. Cali), une monographie au sujet de V. Bounoure, en italien et en français, et d'autres études concernant le surréalisme après la mort d'A. Breton.

S3: LITTÉRATURE ET PHILOSOPHIE

DU STYLE EN PHILOSOPHIE : L'EXEMPLE DE LA DECONSTRUCTION

F. Manzari

Aix-Marseille Université

Abstract: Notre problématique consistera, d'un côté, à tenter de répondre à la question de savoir s'il existe une méthode de la déconstruction, de l'autre, à reconnaître, parmi les disciples et les collègues de Jacques Derrida, ceux qui emploient, par analogie, les mêmes procédés que lui et ceux qui utilisent son style en le pastichant, en quelque sorte. La question qui se pose est de savoir si la déconstruction se situe dans les procédés ou bien dans la forme du texte derridien ou encore dans les deux à la fois. Si le close reading est le dénominateur commun des déconstructeurs de Yale, il est tout de même possible d'affirmer qu'il existe, d'un côté, des ressemblances entre les œuvres de Paul de Man et celles de J. Hillis Miller, de l'autre, entre celles de Geoffrey Hartman et celles de David Wills. Nous nous interrogerons donc sur l'existence d'une méthode et/ou d'un style de la déconstruction en passant par une lecture des textes de Barbara Johnson, Paul de Man et Hillis Miller, Geoffrey Hartman et David Wills.

Biography: Maître de conférences en Littérature Générale et Comparée à l'Université d'Aix-Marseille et auteur d'un ouvrage intitulé "Ecriture derridienne, entre langage des rêves et critique littéraire".

THE "DECADENCE" OF DERRIDA : PHILOSOPHY WITHOUT CONCEPT / LA "DÉCADENCE" DERRIDIENNE : LA PHILOSOPHIE SANS CONCEPT

B. Wocke

Erasmus Mundus Joint Doctorate : Interzones

Abstract: The work of Jacques Derrida is known for can be described as a certain literary decadence, both invigorating and displacing the nature of the relationship between the literary and the philosophical in his use of the pun. Through this decadence and in writing what could, as per Barthes, be described as a "texte de jouissance" : Derrida is able to communicate a philosophic joie de vie at the same time in which he is able to engage in critical playfulness. This aesthetic "philo-literary" jouissance, or rather jouis-sens (the ecstasy of meaning described by Lacan in Television) is at the heart of the Derridian text, in which play, the trace, and différance drive a desire to explore the multiplication of meaning and of sense that underscores the continuous potentiality of displaced textual signification. In this light, Derrida can be seen to proceed in terms of what Deleuze refers to as the "percept" a form of artistic, aesthetic or literary thinking which is opposed to the philosophical "concept" or the scientific "function". The concrete nature of the Deleuzian percept speaks furthermore to the underlying materialism of the Derridian text, in both its polyphonic and its graphic dimension (especially considering texts such as Glas, Chora L Works and La Vérité en Peinture). The materialistic excess of the play on words is effectively the site of the jouis-sens of the text and can ultimately be conceived of in terms of a veritable jouis-sans, that is, in terms of a jouissance of meaning and sense which advances through the "percept" - the ecstasy of a philosophy without concept. (L'oeuvre de Jacques Derrida est connue pour une certaine décadence littéraire mesurée par la relation entre la littérature et la philosophie. À travers cette décadence et en écrivant ce qui, selon Barthes, pourrait être décrit comme un "texte de jouissance", Derrida est capable en même temps de communiquer une joie de vivre philosophique et un engagement au jeu "critique". Cette jouissance d'esthétique "philolittéraire", ou plutôt, ce jouis-sens (tel que Lacan le décrit dans Télévision) est au coeur du texte derridien dans lequel, la trace, le jeu et la différance, animent un désir d'explorer la multiplication de sens qui sous-tendent la potentialité continue du renvoi de la signification textuelle. Ainsi, Derrida s'exprime en termes de "percept" deleuzien, une forme de pensée qui se traduit en termes esthétiques, artistiques et littéraires, et qui s'oppose au "concept" philosophique ou "fonction" scientifique. La nature concrète du "percept" deleuzien sous-tend le matérialisme du texte derridien à la fois dans ses dimensions polyphoniques et graphiques (surtout en ce qui concerne les textes comme Glas, Chora L Works et La Vérité en Peinture). L'excès matérialiste du jeu de mots est le véritable lieu du jouis-sens du texte et pourrait finalement être conçu en tant qu'un jouis-sans, une jouissance du sens qui se manifeste à travers "le percept" - l'extase d'une philosophie sans concept.)

Biography: Roland Barthes, Le Plaisir du Texte, Paris, Seuil, 1973. Georges Bataille, La part maudite, Paris, Les Editions de Minuit, 1949. Gilles Deleuze, Le logique du sens, Paris, Les Editions de Minuit, 1969. Gilles Deleuze, and Félix Guattari, Qu'est-ce que la philosophie?, Paris, Les Editions de Minuit, 1991. Jacques Derrida, De la grammatologie, Paris, Les Editions de Minuit, 1967. Jacques Derrida, Glas, Paris, Galilee, 1974. Jacques Derrida, La vérité en peinture, Paris, Flammarion, 2010. Jacques Derrida et Peter Eisenman, Chora L Works ed. par Jeffrey Kipnis et Thomas Leiser, New York, The Monacelli Press, 1997. Sigmund Freud, Le mot d'esprit et sa relation a l'inconscient, Paris, Gallimard, 2007. Julia Kristeva, [Semeiotike], Paris, Seuil, 1968. Julia Kristeva, La révolution du langage poétique, Paris, Seuil, 1974. Julia Kristeva, Polylogue, Paris, Seuil, 1977. Jacques Lacan, Le séminaire livre V: Les formations de l'inconscient. ed. par Jacques-Alain & Judith Miller, Paris, Seuil, 1998. Jacques Lacan, Le séminaire livre VI: Le désir et ses interprétations, Paris, Inédite, 1959. Jacques Lacan, Le séminaire livre XXIII: Le sinthome. ed. par Jacques-Alain Miller, Paris, Seuil, 2005. Jacques Lacan, Télévision, Paris, Seuil, 1974. Jean Luc Nancy, et Philippe Lacoue-Labarthe, L'absolu littéraire, Paris, Seuil, 1978. Jean Luc Nancy, et Philippe Lacoue-Labarthe, Le titre de la lettre, Paris, Galilée, 1973.

ALLEGORY AND HAUNTOLOGY

E. Graff Zivin

University of Southern California

Abstract: "Allegory and Hauntology" interrogates the link between aesthetics, ethics and politics through a reconsideration of the genre of historical allegory as belonging to the logic of hauntology. Through a comparative analysis of two twentieth-century works that return to the historical moments of the Spanish Inquisition (Arturo Ripstein's film El Santo Oficio) and the Salem Witch Trials (Arthur Miller's play The Crucible) in order to address contemporary instantiations of totalitarian thought, this paper challenges the conventional understanding of allegorical representation, particularly in the context of political repression, as that which seeks to mask or cover the "true" story (that is, the assumption that the "real" story cannot be told for fear of censorship or punishment). In my reading of Ripstein and Miller, I attempt to locate an "other" side of allegory, in which the specters of history serve as both the condition of possibility and impossibility for contemporary readings of violence and totalitarian thought. Placing Walter Benjamin's idea of the "death's head" (in The Origin of German Tragic Drama) together with Jacques Derrida's notion of the "specter" (in Specters of Marx), I explore the intersection of allegory, ruins and haunting, arguing that the remains of historical violence irrupt into the present through the aesthetic.

Biography: Erin Graff Zivin is associate professor of Spanish and Portuguese and Comparative Literature at the University of Southern California. Her research focuses on constructions of Jewishness and marranismo in the Luso-Hispanic Atlantic, aesthetic representations of torture and interrogation, and the intersection of philosophy and critical theory. She is the author of The Wandering Signifier: Rhetoric of Jewishness in the Latin American Imaginary (Duke University Press, 2008) and editor of The Ethics of Latin American Literary Criticism: Reading Otherwise (Palgrave Macmillan, 2007).

ACTUALITY AND HAUNTOLOGY

S. Steinberg

University of Southern California

Abstract: Recent debates in the theoretical humanities have posed the question of communism's contemporary "actuality" against its spectral habitation of our present. The present paper hopes to mediate the two seemingly irreconcilable positions through a reading of the global 1968 student movements--themselves inscribed in precisely the post-Althusserian crisis demarcated by the division between actuality and hauntology. Reading this post-Althusserian tradition (Derrida, Ranciere, Badiou) against complementary developments in the field of Latin American narrative (Roberto Bolaño) and political thought (Sergio Zermeno, Roger Bartra), the paper pursues a recuperation of an idea of the political that could properly hold this name and the ways in which culture relates to, or distances itself from, the project of affirming such a return of a politics in the strongest sense possible.

Biography: I am an Assistant Professor of Spanish at University of Southern California. My work on Latin American literature, art, and politics has been published in a series of articles focusing on: tropes of debt in nineteenth century Mexican narrative, Carlos Fuentes and politics, the reception of Central American testimonial narrative in times of globalization, the cinematic returns of 1968 in Mexico, and on contemporary Mexican writing and visual art. I am currently finishing a book manuscript entitled Photopoetics at Tlatelolco that studies recurrent invocations of the state-sponsored massacre of 2 October 1968 that crushed the Mexican student-popular movement of that summer. Part of the third chapter, on political transition and cinematic form, has recently appeared in Discourse.

S3 : FORCE ET VERTU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FACE A L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE

TOMBEAUX LITTÉRAIRES CONTEMPORAINS

O. Panaite

Indiana University in Bloomington

Abstract: À partir de quatre romans de Tierno Monénembo, Marie NDiaye, J.M.G. Le Clézio et Stéphane Audeguy, je propose une réflexion sur ce que l'on a pu appeler la hantise du passé colonial dans la littérature contemporaine. Le Roi de Kahel, Trois femmes puissantes, L'Africain et Nous autres évoquent le passé colonial ou convoquent le présent postcolonial tout en mobilisant des dispositifs éditoriaux et structurels qui intègrent en un même espace textuel, différentes formes poétiques reconnues.

Au centre de ce dispositif, qui rappelle la forme renaissante du « tombeau littéraire », on retrouve à chaque fois la figure d'un disparu – parent ou étranger, modèle de vertu ou fantôme effroyable – que le récit (pseudo)biographique, le reportage ou le travail d'archives vise à faire revivre par la force fantasmatique et l'énergie projective de la fiction. Je m'intéresserai aux enjeux, poétiques autant que politiques, de la pratique du tombeau littéraire chez ces écrivains contemporains, qui représente, d'une part, une tentative de réengager la fiction en faisant d'elle non point un lieu de mémoire mais le lieu d'une résurrection partagée, un lieu commun (au sens que lui donne Édouard Glissant), mais qui soulève, d'autre part, des questions sur les écueils rhétoriques et éthiques du néo-orientalisme, de l'aplatissement présentiste, de l'auto-fictionnalisation exotique et de la victimisation postcoloniale.

Biography: Oana Panaïté

Indiana University-Bloomington

QUAND LE PRÉSENT FAIT DATE. RÉCIT MÉMORIEL ET ENJEUX DES ORIGINES EN CONTEXTE DE VIOLENCES POSTCOLONIALES

I. Bazié

Université du Québec à Montréal

Abstract: Les violences, à une certaine échelle, ont pour effet de créer une sorte de vacuité qui invite à recréer le monde et à redéfinir ses repères : en Allemagne, au lendemain de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, ce fut le principe de la tabula rasa, cette « heure zéro » sensée rendre compte du vide intérieur et esthétique ressenti par les écrivains et qui était le pendant symbolique du vide matériel qui a succédé aux bombardements alliés. C'est également – à tout le moins de manière illusoire – ce qui anime le protagoniste du roman de Boubacar Boris Diop (Murambi, le livre des ossements, Stock 1999) quand il retourne au Rwanda après le génocide de 1994.

Ce qu'il est permis d'appeler ici un moment génésiaque qui renvoie les sujets – par le fait même de la violence – à une quête fondamentale se pare, dans le contexte des littératures postcoloniales et notamment chez Kossi Efoui, d'un retour aux sources documenté dans deux romans qui illustreront la présente réflexion : La fabrique de cérémonies (2001, Seuil) et Solo d'un revenant (2008, Seuil). Le récit des origines dans cette quête se fait dans un environnement où les violences apparaissent de deux manières : d'une part, par le fait qu'elles se vivent encore sous plusieurs formes dans le quotidien et le présent du narrateur ; d'autre part, par le fait de la convocation a posteriori de ce qui s'est passé et fait désormais partie d'une mémoire dont la conquête reste non seulement essentielle au plan identitaire, mais tout aussi précaire par l'absence et de l'archive et de la trace. Se crée alors dans l'espace du récit une forme de tension énonciative basée sur une triple articulation du sujet face au temps : articulation rétrospective, dans une distance relativement courte par rapport aux événements dont il tente de se souvenir ; actuelle parce que l'histoire se fait sous ses yeux au fur et à mesure qu'il se (re)cherche en cherchant ses origines ; prospective du fait de ce déploiement d'une énonciation à connotation prophétique qui échoue cependant à produire les bases cohérentes d'un récit qui rendrait compte de manière intelligible de l'ayant été. Ce qui en résulte est donc un sentiment d'immédiateté culminant dans la perspective d'un narrateur qui peine à saisir les moments tout aussi dramatiques qu'évanescents dans un récit qui, par le fait même, remet en question tout les rapports convenus à l'histoire.

Biography: Isaac Bazié, Figura, UQAM

FAIRE L'HISTOIRE IMMÉDIATE, FAIRE LE ROMAN DE L'HISTOIRE IMMÉDIATE : DOUBLE DISPOSITIF DANS LE PASSÉ DEVANT SOI DE GILBERT GATORE

M. Bulté

université Rennes 2

Abstract: L'histoire immédiate, comme le précise Jean-François Soulet, fait face à la « fermeture des archives publiques »[1]. Pour légitimer son entreprise, l'historien de l'immédiat doit alors être capable de « consulter aisément des sources diverses »[2] parmi lesquelles figurent les témoignages. Si les événements récents qui ont touché le continent africain, que ce soit les guerres civiles ou le génocide au Rwanda, peuvent, dès lors, être pris en charge par le discours historiographique, il s'avère qu'ils le sont également par les romans, notamment postcoloniaux. Comment procède alors le romancier pour écrire un événement relevant de l'histoire immédiate ? Peut-il légitimer son œuvre en intégrant à la fiction les présupposés épistémologiques permettant, précisément, de légitimer l'histoire immédiate elle-même ? Dans Le Passé devant soi (2008), du romancier rwandais Gilbert Gatore, le personnage d'Isaro, Rwandaise adoptée dans son enfance par un couple français sur laquelle est focalisée la narration extradiégétique, offre des éléments de réponse. En effet, en fondant notamment le projet de consigner les témoignages sur le génocide, Isaro devient une possible figure d'historienne de l'immédiat. Or d'autres romans postcoloniaux[3] mettent en scène des personnages cherchant à recueillir les témoignages sur un événement ; l'on pourra alors s'interroger sur la récurrence de cette figure lorsque la littérature choisit d'écrire l'histoire immédiate. Cependant, Isaro écrit également – et parallèlement – une fiction fragmentaire ayant pour personnage principal un génocidaire. Le roman enchâssé a-t-il plus de force, pour rendre compte de l'histoire immédiate, que l'entreprise d'Isaro qui consiste à recueillir les témoignages ? Comment ces deux projets se complètent-ils ou, au contraire, comment entrent-ils en collusion dans Le Passé devant soi ? En condensant, dans son personnage principal, les figures d'historienne de l'immédiat et de romancière de l'histoire immédiate, le roman de Gilbert Gatore parvient-il à une éthique de la fiction écrivant cette période historique[4] ?

[1] Soulet J.-F., L'Histoire immédiate, Paris, PUF, coll. « Que sais-je ? », n°2841, 1994, p. 39. [2] Ibid., p. 45. [3] L'on peut penser, par exemple, à Moses, Citizen and Me (2005) de la Sierra-Léonaise Delia Jarrett-Macauley ou aux Aubes écarlates (2009) de Léonora Miano, romancière camerounaise. [4] Il s'agira notamment de rendre compte des doutes émis, à ce propos, par Charlotte Lacoste (dans Séductions du bourreau, Paris, PUF, 2010).

Biography: Agrégée de Lettres Modernes, Marie Bulté est doctorante contractuelle. Elle est inscrite en doctorat de littératures comparées et travaille sous la direction de M. Emmanuel Bouju (Université Rennes 2) et M. Isaac Bazié (Université du Québec à Montréal) sur le sujet « La fiction du témoignage face à l'histoire immédiate : le personnage de l'enfant-soldat dans les littératures africaines postcoloniales ». Son corpus principal est constitué de romans africains postcoloniaux anglophones et francophones. Marie Bulté est également membre de l'association Ad hoc, association des jeunes chercheurs du CELLAM (Centre d'Études des Littératures et Langues Anciennes et Modernes) de l'Université Rennes 2.

FICTION D'AUTEUR ET AUTOBIOGRAPHIE FICTIVE : (RÉ)INVENTER UN ROMANCIER FACE AU CHAOS POLITIQUE DANS WAITING FOR AN ANGEL DE HELON HABILA ET WHAT IS THE WHAT DE DAVE EGGERS

C. Pluvinet

Université de Rennes II

Abstract: L'histoire politique récente de deux pays africains est au cœur des romans En attendant un ange (Waiting for an Angel, 2002) de l'écrivain nigérian Helon Habila et Le grand Quoi. Autobiographie de Valentino Achak Deng (What is the What, 2006) du romancier américain Dave Eggers. Le premier roman se situe au Nigéria dans les années 1990 pendant la dictature du général Abacha qui réprime violemment toutes les formes de contestation : le roman se fait écho de la terreur exercée par un régime de militaires et des persécutions commises à l'encontre des étudiants et des intellectuels à travers le personnage de Lomba, un jeune journaliste qui aspire à devenir romancier dont nous découvrons dans le premier chapitre des bribes de son journal intime alors qu'il est en prison depuis deux ans, dans l'attente interminable de son procès, pour avoir couvert en tant que journaliste une manifestation contre le gouvernement. Le second roman reconstitue le parcours entre les années 1980 et 2000 d'un enfant perdu du Soudan, Valentino Achak Deng, depuis son village natal qu'il doit fuir seul, chassé par des miliciens, jusqu'à son départ pour les États-Unis comme réfugié après avoir passé des années dans des camps de réfugiés en Éthiopie et au Kenya. Ces romans se confrontent tous deux à la représentation d'une histoire proche, chaotique et violente, dont le récit a été blessé et opprimé par la guerre et les régimes dictatoriaux. Cependant ils reposent chacun sur des choix narratifs et esthétiques opposés et, corrélativement, une conception distincte du rôle que peut jouer la littérature face à l'histoire immédiate.

Le roman d'Helon Habila, plongé dans le chaos politique nigérian, interroge pour sa part la place du romancier et ses pouvoirs dans une situation politique d'oppression en soulignant son incertitude par une narration en perpétuelle modification : la chronologie se brouille tandis que plusieurs voix narratives, souvent indéterminées, se succèdent au fil des chapitres, entremêlant narration à la première personne et récit à la troisième personne. L'histoire de Lomba se recompose ainsi progressivement par le croisement des récits de différents épisodes de sa vie où son désir d'être écrivain se confronte à la violence politique de son pays et le conduit à renoncer à l'écriture de son roman pour le journalisme politique. La mise en scène dans ce roman d'un auteur fictif témoigne d'une exigence de lucidité de l'écrivain, non dépourvue de désenchantement et d'ironie, tout en s'attachant avec force à inventer un récit possible dans une période trouble. À l'inverse, les origines du récit que nous lisons sont gommées dans le roman de Dave Eggers qui écrit à la première personne l'histoire de Valentino Achak Deng, personnage emprunté à la réalité. En effet, le romancier américain a recueilli le témoignage de ce jeune soudanais réfugié aux États-Unis pour le transformer en un livre, paradoxalement sous-titré « autobiographie » malgré la disjonction de nom et d'identité entre narrateur-personnage et auteur. Le roman se présente comme une immersion dans les pensées du narrateur, se souvenant depuis sa nouvelle vie américaine de son enfance et de son adolescence brisées par la guerre : l'illusion est ici recherchée dans ce qui se présente comme un « récit romancé » (qui ne prétend pas à la parfaite exactitude historique, comme le souligne la préface) où le romancier accueille dans son écriture la voix d'un autre, afin de la faire entendre en surmontant les obstacles à sa transmission et, ce faisant, en les effaçant du récit qui semble s'écrire tout seul.

La mise en regard de ces deux romans, où l'auteur se réinvente d'une certaine manière dans la fiction, montre une résolution différente des tensions entre le projet esthétique et le positionnement éthique du romancier, résolument volontariste dans le cas de Dave Eggers (au risque d'une critique de sa légitimité) tandis que le doute imprègne le récit d'Helon Habila sans renoncer cependant à s'affronter au trouble contemporain.

----- L'idée de ce livre est née de Valentino Achak Deng qui voulait témoigner de son destin mais avait renoncé à écrire lui-même son histoire. La manière dont Dave Eggers redéfinit dans ce livre sa position de romancier (renonçant par ailleurs à ses droits d'auteur pour les reverser à une fondation créée à cette occasion) s'est prolongée depuis dans le projet Voice of Witness, série de livres fondés sur des récits oraux témoignant d'injustices aux États-Unis et dans le monde (dont Zeitoun que Dave Eggers publie en 2009, récit non fictionnel d'un rescapé de l'ouragan Katrina).

Biography: PLUVINET Charline Membre du Groupe Phi, laboratoire du CELLAM à l'Université de Rennes 2.

Doctorat de littératures comparées à l'Université de Haute Bretagne - Rennes 2 sous la direction d'Emmanuel Bouju, soutenu le 6 novembre 2009, mention très honorable avec les félicitations du jury « L'auteur déplacé dans la fiction. Configurations, dynamiques et enjeux des représentations fictionnelles de l'auteur dans la littérature contemporaine »

S1: LITTÉRATURE (COMPARÉE) ENTRE MONDIALISATION ET GLOBALISATION

INTRODUCTION : APPROCHES THÉORIQUES ET HISTORIQUES

W. Asholt¹, K. Kramer²

¹Universität Osnabrück, ²Universität de Bielefeld

MONDE OU TERRE: DEUX FIGURES DE LA GLOBALISATION

R. Stockhammer

Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität

Abstract: Dans l'oeuvre de Jean-Luc Nancy et Jacques Derrida, entre autres, on trouve une certaine prédilection pour le terme 'mondialisation' à la place de 'globalisation'. Mises à part les raisons linguistiques _'mondialisation' sonne moins Anglais, moins McDonaldisant que 'globalisation'_, cette préférence est motivée par le fait que 'monde' est un concept philosophique ou du moins 'philosophable', un concept inséparable de celui de 'sens', d'une production permanente de 'sens': Le sens du monde équivaut le monde comme sens, explique Nancy. Même après laissé derrière elle "Die Zeit des Weltbilds" (l'ère du Monde comme sens unique), la philosophie, chez Nancy, insiste, avec une rigueur admirable, sur le terme 'monde', bien qu'il s'agisse d'une entité auto-destructive, se multipliant en 'plus d'un'. La philosophie sera donc le discours qui évite de parler de la terre, de cette interruption brutale du monde. Qui parle de la terre risque de paraître pré-philosophique, et éveille le soupçon de vouloir référer à une réalité géographique naïvement présumée. Cependant, la littérature sera le discours dans lequel la question du monde sera toujours interrompue par la terre " quoique la littérature, elle non plus, n'abandonnera jamais la question du monde. Pas de mondialisation sans interruption de la terrestrisation _et viceversa.

Biography: Robert Stockhammer

LE MONDE DE GUILLAUME LE TESTU D'APRÈS SA COSMOGRAPHIE UNIVERSELLE (1556)

F. Lestringant

Université de Paris-Sorbonne (Paris IV)

Abstract: is missing

Biography: is missing

LA MONDIALISATION DANS LES LUSIADES DE CAMÕES

H. Thalhfer

Institut de Littérature Comparée

Abstract: L'ère des découvertes est une époque de seuil au cours de laquelle s'ouvre la terre ainsi que le monde. Elle est marquée par une expansion spatiale et par une ouverture de la conception du monde. La mondialisation se peut ainsi comprendre en tant que structure ouverte.

Néanmoins, l'épopée de l'ère des découvertes est, sur le plan poétologique, conçue de manière close par sa linéarité narrative: Celle-ci se constitue par la route de da Gama qui prolonge la route d'Odysseus, et qui est, à son tour, prolongée par celle de Magellan. On peut lire ce parcours en tant qu'ouverture, ouverture toutefois linéaire qui éconduit au-delà de la fin de l'épopée.

A la fois, des croisements non-linéaires se montrent dans l'épopée qui se superposent à cette fermeture de manière palimpseste et qui la rompent. Ce sont des chemins qui ont déjà été pris par des Européens ainsi que des Non-Européens, et qui se manifestent sur le plan linguistique, économique, ethnologique et scientifique: Des lieux sont rebaptisés, des voies commerciales de divers peuples s'entrecroisent, des développements techniques sont influencés par d'autres. Dans cette conférence, ce réseau de processus primaires et secondaires territorialisés et déterritorialisés sera mis en relief, et la mondialisation sera ainsi envisagée d'un angle dynamique. Enfin, la manière sera tracée de laquelle cette ouverture épistémique se reflète sur le plan des genres littéraires.

Biography: Dr. Helga Thalhofer
Institut für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft
Schellingstr. 3
D-80799 München
Tel.: +49 (0)89 2180-6993
E-Mail: helga.thalhofer@lrz.uni-muenchen.de

S3: THE ART OF NOT THINKING

RETHINKING ART THROUGH SPORT, OR: "WHAT DO MEN LIVE BY?"

P. Frassinelli

Monash South Africa

Abstract: In his memoir on cricket and colonial life in the West Indies, Beyond a Boundary, C.L.R. James recalls how during his 1939 conversation with Leon Trotsky in Cocoyan, Mexico, the latter "had said that the workers were deflected from politics by sports". This reminiscence is included in a chapter titled "What Do Men Live By?", in which James meditates on how traditional Marxist ideas in the spheres "of history, of economics and politics" left crucial questions about life unanswered: "In my private mind [...] I was increasingly aware of large areas of human existence that my history and my politics did not seem to cover. What did men live by? What did they want? What did history show that they had wanted? Had they wanted then what they wanted now? The men I had known, what had they wanted? What exactly was art and what exactly culture?" By any account, these are indeed questions that point to very large areas of human experience, and what is most remarkable about James's memoir is that they are prompted by a discussion about sport – that is, an activity commonly associated with physical, rather than intellectual, exertion. As Neil Lazarus has noted, James's reflections on sport are often couched in a language that "derives unmistakably from the universe of high cultural criticism". In my presentation, I'd like to compare some of James's comments on the relation between sport, art and the aesthetic with other versions of cultural criticism – from T. W. Adorno's writings on the "culture industry" to more recent development in Cultural Studies – in order to discuss the radical implications of this aspect of his work.

Biography: Pier Paolo Frassinelli (Monash University)

THE DETECTIVE AS NOT-THINKER

S. Willer

Zentrum für Literatur- und Kulturforschung

Abstract: The Detective as Not-Thinker Since Edgar Allan Poe's Dupin narratives, the peculiar ability of the literary detective has been located in his analytical faculty of disentangling and resolving the hidden causes of apparently mysterious events. In the classical detective stories, the execution of this faculty is described as a methodical process of acute, controlled and self-reflexive thinking: "I proceeded to think thus," is an exemplary phrase of C. Auguste Dupin, often repeated in spirit (and more or less in letter) by Sherlock Holmes and others. However, there are strong counter currents to this (self-)interpretation of the model detective. They can be found, for instance, in semiotic theories, which, beginning with C. S. Peirce, use detection to build up arguments in favor of conjectures, or, more plainly, guessing. In this vein, the famous Holmesian 'deductions' turn into 'abductions': they become part of an interplay of observations at random, half-conscious expectations, daring conclusions, and chance. Consequently, in the course of the 20th century and at the beginning of the 21st, several literary detectives are characterized not as perspicacious, but as intuitive, unmethodical, stubborn, or even obtuse—from which their very 'abductive' potential is supposed to arise. In my talk I will examine some of these experts in the art of not-thinking, based on texts by Raymond Chandler, Alain Robbe-Grillet, Paul Auster, Georg Klein, and Wolf Haas.

Biography: Stefan Willer: Curriculum Vitae Current Position:

— Associate Director of the Center for Literary and Cultural Research (ZfL) Berlin and Director of the research project "Prognostik und Literatur" since 2010.

— Lecturer at the Institute for Philosophy and the History of Literature, Science, and Technology at the Technical University Berlin since 2010.

Visiting Scholar Positions:

— Fall Trimester of 2012: Visiting Professor at the Department of German Studies, Stanford University— Spring semester of 2012: Visiting Professor at the Institute for Philosophy and the History of Literature, Science, and Technology at the Technical University Berlin.— Spring semester of 2010: Visiting Professor at the Institute for Germanic Literature at the Humboldt-University at Berlin.

Friday, July 19, 2013

- Fall semester of 2009/2010: Visiting Professor at the Institute for Comparative Literature at the Ludwig-Maximilians-University Munich.
- Fall semester 2007/2008: Scholar at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México in Mexico City.
- Fall semester 2003/2004: Assistant at the Institute for Literary Studies at the Technical University Berlin.

Habilitation: Technical University Berlin, fall semester of 2009/2010.

Dissertation: University of Münster, Spring semester 2001

S3 LE GENRE COMME PROBLÉMATIQUE TRANSNATIONALE / GENRE AS A TRANSNATIONAL PROBLEM

GENDERED MEDIATIONS: 19TH CENTURY HUNGARIAN WOMEN WRITERS AND THE PROFESSION OF TRANSLATION

Z. Varga
Glasgow university

Abstract: 'That nation does not have a proper mother tongue, and no one can speak or write it'— this statement of Joseph II, the enlightened Austrian emperor about the condition of Hungarian language and literacy in the 1780s was a paradoxical stimulus to much of Hungarian literary activity in the early and mid-19th century. The threat and injustice embedded in this judgment encouraged the creation of a most interesting and rich body of literature, whose flourishing was inextricably linked to the claims of cultural autonomy in the early 19th century. Yet 'internationalising' it, or conveying knowledge about this linguistically inaccessible culture remained to be done by post-1849 Hungarian political émigrés, who, unlike Polish émigrés, often settled in London and Brussels. It is at this historical juncture of gender and displacement that the role of women writers first emerges: practically invisible in the 1830s and 1840s, the wives of politicians and refugees undertook the role of translating literary and cultural texts out of Hungarian. My initial focus will consider the work of two exemplary women: Teréz Pulszky and Júlia Jósika, who subverted personal displacement and used the post-1849 international sympathy for Hungarians to spread knowledge about Hungarian history, culture, and letters and also carved out an unforeseen role for themselves. The second generation of Hungarian women writers instrumental in the fostering of national self-confidence worked during the second half of the 19th century. Translating foreign literature was seen as coming of age for Hungarian literary culture, but female authors were kept away from translating canonical classics into Hungarian. A consideration of the life of the Wohl sisters and the work of Emilia Kánya will suggest that women, again, carved out a role for themselves as translators and mediators of foreign culture.

Biography: Zsuzsanna Varga studied English, Hungarian and Portuguese at Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest. She took her PhD at Edinburgh University in English Victorian literature, on which she has published extensively. She has taught Hungarian studies at Glasgow University since 2008. Her research interests include British and Hungarian travel writing, 19th century book history and publishing history and the reception of Hungarian literature in English-speaking countries.

WOMEN'S TRANSNATIONAL SUBJECTIVITIES: A COMPARISON OF CANADIAN AND LITHUANIAN WOMEN WRITERS' WORKS

J. Motiejunaite
Campus Saint Jean, University of Alberta

Abstract: Within the last twenty years, correlating with the collapse of the Soviet Union, the spread of a market economy and the rapid development of personal communication technologies, globalization has become an especially significant concept. While the influence of globalization of subjectivities has been felt in Western Europe and North America before, the new open societies of the post-Soviet era have only been exposed to this impact recently. For post-soviet communities, globalization and the opening of societies has brought upon a curse as well as a type of empowerment. Unfortunately, open borders, the search for economic empowerment and the lack of human rights protection has led to women's trafficking. The political and economic events of the newly independent states in Europe due to communication technologies, migration and literary exchanges has become a challenge informing and challenging the studies of women's subjectivity formation. I propose a comparative analysis of Margaret Atwood's The Robber Bride and Jurga Ivanauskaitė's (the most prominent Lithuanian woman writer) novel Mieganciuju drugeliu tvirtove to demonstrate how, under the influence of globalization processes, women's subjectivities are trapped by the patriarchal colonizer— exemplified either through men in the lives of protagonists, or by dominant social and cultural discourses. This colonization of women's subjectivity results in a fragmented sense of subjectivity, along with a sense of guilt and inadequacy. Affected by deterritorialization, the rapid exchange of information, and greater social interconnectedness, the central female characters in these novels struggle with the tension between a sense of mortality and the search for purposefulness. Subjectivity becomes a product of sorts, traded, packaged, re-packaged, unloaded, or invested in, even stolen, if there is the promise of a good return.

Biography: Jurate Motiejunaite (PhD) is currently teaching English as a Second Language courses at Campus Saint Jean of University of Alberta as well as Comparative Literature at the Grant Macewan University, Edmonton, Alberta. Ms Motiejunaite obtained her PhD in Comparative Literature in 2008 at the University of Alberta. Apart from teaching, Ms Motiejunaite has been involved in the work of the non-governmental debate organization IDEA (International Debate Education Association), which develops debate education projects for Eastern and Central Europe, as well as countries in Africa and Asia with the aim of building open societies.

Ms Motiejunaite has edited the book Women's Rights: the Public/Private Dichotomy and is a co-writer of the Discovering the World Through Debate.

THE HISTORICAL NOVEL AND CENTRAL EUROPE

C. Rauseo

univ. Valenciennes

Abstract: The historical novel is always contemporary, however far removed the events it relates may be. Sometimes it draws a distant period closer by its links, real or imaginary, with the preoccupations of the present; "Quo vadis" is a famous example. More often it depicts a past still very much connected to the time of its genesis - old people remember it or think they can, and physical traces of it are still visible: "War and Peace" comes at once to mind. Our workshop will explore the latter phenomenon in novels centering on the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and their evolutions and revolutions in the last 70 years.

Biography: Chris Rauseo, professor of comparative literature at the université de Valenciennes. Born in 1957. Degrees from Harvard and the Freie Universität Berlin. Previous teaching at universities in Berlin, Mainz and Stuttgart and at the Goethe-Institut Berlin. Recent publications on Fontane, Goethe, Baudelaire and Watteau; Montaigne publication forthcoming.

S1 CATEGORIES ET CONCEPTS, STRATEGIES ET LIMITES / CONCEPTS, STRATEGIES, AND LIMITS OF COMPARISON

EXPLORING LIMITS OF COMPARATIVISM

S.C. Dasgupta
Jadavpur University

Abstract: Comparison entails a lowest common denominator in the context of the objects of comparison and in the case of Comparative Literature it is, more often than not, expression in the form of literature or orature. When there is comparison across the arts for instance, or across disciplines, there is still the need for a common denominator that could be addressed quite specifically. My paper will look into questions of the non-comparable in the context of literature emerging from spaces with extreme inequalities between conditions of life and living and hence of social experiences. However, the moment I speak of literature I assume a world where reading and writing prevails and it is generally assumed that literatures and oratures as such, do not have the common denominator that could bring them within the purview of comparison, though exceptions may be made in cases of re-presentations. In other words, the often repeated question in Comparative Literature is whether one can compare a short story by Le Clezio to a Mymensingha Geetika also called the Eastern Bengali Ballad, and the answer if positive, is not without a touch of defiance. However, it often happens that there are writers and bards living on the edges of different communities with their vastly different social experiences, often sharing the same geographical space, and the space of the noncomparable breaks down precisely when one is thinking in terms of a spectrum and not of binaries or near binaries. Writers living on the verge of communities that have their oratures but no reading or writing choose to write literature on the predicament of such communities, while again bards living on the peripheries of modern societies often choose to narrate the predicament of such societies in their oratures. In other words, I am trying to argue against the notion of irreducible difference in order to suggest that some kind of passageway between walls that have got erected in society may be built in the comparative endeavour. For my paper I will take up a specific theme and its expression in a written narrative related to the Sunderbans and the same theme in an oral context related to any one of the modern metropolitan centres and work out the modalities and the ends of comparison in the particular case. Exploring the limits of comparative literature may lead to articulations of issues related to 'bare lives'.

Biography: Professor, Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University and editor of Jadavpur Journal of Comparative Literature. Recent publications include an edited volume entitled Of Asian Lands: an Annotated Bibliography of Travel Narratives to Asian Countries from Bengal, and a co-edited volume Literature and Orature as Knowledge System: Texts from the Northeast. Have also published a book entitled A Bibliography of Reception: World Literature in Bengali Periodicals(1891-1900).

IS COMPARATIVITY NECESSARILY META-COMPARATIVITY?

M. Xie
University of Toronto

Abstract: Comparative literature as a mode of thinking does not seek merely to describe or establish similarities and differences, but to transform any such similarities and differences, whether perceived, putative or argued for, into an understanding of their critical status as knowledge. Crucial to the comparative approach is a critical engagement with the notion of what may be called comparativity. If comparative literature as a discipline is dead, as Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak asserts, comparativity as an activity or mode of activity is definitely not. Indeed, comparative literature or comparativity as a mode of thinking cannot be displaced or replaced by some other discipline(s); it can only be made more vital, as a second-order observation upon its own activity, which by virtue of its critical comparativity applies to all humanistic studies. Comparativity by default eschews the certainty or centrality of any single or privileged point of view. Comparison in the usual sense is generally interested in the practical results of its operation — that is, similarities or differences as such — largely conceived from a self-centered or even assumed superior viewpoint, whereas comparativity, or the activity of comparing or thinking about how (not) to compare, is more concerned with how similarities and differences are constituted. A comparative intercultural approach thus moves from interpretation as a normal and normative core value to the problematization of how meaning is constituted, that is, of its conditions of possibility. The question of interpretation is further complicated by the notion of meaning itself. Meanings are not given, or rather not given once and for all. The crucial point is that in the cultural realm nothing is given once and for all; everything is in principle both accessible and resistant to human interpretation, and everything is in principle modifiable. Therefore, the comparative approach is not (just) a process of studying factual relations between two cultures but rather a process of becoming conscious of and reflecting on one's own relations to the object of study, as these relations are always already imbricated in the object as part of its problematic. Comparativity operates only in the absence of pre-established rules of comparison. Comparativity in this sense means both to know and to know how we know. It is also to see how the same thing can be seen differently and how a plurality of stories can be told of it. The moot question would of course be whether it would still be the "same" thing, but this question is part of comparativity's intrinsic problematic. Comparativity is concerned with the creation of figures of the thinkable, thus pointing up what is unthought. It is precisely the alien character of a foreign way of thinking and belief system that constitutes its value and relevance, since it intimates unthought and alternative possibilities. Moreover, it is not that the other tradition or culture itself is already permanently fixed and cannot be thought anew. Unthought and alternative possibilities pertain to both of the cultures "under comparison." An awareness of such alternative possibilities can help one gain new insight into one's own tradition, as well as someone else's. More importantly, this awareness can prevent one's own current models and theories from degenerating into uncritically accepted dogmas or ideologies. This is to say that what a culture or a mode of thinking has to leave out of consideration in order to think at all, even the very form of thinking, impinges on what can be thought. Thus every culture has its own unthought implicit to its episteme, irreducible to the mode of the unthought of another culture. What need to be thought are the unthought categories of thought. This is an important task of critical comparative inquiry. Here, the unthought is akin to the untranslatable, in the sense that the untranslatable does not just signify the "failure" of translating from one language to another. Rather, it signifies the untranslatable as the ontological condition of translation and knowledge. In other words, the untranslatable is an ontological distance and as such precisely and paradoxically enables intercultural understanding and translation. Again, the untranslatable should be construed as the "limit" in the Kantian sense: die Grenze as the positive delimitation which makes knowledge possible. Hence the untranslatable is ontological in function, not in the sense of an external obstacle (die Schranke). Intercultural knowledge presupposes the untranslatable — that is, the non-representable or unrepresentable — as a limit-condition of knowing otherness. This limit is therefore both epistemological and ontological. Like the horizon, or the boundedness of horizon, limit is what enables the object to be thinkable. What the limit points to or beyond is the non-meaning, or unthought, not something that is represented as unintelligible or meaningless. So there is an important sense in which intercultural knowledge is concerned with the invention of the unthought — that is, the invention of "possible objects" of knowledge. Comparisons are always contingent and arbitrary, relative to the objects compared and the frames of comparison. In a sense, there is nothing for a comparison to be true to. There are always different and alternative ways to compare and not to compare. Even the arbitrariness of differences may be contingent and relative, since one difference is arbitrary only in relation to some other difference(s). Critical comparativity is (necessarily) meta-comparativity, for at least two reasons. First, the act of comparing does something to the objects compared and alters them in the process. Objects enter into relations with their environment(s) and come into contact with other objects. But objects and relations affect and change each other. In this respect, both comparison and translation are relational modes of knowing, as both involve seeing one thing in terms of another but also simultaneously as not the same, making visible how the two things are not really the same. Something new and different is each time generated and gained in translating and comparing. At the same time, we need to remember that the things or entities that translation or comparison sets into relation are also objects that resist complete identification and appropriation. Second, if there is a truth in the activity of comparing, it does not exist over and above the objects compared as a platonic essence (as a tertium comparationis). Truth does depend on its environment, though this is not to say that objects do not possess "essences." What is crucial is that objects affect and are affected by other objects only through their own internal dynamics and propensities. As a relational mode of thinking, comparativity tries to account for both objects in their individual essences and the relations they may enter into. Comparativity, as different from comparison, unravels what comparison can both reveal and conceal. Hence, comparativity has a built-in meta-dimension. Comparativity is necessarily meta-comparativity. Distinctions are not "out there" in the world, but are drawn by human beings. If distinctions are by nature contingent, they can be drawn otherwise. Indeed, distinctions are drawn differently by the same culture in different historical periods and by different cultures. To observe this contingency of distinctions is to engage in a second-order observation of different systems of observation, and to do so is to be meta-comparative. It follows that comparativity as meta-comparativity makes it possible for us to make other and alternative distinctions. This seems to be the only way one can avoid falling into facile and self-serving comparisons or contrasts that imply or presuppose one's own sense of superiority. Comparativity allows for and entails distinctions and viewpoints that for all their contingency cannot be reduced to other distinctions and viewpoints; that is, comparativity entails and acknowledges the incomparable and inaccessible. Comparativity enables us to get beyond comparison. Thus comparativity as an epistemological activity has far-reaching political and ethical implications as a mode of critical inquiry. Critical comparativity is not just about comparing existing ways of thinking but also, more important, comparing against them.

Biography: Ming Xie is Associate Professor of English at the University of Toronto. He obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge and works in modern poetry and comparative intercultural theory.

COMPARING THE INCOMPARABLE. CONCEPTUALIZING A COMPARATIVE LITERATURE WITHOUT CENTER

M. Kalantzopoulou
Université Paris VIII

Abstract: Comparing the incomparable

Conceptualizing a Comparative Literature without center

Comparative Literature has been until the mid-twentieth century mainly interested in texts belonging to Western, namely English, French or German, cultures, assuming that the different literatures communicated with one another in a humanist horizontality that was socially and politically neutral (see, for example, Chasles 1835, Van Tieghem 1939; Wellek 1963). More recent scholarship (e.g. Moretti 2000; 2003; Casanova 1999; Ashcroft et al. 1989; Quijano 2005; Gnisci et al. 2010; for an earlier version of this kind of criticism see Etiemble 1963), however, suggested that literature was a world-system marked by inequality, having a center the literature of which, because of its greater economic, political or symbolic capital, served as the model for, and dominated, the literature of the periphery. This kind of scholarship radically questioned the subordination of the different literary cultures to those of Western modernity, arguing against what had been established as a normative, ahistorical, eurocentric and colonialist comparatism. Other approaches (e.g. Candido 1989; Henríquez Ureña 1963; Glissant 1995; García Canclini 1989; Bhabha 1994) stressed the hybrid character of literature in zones where a native, colonized culture had been in touch with an external, colonizing culture. If the literature of the colonized had been 'invented' (Said 1978) by the colonizers, scholars now suggested alternative, decolonized, decentralized theories, histories and interpretations for each specific literature. In the theoretical and epistemological context, Latin America was seen (Cornejo Polar 2003; Rama 2000; Pizarro 1985; Coutinho 2003) as a supranational interliterary community (Äzurisin 1984), the constituent parts of which shared a common culture and had to take a critical stance toward the dominant eurocentric comparatism.

Nevertheless, the study of the Latin American interliterary community often overlooked the substantial differences among its different cultures, usually by reducing them to the study of its major components. At the same time, it overlooked the heterogeneity that also characterized the 'center', which in any case was the only place where all literatures of the periphery could get in contact with one another. This approach also involved the risk to assume that literature of the periphery could not be the object of any research from the center or from any different point of the periphery. It thus prevented anybody who did not belong to this periphery -and more particularly, anybody who belonged to the center- from interpreting the literature under discussion, as well as from undertaking the task to 'provincialize' the center. More importantly, if the idea of interliterary community proposed to de-europeanize, to decentralize the international literary system, the approach according to which Latin American literature would be the result of a process of transculturation, of hybridization between local and European cultures, involved nevertheless the constant presence of this European 'center' that this kind of criticism intended to 'provincialize'.

On the other hand, in an analogy to the extra-literary world, if Europe had for a long time dominated the international literary scene, its authority was now questioned, and new poles emerged, multiplying the literary centers in the world. The first decade of the twenty-first century witnessed the crisis of the Western dominance and the emergence of alternative centers in what was considered as the periphery, the different parts of which now came to meet and increasingly lived together. If then the world is now less unipolar than before, the approaches according to which the different literatures of the world belonged to a periphery which was dominated by a center located in the West had to be reconsidered. If the world was less unipolar than before, or, if we wish it would be so, comparatism could now proceed to the parallel reading of different literatures of the periphery without involving the study of the 'center'.

The aforementioned statements would constitute an argument of a rather political order (political arguments have anyway always been an important stimulus for theoretical and epistemological evolutions in Comparative Literature) in favour of a comparative literature that would allow for the parallel reading of texts among which there was no relation of contact and influence, that is, texts from different points of the literary periphery. If the world was less unipolar, and if criticism had already, to a certain extent, decentralized the world-system of literature, World literature could now propose not only to interpret the inequalities of this world-system, but also to escape from the necessity to pass from its center, establishing a direct communication among the different points of its periphery.

At a more epistemological level, the parallel reading of literatures that are not connected by relations of contact would involve, rather than the study of influences, the study of typological convergences and divergences. Scholarship (Äzurisin 1984; Zhirmunsky 1967) has suggested the necessity to move from a comparatism exclusively based on relations of influence to a comparatism that explores the general laws of literary evolution as determined by similar movements of history. These approaches, however, seem to result not only in a certain mechanicality but also in a kind of literary structuralism and evolutionism. At the same time, the idea that literary evolution in the center determined the evolution of literary forms in the periphery was part of an approach that, despite its sociological nature, and by means of its distant-reading, macrohistorical, longue-durée concern, only took into account formal characteristics of literatures in the zones under discussion. This kind of sociological formalism (Moretti 2000) thus overlooked what had been the principal focus of sociological approaches in literary criticism, that is, 'content'. If, apart from economic and social history, there is a kind of cultural history (Ricoeur 2000), scholarship has already elaborated models for the interpretation of the economy (Casanova 1999) as well as of the sociology of the forms (Moretti 2000; 2003) of world literature. What this paper would suggest then would be the study of the cultural history of world literature, by means of the study of the -convergent or divergent- historical circumstances that gave rise to certain -convergent or divergent- 'contents' of literatures that are not linked by relations of contact and influence.

Works cited

- Ashcroft, Bill, Griffiths, Gareth, Tiffin, Helen (1989). The empire writes back. Theory and practice in post-colonial literatures. London, New York, Routledge
- Bhabha, Homi (ed.) (1990). Nation and narration. London, New York, Routledge
- Candido, Antonio (1989). A educação pela noite e outros ensaios. São Paulo, Atica
- Casanova, Pascale (1999). La république mondiale des lettres. Paris, Seuil
- Chasles, Philarète (1835). Cours à l'Athénée, Séance d'ouverture, 17 janvier, 1835, Revue de Paris, XIII, n. 17
- Cornejo Polar, Antonio (2003). Escribir en el aire. Ensayo sobre la heterogeneidad socio-cultural en las literaturas andinas. Lima, Latinoamericana Editores
- Coutinho, Eduardo (2003). « Sentido e função da literatura comparada na América Latina », Literatura comparada na América Latina. Ensaio, Rio de Janeiro, Editora a Universidade do Estado do Rio de Janeiro
- Äzurisin, Dionyz (1984). Theory of literary comparatistics. Bratislava, Veda
- García Canclini, Nestor (1989). Culturas híbridas. Estrategias para entrar y salir de la modernidad. Mexico, D.F., Grijalbo
- Glissant, Édouard (1985). Introduction à une poétique du divers. Paris, Gallimard
- Gnisci, Armando, Sinopoli, Franca, Moll, Nora (2010). La letteratura del mondo nel XXI secolo. Roma, Mondadori
- Henríquez Ureña, Pedro (1963). Literary currents in Hispanic America. Russell and Russell
- Moretti, Franco (2000). « Conjectures on World Literature », New Left Review, 1, Jan./Feb. 2000
- Moretti, Franco (2003). « More conjectures », New Left Review, 20, Mar./Apr. 2003
- Pizarro, Ana (1985) « Sobre las direcciones del comparatismo em América Latina », Proceedings of the Tenth Congress of the ICLA. New York, London, James J. Wilhelm, Garland Publishing, 1985, pp. 157-167
- Quijano, Aníbal (2005). « Colonialidad del poder, eurocentrismo y América Latina », Lander, Edgardo (ed.), La colonialidad del saber: eurocentrismo y ciencias sociales. Perspectivas latino-americanas. Buenos Aires, CLACSO
- Rama, Angel (2000). Transculturación narrativa en América Latina. Buenos Aires, Andariego
- Ricoeur, Paul (2000). La mémoire, l'histoire, l'oubli, Paris, Seuil, 2000
- Said, Edward (1978). Orientalism, New York, Pantheon
- Van Tieghem, Paul (1939). La littérature comparée, Paris, Armand Colin
- Wellek, René (1963). Concepts of Criticism, New Haven, Yale University Press

Zhirmunsky, Victor (1967) « On the study of Comparative Literature », Oxford Slavonic Papers, 13

Biography: Having completed my First Degree Studies in the University of Athens, I received my MA Degree from Paris VIII University, with a dissertation entitled "Représentations du national dans le roman post-indépendantiste grec et colombien", and I am currently working on a Ph.D. project discussing "The novel of the transition from the empire to the nation-state in the Balkans and Latin America".

ANALOGIE ET DISSEMBLANCE EN LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE

M. Cots

Université Pompeu Fabra

Abstract: Parmi les méthodes que le comparatisme a incorporées se trouve, sans doute, l'analogie. Aussi peut-il se déduire de la définition de littérature comparée de Brunel, Pichois et Rousseau en 1996 : « La littérature comparée est l'art méthodique par la recherche de liens d'analogie (...) de rapprocher la littérature des autres domaines de l'expression ou de la connaissance (...) ». Déjà les philosophes alexandrins prônaient une vision « analogiste » du langage dont l'emphase était mise sur le rapport des formes et des signifiés. Au XIXe siècle, Hermann Paul, continuateur de Humboldt, fit de l'analogie une idée essentielle de la créativité linguistique. Or, il se trouve que dans l'histoire littéraire, l'individuation et la dissemblance ont été souvent invoquées comme des acquis du génie individuel, dès Cervantès (« J'ai été le premier à « nouvellier » en langue castillane ») aux auteurs d'avant-garde. Pourrait-on parler d'un courant de dissimilation, sous le signe de la dissemblance créative qui s'opposerait à l'analogie comparatiste ? Cette communication prétend étudier comment des cas de dissemblance à dessein pourraient s'intégrer dans un schéma de corrélation tel que le propose l'analogie comparatiste.

Biography: Montserrat COTS is Professor of French Literature at Universitat Pompeu Fabra (Barcelona) and President of the Spanish Comparative Literature Association (SELGYC). Her publications have focused above all on different aspects of French literature—Introducción a la Literatura Francesa (2000)—and the relationship between literatures through translation—Traslaciones culturales (2002). She is currently member of a joint research team of French and Spanish scholars who study the links between humor and literature, Humour et crises sociales (2011).

S1 COMPARAISONS INTERSEMIOTIQUES / COMPARISON ACROSS MEDIA

MUSICALITE DANS L'ECRITURE LECLEZIENNE: DIALOGUE ENTRE BOLERO ET RITOURNELLE DE LA FAIM

M. Li

Abstract: La Ritournelle de la faim, publié en 2008, est le dernier roman de Le Clézio. L'histoire raconte la misère du peuple français sous l'Occupation allemande à travers les yeux d'une petite fille Ethel. Dans le roman, Le Clézio mentionne à plusieurs reprises le Boléro de Maurice Ravel. Cette pièce de ballet vive et envoûtante retentit tout au long de l'histoire comme l'âme du roman. En effet, la musicalité de l'écriture leclézienne n'est plus une nouvelle découverte, notamment dans le champ lexical, où l'écrivain choisit exprès un vocabulaire étranger pour faire référence à la musique (voir dans Onitsha les traits de la danse africaine). Néanmoins, le dialogue entre la littérature et la musique dans La Ritournelle de la faim passe du domaine lexical aux domaines

Biography: M. LI; Shanghai/CN

L'ENVIE DE L'INTERMEZZO

J. Gonçalves Bratfisch
Universidade de São Paulo

Abstract: La musique est une manifestation essentielle pour la configuration du discours chez Roland Barthes : sa présence renvoie à la force littéraire du lied, en ce qui concerne l'analyse du discours amoureux, ainsi comme à une pratique quotidienne du piano en amateur. Dans ce cadre, la préférence pour la musique romantique – surtout pour Robert Schumann – n'est pas au hasard : la syntaxe des pièces comme Kreisleriana ou Dichterliebe, celle du patchwork, est partagée par l'écrivain dans le domaine textuel. Un fragment de Roland Barthes par Roland Barthes nous a laissé une trace de ce dialogue possible: «l'homme qui a le mieux compris et pratiqué l'esthétique du fragment (avant Webern), c'est peut-être Schumann ; il appelait le fragment 'intermezzo'». En effet, la discontinuité, la syntaxe textuelle choisie par l'écrivain dans ses essais et ses cours, peut être vue comme une sorte de pensée inhérente à sa pratique pianistique. Si Barthes au piano saute quelques passages, ne suit pas le rythme dicté par le compositeur, en opposant, à la maîtrise technique, une pratique qui privilégie la déambulation ; devant un texte, il tend à multiplier le plaisir d'écrire des débuts, de déconstruire la littérature.

Cette proposition a pour but une étude comparative entre les possibilités présentées par la syntaxe musicale de Schumann et la syntaxe textuelle de Roland Barthes. Cette comparaison au niveau des formes cherche plus largement une dynamique du désir et une politique du sens chez les pratiques barthésiennes. Ce travail intègre ma recherche sur l'écriture fragmentaire de Roland Barthes, développée dans l'Université de São Paulo.

Mots-clés : Roland Barthes ; Robert Schumann ; Littérature et arts ; fragment.

Biography: Juliana Gonçalves Bratfisch fait son Master en Littérature Française, à l'Universidade de São Paulo, sous direction de Mme. Verónica Galíndez-Jorge.

Contact : Juliana GONÇALVES BRATFISCH (juliana.bratfisch@usp.br)

LA THEORIE DE LA MUSIQUE PEUT-ELLE ÊTRE TRANSFORMEE EN STRUCTURES NARRATIVES ?

V. Grzondziel
Universität des Saarlandes, FR. 4.1 Germanistik/ Komparatistik

Abstract: La théorie de la musique peut-elle être transformée en structures narratives?
Les Variations Goldberg de Johann Sebastian Bach ont eu une forte influence non seulement sur de nombreux compositeurs et musiciens, mais aussi sur un grand nombre d'écrivains. Mises à part les nombreuses œuvres de fiction ayant pour thème cette œuvre musicale, la présente contribution vise à analyser deux romans dans lesquelles les auteurs ont cherché à exprimer directement dans les structures narratives de leurs textes la structure musicale des Variations Goldberg et la théorie de la composition y appliquée. Der Untergeher (fr. Le Naufragé), roman de l'écrivain autrichien Thomas Bernhard publié en 1983, fait partie d'un grand nombre de textes dans lesquelles l'auteur, lui-même violoniste, se penche sur les arts. En 2008, Anna Enquist, écrivain et pianiste de concert néerlandaise, a publié le roman Contrapunt (fr. Contrepoint) pour se remettre, à l'aide de la musique, d'un terrible malheur. Ces livres serviront d'exemple pour illustrer la transformation intermédiaire et pour démontrer comment les structures théoriques déterminent la structure du roman.

Biography: Bernhard, Thomas: Der Untergeher. Frankfurt am Main, 1983. Enquist, Anna: Kontrapunkt. München, 2008.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF CHOPIN'S WRITING STYLE FOR AN UNDERSTANDING AND THE PERFORMANCE OF HIS MUSICAL WORKS

R. Matsuo

The University of Tokyo

Abstract: My aim is to develop a new method for an analysis of Fryderyk Chopin's musical works on the basis of an analysis of his writing style. This is certainly a musicological topic, but at the same time it needs another discipline; it is poetics, as a key mediation for the interpretation of musical works. It means that if we can interpret a composer's prose style (e.g. in his letters) from the viewpoint of poetics, we might easier find out the way of playing or listening to his musical works. As one of the examples of comparative methods, here I will show some of the analysis of Chopin's musical works in accordance with the analysis of his letters. Chopin wrote a lot of letters to his friends, relatives and teachers in his life. As a matter of fact, in Poland there were some people who thought highly of his prose style in the letters. For instance Henryk Sienkiewicz (1846-1916), a Nobel laureate for Literature, once said that Chopin's style shows a great talent endowed by nature. Nevertheless, there is still no analytical investigation about his literary style. For that reason I read the new critical edition of Chopin's correspondence (the original title: Korespondencja Fryderyka Chopina, tom 1, 1816-1831), which was published in 2009, then I made an analysis of his Polish writing style under the supervision of the fellows of the University of Warsaw. Almost all of the letters in this first volume are written in Polish. As a result of my analysis I found some kinds of "common elements," which contribute to keep his style constant in these letters. This phenomenon is corresponding to his musical composition. If we look carefully to the style of his musical works, we can find out that some kinds of "common elements" are repeated or change gradually to keep the character constant, and it is thought as one of the characteristics of his compositions. In this way the structure of his music will be clarified through an analysis of his prose style. Finally I will consider to what extent such a way of understanding musical structures is specific for certain works or can be understood as a general property of Chopin's works from this comparative approach. If it is possible, I would like to illustrate my analysis with practical demonstrations at the piano on the session.

Biography: (Present affiliation): 2010-: Ph.D. student in Musicology at the Department of Comparative Literature and Culture, the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, the University of Tokyo. DC1 Fellow of Japan Society for the Promotion of Science. (Education): 2010-2011: Study at the Institute of Musicology, the University of Warsaw. 2010: Master of Arts at the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, the University of Tokyo (Thesis: The Effective Tone in Harmony -A Study of Fryderyk Chopin's Compositions and their Interpretation). 2009 August: Study at POLONICUM, the University of Warsaw. 2008-2010: Postgraduate study at the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, the University of Tokyo. 2008: Bachelor of Arts at the Faculty of Humanities, Keio University. 2004-2008: Study at the Faculty of Humanities, Keio University. (Conference Presentations): Conference presentation at NTU-CUHK International Music Forum, May 6th, 2012, Taipei, National Taiwan University, Taiwan "Chopin's Poetics as a Medium of his Musical Works." Open presentation at the Japan-Korea Exchange Seminar, November 10th, 2011, Tokyo, the University of Tokyo, Japan "For a More Attractive Synthesis of Musicological Analysis and Performance." Conference presentation at 62th Annual Congress of the Musicological Society of Japan, November 6th, 2011, Tokyo, Japan "The Musical Structure in the Context of Chopin's Prose Style: Considering 1820/30s' Letters." (Membership of professional organizations): The Musicological Society of Japan. The International Comparative Literature Association. (Current research interests): Music theory. Comparative arts. Analysis of Fryderyk Chopin's works and study of interpretation.

S1 LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE FACE AU POSTCOLONIAL, AU TRANSNATIONAL ET à LA MONDIALISATION / POSTCOLONIAL, GLOBALIZED, TRANSNATIONAL COMPARISON

TÂCHES ET POSSIBILITÉS DU COMPARATISME À L'ÉPOQUE DE LA MONDIALISATION (PARALLÈLES INFIDÈLES EN DEHORS DES INFLUENCES)

H. Voisine-Jechova
Université Paris-Sorbonne

Abstract: Les débuts des réflexions comparatistes coïncident avec l'intérêt pour la couleur locale, pour la spécificité de l'expression littéraire résultant des conditions extérieures de la création artistique. En même temps toutefois, en constatant des différences, les théoriciens cherchaient des ressemblances et essayaient d'expliquer leurs causes. Mais quelle est la conception de la couleur locale et de son rôle aujourd'hui ? De quelle façon (de quelles façons) pourrions-nous définir les parallèles infidèles qui apparaissent dans la fiction romanesque de divers pays sans qu'on puisse parler des influences ou des sources communes ? Sans vouloir nier l'importance des travaux consacrés à des contacts littéraires, il serait souhaitable de nous orienter vers des recherches typologiques, ou plutôt vers des conceptions où l'approche fondée sur l'étude des motifs et sujets serait accompagnée d'une réflexion sur des questions existentielles qui, dans des milieux différents, traduisent l'inquiétude de notre époque. Toutefois il faut tenir compte de l'ancrage des œuvres littéraires dans la tradition (dans les traditions) de leur pays et combiner l'optique du présent avec le respect du passé qui, dans notre perception, devient un nouveau présent. J'essaierai d'illustrer ces réflexions par quelques exemples puisés dans les littératures française, polonaise, tchèque, japonaise...

Biography: Professeur émérite de l'université Paris-Sorbonne.

Auteur de plusieurs articles et ouvrages sur l'histoire de la littérature tchèque, polonaise et française, dont l'Histoire de la littérature tchèque.

RENCONTRE DE L'OCCIDENT ET DE L'ORIENT DANS LES RECITS DE VOYAGES D'ANDRE GIDE ET DE DJALAL AL AHMAD

A. Shakerj, B. Namvar Motlagh
Université de Limoges

Abstract: La question indispensable dans les études d'orientalisme et occidentalisme, c'est l'image de l'autre. La connaissance de l'autre, en tant qu'un étranger, est au centre de ces études. Selon Chardin, l'étude des représentations de l'étranger dans la littérature, a pris deux directions dominantes: «l'étude de ces documents primaires que sont les récits de voyage», et, surtout, celle des «ouvrages de fiction qui soit mettent en scène directement des étrangers, soit se réfèrent à une vision d'ensemble, plus ou moins stéréotypée, d'un pays étranger.» Depuis l'antiquité jusqu'à la période modern, les chercheurs ont été à la recherche d'une image fidèle parmi les contes, les mythes, les histoires, les récites de voyages, les romans etc. et de créer un schéma de la structure de culture étrangers. L'héritage de la relation entre l'orient et l'occident a des aspects différents. Les images essayant de trouver des réponses à la question de réception pour bien connaître les caractéristiques des people et des habitants de ce monde. L'Iran après 1935 ou la Pers ancienne est une région dans le carrefour de l'occident et de l'orient. La situation géographique, stratégique, la culture ancienne avec une histoire de l'Empire, des révoltes et la singularité historique bien mal connue, fait des images contradictoires dans les yeux des autres. D'autre part, c'est la France des années de Gide. La question essentielle c'est comment savoir connaître l'Iran et la France ou bien c'est de savoir comment comprendre leurs images parmi les médias, les images, les récits, les histoires, les romans, les films, les produits littéraire, les réseaux sociaux, et les utiles de communication du monde moderne qui augment de jours en jour. Dans ce travail, nous essayons de préciser l'image de l'occident et de l'orient grâce à une étude sur récits de voyages de deux écrivains. André Gide et Djalal Al Ahmad sont deux voyageurs-écrivains qui ouvrent une nouvelle vision au lecteur et permettent de partager ses échanges culturels, économiques, politiques entre les lignes et l'histoire raconté. Mot-clé: Orient et Occident, l'image, récit de voyage, André Gide, Djalal Al Ahmad

Biography: Education · 2005: Diplôme de karshenasi [Bac +4], langue et littérature française, Université de Tabriz, Iran. · 2009 : Diplôme de Master Arts, Lettres et Langues, Mention LETTRES, Spécialité Textes et Représentation de l'Antiquité au XXI^e Siècle, Université de Limoges, France. · Depuis 2009: Doctorant de Littérature Générale et Comparée, EHIC, Université de Limoges, France. Programmes de recherche · Thèse en cours: « Le Retour dans les œuvres d'André Gide et de Djalâl Al Ahmad », EHC, Université de Limoges, France. · Mémoire Master: « Les sources françaises de l'œuvre romanesque de Mohammad Ali Djamâlzâdeh », Université de Limoges, France. Thématiques de recherche · Études comparées, Critique littéraire · Représentation des espaces humains · Tradition et modernité · Histoire de l'Iran et études iraniennes Terrains de recherche · Europe, France / Asie, Iran.

ERA OF MOBILITY AND CULTURAL VARIATIONS: INDIAN WRITING IN ENGLISH FICTION

R. Garg
INPG College

Abstract: Cultural changes and human mobility are on the increase to the extent of plastic bodies and unfathomed regions to reach. Thus, under the dominance of various factors to control ethos and ethics, cultural studies carve a dominant niche for self. Human beings have been moving from one place to another for those factors which sustain life, livelihood or belief. The nature of travelling has differed and the traveler has been receiving nomenclatures as per the conditions. Initially, there were the purposes of pilgrimage or trading. These were the times, broadly speaking, up to the eighteenth century. During the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, came the form of a stroller. The cosmopolitan and the migrant feature follow in the nineteenth and the twentieth century. The contemporary scene is of the tourist, technomad or global executive. These characteristics are well depicted by the writers in literature. Particularly, with the drastic changes in and around, multicultural impact is much talked about in literature. In particular comes within the purview of the writers, the growth of the modernity and the breakup of the traditions. They are taking up the cause of the individual in the larger world and give the estimate of the social scene in the changing phase. No doubt, the writers working in contemporaneity, consider history, literature, society or sensibility to a large extent. Similar issues raised by different writers are brought forth in a wide range of paraphernalia as the symbols used by them, for example, flowers, sun, moon etc. are countless. The underlying differences, the overt critical changes or the writers choice presentations are always in need of comparative highlight. In a comparative study, one theory may not be applicable on the other book and then the textual comparison of cultural aspect proves fruitful. Ethnicization of post-colonial age remains in struggle with the native culture. With the blend of the cultures, for such reasons as labour mobility, the nature of literature tends more to intercultural emphasis. India is a multilingual country. Many writers are busy creating in more than one language. Intercultural comparison relates to the deconstruction of the set issues of a nation. Comparative note is difficult to alienate as in multilingual or multicultural ethos, even the writer or the central figure come to compare because a natural comparison between the cultures, countries or other related issues takes place. It is in the light of the above that a comparative note is proposed on the basis of three Indian Writing in English novelists, Arudhati Roy's The God of Small Things, Manju Kapoor's The Immigrant and a lesser known novelist Rita Garg's An Abbreviated Child. In these three novels, the three leading characters -one each of the novels- come across the other culture and how they find themselves misfits abroad is the point of comparison. Also, these characters are worth comparison for the diversity of background, culture in India and social needs. In the comparative study, the pain of rootlessness, cosmopolitan lack of sympathy, national and patriotic craving, emotional drawbacks, economic needs, cross-cultural binaries and traditional changes would be taken up as these are intertwined. Against a comparative mode of study, all these characters would serve as a foil to the other and a multidimensional result of one problem of alienation and diaspora, in need of family ties would be traced.

Biography: Bio Brief Rita Garg Reader Deptt. Of English INPG College, Meerut MA, Ph. D Published Works An Abbreviated Child (A novel) Precursor of Love (A novel) Agradoot Prem Ka (A novel, Hindi transcreation of the above) Sahaj Asahaj (Story collection in collaboration) Panchaparna (poetry collection in collaboration) Evelyn Waugh as a Satirist (Thesis) 09 Ph.Ds have been awarded and 03 are registered Organised a National Seminar under UGC award of CPE Participated in more than three dozen conferences, seminars and workshops More than a dozen published papers Coordinator NAAC Committee of the college Study Centres of distance education Uttar Pradesh Rajarshi Tandon Open University, Allahabad Punjab Technical University, Jullandhar Courses Taught Post Graduate Diploma Course in Translation Business Communication to BBA & MBA

COMPARATIVE/IDENTITY POLITICS: SUNITI NAMJOSHI

A.K. Rath
National Institute of Technology- Rourkela

Abstract: In 2006 Suniti Namjoshi (b. 1941) published Sycorax: New Fables and Poems. The text includes a section on the 'unsung / untold' story of Shakespeare's Sycorax and a section on the 'new' life of Protea. By then, taking textual genesis from Shakespeare's The Tempest and imitating the fashion of many postcolonial texts, in 1984 Namjoshi had published in From the Bedside Book of Nightmare a section entitled “Snapshots of Caliban”. “Sycorax”, a continuation of “Snapshots of Caliban”, of rewriting Shakespeare, attempted to reorganise the structure of the “humanist universe”—a project, rather a challenge or protest, Namjoshi attempted to undertake in the volume The Jackass and the Lady in 1980. Rewriting Shakespeare to challenge the existing structure of the male-centred ‘humanist universe’ is part of the volumes of writing she has produced. They include rewriting of ancient and canonical fables and stories, and making new ones in the process of defining / identifying the lesbian / feminist ‘self’ amongst birds, beasts and animals. I shall highlight that diasporic, lesbian and transnational, Namjoshi’s work—within the framework of postcolonial discourse—attempts to construct an ‘alternative universe’ in textuality. I shall argue that in the construction of an alternative political identity, Namjoshi undertakes a comparative approach in selecting subjects for producing literature and a comparative study of cross-cultural identities remain central to the analysis of Namjoshi’s work. I shall argue that it is because of the colonial anti-sodomy law, and because of religious and social stigma that the mission of constructing an alternative universe remains operative in Namjoshi’s work. I shall highlight that in Namjoshi’s work, feminism, postcolonialism and queer theory merge but her work has been deliberately sidelined by the academia.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Dr. A.K.Rath is Assistant Professor at National Institute of Technology, Rourkela, Orissa, India. His specialisation includes Indian Sexuality, Post-colonial Literature, Oriya Literature and Cultural Studies.

S3 APPROCHES COMPAREES DES GENRES LITTERAIRES / COMPARATIVE APPROACHES TO GENRE

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE: HELPING TO ESTABLISH THE BORDERS OF THE LITERARY LEGEND

N. Tuliakova

National Research University Higher School of Economics

Abstract: In the literature of the 19th – 21st centuries the concept of genre changes from following the canon to expressing the author's individuality, which is reflected on different levels of the text. It makes pointing out genre features quite a challenging task lying in the field of not only history of literature, genre theory, but also taxonomy. The problem is especially difficult when it comes to the genres that have appeared quite late, starting from the late 18th century. Since genres are artificial subdivisions, researchers need to take into account their evolution, national variant, and other variables. It is also essential to point out some texts that definitely belong to the genre, in order to find some common characteristics and describe the genre. One of such "mysterious" genres is the literary legend, which has not been carefully studied so far, unlike its folk and religious predecessors. Researches rarely distinguish the legend from the fairy tale, short story, tale, parable, and so on. Still, many authors explicitly call their stories "legends" in titles, subtitles, prefaces, footnotes. There are more than 100 texts in the 19th century literature (those of well-known writers). The only way to understand if the genre really exists and how it does to do it is to use the comparative method. Comparison should be conducted at several stages. First, it is necessary to compare the text that could be treated as legends, to understand if they have some common features. The crucial moment is selecting the features that must be compared, as nobody knows exactly which elements comprise a genre, especially a prosaic one. They may be elements of form, content, or both, depending on the genre. For my study, I chose the texts that were named "Legends" by the authors twice – in the story title and in the cycle title: "Tanzlegendchen" ("Sieben Legenden") by Gottfried Keller, "La Ajorca de oro. Leyenda de Toledo ("Leyendas") by Gustavo Becquer, "The Legend of Devil's Point", "The Legend of Monte Del Diablo" ("Spanish and American Legends") by Francis Bret Harte, "Die Legende der dritten Taube" ("Legenden") by Stephan Zweig. The comparison of different levels revealed that all the texts have similar plot structure, location, conflict, type of personage, text modality. Features that were irrelevant proved out to be the usage of pretext, time, text mode (comic, tragic, dramatic), degree of stylization. The second stage of the study involves comparing the texts of one author, in order to differentiate the legends from other genres. The above-mentioned features may be used as the basis for comparison. Also, it is necessary to take into account the genre indicators within all the texts to get the author's understanding of the genre. The third stage deals with comparing national variants of the legend (synchronic aspect) and outlining its evolution (diachronic aspect). Though developing and changing, taking different forms (prosaic, poetic, dramatic), the literary legends demonstrates quite stable features at the level of content.

Biography: I hold BA, MA, PhD from the Herzen State Pedagogical University (Saint-Petersburg, Russia). I work as associate professor at the foreign languages department, National Research University Higher School of Economics. My research interests are Comparative literature, Genre theory, Literary legend, Text Linguistics.

CHINESE VERNACULAR NOVELS, JAPANESE CLASSICS AND POETIC JUSTICE: YOMIHON BY ISHIKAWA MASAMOCHI

J. Yamana

Ochanomizu University

Abstract: The late Edo Yomihon is a substantial genre in the mid-late Edo period. As a didactic fiction with a full-novel form, the genre was built on by Kyokutei Bakin, and flourished as a popular entertainment around 1800.

Moreover, Yomihon works by Kyoka poets have recently caught serious attention. Among Yomihon of this kind published around 1800, for example, not a few were certainly less than outright didactical, but their authors advanced their own ideas and even aired their criticisms of the manners of the current society in fictional disguise, instead. I believe this feature derives from the fact that Kyoka was a highly improvisational and richly comical and satirical genre, which was enjoyed within the coteries of sophisticated men of culture. I examine how the Kyoka poets rendered their didacticism and arguments in their Yomihon works.

In this session, I inquire 2 Yomihon works written by Ishikawa Masamochi, a Kokugaku scholar as well as one of the greatest Kyoka Poets in those days. His works are not only adaptations of Chinese vernacular novels, but also use Japanese classics as source. In "Omi-Agata-Monogatari," Masamochi designed the main character Medemaro under the influence of "qiao tuan yuan chuan ji" and "Genji-Monogatari." Moreover, Masamochi didn't emphasize didacticism in his works. For Example, "Ama-no-Hagoromo" and "Omi-Agata-Monogatari" were influenced by Japanese Buddhism and Chinese Confucianism. Further, didacticism in the contemporary Yomihon works might not interested him very much. I consider Masamochi frequently depicted lucky charms as embodiment of poetic justice, instead of atrocious massacre or barbaric punishment in his works.

In his "Tamagawa Jari", Ota Nanpo, the foremost man of culture as well as a leading Kyoko poet in those days, criticized Bakin's Confucian-oriented Yomihon as "pandering to the masses," while he praised Masamochi's Yomihon as "far above the masses in its thesis and purpose." Nanpo himself would have appreciated Yomihon in Japanese classical style of writing (Wabun) like "Omi-Agata-Monogatari," an example of Yomihon featuring the author's ideas and arguments, unlike Yomihon in Bakin's format with violent battle scenes and many corpses scattered around.

Yomihon by Kyoka poets continued to be published around 1800, as a distinct sub-genre from the mainstream Bakin format. I believe these Yomihon which are influenced by Japanese classics and Chinese vernacular novels were an integral part in the history of Yomihon genre.

Biography: Biography of Junko YAMANA

1 January 1979, Born in Kanagawa, JAPAN

Education:

March 2001: B.A. in Japanese Literature
Ochanomizu University, Tokyo, JAPAN

March 2003: M.A. in Japanese Literature
Ochanomizu University, Tokyo, JAPAN

March 2011: Ph.D. in Humanities (Japanese Literature)
Ochanomizu University, Tokyo, JAPAN
Advisor: Dr. Natsuo ICHIKO

Experiences:

April 2009-March 2010: Visiting Assistant in Research (VAR), Yale University, U.S.A.
Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, East Asian Languages and Literatures

April 2010-Present: Lecturer, Otsuma Women's University, Tokyo, JAPAN
Faculty of Home Economics,

April 2012-Present: Research Fellow, Ochanomizu University, Tokyo, JAPAN
Graduate School of Humanities and Sciences

Membership:

Japan Comparative Literature Association (JCLA)
The Society of Japanese Early Modern Literature
The Association of Japanese Literature
Ochanomizu University Society of Japanese Language and Literature

Scholarship:

September 2008: Oin-kai (Ochanomizu University Alumni Association) Scholarship for study abroad (2009-2010)

Research Interest:

Japanese Literature, Culture and Arts in Edo Period, especially in late 18th century and early 19th century

THE AUDIBLE AND NON-AUDIBLE EMOTIONS OF ANNA IN VIRGIL'S AENEID: A DIFFERENTIAL COMPARATIVE APPROACH

M.A. El-Nowieemy

University of Alexandria, Faculty of Arts

Abstract:

The Audible and Non-Audible Emotions of Anna in Virgil's Aeneid: A Differential Comparative Approach Magda A. El-Nowieemy Professor of Latin Literature, University of Alexandria, Egypt In book 4 of Virgil's Aeneid, the poet tells the love story of Dido and Aeneas with emphasis on the experience of Dido and on her affections, bringing epic poetry closer to the concerns of tragedy. Dido's experience brings suffering not only to herself, but also to her sister Anna. Many studies have come out to light over the years to consider and re-consider the emotions and reactions of Dido as a major character. It is the aim of this paper to investigate what constitutes the audible and non-audible emotions of a minor character, Anna, which were communicated by the powers of the poet, compared with those of Dido. The paper will shed light on the emotions of Anna as a reaction to those of Dido by looking beyond the surface of the lines and their immediate context for implicit meaning and effect. Dido's tragedy made demands upon her sister Anna, to which the latter passionately responded or acted at every stage of Dido's experience of amor and furor. As far as Anna's emotions are concerned, the text invites us to reflect on two points: First: The literary way used by Virgil to arouse the emotions of Anna, in relation to, and in comparison with those of Dido. Second: The sort of emotions aroused in Anna, audible and non-audible: sympathy, fear, pity, and shock.

Biography:

First name: Magda Surname: El-Nowieemy Nationality: Egyptian Affiliation: University of Alexandria, Faculty of Arts Department: Archaeology & Graeco-Roman Studies Position: Professor of Latin Literature Academic Activities: Participated in 77 Congresses and Symposia in Egypt, France, Italy, Greece, Hong Kong, South Korea, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, and United Emirates. A visiting Professor to Centre Louis Gernet in Paris, in June-July 2000. Research: Author of 47 papers on Latin literature, and Roman literary culture. Awards: Awarded in 2000, the First Aeneas Prize in Latin literature, by the Italian Cultural Institute in Cairo. Awarded in 2011, the Alexandria University Award for Academic Distinction.

THEATRE ET PERFORMANCE / THEATER AND PERFORMANCES

AGUSTÍN CUZZANI'S SHAKESPEAREAN GHOSTS: TRANSLATION, TRANSFORMATION

V. Rafaelli

Universidad Nacional de La Plata (Nacional University of La Plata)

Abstract: The Argentine playwright Agustin Cuzzani (Buenos Aires, 1924-Cordoba, 1987) initiated in 1954 a very personal dramatic path which would eventually flourish into a new genre: the farsatira [farsatire], a fusion of farce and satire, specially applied to his own theatrical works. Already in germ in his first play, Dalilah (1952), the farsatira reaches astonishing heights in Una libra de carne [A Pound of Flesh] (1954), El centroforward murio al amanecer [The Centre Forward Died at Dawn] (1955), Los indios estaban cabreros [The Indians Were Annoyed] (1958), Sempronio (1962), Para que se cumplan las escrituras [In Order to Observe the Scriptures] (1965), Pitagoras, go home (1984) and Lo cortés no quita lo caliente [Polite, But No Less Furious] (1985), and established him as an active and successful cornerstone of the Independent Theatre artistic-cultural movement in Argentina in the second half of the 20th century. His profound, defining belief in the theatre as a way to explore the conflicts of a class-divided society, and as the most effective means to posit the problems of human advancement were fully in accordance with the postulates of Independent Theatre; Cuzzani's dramatic works are fiercely ideological, and adherent to the principles of Socialist Realism and Brechtian drama. Dramatic distance, metatheatre, and explicit intertextuality are some of the characteristic resources by which Cuzzani draws the audience's attention to a social reality which he purposes to transform, with the process of awareness itself as a pivotal point.

Cuzzani's richest, most rewarding use of intertextuality and translative intervention occurs in his seminal second play Una libra de carne. Here, the playwright addresses that most canonical of authors, Shakespeare himself, and breathes new life into the Shakespearean creation by means of a stunning 'farsatirical' transformation of the Bard's characters into well-known Argentine societal types, who interact to build a dramatic situation conducive to denouncing the oppression of the economic and sociocultural powers. The hypotext is deceptively varied: the very title directs the spectator and reader to consider the immediately clear transformation of the core conflict in The Merchant of Venice; a closer reading, however, allows in addition the identification of other familiar characters and situations --Polonius, Lady Macbeth, the Castle Porter; the criminal Mousetrap mise en abyme... The transformational operations are entirely successful, and the translative operations --overt, domesticating and adaptive-- blend seamlessly in the creative process to beget a richly meaningful work of dramatic art which has enjoyed lasting renown in Argentine theatre.

Biography: Veronica Rafaelli graduated as a Chartered Translator in English at the National University of La Plata, where she presently works as assistant teacher for practical lessons at Literary Translation 1, in the Translation in English course. She is currently working on a master's degree in comparative literature at the same university, aiming at specialising in English-Spanish literary translation. She also works as an EFL teacher in the private education system.

OVERSEAS TRANSMISSION AND RECEPTION OF JAPANESE PERFORMING ARTS: YONE NOGUCHI'S TRANSLATION OF NOH AND KYOGEN

M. Hori

International Research Center for Japanese Studies

Abstract: How did Japanese Performing Art transmit to the West and was accepted there in the transitional period of the 20th century? The aim of my research is to illuminate this period with validating the factual evidence of cultural exchange and humanistic network around Yone Noguchi. The interest toward Japanese Performing Art was taken hold by the Western intellectuals who created their respect in 'Symbolism,' 'Mysticism,' 'Orientalism,' and then geared up the artistic movement of Modernism, which was inextricably linked with 'Greek,' 'Classicism,' 'the movement of returning to tradition.' Through the investigation of the intellectual relationship and cultural human network between Japanese and English-speaking-sphere, I will interpret the status quo of the mutual interaction of the modern performing art and carve out a frame of reference of cross-cultural history of the 20th century. As for the Western reception of Japanese Performing art, such as Noh and kabuki, several investigations have been developed until today. However, established research is attracted the attention of how Western intellectual understood 'Japan' and how they translated each piece of production. There is not much researches which addresses how Japanese culture had sent out signals from the Japanese side as the transmission. For example, few people has been interested in the activity of Yone Noguchi, who translated Noh play and

Friday, July 19, 2013

Kyogen into English since 1904, and transmitted its idea and style, as an authentic Japanese-poet. It is fair to say that the research topic regarding the 'transmission', 'reception' of arts and culture is quite enormous, multitudinous, and ambiguous. However, it might be possible to streamline this research, when I approach from the vision of 'Border-crossing Self'; centering on a certain specific personage. My presentation will basically show this approach and propose a draft of this research theme. How can I address the theme of ambiguity in order to get some beneficial effects? I would like to receive various suggestions and teaching instructions for my future studies.

Biography: EDUCATION 2001 M.A. Japanese Literature, Japan Women's University, Tokyo. 2002 M.A. Comparative Literature, University of London: SOAS, London. 2009 Ph.D. Graduate University for Advanced Studies: School of Cultural and Social Studies, Department of Japanese Studies, Kyoto. Dissertation title; "Yone Noguchi: His Life and Work as a Writer of Dual Nationality". PRESENT STATUS Research Fellow, International Research Centre for Japanese Studies. PUBLICATIONS: Books 1) Yone Noguchi: A Writer of Dual Nationality (Nagoya University Press, Nagoya, 2012Feb.) Chapters in Books 2) "Ichizo Kobayashi: The Modernization of 'Kabuki' and its overseas operations" in Suzuki Sadami (ed.) Japan To-day: Bungei-shunju's European Language War-time Propaganda, (Sakuhinsha, Tokyo, 2011Mar.) 3) "Yone Noguchi's Poetics as a Writer of Dual Nationality" in Inaga Shigemi (ed.) Artistic Vagabondage and New Utopian Projects, (International Research Center, Kyoto, 2011Mar.) 4) "The status quo of English Education in Japan during the Meiji 20s" in Asaoka Kunio and Suzuki Sadami (eds.) A Study of 'The Rental Library' (Sinshiki-Kashihonya), (Sakuhinsha, Tokyo, 2010Nov.) 5) "Has Yone Noguchi been unwise patronage for Hearn?" in Hiraoka Sukehiro and Makino Yoko (eds.), Lafcadio Hearn, the person and circumference, (Shinyosha, Tokyo, 2009Aug.) 6) "Is Matsuo Basho an ultimate 'Symbolist'? Yone Noguchi as an opener of a Pandora's box" in Suzuki Sadami and Iwai Shigeki (eds.) Wabi Sabi Yugen; Transitional Process toward 'Japanese-ness', (Suiseisha, Tokyo, 2006Nov.)

TRANSLATION, CENSORSHIP AND THEATRE SERIES IN PORTUGAL (1950S-70S): THE CASE OF CONTRAPONTO PUBLISHER

M. Carvalho

Faculdade de Letras da Universidade de Lisboa

Abstract: Translation has been a means of renewing theatre repertoires, by importing foreign models and different artistic languages, especially in peripheral cultures and in dictatorial regimes. For different reasons, past and present, Portuguese stage productions and theatre repertoires were and still are dominated by foreign models and translated plays. During the period of the Estado Novo, translation often served as a means to subvert censorship, both the self-censorship adopted as a means of obtaining a license for performance or publication, and as a strategy to introduce innovative artistic practices or themes that otherwise would be forbidden. Theatre translators are cultural mediators and promoters, negotiating meaning between cultures, as scholarship in the area has proven (Bassnett 1998, Aaltonen 2000). This paper will analyse a theatre series from the 1950s-70s, called "Teatro no Bolso" published by Contraponto publisher and edited by Luiz Pacheco, and will look at the context of this editorial practice and theatre performance at the time. During this period, it was common the association between small publishers and experimental theatre companies, which had an important role in disseminating ideological theatrical texts, vanguard and successful works that were being produced all over the world. Often, the publication of translations, especially within series of small publishing houses, was linked to a theatre company, mostly the so-called theatre circles and university theatre groups. The editors of these collections were also translators, and often academics and/or playwrights and theatre practitioners. This group of intellectuals looked to writers and artists abroad for inspiration. At the same time, they were creating new opportunities for autochthonous creation. Since the source cultures were located outside the Portuguese context, theatre would be seen as an alternative cultural sphere, something far from the national reality and therefore more acceptable in the eyes of the censors. It will be important to understand the balance and relationship between original and translated texts, the editorial motivation behind the selection of these texts, the translators chosen for the enterprise (either a theatre professional or a professional translator), since they are indicative of the editor's purpose and target context (Zurbach, 2007). Most of these series were published in paperback, cheap, intended for a broad readership. Some were also performed. No other period in the history of Portuguese theatre has seen such rich translation activity for stage and page. By looking at this particular series, the selected playtexts, translators, translating strategies and disseminating routes, this paper intends to draw some conclusions on of this series in particular, and this practice in general, in the theatrical and cultural context at the time and their role in addressing political problems, directly or not.

Biography: Manuela Carvalho is Research Fellow in Comparative Studies at the Centre for Comparative Studies, University of Lisbon. Her research and teaching interests lie mainly in the field of theatre and interarts studies. She was the principal investigator of a funded research project in the area of theatre translation "TETRA (Theatre and Translation):

Towards a History of Theatre Translation in Portugal". She is the co-editor of two books on theatre translation published in Portugal and author of articles in the area.

WHEN THEATER, TRANSLATION AND POLITICS MERGE: A STUDY OF EARLY TRANSLATIONS OF EUROPEAN PLAYS IN IRAN

B. Mirzababazadeh Fomeshi, A. Khojastehpour
Shiraz University

Abstract: Of the significant tasks in comparative literature's turn to translation studies is to examine the ways translation stands as a creative, critical, and also political act. This article focuses on the political intentions behind the translation of European play texts into Persian which led to the entrance of western drama in Iran during the final years of Qajar dynasty and during the Iranian Constitutional Revolution (1905-1911). Beginning with the last years of Qajar dynasty, both the Iranian intellectuals and the Iranian government were attracted in the European theater. It was at that time that theater came to be known and recognized by Iranian intellectuals as an important political medium. Theater consisted dialogue, an element of democracy and civilization, and this was in line with Iranian intellectuals' progressive aims. In a newspaper published during the Constitutional Revolution entitled Theater, drama, schools and newspapers are mentioned as three principles for progress and civilization. The translators/politicians/intellectuals chose mainly the French playwright Molière to be translated as they saw his plays more congruent with Iranians' conditions of the time and also as they found Molière's comedies proper means to express their own critical views. Focusing on the above points, the present paper explores the ways translating dramatic works influenced the development of progressive political views of the time.

Biography: Adineh Khojastehpour is a Ph. D. candidate at Shiraz University. She is interested in comparative literature and interdisciplinary studies. She got her M.A. from University of Tehran. She has published several articles in national and international journals. Behnam Mirzababazadeh Fomeshi is a Ph. D. candidate at Shiraz University. His research interests include interdisciplinary studies and comparative literature. His works have been published in Comparative Literature Journal of the Academy of Persian Language and Literature and Literary Criticism Quarterly. He has been a frequent lecturer in different national and international conferences and for the time being he is teaching at Shiraz University. He published a book, Ralph Waldo Emerson and Sohrab Sepehri in 2012.

S1 LANGUE(S) ET IDENTITE(S) / LANGUAGE(S) AND IDENTITY(IES)

POLITIQUES ETHNOCENTRIQUES ET ECRITURES PLURILINGUES EN ALLEMAGNE VERS 1900

D. Weissmann

Université Paris-Est Créteil

Abstract: Stefan George, le plurilinguisme à l'épreuve de la renaissance nationale

En 1897, Stefan George prépare à Berlin et Paris la publication de son recueil "Das Jahr der Seele" qui paraîtra à l'automne de la même année et dont certains poèmes ont été rédigés d'abord en français. Le jeune poète s'apprête alors à révolutionner la littérature de langue allemande ; et le paradoxe veut qu'il le fait en passant par une intense « épreuve de l'étranger » : non seulement en traduisant des textes étrangers, ce que tous ses grands aînés ont fait, mais en écrivant directement en langue étrangère. Tout se passe comme si son ressourcement de la langue littéraire allemande ne pouvait se réaliser que moyennant le détour par l'écriture en langue étrangère : à côté du français, George a également utilisé l'anglais et des langues inventées telles que sa lingua romana.

Cependant, 1897 c'est aussi le début de la politique pangermanique menée par l'Empire wilhelmienne, l'année du célèbre discours du prince Von Bülow, secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères, réclamant « une place au soleil » pour l'Allemagne et inaugurant une politique agressive de conquête coloniale. Difficile de trouver deux états d'esprit plus éloignés que la recherche d'altérité extrême menée par George, d'une part, et l'ethnocentrisme belliqueux pratiqué à la même époque par les hommes politiques, d'autre part. Xénophonie et xénophobie, deux attitudes qui semblent coexister dans le monde germanique de cette année 1897.

Or, George, après avoir accompli, à partir du milieu des années 1900, son « tournant patriotique », finira par rejoindre le nouvel élan nationaliste inauguré par la politique impérialiste de Guillaume II, jusqu'à cultiver une relation plus qu'ambiguë avec l'idéologie nazie montante.

Notre communication se propose de retracer la genèse du plurilinguisme de George, en relation avec son travail de traducteur, jusqu'à la disparition des langues étrangères dans l'œuvre de la maturité. Ainsi nous mettrons en évidence tout ce que la modernité du jeune George doit à ses expériences exophones, après quoi son écriture deviendra beaucoup plus traditionaliste. Somme toute, il s'agit de présenter l'exophonie comme partie intégrante du renouveau poétique dans la littérature allemande de la Fin de siècle, ce que confirment également les cas de Wedekind et de Rilke.

Biography: Dirk WEISSMANN

Maître de conférences (langue et littérature allemandes) à l'Université Paris-Est Créteil Membre de l'Institut des Mondes anglophone, germanique et roman (IMAGER), EA 3958, Université Paris-Est PARCOURS PROFESSIONNEL - Maître de conférences à l'Université Paris-Est Créteil (depuis 2006) - ATER, Université Paris-Est Créteil (2004-2006) - ATER, Université de Reims, Champagne-Ardenne (2003-2004) - Lecteur de langue, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-Denis (2002-2003) - Allocataire de recherche, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-Denis (1999-2002) AUTRES ACTIVITES PROFESIONNELLES - Membre du jury d'allemand du concours d'entrée aux Grandes Ecoles Commerciales (Banque d'épreuves BCE) (depuis 2005) - Chargé d'enseignement à HEC, Paris (2004-2010) - Chargé de cours, Université Paris-8, Vincennes-Saint-Denis (2001-2002) - Chargé d'enseignement à la Maison Heinrich-Heine, Fondation de l'Allemagne, CIUP, Paris (2000-2002) ETUDES, DIPLOMES, TITRES - Docteur en études germaniques (2003) - Agrégation externe d'allemand (2000) - DEA « Cultures, identités et territoires des pays de langue allemande contemporains » (Université de Paris-8, Vincennes—Saint-Denis, 1999) - Maîtrise de Lettres modernes mention littérature générale et comparée (Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris-3, 1998) - Licence de Lettres modernes mention littérature générale et comparée (Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris-3, 1997) - Études de Littérature générale et comparée, études germaniques et philosophie à Mayence, Lausanne et Paris. RESPONSABILITES ET MANDATS ELECTIFS EN COURS - Membre élu (suppléant) de la 12^e section du Conseil National des Universités (depuis 2011) ; participation active aux travaux de la session 2012 - Membre élu du conseil de l'UFR Lettres, langues, sciences humaines (depuis 2010) ; membre de la commission de pédagogie (depuis 2010) ACTIVITES DE RECHERCHE Axes de recherche - Littérature de langue allemande (XIX^e-XXI^e) : interprétation et réception - Interculturalité et multilinguisme dans la littérature - Transferts culturels franco-allemands (XIX^e-XXI^e siècles) - Traduction ; traductologie ; didactique de la traduction Recherche actuelle Auto-traduction et plurilinguisme littéraires dans le champ franco-allemand

JOSE LUANDINO VIEIRA TRADUCTEUR DE LUANDINO VIEIRA

M.A. Carriço Vieira

Centro de Formação de Professores Tomar

Abstract: La quête identitaire, aussi bien d'individus que de communautés, est intimement liée aux choix linguistiques des auteurs. La langue se constitue comme un puissant facteur d'identité dans la mesure où elle est porteuse d'un héritage, partie intégrale d'une tradition, patrimoine culturel d'une communauté. En contexte postcolonial, l'option pour une langue, celle apportée par le colonisateur ou bien celle des groupes locaux, est une dimension importante de l'écriture de la postcolonialité, puisque l'auteur se voit obligé de penser la question de la langue, de décider en quelle langue il veut raconter son histoire. Entre le refus de la norme de la langue impériale ou son contraire, une multiplicité d'attitudes est possible.

Choisir d'écrire en une langue est donc une option qui s'inscrit inévitablement dans une dimension idéologique et politique qui reflètent des jeux de pouvoir que nous observerons au long de cette communication, notamment les enjeux qui découlent de la pratique de l'auto-translation. Pour cela, nous partirons de la lecture de l'œuvre de l'écrivain angolais José Luandino Vieira.

Biography: BUESCU, Helena Carvalhão, DUARTE, João Ferreira (2007) "Communicating voices: Helberto Helder's experiments in cross-cultural poetry", in Modern Language Studies, Vol. 43 n° 2, pp. 173-186.

CARBONELL, Ovidio (2008) "O espaço exótico da tradução cultural" in João Ferreira Duarte (org.), A Cultura entre Tradução e Etnografia, Lisboa: Nova Vega, pp. 57-78.

CARDOSO, Boaventura (1994) "La littérature angolaise sous le signe de l'espoir" in Notre Librairie n°115, Paris: CLEF, pp. 4-5.

DINGWANEY, Anuradha (2008) "A tradução de culturas do 'Terceiro Mundo'" in João Ferreira Duarte (org.), A Cultura entre Tradução e Etnografia, Lisboa: Nova Vega, pp. 119-130.

DUARTE, João Ferreira (org.) (2008) A Cultura entre Tradução e Etnografia, Lisboa: Nova Vega.

MATA, Inocência (2003) "A condição pós-colonial das literaturas africanas de língua portuguesa: algumas diferenças e convergências e muitos lugares-comuns" in Ângela Vaz Leão (org.) Contatos e Ressonâncias – Literaturas Africanas de Língua Portuguesa, Editora Pucminas, pp. 43-72.

MOURA, Jean-Marc (1999) Littératures francophones et théorie postcoloniale, Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.

_____(2000) "La critique postcoloniale, étude des spécificités" in Africultures, n°28, Mai, Paris: L'Harmattan, pp.14-22.

RUSHDIE, Salman (1992) Imaginary Homelands: Essays and Criticism 1981-91, London: Granta Books in Association with Penguin Books.

VIEIRA, José Luandino (1985) Nós, os do Makulusu, Lisboa: Edições 70 (1ª edição: 1975).

_____(2006) De Rios Velhos e Guerreiros. O Livro dos Rios, Lisboa: Caminho.

Wa THIONG'O, Ngugi (1987) Decolonising the Mind. The Politics of Language in African Literature, London: James Currey.

_____(2009) "Translated by the author: My life between languages" in Translation Studies, 2: 1, pp. 17-20.

WHITE, Hayden (1985) Tropics of Discourse: essays in cultural criticism, Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press.

_____(1992) The Context of the Form. Narrative Discourse and Historical Representation, Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press.

WOLF, Michaela (2002) "Culture as translation – and beyond ethnographic models of representation in translation" studies”, in Crosscultural Transgressions, Theo Hermans (ed.). Manchester: St. Jerome Publishing, pp. 180-192.

DE L'UTILITE DE CONNAÎTRE L'ESPAGNE ET L'ESPAGNOL POUR COMMENTER CERTAINES FICTIONS FRANCAISES : MICROLECTURE D'UN FRAGMENT DE CARMEN (1845)

F. Géal

Ecole Normale Supérieure

Abstract: Paul Van Tieghem définissait la littérature comparée comme l'étude de la part de l'étranger dans une oeuvre. Or, dans toute sa production, faisant en partie sienne l'affirmation romantique d'une relativité hisporique et géographique, Mérimée privilégie les espaces étrangers dans l'espace ou dans le temps. Chez lui, l'Espagne, ou plutôt l'hispanité, occupe un pôle d'attraction et d'exploration fondamental du début à la fin de sa trajectoire, largement sous-estimé par la plupart des spécialistes.

En marge de la préparation d'une nouvelle édition de Carmen (1845) dans le cadre des Oeuvres complètes de Mérimée publiées chez Champion, je voudrais montrer à partir d'un exemple (le début du chapitre III) comment cet écrivain qui, de tous ceux de sa génération, était le meilleur connaisseur de l'Espagne et de sa langue, mobilise avec acuité, au coeur de sa célèbre nouvelle, tout un savoir qu'il importe au commentateur de repérer et de mettre en évidence.

Biography: François Géal 32 rue du Javelot

75013 Paris

Tél : 01 56 61 28 93

geal.francois@neuf.fr Maître de conférences en espagnol Ecole Normale Supérieure 45 rue d'Ulm, 75005 Paris francois.geal@ens.fr Études : - Bac C (1982). - Concours d'entrée à l'Ecole Normale Supérieure (A/L) (1985) : rang 1^{er}. - Agrégation d'espagnol (1988) : rang 1^{er}. - Doctorat nouveau régime (Université Paris III-Sorbonne Nouvelle, dir. Augustin Redondo, 1994) : Figures de la bibliothèque dans l'imaginaire espagnol du Siècle d'or. - Habilitation à diriger des recherches en littérature générale et comparée (Université Paris IV- Sorbonne, sous la responsabilité de Pierre Brunel, 2011) : Quand Érudition et Fiction se rencontrent : domaine hispano-français (XVI^e-XX^e siècles). Expérience professionnelle : - Assistant moniteur normalien en espagnol à l'Université Paris III (1991-1993). - Agrégé-répétiteur à l'ENS (1993-1999). - Maître de conférences à l'ENS depuis 1999 (HC, 5^e échelon à compter du 1^{er} septembre 2011). - Directeur des études du Département Littérature et langages à l'ENS (2006-2007). - Responsable de l'accueil des étudiants étrangers au Département Littérature et langages depuis 2007. - Vice-président du jury de la Sélection Internationale à l'ENS depuis 2009. Activités de recherche : Les principaux groupes de recherche auxquels j'ai appartenu ont été jusqu'ici : - Le CRES (Centre de Recherche sur l'Espagne du Siècle d'Or), rattaché à l'Université Paris III-Sorbonne Nouvelle. - Le séminaire Mérimée, dirigé par Antonia Fonyi (CNRS), dans le cadre de l'Ecole doctorale de Littérature française et comparée de l'Université Paris III-Sorbonne Nouvelle. - Le CRLC (Centre de Recherche en Littérature comparée) dirigé par Jean-Yves Masson à l'Université Paris-IV Sorbonne, auquel je suis désormais officiellement rattaché. Je suis en outre membre de la SHF (Société des Hispanistes Français), de la Société Mérimée, du comité de rédaction des Cahiers Mérimée, de la SFLGC (Société Française de Littérature Générale et Comparée), et de l'ATLF (Association des Traducteurs Littéraires de France). Intérêts particuliers : -photo-collages, piano, écriture, cinéma, tennis, ski.

S2 LES RELATIONS ORIENT/OCCIDENT / EAST-WEST RELATIONSHIPS

LA QUÊTE DE L'AMOUR EN LITTÉRATURE: ENTRE L'OCCIDENT ET L'ORIENT

Z.T. Valtcheva, J. Dutta
Université de Lisbonne

Abstract: « Toutes les familles heureuses se ressemblent mais les familles malheureuses le sont chacune à leur façon. »
(Léon Tolstoï, Anna Karénine)

Cette phrase qui sert d'incipit au roman de Tolstoï joui dernièrement d'un succès curieux. Deux exemples : Muriel Barbery s'y réfère pour nouer une partie de l'intrigue de son roman « L'élégance du hérisson » (Gallimard, 2006). Loin de nos terres, au Japon, le personnage féminin dans « Sommeil » de Haruki Murakami (Belfond, 2010) relit le roman de Tolstoï dans la nostalgie d'un temps révolu. D'où vient-il l'intérêt pour cette réflexion d'un des classiques de la littérature?

Nous voudrions interpréter cet intérêt comme le signe d'un questionnement inquiétant : comment penser l'amour conjugal mais avant tout l'amour dans le monde moderne où tant de valeurs ont perdu leur fonction rassurante et tant d'autres sont en émergence ? Entre devoir reproducteur et sexualité déchaînée est-il encore possible d'aimer d'amour ?

Nous nous proposons donc de réfléchir sur l'amour, un des universaux qui a toujours inspiré la fiction littéraire. Adoptant une vision globalisante, un parallèle sera amorcé entre les modèles occidentaux de l'amour, basés sur la relation éros/agapè et les modèles orientaux, concrètement ceux de la culture indienne, où le désir entre l'homme et la femme, rati, « n'est pas considéré comme différent de la relation entre l'homme et son dieu » (Kalil Kapur). Au centre de toutes nos histoires d'amour se trouve le vieux topos de la quête de l'amour et celui de la mort. Mais dans la tradition occidentale la quête de l'amour/bonheur est associée à l'affirmation du « moi », au drame de la passion et à l'angoisse du péché. En ce qui concerne la culture indienne, la vie est pensée dans sa totalité, englobant les aspects spirituels et corporels de la nature humaine par une dynamique ascendante. Dans cette vision totalisante, l'homme et la nature participent du divin, tous les deux étant engendrés par la même énergie cosmique, shakti. L'amour entre les humains, rati, ne s'oppose pas à bhakti, adoration, dévotion, renoncement de soi.

Ainsi, ce croisement de regards culturels par delà les frontières pourra-t-il suggérer une piste de réflexion sur le malaise de penser et d'écrire la relation amoureuse moderne et l'amour conjugal.

Navigant donc entre Occident et Orient, nous essayerons d'esquisser une géographie imaginaire de l'amour où Mme de Clève, Anna Karénine, Emma Bovary, mais aussi Chîrîn, Radha, Mirabaï, Bimola, figures littéraires de l'amour au féminin, puissent se croiser et se re-découvrir, semblables, différentes ou même in-différentes, dans leur quête de l'amour/bonheur.

Biography: I. Personal data

Name: Zlatka Nikolova Timenova-Valtcheva

Email: ztimenova@netcabo.pt

II. Academic studies and diplomas

2008 Obtained the Doctor degree of Modern Languages and Literatures from the University of Coimbra, with the thesis subject: "Le silence littéraire et ses formes dans l'œuvre romanesque de Marguerite Duras".

1979 Obtained the Academic Degree Docteur-ès-Lettres from the University of Sofia, with the thesis subject: «La métaphore dans Les Pensées de Blaise Pascal».

1974 Obtained the Master of Philological Sciences Degree (French Language and Literature) from the University of Sofia.

III. Proficiency in Languages

Bulgarian: native proficiency

French: near native proficiency

Portuguese: fluency in writing and speaking.

English: fluency in writing and speaking

Russian: fluency in reading and listening

IV. Professional Career

2001 Professor Auxiliar (Assistant Professor) of French language and Literature and Translation in the Universidade Lusófona de Lisboa, Portugal, full time contract.

2006 Lecturer of Bulgarian language and Culture in the New University of Lisbon.

2010 Lecturer of Bulgarian language and Culture in the University of Lisbon.

V. Other Professional Activities

2011 Lectures at the University of Cádiz, Departamento de Filología Francesa e Inglesa:

November, 31: La traduction du texte journalistique

December, 1: Censure et Traduction

2008 – 2009 Collaborated to the International Master of Conference Interpretation in FLUL, Lisbon University.

2008 Participated as a translator in the Workshop of Collective Translation of Live Poetry (Boyko Lambovsky, Gueorgui Konstantinoff), "Casa de Mateus", Vila Real, Portugal.

Reviewer of Scientific Journals International, section Languages and Literatures.

VI. Research interests

Text analysis, Theory of literature, Translation theory, Cultural studies.

VII. Affiliation

Researcher in CLEPUL (Centro de Literaturas e Culturas Lusófonas e Europeias da Faculdade de Letras da Universidade de Lisboa)

Member of ICLA (International Comparative Literature Association)

Founding member of CompaRes (Iberian-Slavonic association of comparative studies)

VIII. Relevant Publications

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2011), Ancient Bulgarian Language: between myth and reality, International conference Europe of Nations, University of Aveiro, Portugal, May, 9-11, accepted for print.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2009), Les silences du dialogue romanesque dans Moderato Cantabile de Marguerite Duras, in Verbum-Analecta Neolatina, XI/2009, pp.97-110.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2009/2010), Silence et langue, in Pragmalinguistica, Universidad de Cadiz, pp.154-163.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2007), Le traditionnel et le moderne dans "Un roman naturel" de Gueorgui Gospodinov, Colloque International : Tradition et Modernité, Académie des sciences de Bulgarie, Sofia, 2004. Actes du colloque, Sofia, Arras, pp.68-77.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2007), António Ramos Rosa in Bulgarian: (un)successful encounter. Edit. CompaRes, Lisbon, pp. 231-238.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva, (2007), Les silences imparfaits de la censure: Germinal d'Emile Zola en portugais, Colloque international Censure et Traduction, Université d'Artois, en Arras, 6/7/8 juin. Actes du colloque, 2011, ISBN 978-2-84832-126-4, pp. 217-227.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva, Maya Timenova (2006), Le silence des limites dans la littérature. Deux exemples : Michel de Montaigne et Marguerite Duras. Babilónia, n°4, pp. 111-122.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva, Maria Paula Lourinho (2005), De la traduction littéraire: «Le ravissement de Lol V. Stein» de Marguerite Duras traduit en portugais. Babilónia n° 2/3, pp.147-157.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2004), A viagem das palavras, Interculturalidades, Edit. Univ. Lusófonas, col. Babilónia, pp.277-288.

Zlatka Timenova-Valtcheva (2009), « L'intellectuel, un éternel dissident : une relecture de Pentcho Slaveykov».in L'oublié et l'interdit, textes réunis par Roumiana Stantcheva et Alain Vuillemin. Editions Rafael de Surtis, ISBN : 978-2-84672-159-2, pp.201-210.

IX. Translations

From French to Bulgarian

Marguerite Duras, Le ravissement de Lol V. Stein, suivi de L'amour. Plovdiv : ed. Lettera, 2009.

J. Derrida, Linguistique et grammatologie. In Idées en culturologie, T.II . Sofia : Editions Universitaires "St. Clément d'Ohrida", 1993.

E. Moren, "De la culturanalyse à la politique culturelle". In Idées en culturologie, T.II : Sofia : Editions Universitaires "St. Clément d'Ohrida », 1993.

Marcel Mauss, Eléments et formes de la civilisation (extrait). In Idées en culturologie. T.1. Sofia : Editions Universitaires "St. Clément d'Ohrida", 1990.

J. Derrida, Une idée de Flaubert: "La lettre de Platon". In Bulletin de l'Union des écrivains bulgares, n° 2, 1990.

Gueza Rohaim, Sublimation et culture (extrait). In Idées en culturologie, T.I. Sofia : Editions Universitaires "St. Clément d'Ohrida", 1990.

Marguerite Duras, Hirochima mon amour. Plovdiv : « Hr.G.Danov », 1985.

Jacques Chessex, L'ogre, Plovdiv : « Hr.G.Danov », 1981

From French to Portuguese

Louis Not, L'enseignement répondant. Lisboa: « Instituto J. Piaget», col. « Horizontes Pedagógicos», ISBN: 972-8329-45-8, 1998.

From Portuguese to Bulgarian

Eugénio de Andrade, Anna Haterly, Sofia de Melo Bryner Andressen, Poesia. In Electronic review Literaturesn sviat, <http://litteraturesviat.com>, 2012.

Francisco José Magalhães, Diálogos á margem do Tejo. Sofia: "Kralitsa Mab", 2008.

Rui Zink, Pequenas narrativas. Sofia: Leteratura, n.º17, 1997.

From Bulgarian to Portuguese

Gueorgui Gospodinov, Liubovniat zaek, antologia. Lisboa: Roma editora, 2011.

Zahary Karabachliev, Lissabon. Encontros de Novas dramaturgias contemporâneas, Leituras performativas, 2011.

Boris Hristov, Nochten trompet, Samotniat chovek, Svatbata na mama, Lisboa: Tabacaria, n.º6, 1998.r

EAST/WEST DIALOGUE AND THE BIRTH OF MODERNISM IN EGYPT IN TAHTAWI, AWAD, AND HAKIM

N.H. Abou-Agag

Faculty of Arts -University of Alexandria

Abstract: The present paper proposes to investigate three Egyptian texts written in Arabic that came as the direct result of immediate contact with the West. These are Rifa'a al-Tahtawi's A Paris Profile, written during Tahtawi's stay in France, Louis Awad's Memoirs of a Student on a Scholarship, written in 1942 while he was doing his MA in Literature at Cambridge University and published only in 1965, and Tawfiq al-Hakim's A Sparrow from the East written in 1938 after his return from his three year stay in France. The three texts will be seen within the framework of Edward Said's Orientalism, aiming to show how the Arab is viewed by the West and how the Arab, in return, views the West. Instead of a confrontation, the three texts suggest the possibility of a dialogue, enriching the attempt at bringing about Modernism in Egypt which was inaugurated by Mohamed Ali in the first half of the twentieth century.

Biography: Naglaa Abou-Agag is an associate professor at Alexandria University and was on secondment at Beirut Arab University from 2006 to 2010. She obtained her PhD from the University of Alexandria in 2003 and has since written on Tom Stoppard, Yussef Idris, Tony Harrison, Ahmed Etman, D.J. Enright, Edouar Kharrat, Caryl Churchill, and Nuruddin Farah. Her research interests include comparative drama, postcolonial theory, and Postmodernist literature. She also translated Shakespeare's Modernity by Ismail Serageldin into Arabic (2002) and a number of short stories and poems into Arabic and into English.

IN SEARCH OF NEW FORMS OF AESTHETICS ACROSS TWO LANGUAGES: AHDAF SOUEIF'S CAIRO: MY CITY, OUR REVOLUTION AND RADWA ASHOUR'S AL-TANTOURIYA

A. Šindelářová

Charles University

Abstract: I wish to present the project of my dissertation thesis entitled The image of the West in the literary works of Ahdaf Soueif and Radwa Ashour. The comparison of these two Egyptian women authors is very interesting as their lives are closely intertwined with English language and literature. While Soueif, based in London, employs English as the means of her literary expression, Ashour, professor of English literature in Cairo, writes in Arabic. English therefore becomes the link connecting both authors, and, at the same time, a distinction separating their creative views of the world. Ahdaf Soueif and Radwa Ashour represent strong contemporary female, one can easily say feminist, voices from Egypt in whose narratives politics, global relations and transnational encounters play a crucial role in forming the lives of their protagonists, their search for identity and their own place in the world. I will investigate how the two authors approach the task of bridging two cultures, the Arab and the Anglo-Saxon, by means of two languages and two vastly different modes of thinking. I probe into their individual experience with the encounter of the West and how their use of the different language media influences their accounts of it. The image of the West is a significant theme of modern Arabic literature, and particularly of modern Arabic women's literature. Narrative texts of Arab women are highly individualised and intimate testimonies delineating their relationship to the West, its culture, society and thinking. Specific poetics and implication of problems of cross-cultural encounters are the essence of these texts and autobiographical approach to the illustrated reality in their native and Western countries is often applied. This fact is perfectly true of both Soueif's and Ashour's books. I would like to concentrate on the most recent writings of Soueif and Ashour and unravel their ways of coping with the complicated political and social realities of Egypt and the Arab world in general before and during the revolutionary events of 2011. Both Soueif and Ashour employ autobiography as the form of their account which seems to be the most appropriate to cope with the complicated position they face as contemporary Arab women writers. Soueif's new book, Cairo: My City, Our Revolution, was published at the end of 2011 and it weaves personal memories of growing up in Cairo with a powerful testimony of the extraordinary events of the past year. She openly confesses her love of her native city which she left to live abroad, in the West, and to which she now humbly returns to fight for freedom of her beloved nation and country, to fight against injustice, violence and terror perpetrated by Mubarak's regime and the militarization of Egypt in the aftermath of the public uprising. She celebrates the courage and resilience of the people and the youth of Egypt in a highly personal account of the revolutionary days, combining forms of a diary, subjective essays, journalistic entries and commentaries, emotive ponderings on the nature of the Egyptian ordinary people and other forms of literary expression. This postmodern text reflects the attempt to portray the complexity of the Arab world on its path towards freedom and emancipation from its leaders – dictators. Ahdaf Soueif has become a master of a highly playful and imaginative Arabised version of English. However, this text reveals Soueif's search for her roots and her own Arabic/Egyptian voice as she has begun to write a weekly column to an Egyptian newspaper. Therefore I will try to answer the question whether English can become a more subversive and critical tool for an Arab author vis-à-vis the oppressive Egyptian regime, the West and its colonial tradition than her mother tongue. On the other hand, Radwa Ashour draws on Arabic literary tradition and expresses her leftist and openly Marxist stance and her lifelong commitment to fight for truth, justice and the Palestinian cause in Arabic. Married to the famous Palestinian poet Mourid al-Barghouti, she has always been touching upon the 1948 Palestinian catastrophe, al-nakba, in her numerous literary works. Palestine has been present in almost all of Ashour's novels. Yet it was not until Al-Tantouriya that she wrote about this topic openly. The autobiographical element is a little bit weaker in this novel, but its literary form is all the more complicated. Written as a chronicle, it describes a little town situated close to Haifa, a peaceful and dream-like paradise encircled by gardens and olive trees, which is in a harsh contrast with the political situation of the Palestinian people. The incompatibility of this symbol of the Palestinian dream and the terrible reality and the predicament of the Arab people suffering the oppressive rule of their political leaders and their support in international politics is portrayed by means of a complicated literary style and magical realism. Ashour thus passionately calls for justice and life in truth and peace for all people in the so-called Third World against all forms of oppressive power. My project therefore investigates what the distinctions and similarities are in creating the imaginative world in the novels of the two authors. How do they cope with the power relations inherent in their two respective creative languages? What are their reactions to the revolution in Egypt and the Arab world and how do they portray the events and the social and political changes in their commentaries?

Biography: Alena Šindelárová Address Zborovská 82, 30100 Pilsen, Czech Republic Mobile +420 605 122 231 Email 549894@soas.co.uk, alena95@centrum.cz Research interests Arab women writers, Egyptian literature and Arabic literature in general, Arab writers in diaspora, comparative literature, postcolonial literature and theory, language, culture and construction of identity
Education Oct. 2011-June 2012 School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, Great Britain Visiting Research Student, Faculty of Languages and Cultures, Centre for Cultural, Literary and Postcolonial Studies (CCLPS) – research for PhD project Oct. 2009- Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Charles University in Prague, PhD studies Theory of literature of the Middle East countries and Africa, Egyptian women prose writing - PhD dissertation title: The Image of the West in the Narrative Works of Ahdaf Soueif and Radwa Ashour Nov. 2008 PhD. title - Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Charles University in Prague 1999-2008 Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Charles University in Prague, English and Arabic Studies, MA – MA thesis title: The Aspect of Bilingualism in the Literary Writing of Ahdaf Soueif 1998-2001 University of Western Bohemia, Humanity Studies, B.A. - BA thesis title: Islamic family rituals 1997-1998 Laurel Concord High School, Nebraska, USA 1994-1997 Masaryk Grammar School, Pilsen Presentations and public appearances 10 March 2012 Worldscapes – SOAS Research Student Conference 2012, London, Great Britain - presentation: "The image of the West in Ahdaf Soueif's In the Eye of the Sun and Radwa Ashour's al-Rihla" 29 March 2012 3rd Festival of Arab Culture – Literary Conference, University of Western Bohemia, Pilsen, Czech Republic - presentation: "The phenomenon of hybridity: construction of identity in the writings of Ahdaf Soueif" Publications In writing "The hybrid identity in autobiographies of three Egyptian writers: Leila Ahmed's A Border Passage, Laila Abou Saif's A Bridge Through Time, and Radwa Ashour's al-Rihla" – academic article, expected date of publication – Autumn 2012 In preparation Postkoloniální myšlení II (Postcolonial Thinking II), Prague: Tranzit for publication - translation from English to Czech of 2 chapters: in May 2012 Anwar Malek – "Orientalism in Crisis" Interview with Achille Mbembe 2011 Antologie moderní arabské povídky (An Anthology of Modern Arabic Short Story), Prague: Set Out - translation from Arabic to Czech of 2 short stories by Radwa Ashour 2011 17th International Book Fair and Literary Festival Book World, Prague - translation from Arabic to Czech of an article by Mansoura Ezz ad-Din: "The People Want to Liberate Their Language – The Other Side of the Egyptian Revolution on 25 January" - published in the Fair News 2011 Scholarships and grants 2011-2012 Anglo-Czech Educational Fund – scholarship to study for an academic year in the UK: School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London 2011-2012 Internal Grant of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Charles University -

academic article: The phenomenon of hybrid identity in Arab women writers April-May 2007 American University, Cairo, MA thesis research July 2006 Bourguiba Institute of Modern Languages, Tunis - a month-intensive course of Arabic – advanced level 2004-2005 Cairo University – lectures - Arabic language and literature American University, Cairo – seminar Edward Said and Orientalism led by Dr Ferial Ghazoul Feb.-June 2003 Sheffield University, Great Britain – 1 semester- English literature – Erasmus Languages English – proficient in spoken and written form Arabic – advanced in spoken and written form Egyptian Colloquial Arabic - fluent French – advanced in spoken and written form Spanish – lower intermediate Work experience 2009- Translating and interpreting – English, Arabic - translating written documents, letters, short stories - interpreting for Iraqi businessmen in the Czech Ministry of Trade Oct. 2010-Aug. 2011 Gema Art Group, Prague, International Project Department - project manager - responsible for projects of cultural heritage care and conservation of historical monuments in the Middle East - communication with business partners in English and Arabic - creating project proposals - translating – English, Arabic - responsible for the company's participation in EU projects - searching for new projects and business opportunities 2005-2011 International Festival Theatre in Pilsen – organisation of performances and theatre plays, registration centre of the festival 2009-2010 Nomad, Prague – sales manager of Oriental arts - selling Oriental carpets and handcraft products - communicating with clients in Czech, English and Arabic - creating and editing advertisements March 2010 Conference Preservation and Rehabilitation of Iraqi City Centers, Baghdad, Iraq - conference organisation - translating and interpreting for the Czech group of participants - communicating with Iraqi media 2008 Newsmatique, Prague - referent for Arabic, English and Czech languages - editing and censoring readers' contributions to the web news server www.iraqalaan.com - making reports - communicating with editors in the Czech Republic and journalists in Iraq 2000-2008 Teaching English and Arabic – in language schools Next Level, James Cook Languages; private lessons 1999–2000 Teaching technical English, University of Western Bohemia, Pilsen 1999-2001 International Summer Language School, University of Western Bohemia, Pilsen - receptionist, guide and interpreter

ŌE KENZABURŌ ET ASSIA DJEBAR - L'AUTOFICTION HYBRIDE ENTRE ORIENT ET OCCIDENT

N.C. Fukuzawa

Peter-Szondi-Institut für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft

Abstract: Dans une analyse comparative de l'oeuvre d'Oe Kenzaburo et d'Assia Djebbar, j aimerais me pencher sur la question des strategies narratives de l'autofiction s'articulant autour du contexte culturel marquee par l'hybridite. L'autobiographie litteraire etant issue de la tradition chretienne de la confession, comment ses ecrivains articulent-ils leur subjectivite postcoloniale entre l'Orient et l'Occident ? Comment mettent-ils en scene l'autofiction entre une culture de la dissimulation de l'intimite et une culture de l'exposition de soi ? Par ailleurs, a une epoque ou la mondialisation efface les frontieres, n'est-il pas depasse de parler d'une distinction entre l'Orient et l'Occident ?

L'unique ecrivain japonais porteur du prix Nobel encore en vie, ainsi que la premiere Algerienne acceptee a l'Ecole normale superieure de Paris et aujourd'hui membre de l'Academie francaise, seraient, selon moi, des penseurs originaires de cultures peripheriques qui cependant appartiendraient de nos jours a une elite intellectuelle mondiale. Oe Kenzaburo tout comme Assia Djebbar ont recours aux elements de leurs biographies. Leur litterature se cree grace aux decalages qu'ils creent avec le reel et qui font naitre la fiction. Il s'agit d'autofiction. Dans l'oeuvre d'Oe Kenzaburo Une affaire personnelle (Kojin teki na taiken) ou dans Nulle part dans la maison de mon pere d'Assia Djebbar, l'ecriture est fortement influencee par leurs propres experiences personnelles, fussent-elles pour l'auteur japonais la naissance d'un fils handicape ou chez l'ecrivaine franco-algerienne le souvenir si etrange du chemin de l'ecole d'une petite fille musulmane. De meme, on releve dans ces textes une association entre la narration autobiographique et la narration nationale, une imbrication de l'autobiographie et de l'historiographie algerienne dans L'amour, la fantasia d'Assia Djebbar, ou bien encore une reference a la dimension nationale historique du reve dans Le jeu du siecle (Mannen gannen no futtoboru) d'Oe Kenzaburo.

Des lors, on peut se demander quel role joue l'origine culturelle hybride entre Orient et Occident chez ces ecrivains. La question se pose egalement de savoir s'il existe des points communs aux deux ecrivains quant aux strategies autobiographiques mises en oeuvre dans la fictionalisation de leurs experiences personnelles. Comment la constitution de leur subjectivite postmoderne s'articule-t-elle entre realite et fiction ? Comment la constitution de leur identite s'articule-t-elle entre postcolonialisme et hybridite? Si le sujet est une invention europeenne des temps modernes dont les origines remontent a Saint Augustin puis a Rousseau, en passant par la tradition chretienne de la confession, quelle forme prend donc l'autofiction chez un ecrivain issu de la culture japonaise? En effet, il faut prendre en compte le fait que la langue japonaise connait cinq mots differents pour exprimer le je, le moi, que l'apparition des pronoms personnels dans le langage remonte seulement a la fin du 19eme siecle au moment de l'ouverture du Japon, et que l'ecriture est fortement marquee par la tradition du dévoilement de soi (notamment en ce qui concerne le genre litteraire du shishosetsu). Quelle forme prend donc l'autofiction dans l'oeuvre d'une femme ecrivain de religion musulmane et dont la culture semble éloignée de la réflexion sur soi au regard de la confession ? En outre, Assia Djebar semble être hantée par son conflit intérieur, celui de la contradiction entre son identité de femme musulmane et le non port du voile islamique - or elle a écrit que la langue française jouait le rôle d'un voile pour elle.

Parallèlement, depuis le poststructuralisme, l'Occident se pose la question de savoir si le sujet autonome et éclairé n'est pas en lui-même une illusion européenne créée à l'époque moderne dont le cheminement débuta chez Saint Augustin, passant par Jean-Jacques Rousseau et Jean-Paul Sartre et se terminerait par les théories psychanalytiques de Jacques Lacan et de la déconstruction de Jacques Derrida. Mon travail consistera en une tentative d'associer cette norme européenne avec les conceptions postcoloniales, telles que l'orientalisme d'Edward Said, la notion de subalternes de Gayatri Spivak, l'hybridité et la mimesis d'Homi Bhabha, avec les pensées du domaine des sciences politiques s'orientant vers la diversité de la modernité comme on peut les trouver dans les œuvres Imagined Communities de Benedict Anderson ou Multiple Modernities de Shmuel Noah Eisenstadt. La question se pose de savoir dans quelle mesure la littérature japonaise et maghrébine auraient adapté la conception occidentale d'un sujet individuel. En outre, on peut se demander si de nos jours - époque contemporaine et mondialisée - l'on n'assisterait pas à un phénomène d'orientalisation de l'Occident qui prendrait naissance dans les régions de l'Asie de l'Est et des Pays de culture arabe. Peut-on parler d'une démarcation caduque entre l'Occident et l'Orient ? Peut-on dire que les divergences culturelles restent les mêmes, tout en prenant des formes modernes ? Quel rôle joue la littérature ? Quelle est la position de la littérature comparée ?

Biography: N.C. Fukuzawa Education
since 10/2011
Master-Studies in Comparative Literature at FU Berlin

2011 Bachelor of Arts in Comparative Literature, Japanese Studies and Political Sciences at Freie Universität Berlin

2006 - 08
Sciences Po Paris: German-French Undergraduate Studies

2006 German Abitur and French Baccalauréat in Berlin (4 months at Japanese High School in 2003)

Work Experience
07/2010 - today
International Research Training Group "InterArt", FU Berlin, research student

05/2012
PR-Video "Avantgarde Diaries" for Mercedes-Benz, Japanese-German translator

03/2010
"Mishima! Worldwide Impact and Multicultural Roots" (Japanese Studies), Conference of Prof. Dr. Irmela Hijiya-Kirschner at FU Berlin, student assistant

08-10/2008
Press department of the 8th international literature festival Berlin, internship

07-08/2008
International editorial office of S.Fischer Verlag in Frankfurt a. M., internship

Language Skills
German mother tongue
Japanese second mother tongue
French fluent
English fluent

S1 LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE ET MONDIALISATION / COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND GLOBALIZATION

"LA LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE EST MORTE. VIVE LA LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE!" RÉFLEXIONS SUR L'AVENIR DE LA DISCIPLINE ET SA RELATION AUX CULTURAL STUDIES ET À LA MONDIALISATION

M. Berne
City University of Hong Kong

Abstract: (Proposition en lien avec le 5e axe du congrès: 'Au-delà des nations: aires linguistiques, continents littéraires, mondialisation?) Alors que j'ai l'habitude de me présenter comme enseignante de littérature comparée, un collègue me disait récemment que je devrais me méfier, et sans doute m'abstenir de m'identifier à cette discipline puisque cette dernière a bel et bien disparu. En somme, j'avais une mauvaise stratégie marketing. Ces quatre dernières années passées à l'université de Hong Kong, laquelle entretient une relation étroite avec les modèles des institutions anglo-saxonnes au Royaume-Uni et aux États-Unis mais aussi chinoises, m'ont permises d'observer la disparition de la littérature comparée au profit des 'Cultural Studies'. S'il est vrai que Hong Kong n'est pas l'endroit qui privilégie les sciences humaines, et encore moins la littérature, mais bien plutôt les sciences, l'informatique, l'ingénierie et le business, il reste que la tendance est générale dans le monde académique dominant anglophone : le texte littéraire, s'il est encore lu, se doit d'être d'utilité immédiate et pratique. En dialoguant avec les essais sur le sujet, notamment les travaux de Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, tout en revenant à l'origine de ces disciplines, les différentes écoles et à mes expériences en Amérique du Nord et en Asie, j'aimerais réfléchir à une alternative qui se situerait entre la littérature comparée et les 'Cultural Studies' et qui passerait par l'urgence d'un retour au texte, c'est-à-dire à la langue et à l'idiome, dans la mesure où les frontières s'érodent. Il s'agirait d'ouvrir la pratique de la discipline au delà de l'Europe et des États-Unis qui l'ont vu naître vers les régions de l'hémisphère sud (Amérique latine, Afrique et Asie) pour, comme le propose Edouard Glissant, adopter une sensibilité à la diversité du monde et à l'imaginaire des langues, pour que les sciences humaines ne se soumettent pas à la loi de l'offre et de la demande, et pour que vive une nouvelle littérature comparée.

Biography: Marie Berne a obtenu un doctorat (Ph.D) en Littérature française et comparée à l'Université de Colombie britannique au Canada. Elle habite maintenant à Hong Kong où elle enseigne la culture et la littérature à la City University of Hong Kong. Elle a publié une monographie 'Eloge de l'idiotie' (Rodopi, 2009) étudiant le phénomène de l'idiotie dans les romans occidentaux du 20e siècle. Elle a également publié des articles sur Beckett, Gao Xingjian et Ionesco, co-rédigé un livre interdisciplinaire en anglais sur "Les Fondations de l'Europe contemporaine" et travaillé à l'édition d'un ouvrage sur l'identité européenne pour le département des études européennes de Hong Kong University. Son dernier projet de recherche porte sur la langue des animaux littéraires et cinématographiques chez certains auteurs et réalisateurs européens et asiatiques des XXe et XXIe siècles.

A PROPOSAL FOR A BALANCED APPROACH TO CULTURAL GLOBALIZATION STUDIES

M. Coma
University of Cincinnati

Abstract: It seems impossible for scholars to agree on a definition of globalization. There has been no agreement on whether it is a social, political, economical or cultural phenomenon; or when it started. Although its impact is unquestioned, there are almost as many conflicting definitions of globalization as writings exist on the matter. When it comes to literary studies, globalization becomes an even more problematic subject. Its shapeless nature is exacerbated by the fact that not many literary scholars have approached it, and the majority of those who have done it from a postcolonial position. To complicate further the question, globalization theory often follows the scholars' own private agendas, which tend to favor localism.

As a graduate student whose main interest is the impact of globalization in Spanish culture, I have frequently found myself wondering how to balance the —more often than not— biased theoretical corpus on cultural globalization studies. This paper aims to sketch a model for a balanced study of globalization on the literary field. In order to achieve this, I will focus on several key aspects for a comprehensive study of globalization:

- Historicizing globalization: I will argue that globalization started no later than 1400 A.D. and that the current situation is nothing but an acceleration of the forces that facilitate transnational exchanges.
- The overlapping of the cultural and economic capitals: I will argue that culture is —and has always been— an exchangeable commodity that follows historical, political, and economical fluxes.
- The center-periphery model: I will argue that the center-periphery model often used for globalization studies is an unacceptable oversimplification of global relations and will defend the idea that globalization works in a multidirectional fashion.

This paper will prove that the cultural exchanges facilitated by globalization are far more complex than the Eurocentric model has established and will call for an comprehensive historicization of globalization.

Biography: Marina Coma
University of Cincinnati
PhD student

COMPARATIVE SOUTH AFRICAN LITERARY STUDY: CONFINES AND POSSIBILITIES

H.E. Janse van Vuuren
NELSON MANDELA METROPOLITAN UNIVERSITY

Abstract: JM Coetzee's Waiting for the Barbarians (1980) appeared within less than a year of Wilma Stockenström's Die kremetartekspedisie (1981). In the interim the Afrikaans novel was translated by JM Coetzee as The Expedition to the Baobab Tree (1983). Coetzee's protagonist asks to no avail of the "barbarian girl" in his guardianship: "What do I have to do to move you?" and "Does no one move you?" Stockenström's slave girl seems to answer this question, which together with the translation of the Afrikaans text by the English author, is taken as the departure point for a singularly productive comparison of the two novels (including in the comparative literary exercise the English translation, which opened the text to high acclaim by an international readership). Against this example of a particularly fruitful exercise in literary comparison (facilitated through the English translation by Coetzee), stands the much contested and critiqued attempts by South African literary historiographers (Chapman, 1996, & Heywood, 2004, for example) towards inclusive comparative literary histories. Chapman and Heywood cross linguistic borders and include multiple South African literatures (such as English, Afrikaans, Sotho, Xhosa) in the focus of their literary histories, as well as recorded texts from various oral traditions alongside critical appraisals of authors and oeuvres in various written literatures. The paper strives to confront the question about where comparative literary approaches are most productive, and where such approaches are less fertile - where and why they meet with resistance from critics and single language literary historians. Both examples are based in the practice of South African literary history and literary criticism. In both examples (the comparison between two single novels from the same period, in a similar style and period code, as well as in the case study of the one author comparative literary histories by Chapman and Heywood) translation plays a role. On an ideological level, the contestation by critics of the nature of the comparative, inclusive literary histories points towards a lack of the concept of a unified "nation", and towards strong internal divisions along hotly contested linguistic borders. The virulent critical reactions to both literary histories seem to question the concept of "South African literature" plus the possibility of unification of a multiplicity of geographically unified literatures under this umbrella term ("South African literature"). Yet to the outside world and within an international context "South African literature" is certainly a significant, coherent and meaningful concept, calling up central authors, such as JM Coetzee, Andre P Brink, Breyten Breytenbach, Nadine Gordimer, Antjie Krog and others. How to deal with such an anomaly is one of the challenges that comparative literary practice faces in the twenty first century...

Biography: Helize Janse van Vuuren is professor in the Department of Language and Literature at the Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University in Port Elizabeth. She is the author of Tristia in perspektief (1989) and co-editor with Willie Burger of Sluiswagter by die dam van stemme: Beskouings oor die werk van Karel Schoeman (2002).

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE: AN INSURGENT VOICE IN THE CONTEXT OF GLOBALIZATION

M.R. Barcelos Bettiol
Universit  de Coimbra

Abstract: The concept of Weltliteratur, one of the founding pillars of the subject of Comparative Literature, shows that political boundaries aren't always strong enough to impose cultural boundaries. If that were so, American Literature would be one of the most well-known and award-winning literatures in the world; however, such as not the case, whereas Irish Literature, one of the biggest Nobel Prize winners for literature, has managed to make itself known to the rest of the world. Among many examples, this one shows that political and economic hegemonies, typical traits of globalization, don't always manage to assert themselves in the literary sphere.

The literary experience is the experience of what is uncertain, as the literary territory is the experimentation venue par excellence. While Comparative Literature confronts different literatures and subjects, by putting in local and national aspects in perspective, it has shows us that literature, though in a context of globalization, remained a sphere of resistance; that is, the literary text is not wholly subservient to models imposed by globalization, as the literary text always has a critical and deforming view with regard to such models.

In its constant, methodological self-reflection and in its analysis on the topic of globalization, Comparative Literature emphasizes that World Literature should not obliterate the differences between texts, cultures and historical periods, as it should show wisdom in not homogenizing knowledge and, above all, the experience of reading, while preaching that which modern theorists call Welt-Humanism. In other words, when Comparative Literature uses the term Welt-Humanism, it perceives literature as a file of differences, by supporting the autonomy of literatures and of the cultures of this overwhelming, anti-humanistic process influenced by globalization, while preserving the literary and cultural diversity of nations. Thus being the case, this work will show that Comparative Literature, in the set of theories it upholds, has always been an insurgent voice within that globalization process, while supporting a literary humanism and cosmopolitanism, as it highlights the autonomy of the literary sphere relative to the political and economic hegemonies imposed by globalization.

Biography: Maria Regina Barcelos Bettiol holds a degree in Literary Arts from the Pontifícia Universidade Católica in Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil. She holds a Master's Degree in French and Francophone Literatures from the Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul. She also holds a Ph. D in Literary Arts (General and Comparative Literature) from the Université Sorbonne Nouvelle Paris III. She is currently working on her post-doctorate degree in Portuguese Literature from the University of Coimbra. Lecturer, author of countless essays and publications. Prominent among her books is O Século das Luzes: uma herança para todos. Publisher: Tomo, 2009.

S1 QUESTIONS DE POETIQUE COMPAREE / QUESTIONS OF COMPARATIVE POETICS

FONDER UNE NOUVELLE THEORIE SUR LA PAROLE DES ECRIVAINS

M. Münch

Le Kremlin-Bicêtre

Abstract: Parmi toutes les disciplines des sciences humaines qui sont bien placées pour étudier le phénomène littéraire mondial, la littérature générale et comparée, consciente qu'elle est de la différence des cultures est la mieux placée pour définir l'art littéraire dans ses fondements. Or il se trouve que la méthode inductive de comparaison des oeuvres n'a pas réussi à fournir par induction un dénominateur commun planétaire. Il est aisé d'en tirer la conclusion que la "littérature" n'existe pas en tant que telle, mais seulement des littératures ou des écrivains comme on l'entend dire très souvent. Mais un tel constat implique qu'il n'y a pas non plus de nature humaine sous les cultures. Or comme l'espèce humaine existe (comment le nier sans tomber dans le racisme ?), il doit y avoir une nature commune à l'origine de toutes les cultures. En suivant cette hypothèse, la jeune théorie de l' "effet de vie" a réussi à isoler un invariant dans les arts poétiques des auteurs passés à la postérité. Cet invariant affirme qu'une oeuvre est réussie lorsqu'elle est capable de créer un "effet de vie", un "effet de plénitude" en co-création avec la psyché. C'est le seul point sur lequel tous les grands auteurs sont en accord ; il est difficile de ne pas en tenir compte. Il explique aussi bien la diversité des cultures que l'unité d'homo sapiens. Il permet également de construire objectivement une théorie de la "world literature" et d'y repositionner toutes les méthodes critiques s'appuyant sur les sciences humaines existantes mais partielles du fait de leurs points de vue spécialisés. Mon exposé rappellera les étapes successives de la genèse de la théorie de l' "effet de vie", exposera ses atouts en matière de critique ainsi que ses perspectives de développement.

Biography: Né en 1934 en France près de la frontière du Rhin, Marc-Mathieu Münch, après des études de musique et de lettres à Strasbourg et à Paris et après l'expérience enrichissante de l'enseignement secondaire, a effectué toute sa carrière de comparatiste à l'université de Metz. C'est là, ayant suivi de près les nouvelles critiques, et observé leurs apports nouveaux mais aussi leur impuissance finale à définir le phénomène de l'art littéraire, qu'il s'est lancé dans la longue et patiente comparaison des arts poétiques des grands auteurs du monde entier. Après y avoir trouvé de quoi écrire son "Pluriel du beau" (Metz, 1991), il y a trouvé, en cherchant mieux, l'invariant mondial de l' "effet de vie" (L'Effet de vie ou le singulier de l'art littéraire, Paris, 2004). Professeur émérite aujourd'hui, il vit et travaille à Paris.

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND SANSKRIT LITERARY THEORY. FROM COMPARATIVE POETICS TO EMOTION RESEARCH

R. Gafrik

Institute of World Literature of Slovak Academy of Sciences

Abstract: Non-Western cultures have made major contributions to the Western civilization. The term world literature itself has been expanded to include literatures of cultures outside of the Western world. This fact bears on literary theory as well. Literary studies try to develop a universal approach to literature. Their presuppositions, however, are rooted in the modern Western notion of literature (e.g. mimesis, literariness). In the West, it was especially Earl Miner who opened the debate on the commensurability of the world's literary cultures with his project of comparative poetics. The paper will point to the existence of literary critical discourses outside of the Western world and argue for the emergence of an intercultural theory of literature. In China, Japan, the Arab world, and most markedly in India the production of literature has been accompanied by a rich critical output. In India, an indigenous literary theory independent of Western scholarship is still alive. The so-called rasa theory, first formulated in Bharata's Natya Shastra (third century BCE to fifth century CE) and later developed into rasadhvani by Anandavardhana and Abhinavagupta, seems, as Patrick Hogan and Keith Oatley argue, particularly interesting because it corresponds with the recent advancement in the study of cognition and emotion. The paper will evaluate the position of Sanskrit literary theory in the discourse of comparative poetics and discuss its implications for the development of the theory of comparative literature.

Biography: Róbert Gáfrik studied English and German at Matej Bel University in Slovakia and at universities in Erfurt and Göttingen in Germany. He received PhD in literary studies in 2006 from Institute of World Literature of Slovak Academy of Sciences where he presently works as a research fellow and is head of Department of Comparative Literature. He also teaches German literature at Trnava University. He has done research on literary relations between India and the West, especially Germany. He has also published articles on the theory of comparative literary studies, comparative poetics, and digital literature. He is author of a monograph on the reception of Indian themes and motives in German Literature (Hra s cudzou kultúrou, 2009). With Libuša Vajdová he edited 'New imagined communities': Identity making in Eastern and South-Eastern Europe (2010).

WRESTLING WITH OEDIPUS, ROUND TWO: DELEUZE AND GUATTARI'S RHIZOME AND JACK KEROUAC'S ROOTS / LA DEUXIEME LUTTE CONTRE ŒDIPE : LE RHIZOME DE DELEUZE ET GUATTARI, LES RACINES DE JACK KEROUAC

H. Melehy

University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

Abstract: There can be little doubt that the most resonant term proposed by Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari, rhizome, with which they contested all unifying hierarchies and the clearly bounded entities that come with them, has offered a radically new way of thinking about literature's function of presenting reality as well as its relationship to such residual enclosed social formations as the nation. At the very least, they have suggested to comparative literature conceptions of overlap, interweaving, and multidirectional transfer that greatly facilitate considerations of transnationalism and tranlingualism. In an early essay, "On the Superiority of Anglo-American Literature" (1967), Deleuze attributes such a revolutionary energy to American literature in particular, finding European literature to remain preoccupied with rootedness and orderly development. Among American authors, Deleuze accords rapturous praise to Jack Kerouac: "We know of no book of love more important, more stirring, more grandiose than Kerouac's The Subterraneans [1958]." For Deleuze, Kerouac's writing arrives at pure becoming, leaving behind pre-given conceptions and conventions to create something new and revolutionary. However, some years later, in Anti-Oedipus (1972) and A Thousand Plateaus (1980), though continuing to treat him as exemplary, Deleuze and Guattari put a twist on this understanding of Kerouac. They observe that, after a beginning in which he gestured toward rejecting paternal hierarchies, he ended up "in search of his Breton ancestors of the superior race"—that is, in the worst kind of rootedness, in their view after the general pattern of American literature. But what they miss in this reading of Kerouac's Satori in Paris (1966) is that for the author, as a participant in the Québécois Diaspora that resulted from economic, cultural, and linguistic marginalization in British Canada, a situation that exposed the francophone population to harsh policies of assimilation in the U.S., genealogy was a contestatory act. It opposed a set of imagined fathers to the fathers imposed by both predominantly anglophone Canada and twentieth-century Anglo-American cultural homogenization. In Satori in Paris, Kerouac plays with this idea, practically joking about the major geographical displacement necessary to overcome the cultural unsettlement of the diasporic condition. Though he stages the narrative as a quest for roots, through an adeptly ironic plot and his characteristic poetic vitality, he demonstrates the futility of that quest, even assigning the name "Ulysse" to the one distant relative his narrator manages to locate in Brittany, a name that suggests that at the end of the quest, the end of vagabondage, lies only more wandering. Kerouac's search for roots, then, is a valorization of leaving the fathers that overtakes the need to find them. In viewing Kerouac as an Anglo-American author, in fact in relying on such nation-based or region-based categories as "Anglo-American" and "European," Deleuze and Guattari themselves retain traces of the paternal impulses that organize these. But when Kerouac is viewed in a perspective that recognizes the transnationalism and tranlingualism that his writing energetically exposes, comparative literature may leave these categories behind and look forward to a conception of literature truly freed from the paternal rootedness of integral language and nation.

Il y a peu de doute que le terme le plus résonnant de Gilles Deleuze et Félix Guattari, "rhizome", avec lequel ils contestaient toutes les hiérarchies unificatrices et les entités clairement circonscrites qui les accompagnent, a offert une façon radicalement nouvelle de penser la présentation littéraire de la réalité, aussi bien que les rapports de la littérature avec les résidus de formations sociales limitées telle que la nation. Ils ont tout au moins proposé à la littérature comparée des concepts d'empiètement, d'enchevêtrement et de transfert multidirectionnel qui facilitent beaucoup les considérations sur le transnationalisme et le tranlingualisme. Dans un texte de 1967, "De la supériorité de la littérature anglaise-américaine", Deleuze attribue une telle énergie révolutionnaire à la littérature américaine en particulier, constatant que la littérature européenne demeure préoccupée de l'enracinement et du développement bien ordonné. Parmi les auteurs américains, Deleuze accorde une louange enthousiaste à Jack Kérouac : "Nous ne connaissons pas de livre d'amour plus important, plus insinuant, plus grandiose que les Souterrains [1958] de Kérouac." Selon Deleuze, l'écriture de Kérouac arrive au devenir pur, en abandonnant toute conception et toute convention préalables pour créer quelque chose de nouveau et de révolutionnaire. Pourtant, quelques années plus tard, dans leurs Anti-Œdipe (1972) et Mille plateaux (1980), tout en continuant de le traiter en exemplaire, Deleuze et Guattari révisent cette compréhension de Kérouac en observant que, après un début impliquant le geste de rejeter les hiérarchies paternelles, il finit "à la recherche de ses ancêtres bretons de la race supérieure" — c'est-à-dire dans le pire des enracinements, selon eux en suivant le scénario général de la littérature américaine. Mais ce qu'ils omettent de cette lecture de Satori à Paris de Kérouac, c'est que pour l'auteur, en tant que participant de la Diaspora Québécoise qui avait résulté de la marginalisation économique, culturelle et linguistique au Canada britannique, situation qui exposait la population francophone à la politique sévère d'assimilation aux États-Unis, la généalogie était un acte contestataire. Elle opposait un ensemble de pères imaginaires aux pères imposés par le Canada principalement anglophone et l'homogénéisation culturelle anglo-américaine au xx^e siècle. Dans Satori à Paris, Kérouac joue avec cette idée, en plaisantant sur le grand déplacement géographique qu'il faut subir pour surmonter le bouleversement culturel de cette condition de diaspora. Quoiqu'il présente le récit comme une traditionnelle recherche de racines, par une intrigue subtilement ironique et la vitalité poétique qui marque ses œuvres, il démontre la futilité de cette quête ; il donne le nom d' "Ulysse" au seul parent distant que son narrateur trouve en Bretagne, un nom qui suggère que, à la fin de la quête, à la fin du vagabondage, il n'y a que plus de vagabondage. Cette recherche de racines valorise donc le fait d'abandonner les pères qui surpasse l'impératif de les trouver. En considérant Kérouac comme un auteur anglo-américain, en fait en s'appuyant sur des catégories nationales ou régionales telles qu' "anglo-américain" et "européen", Deleuze et Guattari préservent eux-mêmes des traces des impulsions paternelles qui organisent celles-ci. Mais dès qu'on voit Kérouac dans une perspective qui reconnaît le transnationalisme et le translingualisme dont son écriture est l'exposition énergique, la littérature comparée peut laisser de côté ces catégories dans l'anticipation d'une conception de la littérature comme vraiment libérée de l'enracinement paternel de la langue et de la nation intégrales.

Biography: Hassan Melehy is Associate Professor of French and Francophone Studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He has published widely on the English and French Renaissance, critical theory, and film studies. His most recent book is The Poetics of Literary Transfer in Early Modern France and England (Ashgate, 2010). Currently he is working on a book on Jack Kerouac's poetics of exile.

Hassan Melehy est Professeur Associé d'Études Françaises et Francophone à l'Université de la Caroline du Nord à Chapel Hill. Il a publié nombreux articles sur la Renaissance anglaise et française, la théorie critique et les études du cinéma. Son livre le plus récent s'intitule The Poetics of Literary Transfer in Early Modern France and England (Ashgate, 2010). Son projet de recherche actuel est un livre sur la poétique de l'exil de Jack Kérouac.

POETIC INSPIRATION IN THE PHILOSOPHIES OF SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE AND MUHAMMAD IQBAL

A. MohdRamli

International Islamic University Malaysia

Abstract: The stress that English Romanticism lays upon a poet's imaginative capacity as a source of poetic inspiration finds its clearest expression in the writings of its philosopher, Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772-1834). Unlike many of his English contemporaries, he developed a philosophy of poetic inspiration that conceptualized the notion of imagination within the context of a Christian theology that was influenced both by Platonism and German Idealism. As a student and later lecturer of English Literature, the Islamic poet Muhammad Iqbal (1877-1938) had been exposed to both English Romanticism and German Idealism. Though he recognized the importance of imagination as a source of artistic creativity, Iqbal emphasized intuition as a higher form of poetic inspiration. By adapting and merging certain aspects of English Romanticism, German Idealism, Henri Bergson's philosophy on intuition, and Islamic theology, he asserted the importance of a special type of intuition, Intuition of Existence, as a form of poetic inspiration. This paper, hence, is a comparative study of English Romanticism's emphasis on imagination and Iqbal's notion of intuition, in order to discuss the important roles that both Christian and Islamic theologies played in these literary philosophies respectively.

Biography: Aimillia Mohd Ramli is an Assistant Professor at the Department of English Language and Literature, International Islamic University Malaysia.

S3 COGNITION ET EMOTION: DE NOUVELLES VOIES POUR LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE? / COGNITION AND EMOTION: NEW VISTAS FOR COMPARATIVE LITERATURE?

ENTHUSIASM: TOWARDS A THEORY OF EMOTIONAL STIMULATION THROUGH POETRY (1750-1800)

K. Sicks

Justus Liebig University Giessen

Abstract: Enthusiasm, a central topos of literary theory ever since Plato's conception of mania in the Phaidros dialogue, gets reconceptualised in German Enlightenment: Combining approaches from aesthetics and anthropology, philosophers like Baumgarten, Herder or Mendelssohn theorise enthusiasm as a human capacity that lies at the heart of all creative processes. Creativity results only from this emotional elation, which is itself provoked by encounters with the arts, and particularly with poetry. Reading poetry is thus an 'inspiration' which may stir up the readers' capacity for feeling (Empfindungskraft) and, in this way, their creative imagination. The paper aims at reconstructing these concept(s) of enthusiasm, paying particular attention to (1) enthusiasm as an interface of reading and writing, and (2) the relation between the enthusiastic mode of reading/feeling and less appreciated modes of emotional reactions to poetry and the arts (like Rührung or passion). In this manner, the paper provides a starting point towards a history of aesthetic and psychological discourses on emotional stimulation through literature.

Biography: Coordinator of the European PhD-Network "Literary and Cultural Studies" at Justus Liebig University in Giessen (Germany).

FLIGHTS OF CREATIVE IMAGINATION

U. Talwar

University of Rajasthan

Abstract: Imagination... is more important than Knowledge. Knowledge is limited. Imagination enriches the world. (Albert Einstein)

Imagination, the ability of conjuring images and sensations, helps provide meaning to experience and understanding to knowledge. It is a response to the physical world through the creation of a fictional world. Although all human beings are endowed with this faculty of imagination but the creative writers express their subjective inner reality not as a mimesis of the factual reality but peppered with powerful creative imagination, the fantastic.

The present paper focuses on two short stories – "The Handsomest Drowned Man in the World" (1967) by Gabriel Garcia Marquez and "The Yellow Wallpaper" (1899) by Charlotte Perkins Gilman – and a novella The Little Prince (1943) by Antoine de Saint Exupery that create imaginative worlds and makes profound observations about life and human nature blurring the boundary between reality and myth. These three writers belong to three different periods, cultures and languages but capture the imaginative and reflect the psychological underpinnings of both human action and imagination. Their imagination takes story telling from realism to the realms of fantasy, operating on allegorical and mythical levels. Gilman (1860-1935) an American writing in English, Saint-Exupery (1900-1944) writing in French, and Marquez (1927-2004) a Colombian writing in Spanish, explore the crevices of human mind to create and reflect on three different literary traditions. Gilbert delineates a feminist perspective in the patriarchal society of early twentieth century, Saint-Exupery presents most profound observations on human condition through a child's perception of the world around him and Marquez narrates the stories conjured up by the villagers about a dead body that washes up on their beach. The three perceptions and emotional associations are at three different stages of life childhood, a woman with a new born baby and elder men and women in the small village on the sea beach. Using different narrative techniques, blurring the boundaries between reality and myth these stories deflect unique psychological positions, juxtaposing the macabre and funny the creative imagination manifests itself in characterization. All the three unnamed narrators in the fictions under study foreground the relationship between imagination and subjective agency and seek new subjectivity. In The Little Prince and "The Yellow Wallpaper" the protagonists' imaginations allow the homodiegetic narrator to move out of their lonely private realms into inter-subjective relationships with others. The third person omniscient, heterodiegetic narrator in "The Handsomest Drowned Man in the World" traces the responses of the villagers to the drowned man, whose appearance changes their lives. The three texts, inform their authors, are based on reality and real life experiences but their reality resembles the wildest imagination. For Gilman and Saint Exupery writing these texts was a therapeutic experience. Crossing the boundaries of nations, cultures and gender, these allegorical tales bring out truths of three different literary traditions. The paper proposes to examine what these three texts yield to a non-culture reader.

Biography:

Dr. Urmil Talwar is Selection Grade Lecturer (Associate Professor) in English at Government Girls College, Shahpura, Jaipur. At present she is based in the Department of English, University of Rajasthan, Jaipur, as a UGC Post Doctoral Fellow (2009-12) working on "Border Poetics in the novels of Amitav Ghosh". She has attended several national and international seminars and presented papers therein. Her papers have been published and also translated stories from Hindi to English were published in Journal of Literature and Aesthetics and in 23 Stories. She has co-edited Contemporary Indian Drama, Gender History and Culture and Literary Debates. Her doctoral thesis 'The Role of Public Schools in Shaping the Literary Culture of England During 1920's and 1930's' is also published. Postcolonial studies and women writings interest her the most.

PITY AND ANGER WITHOUT A CATHARSIS? MORAL EMOTIONS AND THE NORDIC TENDENSROMAN

S. Isomaa

University of Helsinki

Abstract: Tendensroman is a Nordic subgenre of the novel, which is designed to affect the moral emotions and social views of its readers. It came into being in the nineteenth century, and critics of that time (e.g. Edvard Flygare) saw it as being modelled on genres such as the French sentimental social novel, the Anglo-American novel of purpose, and the German Tendenz-Roman. In this presentation, I discuss the ways in which works in the genre, including Hertha (1856) by Fredrika Bremer and Vaaralla (1891) by Teuvo Pakkala, attempted to arouse moral emotions such as anger and pity in the readers and make them change the world for the better. I touch upon issues such as the relation of the tendensromans to the prevailing moral code of the time and the lack of catharsis in the genre. I also make some suggestions on how to understand the affective and persuasive aspects of genres in the frame of a historical theory of genres (with reference to Hans-Robert Jauss, Alastair Fowler and David Fishelov).

Biography: Saija Isomaa is a post-doc researcher in Finnish Literature at the University of Helsinki. She is specialised in genre theory and comparative study of genres. Recently, she has been exploring the affective and persuasive purposes and functions of genres such as the thesis novel and the tendency novel (tendensroman).

THE FUTILE QUESTS TO T. BEACH: EFFACING EMOTIONS THROUGH REPETITION IN MARGUERITE DURAS' INDIAN CYCLE

T.P. Rantanen

University of Tampere

Abstract: The Futile Quests to T. Beach

Effacing Emotions through Repetition in Marguerite Duras's India Cycle

Marguerite Duras's oeuvre has been a subject for several studies that combine trauma theory or psychoanalysis with literary studies (cf. Bajomée 1989, Kristeva 1987, Glassman 1989 and Knuuttila 2011 – to mention but a few). This is no wonder, as it involves a great extent of repetition and variation of themes such as death, loss, desire and madness. As Knuuttila (2011, passim.) shows, this repetition and variation can be seen as a way for acting out and working through the traumatic past, in this case young Lol V. Stein's loss of her fiancé for a femme fatale. This loss, its consequences and the attempts to narrativize and capture Lol V. Stein's mysterious mind form a half of Duras's India Cycle, as the other half is concentrating on the infamous femme fatale, Anne-Marie Stretter.

However, my approach is leaning more on apophatic tradition, that seeks to examine the possibilities of expressing the ineffable in literature and arts (cf. Franke 2007 and 2009, Løevlie 2003). Thus I see repetition as a manner of effacing the original emotion little by little – if there is the thing to perceive as the original emotion: the reader has a better access to the projections of Lol's emotions created by Jacques Hold, a curiously self-aware character-narrator. Instead of cumulating emotional effectivity and thus perhaps offering catharsis of a kind, the India Cycle refuses to be a finite continuum with clear solutions. Its logic is that of deterioration, not of development, unless this development is negative and inverse by its nature.

I will illustrate this effacing and deterioration of emotions by comparing the variations and following the narrative degeneration of a similar scene in the novels Le ravissement de Lol V. Stein (1964) and L'amour (1971) and in the film (and the script of the film) La femme du Gange (1974). The original scene portrays Lol V. Stein's and Jacques Hold's quest to the casino of T. Beach, where Lol was abandoned ten years ago. The later variations present the ghostly version of Lol, L.V.S., and a voyager, who set forth for the same goal – without fully understanding, what they are supposed to find. Meanwhile the tragic Ball Night of T. Beach has grown mythic to the extent that the emotions attached to and evoked by it become distant or at least extremely mediated.

My aim is to demonstrate how the narrative attempt to capture Lol V. Stein's mind and the quest for immersing oneself in the remains of emotions is essentially doomed to fail in the India Cycle.

Selected bibliography

Bajomée, Danielle 1989: Duras ou la douleur. De Boeck. Brussels. Duras, Marguerite 1971/2004: L'amour. Gallimard. Paris. Duras, Marguerite 1973: La Femme du Gange. In Nathalie Granger suivi de La Femme du Gange. Gallimard. Paris. 101– 195. Duras, Marguerite 1964/2004: Le ravissement de Lol V. Stein. Gallimard. Paris. Franke, William 2007: On What Cannot Be Said. Apophatic Discourses in Philosophy, Religion, Literature and the Arts. Volume 2: Modern and Contemporary Transformations. University of Notre Dame Press. Notre Dame, Indiana. Franke, William 2009: Poetry and Apocalypse. Theological Disclosures of Poetic Language. University of Stanford Press. Stanford. Glassman, Deborah 1989: "Fascinating Vision and Narrative Cure. Marguerite Duras's The Ravishing of Lol V. Stein." Tulsa Studies in Women Literature 8:1. 77– 94. Knuuttila, Sirkka 2011: Fictionalizing Trauma. The Aesthetics of Marguerite Duras's India Cycle. Peter Lang. Frankfurt am Main. Kristeva, Julia 1987: Soleil noir. Dépression et mélancholie. Gallimard. Paris. Løevlie, Elisabeth Marie 2003: Literary Silences in Pascal, Rousseau, and Beckett. Clarendon Press. Oxford.

Biography: Tytti Rantanen was graduated as Master of Arts from the University of Tampere in 2011. She is currently working on her PhD thesis "Poetic Interference in French Literature and Cinema from the 1950s to the 1970s" as a doctoral student in the Finnish Doctoral Programme for Literary Studies.

In her Master's Thesis, Rantanen studied Marguerite Duras's India Cycle and the question of "negative poetics" combining post-classical narratology with French post-structuralist literary theory. In her PhD thesis Rantanen is not concentrating exclusively on Duras, but building a larger corpus with novels from Claude Simon, Monique Wittig, Hélène Bessette and films from Alain Resnais and Jean-Luc Godard. The essential questions remain the same: how can the radicality of the form, the poetic interference, be treated not as an obstacle that has to be solved and tamed, but as a possibility that has aesthetic values in such – and how to encourage academic discussion about this possibility without mystifying it.

S1 DE L'ESPACE CULTUREL A L'ESPACE ESTHETIQUE / FROM CULTURAL SPACES TO AESTHETIC SPACES

L'APPROCHE SCENOPOÏËTIQUE : UNE LECTURE DES JEUX D'ESPACE DANS LE PROCESSUS DE REPRESENTATION

C. Schmitt

Université Toulouse 2 Le Mirail

Abstract: « L'espace m'a toujours rendu silencieux » disait Jules Vallès. Peut-être parce que lui-même est extrêmement bavard, bien que pas toujours intelligible. De même que Spinoza rappelait que nul ne sait ce que peut le corps pour détrôner la raison comme unique berceau de la volonté, l'incidence de l'espace sur nos états, nos comportements et nos représentations demeure assez floue. L'engouement des dernières décennies pour réhabiliter la dimension spatiale montre que son apparence inoffensive ne dupe plus son monde. Mais si les cartes ne mentionnent plus de « terra incognita » et si la voûte étoilée n'est plus le plafond du monde, de l'espace sourd encore le sens originel du mot « mystère ». C'est que le statut de l'espace pose la question de la place de l'Homme. Interroger la spatialité, c'est considérer le regard qu'on y porte, c'est-à-dire le processus de représentation lui-même, ce par quoi on se situe et se projette. En voulant tracer une carte du monde, le personnage de l'Auteur de Borges a peint son propre visage. Espace et sujet s'engendrent et se déterminent l'un l'autre par des jeux de tensions, d'exclusions et de transgressions. On ne peut faire de l'espace un concept générique. On bute seulement à en parler au singulier. En revanche, les relations entretenues avec la spatialité ont en commun une articulation dramaturgique que l'on a choisi de nommer dynamisme scénopoïétique. L'approche scénopoïétique est une certaine lecture du processus de représentation qui élargit la notion de scène à tout comportement qui met en tension ou en jeu le visible et l'invisible, le concret, le conçu et le symbolique, l'énoncé et l'inexprimé, pour s'installer au cœur de cet atelier de fabrication d'espaces, là où ils s'agencent, se chevauchent, se mêlent, se heurtent et donnent lieu à des formes, des états, des discours.

Biography: Doctorat d'Esthétique audiovisuelle obtenu en décembre 2010. Publication de divers articles sur la spatialité et le processus de représentation. Travaille aussi comme scénographe avec plusieurs compagnies théâtrales.

TOWARDS A LITERATURE OF THE MEDITERRANEAN

M. Lovato

University of Texas at Austin

Abstract: Through the present paper I want to offer a theoretical contribution towards a definition of Mediterranean Literature. For many scholars within the humanities, this category seems a logical solution to the impasse in which most of the recent reflection on Orientalism have entered. However, the notion of Mediterranean discourages, as F. Braudel already warned in the fifties, any simplistic definition of it. The complexity of the literary, historical, and anthropological ties linking peoples and languages across the Mediterranean basin makes that of the Mediterranean a challenging theoretical category. Informed by the cautionary warnings and methodological approaches of historians such as F. Braudel and N. Purcell, anthropologists as M. Herzfeld, theorists and thinkers as F. Cassano and A.K. Khatibi, I intend to qualify what distinguishes contemporary Mediterranean literature from its previous historical phases, outlining a definition of Mediterranean aesthetics and literature that sees the Mediterranean sea as: 1) a sea in which the historiographical coordinates and relations of cause and effect are uncertain; 2) a sea marked by a dividing line -which I will describe as a "wound"- physically intangible and yet for ages inscribed in the consciences of intellectuals and common people. It is with respect to this line, I will argue, that we comparatists should position contemporary intellectual and literary works, and their reception among the multiple audiences constituting the Mediterranean public. It is with respect to this line, already detected by the Ecole d'Algers and historians as B. Benassar, that the work of E. Said should be reconsidered and read under a new light. Thus positioned, the works of artists such as A.L. Kechiche and A.M. Smari, in which European and Arabic protocols interact simultaneously and at different levels, will be presented as being in continuity with the traditional works written in the Arabic and Francophone tradition, with some new elements which I will take as examples of that contemporary Mediterranean literature I intend to define.

Biography: Martino Lovato is a PhD student in Comparative Literature at the University of Texas at Austin. He is interested in Mediterranean studies, particularly in the intersections between historiography and aesthetics in modern and contemporary French, Italian and Arabic literature.

LANDSCAPE AESTHETICS AND GEOGRAPHICAL IDENTITY IN V. S. NAIPAUL'S THE ENIGMA OF ARRIVAL

Y. Kim
Sogang University

Abstract: Landscape Aesthetics and Geographical Identity in V. S. Naipaul's The Enigma of Arrival Youngjoo Kim (Sogang University, Korea) The English country house and the landscape of the English countryside have moved to the center of attention during the last decades of the twentieth century. The cult of the country house has spread deep and wide in contemporary English culture. Country house tourism in Britain continues to grow popular. The success of the television adaptation of Evelyn Waugh's Brideshead Revisited in 1981 triggered an avalanche of costume drama and heritage films including the recent hit of British TV series Downton Abbey (2011). The cultural appeal of the quintessentially English rural idyll and the mystique of the English country house remain strong in many country house novels of Britain from the 1980s on: Kazuo Ishiguro's The Remains of the Day (1988), V. S. Naipaul's The Enigma of Arrival (1987), Ian McEwan's Atonement (2007), Sara Water's The Little Stranger (2009) and Alan Hollinghurst's The Stranger's Child (2011), to name only a few. The literary configuration of the country house in the recent British novels is deeply enmeshed in the general nostalgia for the by-gone era, which was both fueling and fueled by the Thatcherite project of reviving authentic Englishness. It is not coincident that the English country house is one of the most often-visited places in contemporary British fiction concerned with Englishness in heritage and empire whether it (re)produces, contests or challenges a dominant ideology of Englishness. This paper aims to put Naipaul's novel The Enigma of Arrival (1987), a first person narrative told by a middle-aged Indian writer who leaves his homeland Trinidad for pastoral retreat to a Wiltshire manorial cottage, in a discursive grid of the landscape aesthetics and the politics of geographical identity in postimperial Britain. The Enigma of Arrival presents the landscape of melancholia from the perspective of postcolonial subjectivity and gives a full meditation on the relation of pastoral England (place) and Englishness (identity) in postimperial Britain.

Biography: Research interests include: twentieth-century British Fiction, cultural geography, the English country house literature, gothic literature, modernism and ethics, and gender and sexuality Teaching experiences are at both undergraduate and graduate levels at Sogang University in Korea since 2005. Courses include: Modern British Fiction, Contemporary British Literature, Feminist Literature, Sexuality and Literature, Gothic Novel, British and American Short Stories, Introduction to English Literature, Writing about English Literature, Literary Criticism, Pro-seminar: A Survey of Twentieth Century British Literature Publications are mostly on modernist and contemporary writers of Britain including Virginia Woolf, E. M. Forster, Daphne du Maurier, Jean Rhys, Angela Carter, Jeanette Winterson, Kazuo Ishiguro, and Graham Swift. Among them are: "Romance with Daphne du Maurier: Revisiting the Ruins of Englishness in Rebecca." Feminist Studies in English Literature 19:3 (December 2011): 5-44. "The Light in the Heart': Virginia Woolf and the Gothic Aesthetics." Studies in Modern Fiction 17:3 (December 2010): 7-31. "Grotesque Body and Grotesque Laughter in Angela Carter's Rewriting of Fairy Tales." Feminist Studies in English Literature 18:1 (August 2010): 29-56. "Modernity and the Geography of London: Virginia Woolf's Mrs. Dalloway." James Joyce Journal 15:2 (December 2009): 209-235. "Geographical Imagination and the Landscape Aesthetics in Contemporary British Fiction: Kazuo Ishiguro's The Remains of the Day and Graham Swift's Waterland." Studies in Modern Fiction 15:2 (September 2008): 7-34.

CHANGE/SPACE: THE CALL OF THE WILD IN PATRICK WHITE'S A FRINGE OF LEAVES

Q.A. Rahman, A.M. Noman
JAHANGIRNAGAR UNIVERSITY

Abstract: Cogito Ergo Sum- The philosophical propaganda laid down by Descartes serves more than what we may consider when there is a question of existence. And the line "Thinking is existing" becomes an abyss of enquiry as far as "space" is concerned. We know that "Space" is political and space provides transgressivity. Hence, from this vantage point Patrick White's A Fringe of Leaves depicts/ignites the feasibility of Ellen's (the protagonist) transformation which is 'space' dependent. Ellen Gluya-Ellen Roxburgh - Ellen Gluya again suggests a finest fact of life that is the "Change". The point to ponder is how it changes? Is it the space-time continuum or the person herself that facilitates this change? In A Fringe of Leaves, the Cornish woman gave of 'civility' in such a seemingly easy way. What exactly made her do so? We may consider that change in life is a respond to calls. Hence, the paper tries to show that in A Fringe of Leaves, the change occurred mostly not because of the call of time (or situation), even not so much because of the call of inner or innate nature (by Freudian definition) but because of the call of the wild, that is the call of space. Moreover, the paper approaches geocritically to frame a relation between Ellen as a referent and space as the sphere of representation of that referent.

Biography: BIOGRAPHIES

Arafat Mohammad Noman is currently doing his post graduation at Jahangirnagar University, Savar, Dhaka. He is taking English Literature and Cultural Studies as his major and his topic of interest(s) is post modernism, post-colonialism, and cultural studies. Arafat Noman has deep interest in research works and has presented papers in different international conferences.

Qazi Arka Rahman is currently doing his masters in English Literature and Cultural Studies in Jahangirnagar University, Savar, Dhaka. His area of interests are post colonialism, cultural studies queer theory and postmodernism. He has presented her research papers in several international conferences.

S3 INNOVATION AND TRADITION

CONNECTIONS BETWEEN DIGITAL AND BAROQUE LITERATURE

O.G. Tavares

Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina

Abstract: I propose that one may find a connection between 17th century Baroque and contemporary digital literature. This would be done by the notion of ingenio (ingenuity) and artifício (artifice). Baroque literature, and mostly all others that predate Enlightenment and romanticism, have a different conception of art, one that does not comprehend art as the expression of the self or through the Kantian idea of a purposeless purpose (the aesthetic notion of art), but rather as in the sense of a technique which produces and artifact, the artist being thus an artificer (in similar manner as a carpenter produces a chair).

Art in the seventeenth century has a purpose. One need only pick up one of the many treatise on rhetoric or poetics (such as Baltasar Gracian, Diego Garcia Rengifo, and others) to find that art not only had purpose – with large scale politic and theological implications –, but that there were rules and procedures laid out for such objectives. Literature in this period is not thus expression or beauty, nor does it contain the notion of self and liberty, it is rather an institutionalized technique or ingenio.

I take the seventeenth century's technical procedure for the production of literary works, and their large emphasis on ingenio in most rhetoric and poetic treatise, as to show that art in those days could be thought as a procedural act similar to that of programming a digital work in code and that the act of reading a digital work involves a mechanic operation of code (or the working of a algorithm so to make the work come to being). Reading then also involves a learning of procedures and possibilities of operation so the user can learn what he can or cannot do within the material limits of that work (better understood when we look at baroque labyrinth poems). This not only implies a different procedure for creating art, but also a different means of understanding what is a work of art, as also how we may rethink some aspects of digital literature and literary criticism.

Biography: Doctorate student in literature in Brazil's Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina. Earned his master's degree in 2010 with the dissertation A Interatividade na Poesia Digital [The Interactivity in Digital Poetry] in the same institution. Was the editor of Revista Texto Digital (ISSN 1807-9288), a periodical focused on the relations between digital medium and text. Is a member of the Núcleo de Pesquisa em Informática, Literatura e Linguística (NUPILL) since 2005. Is currently researching the connections between seventeenth century baroque and contemporary digital literature.

DIGITAL STORYTELLING: THE NARRATIVE APPEAL OF THE EVERYPERSON

H. Briel

university of nicosia

Abstract: The internet is quickly becoming sociology's treasure trove. Never before has there been as much material available about individuals, society and history as there is now. Information is shared freely by individuals and collected by others, all under the watchful eye of a global public. But this is not only a sociologist's data heaven, but indeed one for a number of disciplines such as discourse analysis, visual studies, history, performance studies and memory and trauma research; importantly, it is also one for literary scientists, although, I would argue, an underutilized one. The presentation will analyse how one particular brand of internet narration allows for much investigative research as to how the internet has changed our ways of communicating with the world. Here it is especially online Oral History (OH) projects which provide much data for literary science and its narrative analyses. They already engage most of the above named disciplines of inquiry, but are of particular interest to literary research as they represent co-created ad hoc narratives. And when using video equipment during the interview, the filmic quality is added to the verbal narrative, creating a truly cross-platform narrative. Going even further and following Lev Manovich's theory that bits have become the new cultural currency, these life story narrations would then represent a new kind of digital performance art, grounded in remembered real-life experience. Depending on what subject areas these stories encompass, they can have a powerful positive or negative impact on both the narrator and the audience. After giving some short examples of other OH narrative analyses (amongst them the powerful visual mapping of Jewish life in Berlin on a website through the use of pop-up narratives), I will then turn to an OH project conducted 2010-2012 in Cyprus. 20 qualitative video interviews were collected and then put online. I will analyse a number of these and demonstrate that digital life story narratives allow their speakers a way to come to terms with their narrated past and use these (oft reiterated) narratives to build up their present and future.

Specific heed will be paid to the apparent juxtaposition of the so-called referential contract in OH projects, were the respondent is expected to adhere to a semblance of historic truth and the suspension of disbelief required by films. My research here is broadly suggesting that both of these phenomena are much closer than one might think, a claim whose validity will be checked against the video data presented.

Biography: I received my Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst with a dissertation on the aesthetic theories of Adorno and Derrida. My most recent publication is the edited Glocalisation Electronic Media in South Eastern Europe (2009). Earlier books include German Culture and Society: A Glossary (2002) and Adorno und Derrida, oder wo liegt das Ende der Moderne? (1993). Other publications of mine are centered on German and English Arts and Literature, (Trans-)Cultural Studies, New Media, Manga and Anime. My research interests include international Human Resource Management, Inter-cultural Studies, Broadcast Media in the Digital Age, Visual Media and the Sociology of the Digital World. Presently, I teach Media and Communication Studies at the Management Center Innsbruck, Austria, the University of Nicosia, Cyprus and the Indian Institute of Learning and Management, New Delhi.

PERSISTENCE AND TRANSFORMATION OF AVANT-GARDE IN DIGITAL MEDIA

H. Veivo

Université Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3

Abstract: Harri Veivo Associate professor University of Sorbonne Nouvelle – Paris 3 Persistence and Transformation of Avant-Garde in Digital Media Digital media is claimed to fundamentally change not only communication, but also forms of participation in politics. Recent examples ranging from the "Occupy" movements and the Arab spring to the rise of the Pirate Parties in Germany and Sweden show that this seems indeed to be the case. Is digital media likely to change the relation between literature and everyday life as well, likely to realize the desire of making art felt, present and relevant in a new way? I am interested in knowing what happens to this avant-garde aspiration in cultures and societies where the role of digital media becomes more and more central, and especially in literature existing only or distributed mainly through digital media. "Avant-garde" is here understood both as a period in the history of art and literature and as a critical stance within modernisation. Canonical works of the historical avant-gardes – such as F. T. Marinetti's "Manifesto of Futurism" and the anti-literature of DADA – constantly nurture experimental writing in digital media or distributed through digital media. This persistence of intertexts is accompanied by the use of "traditional" avant-garde techniques such as montage and the combination of image and text. Furthermore, the transnational and cosmopolitan character of the historical avant-garde communities is continued in networks established in social media. The political, economical and technological context is, however, fundamentally different and necessitates a critical evaluation of the heritage of the historical avant-gardes and a critical reflection on the relevance of the very notion. The historical avant-gardes will thus serve to understand continuity in fundamental questioning of modern culture but also to shape out specific conditions of literary production in digital media.

Biography: Harri Veivo is associate professor at the University Sorbonne Nouvelle – Paris 3 and adjunct professor of comparative literature at the University of Helsinki. His research interests are avant-garde literature and its theory, Finnish avant-garde, and contemporary experimental writing. His recent publications include "Broken Clouds – Also by Instalments": Mediating Art and the Everyday, the High and the Low in Finnish Literary Avant-Garde of the 1960s" (in Regarding the Popular: High and Low Culture in the Avant-Garde and Modernism. S. Bru et al. (eds.), Berlin, Walter de Gruyter, 2012, 240-252), "Le dialogue complexe entre le national et l'international dans la poésie d'avant-garde finlandaise des années 1960" (accepted for publication in Etudes finno-ougriennes) and "Efforts pour être contemporain : Stratégies de distance et de légitimation dans le NIE, post-exotisme et Reality-Hunger" (Variations 19, 2011, 157-169).

S2: ANTIQUITÉ/MODERNITÉ : UN LABORATOIRE DU COMPARATISME — ANTIQUITY/MODERNITY: A LABORATORY FOR COMPARATIVE STUDIES

KEYNOTE SPEECH / CONFÉRENCE INTRODUCTIVE - ARTIFACTS AND PRE-COLUMBIAN ANTIQUITY IN COLONIAL MEXICO (1521-1700)

A. More
UCLA

Abstract: If the European Renaissance has largely been defined as the recuperation, interpretation and activation of classical models from Greek and Roman antiquity, this paradigm becomes more complicated in the context of 16th and 17th-century colonial Spanish America. In the first place, in the period immediately following the Spanish conquest, Renaissance classical models imported to the Americas helped to establish the concept of a pagan indigenous past. Once this analogy had been made, authors had to contend with not one but two antiquities albeit not always explicitly articulated in these terms. On the one hand, classical models continued to inform Spanish American writings that participated in the European Republic of Letters. On the other, writings on the Pre-Columbian indigenous past began to envision this, largely independently now of an analogy with Greek and Roman antiquity, as a local antiquity. The status of the Pre-Columbian antiquity in colonial Mexico, then, was dependent upon and distinct from Greek and Roman antiquity. Its most obvious difference derived from the fact that it had to contend with the violence of the conquest that had first established the Pre-Columbian past as archaic. In the second place, in the face of continuing practices of Pre-Columbian belief and ritual, the Spanish state and church worked actively and explicitly to dissolve links between an indigenous present and past. By the early sixteenth century these efforts had created numerous artifacts of the indigenous past, cut off from the institutions that had initially established their significance. These relics were antiquarian, in the sense that Arnold Momigliano has defined it: their authority rested not on their ability to complete but rather to resist narrative meaning. Their singular materiality was that which enabled them to serve as witnesses to a lost and archaic time as well as permitted their circulation far from the ritualistic or communicative praxis in which they were first created. This paper will argue, then, that Pre-Columbian antiquity was constitutionally tied to the material relic, not as a testament to having survived the "shipwreck of time" (in Francis Bacon's words), but as an insurance that the past would remain permanently past. To substantiate this argument, this paper will present a broad overview of the creation, salvation and archivization of Pre-Columbian antiquity in colonial Mexico. First, it will outline the uses of classical antiquity, particularly Roman, to establish the Pre-Columbian past as antique. Second, it will discuss the salvaging of relics by indigenous nobility, under the aegis of state-sponsored genealogical and collective histories, and friars, under the aegis of mendicant histories of evangelization. Third, it will discuss the incorporation of these artifacts into a notion of local antiquity by Creoles (Americans of European descent) during the second half of the seventeenth century, a period that also witnessed violent campaigns of "extirpation of idolatries" intended to eradicate vestiges of Pre-Columbian belief in indigenous communities. It will compare these movements, discussing the ambiguous relationship between colonial violence and the material relic. While focused on the case of colonial Mexico, the impetus of the paper is comparative. To this end, it will theorize the relationships among the material relic and temporal fragmentation, the anecdote and historical narrative, and the constitutional violence of archives.

Biography: Anna More (BA, Harvard 1993; PhD UC Berkeley 2003) is Associate Professor in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese at the University of California, Los Angeles. She specializes in the colonial period of the Iberian Americas with a particular focus on baroque aesthetics, historiography, and race in colonial Mexico. Her first book, Baroque Sovereignty: Carlos de Sigüenza y Góngora and the Creole Archive of Colonial Mexico (University of Pennsylvania Press, forthcoming) examines the relationships among baroque aesthetics, imperial politics, and the formation of a local archive in colonial Mexico. Through readings of the diverse works of the seventeenth-century creole polymath Carlos de Sigüenza y Góngora, together with a variety of Spanish, creole and indigenous writings, she argues that archival politics provided a new form of regional sovereignty during a period of Spanish imperial decline.

Prof. More is currently working on a comparative study of economy and excess in texts from and about the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century Spanish and Portuguese empires. She is interested in how economic metaphors enter into a range of texts from the Iberian baroque, particularly through the repeated figures of barbarism and riches. She also continues to work on the formation of archives, historiography and temporality in Mexico and the baroque and neo-baroque as a language of memory in Latin America.

She was the recipient of the 2007-2008 University of California President's Research Fellowship in the Humanities and of a 2007 Fullbright Research and Teaching Fellowship for Brazil for a project on the symbolic place of quilombolas, communities of runaway slaves, in the Brazilian memory of slavery. She is the co-convenor, together with Ivonne del

Valle (UC Berkeley) of the UC-wide Multicampus Research Group Early Modern Globalization: Iberian Empires/Colonies/Nations.

TABLE-RONDE / ROUND TABLE - L'ANCIEN, LE MODERNE ET LE FAMILIER DANS QUELQUES TEXTES MÉDICAUX EN LANGUE VERNACULAIRE AU XVIIÈME SIÈCLE

A. Bayle
Université Jean Moulin Lyon 3

Abstract: L'accroissement sans précédent au XVI^e siècle des publications imprimées touchant la santé et la médecine s'accompagne d'une réflexion très nourrie sur les choix linguistiques. A partir d'exemples tirés d'ouvrages dûs à des chirurgiens (Paré) ou à des traducteurs de textes de chirurgie et d'anatomie (Canappe, Joubert), ainsi qu'à des médecins empiriques soucieux d'une diffusion populaire de leur savoir (Alessio Piemontese, Fioravanti), nous chercherons à montrer que la question du rapport entre "l'ancien et le moderne" se pose de manière particulière dans ces textes médicaux. Comment la double revendication qui est la leur se négocie-t-elle ? Il s'agit en effet pour eux de revendiquer le legs antique, dans la tradition humaniste, et parfois même de « restaurer » ou de « réparer » un savoir antique déformé par le temps, tout en faisant le choix de la langue vernaculaire dans un souci de vulgarisation scientifique. La question du choix linguistique, de l'illustration de la langue "maternelle" engage nécessairement un débat sur les valeurs qui y sont associées : vulgarisation et sentiment de « familiarité » ont partie liée. Or ce critère du « familier » peut aussi bien être associé à la mâle autorité des sources anciennes canoniques (Hippocrate, Galien) qu'à la modeste figure féminine de la mère, médiatrice, dans le présent, d'un savoir populaire immémorial.

Biography: Bibliographie en attente

COMPARED WITH ANTIQUITY: EARLY CULTURAL STUDIES AND WRITING ON MODERN LIFE

M. De Pourcq
Radboud Universiteit Nijmegen

Abstract: The discipline of cultural studies concentrates on the analysis of contemporary cultural practices for which it is generally dismissive of the canonical benchmarks and points of reference from age-old literary studies. Cultural studies indeed defined itself as a distinctly modernist project, reorienting the study of culture to the present and developing or integrating new approaches in order to address the questions raised by the rapidly evolving new media and the demands of changing audiences. A ground-laying work in this respect is Roland Barthes's 1957 collection of Mythologies which is an effort to capture the defining codes of everyday cultural phenomena like blockbuster movies, fashion, sports and advertising by conceiving and applying a new semiological model. The work is commonly seen as pioneering in writing on modern life, particularly because of its many salient analyses of the upcoming popular and mass culture in the 1950s. Interestingly, these mythologies, although conceptually based on contemporary sociological, psychological and linguistic theories, abound in comparisons with classical antiquity. It becomes all the more interesting when one notices that these comparisons are seldom used as parallels, comparing the same phenomenon in two different epochs in order to gain insight into their respective nature and value. Antiquity here is also used as an archive of theoretical models to account for modern human behaviour and to examine their cultural practices. This means that concepts from the classical tradition work together with the newly established framework of cultural theory.

I will use Barthes's mythologies of modern sports as a case study to identify and assess the modalities and purposes of this type of comparison between the ancient and the modern. Additional material for this case study comes from the posthumously published script L'homme et le sport (2004) which has been written by Barthes for Canadian television in 1960. In this corpus of texts Barthes discusses particular types of sport and sporting events, like the Tour de France, football, wrestling and ice hockey, and dwells upon the more general anthropological meaning of sports today, both for the sportsmen and for their public. In doing so, Barthes ceaselessly compares modern sports with classical epic and classical tragedy rather than drawing parallels with ancient sports like the Olympic games or the gladiatorial combats. It appears that canonical genres from literary studies are used here as a heuristic instrument to interpret contemporary practices of a very different nature. So Barthes brings together notions from recent semiological theories and from the classical tradition to establish a frame for cultural studies. I will try to explain how and why this happens by means of the theory of 'anchoring' (Amos Tversky and Daniel Kahneman). 'Anchoring' refers to a cognitive process in which a familiar scheme or idea gives a common ground to name and interpret a novel phenomenon, which is also the largely unknown practice of analyzing this understudied phenomenon. My point will be that the comparison in this case is a device of anchoring in which the ancient and the modern fulfill a particular role.

Biography: 2012 - Present Assistant Professor (tenure track), Classics and Cultural Studies, Radboud Universiteit Nijmegen 2010 - 2014 Veni Postdoctoral Research Fellow, Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO), Radboud Universiteit Nijmegen 2009 - 2010 Rubicon Postdoctoral Research Fellow, Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO), Radboud Universiteit Nijmegen 2008 - 2009 Postdoctoral researcher, KU Leuven, Classics and Literary Studies 2008 Phd in Classics and Literary Studies, KU Leuven, thesis: Roland Barthes and the Greek desire: tragedy, philosophy, writing (note: the submitted paper is no part of this thesis)

"MAIS COMME IL EST DES ARISTOPHANES VICIEUX, IL EST DES MENANDRES PLEINS DE VERTUS"; : LA COMPARAISON AVEC L'ANTIQUITE DANS LES APOLOGIES DU THEÂTRE AU XVIIIÈME SIÈCLE

C. Thouret
Université Paris Sorbonne

Abstract: Je m'intéresserai à la façon dont, en France, en Angleterre et en Espagne, dramaturges et théoriciens du XVII^e siècle usent de la comparaison du théâtre de leur époque avec celui de l'Antiquité. On verra que la comparaison intervient dans un processus de légitimation et d'élaboration théorique mais aussi de création et de distinction d'avec les contemporains. Si le principe d'imitation gouverne la poésie, il est inséparable d'une relation dynamique au modèle, à travers un jeu de rapports d'identité et d'altérité avec lui. Ces réflexions seront l'occasion d'interroger nos pratiques critiques de comparatistes : en quoi ressemblent-elles à ce comparatisme ? Peuvent-elles / doivent-elles s'en inspirer ?

Biography: Clotilde Thouret

S2: AKHMATOVA ET LES POÈTES EUROPÉENS

LES FIGURES D'AKHMATOVA ET DE TSVETAEVA DANS LE CONTEXTE POÉTIQUE EUROPÉEN

V. Lossky
Paris IV Sorbonne

Abstract: A préciser

Biography: Professeur émérite à l'université Paris IV

SPLEEN ET NOSTALGIE : ANNA AKHMATOVA EN DIALOGUE AVEC BAUDELAIRE

T. Victoroff
Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: A préciser

Biography: Maître de conférence en Littérature comparée à l'université de Strasbourg

LA NATURE DANS L'UNIVERS POÉTIQUE D'AKHMATOVA, RILKE ET ELIOT

N. Schwaller
Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: La poétesse russe Anna Akhmatova nous propose une poésie qui fait écho à la littérature européenne. Sous de nombreux aspects, elle répond aux poètes occidentaux mais elle propose également un renouvellement de leurs thématiques : son traitement de la nature est tout à fait éloquent quant à cette volonté de leur répondre tout en récrivant cette poésie. Au XXe siècle, la nature en Europe a perdu de son éclat, elle est fanée et terne alors qu'à la même époque, Anna Akhmatova fait fleurir une nature verte et foisonnante, tantôt sous la neige, tantôt sous la brise estivale ; doit-on voir là une manière de faire référence au Romantisme du XIXe siècle en cherchant l'inspiration dans le passé de l'Europe ? Faut-il voir la volonté de rompre avec un traitement occidental pessimiste de la nature écrasée par la ville et l'industrie ? Est-ce peut-être encore l'affirmation implicite de l'espoir et de la vie florissante par une poétesse prise dans une société mortifère où l'oppression domine ? C'est à partir de cette réflexion sur la nature et de son traitement spécifique qu'il sera intéressant d'articuler les points communs et les différences entre la poésie européenne (comme chez T. S. Eliot et J. M. Rilke par exemple) et celle d'Anna Akhmatova.

Biography: Nicolas Schwaller est un étudiant de première année de Master ; après avoir terminé ses deux années de Lettres Classiques en Classe Préparatoire aux Grandes Ecoles (Lycée Fustel de Coulanges à Strasbourg), il a intégré le cursus de Lettres Modernes à l'Université de Strasbourg. Il prépare actuellement le concours du CAPES en Lettres Modernes ; il souhaite également passer l'Agrégation de Lettres Modernes et faire un Doctorat en Littérature Comparée. Ses recherches portent essentiellement sur la poésie médiévale, la poésie du XIXe siècle et celle du XXe siècle.

TRANSLATION OF ANNA AKHMATOVA'S STUDIES ON PUSKIN: SIMILARITY OF TWO POETS

D. de Oliveira
Universidade de São Paulo

Abstract: Anna Akhmatova was one of the greatest Russian poets of all times. Together with the Acmeists, she broke the conventions and wrote in a simple and clear way. Although the language was easy to understand, the message underneath it was still complex. Pushkin did the same, but in a different era, and maybe that is why Akhmatova wrote some essays about his poetry. The translation of Anna Akhmatova's studies on Pushkin are very important because of its uniqueness: it is the first time that Akhmatova's essay will be translated to Portuguese.

Biography: Akhmatova, A. (1992). My Half Century (selected prose). New York: Ardis. Akhmatova, A. (1998). Sobraniye ochineny Moscou: Elis Lac. Anderson, N. K. (2004). The Word that Causes Death's Defeat. Londres: Yale University Press. Bródski, J. (1994). Menos que um. São Paulo: Companhia das Letras. Dalos, G. (2000). The Guest from the Future: Anna Akhmatova and Isaiah Berlin. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux. Dobrenko, E. (2011). Twentieth-Century Russian Literature. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. Feinstein, E. (2006). Anna of All the Russias. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. Figes, O. (2007). The Whisperers. New York: Metropolitan Books. Gerstein, E. (2004). Moscow Memoirs: Memories of Anna Akhmatova, Osip Mandelstam and Literary Russia under Stalin. New York: Overlook Hardcover. Mandelstam, Ó. (1922). A Letter About Russian Poetry. Moscou: CCPL. Reeder, R. (1994). Anna Akhmatova: poet and prophet. New York: St. Martin's Press. Schnaiderman, B. (1997). Os escombros e o mito. São Paulo: Companhia das Letras. Volkov, S. (1997). São Peterburgo: uma história cultural. São Paulo: Record.

Friday, July 19, 2013

S1: ORIENT/OCCIDENT: THE COMPLEXITIES OF CROSSING BOUNDARIES

THE PLEASURES OF CROSSING BOUNDARIES

D. Jullien

University of California Santa Barbara

Abstract: Orient/Occident: the pleasures of crossing boundaries I propose to look at pleasure-bound experiences of cultural contact (ie blissful journeys or euphoric moments of travel narratives), a dimension which arguably has been somewhat obfuscated by the prevailing post-Saidian culture of guilt with its focus on dysphoric intercultural contacts between East and West. I intend to explore texts that either narrate successful intersubjective encounters (Montagu's Turkish Embassy Letters are remarkably filled with such instances, whether she is contradicting prevalent European assumptions about Oriental life, or staging elaborate dialogues between Western preconceptions about the East and Eastern preconceptions about the West), or thematize love affairs across ethnic or religious boundaries (Flaubert's ecstatic snapshots of Oriental scenes, along with his literal pursuit of intercultural intercourse, take the notion of jouissance to new heights). Ultimately, I aim to show how these texts about pleasure attempt a displacement, testing and realignment of the aesthetic and ethical boundaries prescribed by the genre along new lines.

Biography: Professor of French & Comparative Literature, UC Santa Barbara

PhD Paris 3 Sorbonne (1987)

Books authored: Proust et ses modèles: les 1001 Nuits et les Mémoires de Saint-Simon (1989); Récits du Nouveau Monde: les voyageurs français en Amérique de Chateaubriand à nos jours (1992); Les Amoureux de Schéhérazade: variations modernes sur les 1001 Nuits (2008)

Research interests: Intertextuality; Marcel Proust; Jorge Luis Borges; East-West relations; 19th-21st century French & comparative literature

"CAPTIVES" AND "HOSTAGES" IN "MEDITERRANEAN" LITERATURE

M. Dobie

Columbia University

Abstract: Madeleine Dobie, Columbia University 'Captives' and 'Hostages' in 'Mediterranean' Literature Since the mid 1960s the hostage has been a key figure of political and cultural relations between East and West, the societies of Europe and North and America and those of the Arab and Muslim world. Prior to this time, however, another figure, that of the captive, embodied the complex inter-relationship of contact and conflict. A flurry of recent historical and literary studies has highlighted the prevalence of piracy and captivity in early modern culture. Discussions of these practices have, in fact, anchored a wider commentary on power relations and cultural boundaries in the early modern Mediterranean. Scholars including Linda Colley, Nabil Matar, Gillian Weiss, Daniel Vitkus, Khalid Bekkaoui and Douglas Burgess have all offered accounts that emphasize in various ways the multilateral distribution of power and the fluidity of borders. This paper explores the literary representation of captivity in the Mediterranean region. Taking a transhistorical perspective it considers how the key tropes and topoi of eighteenth-century French and British 'Barbary captivity' narratives: works by Defoe, Aubin, Lesage, Voltaire and Marmontel among others compare with more contemporary writing by and about hostages, including work by Genet, Seurat, Djébar and Khadra. I explore the shifting political grounds of the depiction of intercultural contact and consider why contemporary scholars have been so intrigued by the historical figure of the captive.

Biography: Madeleine Dobie is associate professor of French and Comparative Literature at Columbia University and director of the Columbia in Paris MA in French Cultural Studies in a Global Context (which in fall 2013 will become an MA in Mediterranean Studies). Her scholarship relates to eighteenth-century French culture and to twentieth and twenty-first century francophone/postcolonial cultures of France, the Maghreb, Lebanon and the French Caribbean. She is the author of Foreign Bodies. Gender, Language and Culture in French Orientalism (Stanford University Press, 2001, 2003) and Trading Places: Colonization and Slavery in Eighteenth-Century French Culture (Cornell University Press 2010). Her re-edition of the novels of Mayotte Capécia, co-authored with Myriam Cottias, will come out in August 2012 with Armand-Colin under the title, Relire Mayotte Capécia : une femme des Antilles dans l'espace colonial français, 1916-1955. She is coeditor of a special issue of Comparative Studies of Africa, South Asia and the Middle East entitled 'France in Africa/Africa(ns) in France' (2005), and of a forthcoming special issue of Romanic Review titled 'Thinking the Postcolonial in French,' co-edited with Emmanuelle Saada (spring 2012). She is the translator of Sarah Kofman, Paroles suffoquées [Smothered Words (Northwestern UP, 1999)], and the author of articles on eighteenth-century and contemporary French and francophone culture. She is currently writing a book on hostage figures in contemporary literature, cinema and philosophy from France, Algeria, Lebanon and the Maghreb.

"IN ORDER TO PROVOKE CONFUSION AMONG CHRISTIANS"

P. Madsen

University of Copenhagen

Abstract: Among Martin Luther's commitments to the fight against the Turkish threats were promotions of two pieces of polemical writings, Ricolto di Monte Croce's Refutation of the Koran from around 1300 and the treatise on The perfidity of the Turks from 1480 by George of Hungary. Both of these authors had direct, personal experience of life among the infidels, and both not only rejected their religious beliefs in defense of Christianity and pondered the ways in which disturbing experiences of increasing Islamic dominance challenged their own Christian frame of interpretation, they did also depict what appear as positive aspects of daily life among the infidels. Crossing the boundaries between what was defined as opposite religious spheres did involve surprisingly positive experience. In his travel account, Liber peregrinationis, Ricolto relates his observations and experience as a missionary in the near Orient, and in order, as he writes, to provoke confusion among Christians he describes the various aspects of perfection among the Saracens. George of Hungary, in his account, brings into the open how close his relations to Sufi rituals became. These examples are not unique.

Biography: Among Martin Luther's commitments to the fight against the Turkish threats were promotions of two pieces of polemical writings, Ricolto di Monte Croce's Refutation of the Koran from around 1300 and the treatise on The perfidity of the Turks from 1480 by George of Hungary. Both of these authors had direct, personal experience of life among the infidels, and both not only rejected their religious beliefs in defense of Christianity and pondered the ways in which disturbing experiences of increasing Islamic dominance challenged their own Christian frame of interpretation, they did also depict what appear as positive aspects of daily life among the infidels. Crossing the boundaries between what was defined as opposite religious spheres did involve surprisingly positive experience. In his travel account, Liber peregrinationis, Ricolto relates his observations and experience as a missionary in the near Orient, and in order, as he writes, to provoke confusion among Christians he describes the various aspects of perfection among the Saracens. George of Hungary, in his account, brings into the open how close his relations to Sufi rituals became. These examples are not unique.

S2 SCIENCES DE LA VIE ET LITTÉRATURE :

LABLIT POUR ADOS: LORSQUE LA BIOLOGIE L'EMPORTE

S. Aymerich, H. Beaulieu, J. Centelles
Université autonome de Barcelone

Abstract: En 1994, l'année même où l'acronyme AILC2 prend naissance et quatre ans avant les recommandations de Beyond 20003 à propos des usages scientifiques de la fiction, Pere Roig4 fonde « Solaris»5, une collection de romans qui s'adresse aux lycéens. Au nombre des auteurs, des écrivains ayant une formation scientifique, à côté d'enseignants des deux grandes branches du savoir –les lettres et les sciences– travaillant le jeune genre de la lablit6 en collaboration.

À la veille de la parution du 30e livre, le moment du bilan de la collection étant arrivé, le docteur en biochimie Josep-Joan Centelles, la linguiste Hélène Beaulieu et l'écrivaine et biologiste Sílvia Aymerich analysent le succès inégal des 29 romans publiés jusqu'à présent.

D'emblée, étant donné que les auteurs à succès ont tous écrit d'autres titres à vente bien plus faible, l'analyse des raisons du choix de la part des lecteurs doit tenir compte d'autres variables. En particulier, celles relatives au sujet traité. En effet, parmi les 7 best-sellers7 de la collection, la biologie s'érige en vedette. L'étude approfondie en révèle les particularités sous-jacentes.

1 Membres de l'équipe de science-in-fiction. e-SOLARIS < <http://blocs.xtec.cat/assaig/francais/>>

2 MARSH, D. et AL. (2001). Profiling European CLIL Classrooms. Languages open Doors. Finland and Netherlands: University of Jyväskylä and European Platform for Dutch Education.

3 Millar, R et Osborne, J. Beyond 2000,

< <http://www.kc.ac.uk/content/1/c6/01/32/03/b2000.pdf> > (1998): p. 17.

4 Pere Roig i Plans (1937-2007) mathématicien, musicien de jazz et pédagogue innovateur barcelonais.

5 "Projecte Solaris" en catalan, "Narraciones Solaris" en espagnol.

6 Sans renoncer à la paternité française du genre, que Arthur B. Evans accorde à Jules Verne, («Verne's "romans scientifiques" should be viewed as what they were and are—i.e., the first important examples of scientific fiction in Western literature, quite distinct from SF. » dans Science-fiction Studies, XV:1 #44 (mars 1988): 1-11), il sera dénommé « science-in-fiction » par le chimiste et écrivain Carl Djerassi au début des années 90. Le néologisme « lablit » postérieurement créé par la biologiste et écrivaine Jennifer Rohn est un terme équivalent.

7 Titres ayant plus de trois éditions tant en catalan qu'en espagnol.

Biography: —AYMERICH, Sílvia est licenciée en sciences biologiques ainsi qu'en philologie anglo-germanique de l'Université de Barcelone, professeure de catalan de l'Université autonome de Barcelone et diplômée en traduction de l'Université de Perpignan. Elle a une maîtrise de l'Open University du Royaume-Uni en enseignement ouvert et à distance et a traduit des nouvelles de divers auteurs anglosaxons en catalan. En tant qu'écrivaine, elle a publié, entre autres, La meva Europa (prix Amadeu Oller, 1985), Berlín Zoo (1991), Els déus de Califòrnia (prix Ciutat d'Elx, 1993), Ulls de Pantera (1994), Gelati! (1998) et Roger d'Orlhac (2009).

LA "VRAIE VIE" : UNE VERITE NOMINALISTE DE LA FICTION LITTÉRAIRE ? ERIC CHEVILLARD, PIERRE SENGES ET JAMES GRAHAM BALLARD

M. Cazaban-Mazerolles
Université de Poitiers

Abstract: Sous l'influence de l'extension croissante du paradigme biologique, l'homme est de plus en plus conduit à se considérer avant tout comme un organisme vivant. Mettre en scène des personnages préoccupés par leur corps, leur organisme et leur vitalité est pour la littérature une manière d'enregistrer cette évolution épistémologique. Toutefois, s'il existe des transferts en termes de modèles, de vocabulaire et de contenus, il ne s'agit pas pour les auteurs dont nous nous proposerons l'étude de décalquer le discours biologique institué, la fiction littéraire disputant ici précisément à la science le privilège de proposer un savoir sur le phénomène vital.

Les récits de Pierre Senges, Eric Chevillard et James Graham Ballard prétendent explicitement délivrer un discours de vérité sur la vie qui s'appuie mais remet aussi en question le propos scientifique en vigueur sur le sujet. Ainsi dans ces trois œuvres contemporaines le phénomène vital n'est-il pas réductible à un matérialisme organique hors le cadre duquel il est toutefois exclu de le considérer. Dans Veuves au maquillage en effet, le narrateur orchestre sa propre vivisection à la recherche du lieu ultime de la force vitale, survivant jusqu'au bout aux amputations successives qu'il fait subir à son organisme selon la méthode minutieuse d'un manuel d'anatomie. La vie menée par Crab, le héros d'Eric Chevillard, défie de même la science en épousant et se soustrayant tour à tour à ses lois, soit en contrevenant à l'unicité de sa vérité. Enfin, le texte de Ballard, qui se concentre sur l'exposition d'une vitalité au contraire hautement fidèle aux normes biologiques et médicales instituées, désigne précisément son propre hors-texte comme le lieu d'une vérité autre sur ce que signifie le fait d'être « réellement vivant ».

Avec, mais aussi contre les sciences du vivant, il s'agit donc à chaque fois de se demander « ce qui mérite le nom de vie ». C'est peut-être cette perspective nominaliste qui autorise la fiction à produire une vérité qui ne se veut pas selon le modèle scientifique descriptive, mais relève d'un autre type de savoir : prescriptif et polémique. Se trouvent alors interrogées la notion scientifique de « vrai », mise en cause dans ses prétentions exclusives et universelles, et une possible littérarité du savoir dont la spécificité reste à définir.

Biography: Marie Cazaban-Mazerolles

LES IDEOLOGIES DU XXE SIECLE EXPOSEES AU MUSEE D'HISTOIRE NATURELLE. HISTOIRE ET BIOLOGIE DANS LE ROMAN DES SOCIETES POSTCOMMUNISTES EN EUROPE

C. Krauss

Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: Vingt ans après la fin des régimes communistes, la fiction tend à faire le point sur les transformations des sociétés d'Europe centrale, à revisiter l'histoire du XXe siècle et son impact sur l'être humain. Or on peut actuellement constater que de nombreux romans établissent un parallèle entre les processus politiques ou sociaux et des processus biologiques. Avec la fin du communisme et l'instauration du capitalisme, la nature semble reprendre son droit et confronter l'être humain à une évolution que le simple darwinisme ne parvient plus, cependant, à expliquer. Les mêmes textes construisent de véritables musées fictionnels du passé que le lecteur peut visiter, mais où il ne trouvera qu'une stabilité illusoire: entre musée d'Histoire naturelle et cabinet de curiosités, ces espaces confirment l'inhumanité des idéologies politiques et le caractère insaisissable d'un environnement toujours en mouvement. Les textes de trois romancières seront au centre de mes réflexions: ceux de l'Allemande Judith Schallansky, de la Polonaise Olga Tokarczuk et de l'Ukrainienne Oksana Zabushko.

Biography: Judith Schallansky: Der Hals der Giraffe: Bildungsroman (Le cou de la giraffe: roman d'éducation), Berlin, Suhrkamp, 2011. Olga Tokarczuk: Prowadz swój plug przez kosci umarłych (Conduisez votre charrue sur les ossements des morts), Kraków, Wydawnictwo Literackie, 2009. Oksana Zabushko: Muzej pokinutih sekretiv (Le Musée des secrets oubliés), Kiev, Fakt, 2009.

AU-DELA DES ORIGINES NATURELLES DE L'EMOTION. MYTHES ET MALENTENDUS DES MODELES LITTERAIRES ET BIOLOGIQUES DE L'AFFECT

N. Manning

Université de Strasbourg,

Abstract: Cette communication, qui s'inscrirait dans le volet Biologie, sciences de la vie et littératures du séminaire « Littérature et savoirs II » du congrès de l'AILC, viserait à explorer les périls d'un modèle qui tente d'identifier et de localiser une origine « naturelle » de l'émotion esthétique. Hérité du roman réaliste du XIXe siècle puis tombé en désuétude, ce modèle a repris sa vigueur avec le développement récent des neurosciences de l'affect. Fondé sur la binarité entre nature et artifice, il produit un modèle du pathos littéraire où l'hyperbole et la litote, l'excès et la carence, l'hystérie et l'automatisme sont seuls issus d'une émotion éternellement en quête d'origines biologiques et corporelles mythiques. Nous proposerons que la neurobiologie ne peut être conçue comme fondement de l'architecture de l'affect littéraire en raison des nombreux paradoxes qui découlent de cette téléologie linéaire. Valoriser l'artificialité de la littérarité émotionnelle, c'est donc extraire celle-ci d'une approche fondée sur l'enracinement de l'émotion dans des expériences « réelles », sensuelles ou empiriques, censées advenir avant toute opération du langage.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Ancien élève de l'École normale supérieure d'Ulm et docteur en littérature comparée de l'Université de Strasbourg, mon étude Rhétorique de la sincérité : la poésie moderne en quête d'un langage vrai paraîtra en 2013 aux Éditions Honoré Champion.

S1: TRANSLATION AT THE BORDERS

TRANSLATION, ADAPTATION, AND METATHEATER

M.A.F. Witt

North Carolina State University

Abstract: Metatheater—briefly defined as theater on theater or theater within theater—offers a particular point of view on the translation/adaptation problem. The model of metatheatrical plays, Shakespeare's Hamlet, has been translated and adapted more than any other work for the stage. Metatheatrical adaptations such as Tom Stoppard's Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead expand and adapt Hamlet's metatheatrical reflection for their own times. Tony Kushner's postmodern translation/adaptation of Pierre Corneille's L'illusion comique offers another example of metatheater on metatheater. Kushner's Illusion constitutes a peculiar case study on the borders of translation in that not one line of Corneille's is actually translated yet the play as a whole stands as a "translation" of L'illusion comique. Jean-Paul Sartre performs an intralingual translation of Alexandre Dumas's Kean, adapting it into a metatheatrical work for the mid-twentieth century. Tom Stoppard's 2004 sparse translation of Luigi Pirandello's wordy Enrico IV exemplifies a transformation of twentieth century metatheater for the twenty-first century.

Translation and adaptation for the theater are complicated by the fact that the work of the translator/adaptor of the text will be further adapted and "translated" by theater directors and actors as well as in some cases cinema or other media directors and producers. I will consider this problem briefly, although my main focus will be on translating and adapting the metatheatrical text. I will argue that in pushing the borders of translation, it may be useful to return to the word's etymology in transfere/translatius. All texts that are successfully "carried across" from one language, era, or genre to another may be considered "translated."

Biography: Mary Ann Frese Witt

Professor Emeritus, Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, North Carolina State University

CRISES IN THE COLONY: FROM LADIPO TO SOYINKA AND SOYINKA AGAIN

J.B. Foster

George Mason University

Abstract: This paper will examine two distinct forms of translation as adaptation that center on Soyinka's English-language play Death and the King's Horseman, the work that was cited by the Nobel Committee when the author was awarded the Prize for Literature in 1986. First, and more conventionally, the play represents Soyinka's version of a specific historical event. In 1946 a British colonial officer intervened to stop the ritual suicide of the King of Oyo's horseman, an event that had already been dramatized by Yoruba playwright Duro Ladipo. The relationship between the two plays can be aligned quite directly with a "sources and analogues" approach to discussing adaptations. One prime example would be Shakespeare's method of reworking and dramatizing extant stories or situations from history.

Less conventional, however, are the parallels between certain aspects of Death and the King's Horseman and Soyinka's own life story as told in Ake: The Years of Childhood, especially in the concluding chapters that focus on unrest in Britain's Nigerian protectorate at the end of World War II, in the case of a market women's strike. The overlap between the play and the autobiography casts light on several often misunderstood aspects of the play, especially Soyinka's attitude toward Nigerian authority figures. There is also the question of which work should be considered the adaptation, since although the autobiography was written after the play, the events that it records must have influenced Soyinka well before his interest in the controversy over ritual suicide. The play and Ake thus can be said to feed off of each other in mutually reflective ways, making each one an adaptation of the other.

Biography: John Burt Foster has a doctorate in comparative literature from Yale and is presently a University Professor at George Mason University. He has written several books and numerous articles on comparative topics, most notably on Nietzsche and modern fiction and on Nabokov's career up to Lolita as a lens on international modernism. This year he holds a research fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities to finish a book on "Transnational Tolstoy:

Between the West and the World." After editing the annual journal of the International Comparative Literature Association for four years, he is now the ICLA's English-language secretary.

RECEPTION THROUGH TRANSLATION : TRACING THE BANGLA TRANSLATIONS OF MACBETH AS A COLONIAL LEGACY

S. Chattopadhyay
JADAVPUR UNIVERSITY

Abstract: Shakespeare was introduced to India by the British rulers and under their guidance found his way into the Indian curriculum. Because of his undisputed literary merit Shakespeare created a permanent niche for himself in the Indian literary scenario, and reached the Indian reader through translations in a variety of Indian languages. Given India's vastness and its linguistic and cultural diversity, I will concentrate only on one of the dominant languages which encouraged the reception of Shakespeare during the colonial regime. As Bengal was the seat of literary and cultural studies at the time, several Bangla translations of Shakespeare were produced. "Macbeth" was a particular favourite who survived the test of time in terms of popularity and continued to be translated till late into the twentieth century. In this study, the focus will be on a comparison between the translations done by Girish Chandra Ghosh (1899) and Utpal Dutt (1975), but the process would remain incomplete without some specific references to Rabindranath Tagore's translation (1875), since he remains the strongest pillar of the Bangla literary scenario even today. This comparison sheds light on how "Macbeth" has been used by these different Bengali translators to serve diverse purposes. The study also addresses how translators are prompted by different policies and agendas in their choice of a text to be translated and how the final exercise involves negotiations with the diverse linguistic and cultural problems offered by the chosen text, as well as the specific requirements of the contemporary age and the target readers/audience. The paper proposes to look at 'translation' as a mode of reception with special reference to the colonial era in Bengal, India.

Biography: Suchorita Chattopadhyay Professor of Comparative Literature Jadavpur University, Kolkata 700032 India E-mail : suchoritachattopadhyay@yahoo.com Telephone : +919831205770

TRADUIRE L'INEXPRIMABLE : LES POUVOIRS DE LA "LANGUE INSTRUMENTALE" DANS LA MORT D'OPHELIE D'HECTOR BERLIOZ

G. Loisel
Université Blaise Pascal

Abstract: La Mort d'Ophélie, ballade d'Hector Berlioz composée en 1842 (une seconde version suivra en 1848), appelle à s'interroger sur les rapports qu'entretiennent adaptation (comprise comme traduction intersémiotique) et traduction. Cette oeuvre est en effet le produit d'une succession d'étapes qui mettent en jeu la « tâche du traducteur ». A l'origine, le récit de la mort d'Ophélie par Gertrude, tel qu'on le trouve dans Hamlet de Shakespeare. Traduite en français par Pierre Le Tourneur, cette scène fait l'objet d'une réécriture en vers, demandée par Berlioz à Ernest Legouvé. Ce premier moment de traduction implique des déplacements, des aménagements, qui sont en même temps une façon de s'approprier la langue de l'autre. Mais en métamorphosant le récit en poème, il s'agit aussi de rendre le texte disponible, ouvert à une recréation, qui sera cette fois-ci la « tâche du musicien ». Quel rapport la musique entretient-elle avec le texte traduit ? L'adaptation se veut-elle le prolongement de la traduction, le complément de celle-ci ? Ou doit-elle être envisagée comme authentique re-traduction, se superposant au texte, quitte à le faire passer au second plan ? Prétend-elle remédier aux manques inhérents à toute traduction ou imposer au texte un surplus de sens ? Les enjeux de la traduction intersémiotique semblent avoir mobilisé l'attention d'Hector Berlioz. Six ans après avoir composé la première version de La Mort d'Ophélie pour piano et voix, le voilà qui remet son ouvrage sur le métier pour le transformer en une ballade pour chœur de femmes et orchestre. Faut-il voir dans ce geste la volonté de proposer une traduction « revue et corrigée » de la scène shakespearienne, une traduction qui tenterait de saisir l'essence du texte shakespearien par un transfert des moyens d'expression du texte à la musique ? Entre traduction et recréation, l'adaptation musicale est l'occasion d'une mise à l'épreuve des pouvoirs de ce que Berlioz nomme la « langue instrumentale ». Loin de s'en tenir à une restitution des propos de Gertrude, la musique s'efforce de dévoiler la réalité sous-jacente au texte : elle rend sensible l'intériorité clivée d'Ophélie, la fêlure qui s'est produite en elle. Par-delà le littéral, le compositeur parvient alors à donner corps à l'inexprimable.

Biography: Ancienne élève de l'Ecole normale supérieure de Lyon, agrégée de Lettres modernes, Gaëlle Loisel est actuellement ATER à l'Université Blaise Pascal. Elle termine une thèse de doctorat, intitulée La Musique au défi du drame : Berlioz et Shakespeare, qui sera soutenue en octobre 2012. Ses travaux portent sur les rapports entre littérature et musique, sur l'histoire et les théories du romantisme, ainsi que sur les questions de traduction, de réception et de transferts culturels dans l'espace européen au tournant du XIXe siècle.

Friday, July 19, 2013

S1: ARAB SPRING AND THE PERSPECTIVES OF ARAB COMPARATIVE SCHOLARSHIP

ARAB SPRING AND CHANGE OF PSEUDO-IMAGES

H.H. Hanafi
Cairo University

Abstract: Arab Spring came as a surprise to Arab people as well as to Arab regimes. It came also as a sudden event for civil and official western observers. It changed the Pseudo-images, the West accumulated and projected on the Muslim world through its modern times, with the beginning of Orientalism till 11 September 2001: Oriental dictatorship, violence, underdevelopment, stagnation, Mentalité primitive, pensée sauvage, Arab mind...etc.

New media and academic writings appeared to correct previous pseudo-images and depict new ones: the right to revolt against dictatorship and corruption, the right to defend individual and collective freedom, honour and social justice. Self-confidence, the role of the youth and revolutionary emergence went beyond classical opposition political parties. Armed forces are not in the hands of the dictator, who fled, imprisoned or killed but the vanguard of the revolutionary masses. Revolution broke the barrier of fear.

Western powers changed their vision of the area. It is better to deal with the people rather than with dictators. Islamic movements are not that evil and can be dealt with as independent new emerging political powers, not as dependants political regimes.

Biography: HANAFI, Hassan Hassanien (Cairo University, Egypt)

LA DÉMOCRATIE ENTRE ISLAM ET ISLAMISME

T. Ben Ameer
L'université de Tunis

Abstract: Nous essayerons dans cet exposé de nous interroger sur l'avenir du printemps arabe et de trouver des réponses aux questions essentielles que pose l'arrivée des Islamistes au pouvoir.

Il s'agit en premier lieu de définir la relation entre Islam en tant que religion et la démocratie et de voir dans quelle mesure les textes fondateurs de cette religion sont compatibles ou non au choix démocratique.

Nous essayerons en second lieu de marquer la différence entre Islam et Islamisme entre religion et courants politiques d'inspiration religieuse. Notre analyse sera axée notamment sur les Ikhwans ou frères musulmans et les mouvements salafistes et leurs visions de l'Islam en tant que message divin d'une part et en tant qu'histoire et civilisation d'autre part. Cette introduction nous permettra d'aller au vif du sujet et de dévoiler les positions respectives de ces courants politiques vis-à-vis des libertés des droits de l'homme et de la démocratie et de signaler les étapes qu'ils ont pu franchir sur le plan de leur évolution idéologique.

On s'attardera en dernier lieu sur les résultats éventuels de l'interaction entre les islamistes et le pouvoir et l'incidence de cette interaction sur leurs formations politiques et sur l'avenir du printemps arabe d'une manière générale.

Biography: BEN AMEUR, Taoufik (L'université de Tunis)

LA STRUCTURE DU DISCOURS POLITIQUE DURANT LE PRINTEMPS ARABE, ÉTUDE DE DEUX CAS : PRO-LIBÉRAL ET PRO-ISLAMIQUE

R. Saleh
Université de Helwan

Abstract: La presse égyptienne joue un rôle primordial dans la formulation de l'opinion publique ainsi que celle des élites. Durant la période du printemps arabe les esprits étaient prêts à accepter les différentes perspectives du changement. Celles-ci peuvent se ressembler, être en parallèle ou même s'opposer. En effet, le rôle de la presse a été effectué sur deux axes : le premier est la sélection des informations et le deuxième est le discours adressé à des niveaux particuliers des lecteurs.

Notre recherche vise à examiner la structure du discours politique durant le printemps arabe à travers deux séries d'articles de deux écrivains très connus et très engagés dans le processus révolutionnaire. Ces deux écrivains appartiennent à deux tendances différentes : Hassan Nafaa, un pro-libéral et Fahmi Howeidi, un pro-islamique. Nafaa est un professeur de sciences politiques à l'Université du Caire; il joue un rôle principal dans les organisations de la société civile. Il était l'ex- organisateur de l'Assemblée nationale du changement, organisation militante qui a lancé l'initiative de la lutte contre la succession du fils du Président à la tête du régime. Howeidi est un journaliste star dans le domaine du média. Dans ces articles, il se penche sur les faits divers pour diagnostiquer le bouleversement des valeurs dans la société égyptienne en usant d'arguments pertinents, en marge des versions officielles des faits et événements socio-politiques des médias partisans.

En dépit de leur critique de l'ostracisme du régime égyptienne qui a provoqué la marginalisation des couches moyennes et le déséquilibre entre classes supérieures et classes démunies, les deux écrivains adoptent deux chemins différents. Le discours de Nafaa révèle les fautes que le conseil militaire commit durant la période transitionnelle. Il souligne, aussi, l'attitude "opportuniste" des frères musulmans. Quant au discours de Howeidi, il essaye de rassurer le peuple égyptien en mettant en lumière les avantages du régime islamique et en attaquant à la fois l'ancien régime et les élites laïques et libérales.

Notre recherche traite les principales figures des deux discours : les figures de sens (le pôle métaphorique, le pôle métonymique), les figures de mots (les jeux lexicaux, les jeux sur les sonorités et sur les ressemblances formelles) et les figures de pensée (L'ironie et les procédés déconcertants).

La recherche examine, aussi, la signification des termes différentes chez Nafaa et Howeidi à titre d'exemple : La révolution, La démocratie, La justice sociale, Les élections justes, etc..

Enfin ce travail tente d'évaluer le rôle du média, ses impacts ainsi que ses limites.

Biography: SALEH, Rasha (Université de Helwan, Egypte)

DISCUSSIONS

S2 STRUCTURE, FORM AND MATERIALITY IN COMICS

ASSEMBLING COMICS

R.P. Cortsen

University of Copenhagen

Abstract: This paper is concerned with the way meaning is produced in comics and thus reflects on very general questions of structure, form and materiality. In considering comics as an analytical object, I want to stress an approach that is not preoccupied with the reader's active production of content nor with the author/artist's inscription and intention. Moving away from some of the theory in comics studies which consider comics a language, a medium, a genre or a specific kind of literature, this approach actively focuses not on a definition of comics but rather makes a gesture towards opening comics to a potentially much more fluid field that is more concerned with the mechanisms of comics than its boundaries. The intent is to conceptualize comics as a network made up of elements that are connected in different ways and to examine how these connections work. This concept is founded on the theory of comics as network (Groensteen 1999) but furthers this by examining comics and its components as a network that can be comprised of components at various levels of scale from the verbal/visual elements of caption, speech balloons and images to the much bigger elements of panels, pages and albums. This is a non-hierarchical approach which does not privilege neither text nor image as the prime component of comics. In thinking about comics as a virtual network than can be actualized in many shapes and sizes, this paper uses Manuel DeLanda's assemblage theory (DeLanda 2006) as a way of addressing relations between the components of comics. By transferring the way DeLanda has developed the thoughts of Deleuze and Guattari from the concrete theorizing of social structure to the abstract theorizing of the potential in comics this points to some of aspects of comics are not part of a linear presentation of narrative structures. Through an analysis of various examples from comics this paper examines how the connections made between the components of comics can fall along three axes that are interconnected and help shape the way comics are constructed. These axes describe mechanisms of expression and materiality, stabilizing and destabilizing and coding and decoding which are all central capacities that the components of comics employ in their relation to other components. Essential to "comics as assemblage" is the fact that the components of an assemblage can be connected to other components across an assemblage and also be connected to other assemblages. The concept of assemblage is a dynamic one which potentially can connect and disconnect continuously, creating new assemblages, making them smaller or bigger and reconfiguring them in new combinations. Inspired by Thierry Groensteen's concept of tressage (Groensteen 1999), comics as assemblage traces the connections that can be made throughout a work and how these might be dependent upon resemblance, repetition, color, style or other ways of connecting and disconnection elements. Meaning emerges through the various processes that shape the assemblages of comics and this paper maps how these connecting and disconnecting mechanisms might be conceptualized as a virtual possibility which can be actualized in various ways. Works cited DeLanda, Manuel. 2006. A new philosophy of society: Assemblage theory and social complexity. London: Continuum. Groensteen, Thierry. 1999. Système de la bande dessinée. 1. éd. Paris: Presses universitaires de France.

Biography: Rikke Platz Cortsen is a PhD scholar at the University of Copenhagen's Department of Arts and Cultural Studies working on a thesis concerning time and space in comics. She has published several articles on various aspects of comics scholarship and has presented papers on many international conferences. Her most recent publication is "Thirty-two Floors of Disruption – Time and Space in Alan Moore's 'How Things Work Out'" in Crossing Boundaries in Graphic Narrative: Essays on Forms, Series and Genres (ed. Jake Jakaitis and James F. Wurtz), McFarlane, 2012. She is an editor of SJoCA – Scandinavian Journal of Comic Art and a founding member of Nordic Network for Comics Research – NNCORE.

HOW ICONOGRAPHIC ELEMENTS CAN PLACE A STORY INTO TIME AND SPACE: A COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS AGAINST NARRATIVE TECHNIQUES

R.S. Bronzatto

Universidade Presbiteriana Mackenzie

Abstract: This paper aims to demonstrate how iconographic elements are able to place a narrative into time and space. The first part of this work will explain the regular techniques used by literary writers to create the ambience and to position a story in time. Several examples extracted from celebrated works like Bram Stoker's Dracula, for instance, will be analyzed. The second part will be focused on the techniques and resources employed by comic book artists in order to "compensate" for the absence or limited use of words and narrative descriptions. The third and final part will be a critic comparison between a classic narrative, "1984" from Orson Wells, and its comic equivalent "V for vendetta", from Alan

Moore and David Lloyd.

Biography:

Roberta Bronzatto has a degree in Translation - English and French from Universidade Presbiteriana Mackenzie, and worked as translator for almost 14 years. Her interest in Graphic Narrative Research began at this period, and her graduation paper was related to this area. In 2005 she attended a 5 months course of in Graphic Narrative Studies at Gibiteca Henfil, in the Centro Cultural Vergueiro, in São Paulo, a course that resulted in a fanzine called Putzgrila, issued in the 2006 edition of São Paulo's "Nuite Blanche", with some texts and strips written by her. She was also the Editor in Chief of "Garagem Hermética", an independent comic magazine that participated in the 2011 Alternative Selection of the "Fetival Internacional de la Bande Dessinée" in Angoulême. Today, she works as Linguist Specialist for Paypal Brasil in São Paulo, Brazil. Links: http://garagehermetic.blogspot.com.br/2006_05_01_archive.html
<http://www.bdangouleme.com/competition/S%C3%A9lection%20Alternative/17> <http://sociosltida.blogspot.com.br/>
<http://impulsohq.com/tag/roberta-bronzatto/> <http://www.bigorna.net/index.php?secao=entrevistas&id=1190345488>
<http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-7759907277052051451>

THE DIGITAL LIFE OF COMICS

A. Piepoli

Università di Macerata

Abstract: The development of the Internet technologies has been changed and changing the way to communicate between persons, and several of these changes have affected other mass media. The implications on comics are many. The use of blogs and social networks by both authors and readers of comics has influenced a digital evolution of the medium. At the same time, just when the world economic crisis also has an impact on the market of printed comics, we witness a true explosion of creativity on the web. The multimedia capabilities of computers are used in many different ways, for example to explore new territories of Sequential Art or to realize projects starting from the web in order to land on the printed page.

The paper aims to focus on some aspects of the evolution of comics in the "digital world". Starting once more from the concept of comics as a complex form of static multimedia pieces of communication using verbal and pictorial elements and with peculiar rules of linear reading, the presentation shall highlight not so much the process of making stories, but rather the expressive solutions employed, the changes in some rules of reading, the development of the network of co-referentiality in the comic communicates and the new relationship between author and reader.

Biography: Angelo Piepoli is PhD in Theory of Information and Communication. He studies Semiotic Textology of multimedia communicates and History and techniques of comics. He is a research collaborator of the Department of Social change, legal institutions and communication, holds seminars in the course of Semiotics and collaborates with the magazine Heteroglossia at the University of Macerata

S1: LE MOUVEMENT SYMBOLISTE ET LES MALADIES MENTALES

BAUDELAIRE ET LES ALIENISTES

F. Meltzer

The University of Chicago

Abstract: Il y a eu, récemment, des chercheurs qui se sont penchés sur la question de l'aliénisme au XIXe siècle en France (voir, par exemple, "Paradigmes de l'âme," colloque ayant eu lieu à la Sorbonne Nouvelle en 2010). Mais si nous avons des études approfondies sur Baudelaire et le mal, il n'y a que très peu de travail sur Baudelaire et l'idée de la folie. Dans "Assommons les pauvres," Baudelaire fait référence à Lélut et Baillarger, deux aliénistes de l'époque. Le poète rentre donc dans la discussion de la folie possible de Socrate, pensant -- suivant la définition des deux aliénistes-- la partager. Je voudrais commencer par rappeler l'importance de Joseph de Maistre pour Baudelaire-- l'idée du péché originel en particulier, comme base qui "explique tout" d'après Maistre. Puis le texte "Assommons les pauvres" s'impose. Socrate, nous dit le poète, avait un "Démon prohibiteur," tandis que lui, Baudelaire, possède un "Démon d'action." Avec beaucoup d'ironie, le poète s'imagine muni d'un "brevet de folie" avec Socrate, signé par les aliénistes. En effet, la question de la folie de Socrate est grande à l'époque, et Baudelaire connaît ces débats. La question se pose: quelles sont les données de ces débats? Que pouvons nous apprendre, en les considérant, sur l'idée de la folie et de la maladie mentale qui forment un contexte pour Baudelaire, et qui détermine sa propre vision de lui-même ?

Biography: Françoise Meltzer, Professor, University of Chicago, USA

LE ROMAN PARANOÏAQUE SYMBOLISTE: FIODOR SOLOGOUB ET ANDREÏ BIÉLY

O. Skonechnaia

Institute of World Literature

Abstract: L'objectif de ce rapport consiste dans la mise en lumière et la description d'une certaine forme littéraire que nous définissons comme «roman paranoïaque»: il s'agit de grandes oeuvres en prose de Fiodor Sologoub, Rêves lourds et Démon mesquin ainsi que de celles d'Andreï Biély, La Colombe d'argent, Pétersbourg, Carnets d'un toqué, Moscou. Le roman paranoïaque reproduit le processus de connaissance déficiente, réalisée par le héros et transformée par l'auteur en une réalité délirante, c'est-à-dire romanesque. L'objet de notre analyse est la stratégie symboliste d'utilisation d'un certain modèle clinique dans le but de lui donner un sens métaphysique, mystique, mythologique, esthétique et de la transmuier en une poétique.

Biography: Dr. Olga Skonechnaya, Russie

FOLLIES AND MADNESS: VERHAEREN AND REMBRANDT AT THE TURN OF THE CENTURY

A. Alhadef

The University of Colorado at Boulder

Abstract: Émile Verhaeren (1855-1916), essayist, poet and art critic during the Belgian renaissance wrote a lengthy essay on Rembrandt Van Rijn at the turn of the century, a book-length study that was well known in its day, but has since long been forgotten. One may wonder why Verhaeren's work has not found a place in Rembrandt studies. The answer however may be fairly obvious, for Verhaeren's Rembrandt (1901) is not so much about Rembrandt, a Dutch artist who lived in Leiden in the 17th century, as it is about an artist, Belgian or French, who lived in Brussels or Paris at the turn of the century. In sum, my thesis states that Verhaeren's Rembrandt is as much about Verhaeren and his symbolist cohorts as it is about Rembrandt.

According to Verhaeren, Rembrandt, freed from the customary cares of life—unaware of them in fact—was seen as a solitaire, a being lost in a capricious inner world of his own making. His peers, feared his behavior as they feared anyone who lived outside the norm. Rembrandt, Verhaeren emphasizes, lived in a world of dreams (il vit dans un monde de rêve), dictated by illusions, where la fantaisie presides over art and life. As a visionnaire whose eccentricities violated decorum, Verhaeren praised his folly, labeling him un fou. Focusing on Verhaeren's emphasis on Rembrandt's non-conformist ways, I argue that Verhaeren's reading of Rembrandt is colored by his own art criticism of his fin de siècle confrères, aesthetes known for their caprices.

Friday, July 19, 2013

My paper then posits the argument that Émile Verhaeren's 1901 study of Rembrandt is best understood in the context of late nineteenth century aesthetics. Where his previous biographers, Fromentin, Hippolyte Taine, Blanc, Thoré-Burger and others, disparaged his singular life-style, Verhaeren applauded it. In sum, where Rembrandt's image had been denigrated by his eighteenth and nineteenth century biographers, Verhaeren's detailed study rehabilitates the master from Leiden viewing his capricious behavior as a liberating act, one echoed by the eccentric behavior of his own peers in Belgium and France—naturally, the names of Fernand Khnopff, Rops, Ensor, Rimbaud, Verlaine, Mallarmé and others come immediately to mind. In effect Verhaeren's Rembrandt says that he who had painted the Night Watch, an idiosyncratic canvas if ever there was one, was in fact a fellow Symbolist, a man whose aberrant behavior would have been warmly embraced in Verhaeren's own Brussels.

Biography: Albert Alhadeff, Ph.D.
University of Colorado, Boulder

S2 MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE

THE HISTORICAL AND SPATIAL FRAME OF LITERATURE AND MIGRATION IN EUROPE

S. Vlasta

University of Vienna

Abstract: The proposed paper is part of the international project “A Comparative History of Literatures in European languages/Histoire compare des literatures en langues européennes”, directed by Fridrun Rinner and Franca Sinopoli and sponsored by the International Comparative Literature Association ICLA/AILC. In my paper, I will give an outline of the development of literature and migration in contemporary Europe starting with an overview of the history of literature and migration in Europe from World War II, focussing particularly on the years from the 1950s onwards. The paper will look at the institutional approaches and reception of literature of migration, in particular with regard to a colonial or non-colonial past of the national context in question. Also the critical reception as well as the scholarly approach will change depending on the socio-historical/cultural context of the authors and their texts, an aspect which will be taken account of in the proposed paper. In order to be true to the project’s concept, the paper does not intend to depict this historical and institutional framework on a country-by-country basis, but, rather, it attempts at making obvious the big commonlines which have developed over the past 60 years. Like the planned chapter of the bigger project, the paper will be structured into three parts, i.e. Empirical approach, Critical and institutional approach, Scholarly approach. This paper will be given in English.

Biography: Sandra Vlasta – CURRICULUM VITAE Mag. Dr. Sandra Vlasta Date and place of birth 1976, Mödling, Austria Current position Senior Scientist at the Department of Comparative Literature, University of Vienna Contact University of Vienna, Department of Comparative Literature, Sensengasse 3a Room 05.03, 1090 Vienna, Austria. +43-1-4277-43078 / sandra.vlasta@univie.ac.at 1. Education 2008 PhD in Comparative Literature, University of Vienna Titel of the dissertation: „A Comparison of Literature in the Context of migration in English and German” 2002 Magister-Diploma in Comparative Literature and English Studies, University of Vienna 2. Academic appointments as of 2008 Senior Scientist, Department of Comparative Literature, University of Vienna 2007/2008 Lecturer, Department of Comparative Literature, University of Vienna 2005-2006 Austrian Lector (ÖK) at the Department of Germanic Studies, Trinity College Dublin / Ireland 2004-2005 Austrian Lector (ÖK) at the Corso di Laurea “Lingue e Comunicazione Internazionale”, Università degli Studi Roma Tre in Rome / Italy 2002-2004 Language Assistant at Stamford High School in Stamford, Lincolnshire/Great Britain Publications (selection) Sandra Vlasta, ed. with Barbara Agense and Christine Ivanovic, Die Lücke im Sinn. Vergleichende Studien zu Yoko Tawada, Tübingen: Stauffenburg Verlag, forthcoming. Sandra Vlasta, “Globale ethnoscaapes’ in deutsch- und englischsprachiger Literatur im Kontext von Migration”. In: Balogh, András F.; Mitterbauer, Helga (Hg.), Gedächtnis und Erinnerung in Zentraleuropa. Wien: Praesens Verlag, 2011, 245-258. Sandra Vlasta, “Passage ins Paradies? – Werke zugewanderter AutorInnen in der österreichischen Literatur des 21. Jahrhunderts”. In: Boehringer, Michael; Hochreiter, Susanne (eds.), Zeitenwende: Österreichische Literatur seit dem Millennium, 2000-2010. Vienna: Praesens Verlag, 2011, 102-118. Sandra Vlasta, ed. with Michaela Bürger-Koftis and Hannes Schweiger, Polyphonie. Mehrsprachigkeit und literarische Kreativität. Vienna: Praesens Verlag, 2010. Sandra Vlasta, “Mehrsprachigkeit in der Literatur und das Entwerfen alternativer historischer Perspektiven – Vladimir Vertlib’s Erzählung ‚Mein erster Mörder’ als ‘touching tale’”. In: TRANS: Internet-Zeitschrift für Kulturwissenschaften 17 (2010), http://www.inst.at/trans/17Nr/5-5/5-5_vlasta%20.htm. Sandra Vlasta, “Das Ende des ‘Dazwischen’ – Ausbildung von Identitäten in Texten von Imran Ayata, Yadé Kara und Feridun Zaimoglu”. In: Schmitz, Helmut (ed.), Von der nationalen zur internationalen Literatur. Transkulturelle deutschsprachige Literatur und Kultur im Zeitalter globaler Migration. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 2009, 101-116. Review of Horst, Claire: Der weibliche Raum in der Migrationsliteratur. Irena Brezna – Emine Sevgi Özdamar – Libuše Moníková. Berlin: Hans Schiler, 2007; published in: Mitterbauer, Helga; Scherke, Katharina (eds.). Moderne Kulturwissenschaftliches Jahrbuch Jahrgang 4 (2008). Innsbruck: Studienverlag, 2009, 268-269. “Muttersprache, Vatersprache, Bildersprache – Mehrsprachigkeit und familiäre ‚Sprachbande’ im Kontext von Migration in Anna Kims Die Bilderspur”. In: Germanistik in Ireland, Yearbook 2007, Konstanz: Hartung-Gorre Verlag, 2007, 29-45. “Vom Zusatznutzen des Germanistikstudiums – das Transferable Skills Projekt im Rahmen des Germanistikstudiums am Trinity College Dublin”. In: Jahrbuch Theorie & Praxis 2006, Innsbruck: Studienverlag, 2007, 189-199. Academic Award 2007 PhD Award for Migration Studies 2007 granted by the Austrian Academy of Sciences

MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE: FROM PERIPHERAL TO POINT(S) OF CONVERGENCE

A. Eubanks

Johnson C. Smith University

Abstract: On 9 and 10 December 1991, the European Citizen was created during the Maastricht European Council. Since then, Europeans of the member states of the European Union (EU) have witnessed the introduction of a common currency, and the institutional, administrative, and civic Europeanization of Europe characterizes an arguably new Europe for the new millennium. In contrast to the administrative and civic Europeanization, there are many and varied debates about what it means or may mean to be European, who gets to be European and who does not, and about European culture. In this context, the comparative study of literature of migrants can be productive. Although somewhat different for the individual EU member states, the history of literature of migrants and its reception have unfolded in similar ways. In addition to the creation of a conflicted relationship between national and migrant literatures, terms like the German Gastarbeiterliteratur have not only created a separate and distinct category for migrant literature, but have also served to limit its authors to a single characteristic (they are 'guest workers') and, by extension, the content of the works to a few themes such as feelings of loneliness, loss of home, a sense of isolation, etc. Significantly, what dominated the discourse about migrant literature was the concern with themes rather than with its vehicle, i.e., language. The literary productions of migrants during the past two decades invite comparison of these works to explore the extent and degree to which they are contributions to the debates about 'European identity'. As basis for comparison serve examples from diverse texts and authors: May Ayim's Blues in schwarz weiss (Afro-German, 2003), Cristina Ali Farah's Madre Piccola (Italian and Somali, 2007), Jadelin Gangbo's Rometta e Giulileo (Italian-Congolese, 2001), Léonora Miano's Afropean Soul et autres nouvelles (Franco-Cameroonian, 2008), Yoko Tawada's Das nackte Auge (Japanese-German, 2004), and Feridun ZaimoĀylu's Kanak Sprak (Turkish-German, 1995). The authors are different in terms of both their (or their parents') countries of origin and in terms of their current homes and languages. The intentional reference to such variegated works serves to illuminate that despite the authors being subject to different first and second languages, individual life stories and embeddedness in different local/national contexts (and challenges) in their current place of residence, they also have in common the translinguistic character of their texts. Importantly, the translinguistic aspects of the texts do not constitute the encounter (or even clash) between two given cultures (homeland and country of residence). Instead, each of the texts presents instances of the linguistic and creative potential when any two cultures 'meet' to inform each other and, in the process, both emerge as changed. One of the effects on the (respectively indigenous) reader/recipient of the text or texts is defamiliarization with his or her native language; she or he is thus invited not only to encounter something (another culture/country) or someone (the narrator) Other but to also experience the assumed 'normal' (his or her native language, i.e., the language in which the author writes the text at hand) as Other. In this sense, each of the very different texts in different languages all 'teach' that alterity is not far away, but that it exists where one might not expect it (at home, in one's native language). The creative, aesthetic and profound play with language may not bring anyone closer to answering questions about 'European identity' (and may indeed raise new questions in addition to existing ones). However, the turn to its constitutive medium, i.e., language, clearly outlines the challenges that are implicit in recent migrant literature across Europe: whether or not there can or will be an answer to what constitutes European identity, it is necessary that Europe acknowledges its current reality (as a consequence of its history) and reimagines itself as the heterogenous space it has always been.

Biography: Adelheid R. Eubanks is a native of Cologne, Germany, and came to the United States to pursue graduate studies. She received an M.A. in Germanic Languages and Literatures and a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature and French from Washington University in St. Louis, MO. Adelheid Eubanks has taught and done administrative work at Coker College in Hartsville, SC, from 1995 through 2008, and has joined Johnson C. Smith University, a historically black institution, in January of 2009. She has presented at conferences and published on a multitude of subjects. In addition to her education in Germany and the United States, she has worked or studied in Paris, France, Oslo, Norway, Shanghai, China, Quebec City, Canada, and Rome, Italy. She regularly conducts study abroad experiences with students and teaches courses on literature as well as German, French, Italian, and Latin. Research interests include globalization, global education, and identity in the context of the European Union.

NEW VOICES: A HEGEMONIC STRUGGLE OVER WHAT EXACTLY IS MULTICULTURAL LITERATURE

A. Willems
Universiteit Gent

Abstract: Nye Stemmer: a hegemonic struggle over what exactly is multicultural literature

An Willems, University of Ghent

Supervisor: Wolfgang Behschnitt In the past decade, the debate on whether or not Denmark has a multicultural literature worthy of that name has raged, both in fictional writings and in Danish media. This brings up the question of what exactly is multicultural literature, a question also posed in the anthology Nye Stemmer (New Voices). Published in 2007, this was the result of a literary contest organized by Berlingske Tidende and publishing house Gyldendal, which reached out to aspiring writers with 'a different ethnic or cultural background than Danish'. In my presentation, I will show how the anthology Nye Stemmer, a combination of the winning fictional texts and interviews with their authors, follows a tradition of previous anthologies of so-called Danish multicultural literature in establishing its own definition of multicultural literature. With tools from the discourse theory developed by Laclau and Mouffe and later finetuned by Žižek and Torfing, these anthologies' introductions, their selection of texts and their presentation of the authors will be scrutinized to reveal their part in the hegemonic struggle over a proper definition of multicultural literature. I will show how the different anthologies' editors create chains of equivalence by remaining vague in their descriptions of these works and how any 'monocultural' literature functions as a constitutive outside, a contrast to what is considered multicultural.

Biography: Education and Credentials General Overview § Master Studies in Journalism

- Erasmus Hogeschool Brussels, 2011
- graduated cum laude § Postgraduate Studies in Linguistics and Literature – Main Subject: German
- University of Ghent, 2010
- graduated magna cum laude § Master of Linguistics and Literature – Main Subject: French – Scandinavian Studies
- University of Ghent, 2009
- graduated summa cum laude (83,8 %) § Bachelor of Linguistics and Literature – Main Subject: French – Swedish
- University of Ghent, 2008
- graduated magna cum laude (80 %) Relevant Courses § Multicultural Literature in Sweden: University of Ghent, 2009 § Nordic Area Studies: University of Ghent, 2008 § Danish Linguistics, Literature and Culture: University of Ghent, 2008 § History and Culture of Scandinavia: University of Ghent, 2007 § Language and Psychology: University of Stockholm, 2007 § Literary Canon and National Identity: University of Stockholm, 2007 Research Experience § Master's Thesis Project: Tänk om man fört oss bakom ljuset – Fakta och fiction I det Enquistiska författarskapet (June 2009)
- studied the complex yet intriguing network of intertextual references in the works of the celebrated Swedish author Per Olov Enquist, in specific regard to his recent autobiography § Doctoral Thesis (in progress): Looking for 'new voices' but exactly how new?
- multilingualism and language strategies in migration literature: a comparative study of the Swedish and Danish situation in the first decade of the 21st century
- Future publications Introduction to Mieke Desmet's translation of a short story by Jonas Hassen Khemiri in nY, a Dutch literary magazine (expected end 2012)

S2 EARLY MODERN CONSTRUCTIONS OF EUROPE

THE SURVIVAL OF MEDIEVAL ANTIQUITY: EUROPEAN IDENTITIES AND THE EARLY MODERN TRANSFORMATIONS OF THE "ROMAN ANTIQUE" TRADITION

C. Pascual-Argente

Rhodes College

Abstract: The roman antique is often narrowly approached as a medieval French literary genre that did not survive beyond the thirteenth century. However, if we take a European perspective, it becomes clear that narratives set in antiquity and retelling the key classical stories of Troy, Thebes, Eneas, Apollonius of Tyre, or Alexander the Great, to name only the most prominent ones, continued not only to be copied and illustrated but also reworked and rewritten throughout the continent, in almost every European language, well into the early modern period. Narratives directly or indirectly derived from the old romans antiques are in fact among the first romance books to be printed during the incunabula period and beyond. The tradition of roman antique, as Barbara Nolan has called it, had in my view a crucial role as part of the process that historian Robert Bartlett has called "the Europeanization of Europe," providing European elites with a shared cultural memory of the classical past. In this paper, I propose to consider the influence of the old genre of roman antique, as the traditional signifier of a European elite identity, during the crucial period represented by the second half of the fifteenth century. Specifically, I will look at the publication and circulation of narratives deriving from the roman antique tradition during the incunabula period in Germany, France, and Spain. What are the links between the books in different languages and how do they compare with the early roman antique's diffusion? What is the public targeted by these incunabula and how is it different or similar to the public of the roman antique tradition? And more importantly, how do the changes undergone by these narratives, their publics, and their diffusion, affect the construction of a European identity to which these tales had been traditionally committed?

Biography: I received my Ph.D. in Spanish in 2010 from Georgetown University with a dissertation describing the construction of a collective memory of classical antiquity in thirteenth- and fourteenth-century Castile through the interaction of word and image. Recent publications include articles on the Castilian translation of Alain Chartier's Quadrilogue invectif, word and image in the Libro de Alexandre, and gender and genre in Castilian epics. I am currently Assistant Professor at the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures, Rhodes College.

WHOSE MARGIN? ROMANCES, THE MEDITERRANEAN, AND THE IDEA OF EARLY MODERN EUROPE

G. Stanivukovic

Saint Mary's University

Abstract: In this paper I will explore literary and cultural ideas of the margin and the marginal in early modern understanding and representations of Europe by examining a selection of prose romances set in both fictional and real European lands and by exploring depictions of Europe in the maps of the Mediterranean produced around the same time when the romances were printed. As a way of introduction I will begin by discussing a map from the British Library (Add MS 31318B), known as the 'The Catalan Map of Mansa Musa', produced by Jacopo Rusi for the ruler of Mali around 1525. This map is a striking illustration of the idea of Europe and the Ottoman Empire depicted as a joint space before borders and the idea of the state started to be represented in maps in the 18th century. It also shows Europe depicted as subordinate to the representation of the Ottoman (northern) Africa within the Eastern Mediterranean, seen from the Islamic angle. This map is an instance of the reversal of the centre and the margin in early modern Europe. At the map's visual and symbolic centre lies Sicily as an important focal point of the clash of powers which fought for dominance in Europe. As a symbolic clasp, Sicily binds Europe's South to the Ottoman African North into one physical and heuristic space within a map that blends the coastal precision of mariners' charts with figuration decoration derived from medieval world maps. The upside-down position of the Afro-European Mediterranean, showing Northern Africa and the South of Europe above the North-West centre of Europe illustrates how dominant the Ottoman Africa was at that time and how the South was favoured over the West and certainly over the North of Europe, whose borders fade into the pale yellow parchment of the map. Spatial and symbolic multiplicities and reversals within the Mansa Musa map have their fictional correlative in prose romances of the 16th and 17th centuries, fictions in which Sicily features as the island around which centres the plot of romances, involving the valorous deeds of the Western errant knight in his clash with the Saracen. In prose romances, Europe is imagined as a network of small lands of fragile stability, as territories which create the margin that separates the land of the Saracen from the land of Christians, in the distance. That all acts of chivalry take place either in the Ottoman Africa or in the lands of southern Europe and the Eastern Mediterranean suggests that the importance of political and state power of the European states is imagined as being dependent on the ability of the margin to defend Europe. From the revisions of the Amadis de Gaule cycle of romances in the 1580s and 1590s, to 16th-century English and Scottish renderings of the medieval romances like Clariodus and The Seven Wise Masters, to such romances like Richard Johnson's The Seven Champions of Christendom. and the 17th-century anonymous Oceander--prose fiction approaches the idea of the commonwealth of Christian states as something that is enabled by the sensitive but important margin of Europe. Spatial and temporal dimensions of romances become also social and cultural dimension within the geographical multiplicity of smaller lands and kingdoms of Europe. I argue that, despite the high level of fantasy, romances are texts in which the concepts of the centre and the margin, Europe and the world outside it, are explored and contested in terms that enhance rather than obscure the idea of Europe as a composite of lands. Since romances violate decorum and largely do not depend on mimesis for the power of their narrative, romances became the ideal genre for the construction of new hierarchies within, and and for the ideas about, Europe in the early modern period.

Biography: Goran Stanivukovic is Professor of English literature at Saint Mary's University in Halifax, Canada. He has published widely on Shakespeare and non-Shakespearean drama, Ovid and the body in the early modern period, prose fiction and the Eastern Mediterranean, gender and queer early modern literature, and contemporary re-envisioning of the Renaissance.

CONSTRUCTION OF ENGLISH NATIONAL IDENTITY IN EARLY MODERN ENGLISH TRAVEL WRITING

H. Tekdemir
Bogazici University

Abstract: One of the important historical developments in 16th century England is the geographical expansion and the colonization of the New World together with various other European nations. In this paper, I will firstly discuss the main characteristics of 16th century English travel/colonial writing. Who traveled to the Americas, with what purpose? What parts of the new continent were explored and later colonized? Who wrote the accounts, and to whom were they addressed/presented, with what purpose? What are the common characteristics in these accounts, with respect to the representation of the natives, of other conquering nations, of the new land? How did the public react to these writings? Secondly, I will examine how the emergence of the English national identity in 16th century England was created as much as a result of the imperial expansion, mainly to the Americas, as shaped by the travel literature of the period. Hence, English national identity developed side by side with the imperial enterprise. Various social and historical developments of the period (the decline of feudalism, emergence of the middle class and of the merchants, the rise of mercenary/capitalist spirit, developments in seafaring, the desire to expand horizons under the influence of Renaissance ideals etc.) led to overseas travels, which contributed to the celebration of English wealth, success, and 'supremacy' abroad. However, it is also thanks to the literary accounts of the adventures in the New World that contributed to the creation and confirmation of a distinctly English national identity that defined itself in opposition to the politics, religion and social manners of other European countries and the natives of the 'conquered' lands. As Peter Hulme argues, the 'obsessive' documentation of the travels abroad can be related to a 'self-conscious effort to create a continuous epic myth of origin for the emerging imperial nation.' In this second part of the paper, I'd like to look at Richard Hakluyt's Principal Navigations and Walter Raleigh's accounts of the new world as two exemplary works. Though Hakluyt's 'scholarly approach' with which he brought together various letters, travel accounts and the like contrasts with Raleigh's eye-witness account of the new territories, these two texts nevertheless serve the same end with respect to the creation of "Englishness" abroad.

Biography: Hande Tekdemir is an Assistant Professor of English at the Western Languages and Literatures Department of Bogaziçi University in Istanbul. She earned a PhD in English at University of Southern California in 2008, after receiving her BA and MA in English at Bogaziçi University. She is currently working on a book tentatively titled "Collective Melancholy: Istanbul at the Crossroads of History, Space and Memory." Her research interests include the modern English novel, postcolonial studies, urban theory and literature, detective fiction and contemporary Turkish novel.

S2 TERRITOIRES DE LA SUBJECTIVITÉ

DU DECENTREMENT DE L'ESPACE AU DECENTREMENT DE L'ÊTRE

T. Ben Salah

Faculté des lettres de Sousse

Abstract: Du écentration de l'espace au décentration de l'être

Le dysfonctionnement du monde contemporain a engendré une déliaison entre l'être et son milieu social, phénomène qu'incarne un bon nombre d'oeuvres littéraires ayant pour cadre la ville moderne, dont notamment celles de JMG Le Clézio, d'Annie Ernaux et de Peter Handke. Ces écrivains s'avèrent des observateurs attentifs des paysages urbains et de la solitude moderne, une solitude considérée par eux comme absolue et envisagée comme "méthode et effort de concentration". Dépouillés de repères, ayant perdu toute maîtrise sur le réel qui leur échappe et dont ils ne perçoivent pas le centre, leurs "héros" errent. Sans consistance aucune, ils sont réduits à des corps évoluant dans une ville anonyme. Ils semblent fuir plutôt qu'accomplir un parcours existentiel. Leur histoire est dépourvue d'un enracinement dans le passé et le récit de leur vie est inscrit dans un temps déstructuré, privé de continuité et de sens. Leur existence se réduit à un enchaînement de faits et de gestes sans aucune épaisseur. En mal d'être et de vivre, ils marchent. Leur mouvement les empêche de maîtriser le monde et d'en avoir une saisie globale et totalisée. Leur regard n'en saisit que des bribes, des morceaux d'espaces ou d'êtres, des objets banals mais auxquels ils donnent vie. L'intrigue est mince, quasi absente et de petits riens, des scènes de la vie quotidienne d'êtres seuls se trouvent au centre de l'oeuvre. Le sujet est effacé, toute introspection est bannie. L'écriture reproduit l'écho de la vacuité d'un monde déjà dépourvu de sa substance et de sa charge émotive. Elle promeut la marge, le périphérique et l'excentrique. La scène est envahie par la description des résidus de la vie urbaine: la mousse de bière restée sur les parois d'un verre vide (Le Clézio, Le Déluge), un graffiti à moitié effacé (A. Ernaux, Journal du dehors), une bouteille Thermos ou la poussière par terre sous la planche (P. Handke, L'angoisse du gardien de but au moment du penalty)... L'attention est détournée de toute action et focalisée sur le langage, à l'origine de la vacuité du monde et de sa désubstantialisation.

Biography: Je suis Thouraya Ben Salah, enseignante et chercheuse à la faculté des lettres de Sousse, Tunisie

HOMMES / FEMMES : QUI DU CENTRE, QUI DE LA PÉRIPHÉRIE ?

S. Camet

Faculté des Lettres

Abstract: La métaphore géométrique du centre et de la périphérie est souvent utilisée pour décrire l'opposition entre les deux types fondamentaux de lieux dans un système : celui qui le commande et en bénéficie, le centre, et ceux qui le subissent, en position périphérique. La périphérie est subordonnée parce que le centre est dominant- et réciproquement. Penser en termes de centre(s) et de périphérie(s) permet une réflexion sur l'interaction entre les lieux du monde et leurs représentants symboliques : pour que le couple homme/femme ait sens, il faut qu'il y ait relations entre les deux et que ces relations soient dissymétriques. Le centre est central justement parce qu'il bénéficie de cette inégalité et, réciproquement, la ou les périphérie(s) sont caractérisée(s) par un déficit qui entretient leur position dominée. « L'opposition entre centre et périphérie est celle des hommes (propriétaires de la maison collective), et des femmes, propriétaires des huttes familiales du pourtour. Nous sommes en présence d'une structure concentrique pleinement consciente à la pensée indigène, où le rapport entre le centre et la périphérie exprime deux oppositions, celle entre mâle et femelle, comme on vient de le voir, et une autre entre sacré et profane : l'ensemble central, formé par la maison des hommes et la place de danse, sert de théâtre à la vie cérémonielle tandis que la périphérie est réservée aux activités domestiques des femmes, exclues par nature des mystères de la religion... » Cette description d'un village bororo du Brésil par Claude Lévi-Strauss dans Anthropologie structurale, sert de base à notre réflexion. L'ère post-moderne, selon Jacques Derrida, est une époque de « déconstruction ». Alors qu'auparavant la réalité était perçue comme un ensemble d'éléments allant par paires dont l'un des membres était systématiquement supérieur à l'autre, la perception déconstructiviste tient que ce schéma a perdu de son caractère absolu. Hommes / Femmes des sociétés contemporaines, quel est donc votre lieu ?

Biography: Maître de Conférences, Habilitée à diriger des recherches, Littérature Générale et Comparée Publications : Métamorphoses du Moi / Tableau de l'Homme nu : Essai sur Richard Lindner / Tragique quotidien / L'un/L'Autre, ou le Double en question

MARCEL PROUST: UN EXEMPLE ATYPIQUE DE DECENTREMENT

X. Guo

Fudan université

Abstract: A la recherche du temps perdu de M. Proust est souvent considéré comme le modèle classique du roman psychologique. Pourtant, l'exploration attentive de notre vie psychologique que Proust effectue dans son roman n'a pas abouti à un nouveau solipsisme ; au contraire, il détruit plus encore cette légende moderne du Moi identique et auto-suffisant. Par rapport aux écrivains réalistes classiques du dix-neuvième siècle, Proust décentre et humilie le Moi de façon plus complète car il a révélé que l'être, dans son existence temporelle, n'est pas séparable de l'espace, que l'espace et le temps sont une réalité unique. La spatialité de l'être a pour conséquence, au niveau subjectif, l'aliénation du moi ; et au niveau objectif, son instrumentalisation. Entre divinisation et humiliation du Moi, nous cherchons à modifier notre regard sur le monde et sur nous-mêmes non dans le but de nier radicalement l'être, mais au contraire de lui conférer sa dignité ; poser le Moi au centre est bien le déprécier en même temps qu'instrumentaliser autrui. Nous voulons essayer de trouver une approche vraiment réaliste pour considérer la vraie réalité du Moi en discutant le « vrai Moi » tel que La recherche... nous l'a montré, c'est-à-dire comme un être « extra-temporel ». En effet, c'est par une reconstruction et non par une destruction du Moi que Proust humilie véritablement le Moi ; cela explique exactement pourquoi nous considérons Proust comme un exemple « atypique » de décentrement. En même temps, si nous considérons le « dialogisme » et le « polyphonisme » proposés par Bakhtine comme expressions de notre ignorance, aveu d'humilité, et, au niveau de la création littéraire, comme l'expression du décentrement de l'auteur-créateur du monde, nous voudrions voir en examinant ces deux notions comme le « vrai Moi » a changé le schème classique de la narration romanesque et comment La recherche... a réalisé un dialogisme polyphonique.

Biography: Education 09/1996---06/2000 En Chine Université Nord-Ouest, Ecole de journalisme et de communication Branche : journalisme Diplôme obtenu : Maîtrise de lettres 01/2002---06/2002 Cours de la langue française à Université Charles-de-Gaulle Lille 3, Département Enseignement du Français à l'International (DEFI) 10/2002---10/2004 Université Paris 12 Val de Marne, Ecole de sciences humaines et sociales Branche : lettres et échanges interculturels, littérature comparée Diplôme obtenu : DEA (Diplôme des études avancées) 10/2004---10/2011 Université Paris-Est, Ecole cultures /sociétés Branche : langue et littérature française Diplôme obtenu : Doctorat Thèse : DE LA LITTÉRATURE À LA PHILOSOPHIE DU RÉCIT Évolution du schème narratif et modification de la forme existentielle : le cas Marcel Proust 06/2012---06/2014 Université Fu Dan, département de littérature chinoise Branche : la littérature comparée Post-Docteur Traduction : Une saison avec Proust de René Péter, Gallimard, 2005, traduit et publié aux éditions de la littérature du peuple (Renmin Wenxue chubanshe) en 2008, dans le cadre du Programme d'Aide à la Publication FU Lei Cent Titres du Ministère français des Affaires étrangères et de l'Ambassade de France en Chine. Articles écrits ou traduits publiés dans la presse, voici deux liens : 1. 18/10/2008, sur Yang cheng wan bao, un article sur Le Clézio : <http://press.idoican.com.cn/detail/articles/20081018037B71/> 2. 14/04/2009, sur Yang cheng wan bao, article traduit, Les grèves des universités en France, écrit par le Professeur Francis Claudon http://www.ycwb.com/ePaper/ycwb/html/2009-04/11/content_471919.htm

LES AUTRES SENS, LES ESPACES MULTIPLES : DE NOUVEAUX LIEUX ET DES OBJETS D'AFFECTION DANS LA LITTÉRATURE BRÉSILIENNE CONTEMPORAINE

M.F. Garbero de Aragão

Universidade Federal Rural do Rio de Janeiro

Abstract: Au cours des vingt dernières années, quelques aspects intéressants apparaissent dans les récits publiés au Brésil, en particulier en ce qui concerne la composition des caractères par rapport à leurs espaces et leurs objets d'affection. La notion de décentrement et de nouvelles lectures de l'exil écrites dans la scène littéraire conduisent à des questions au sujet des changements dans le contexte brésilien au cours de cette période. En même temps, nous voyons l'inclusion de certaines théories sur le sujet décentré que, dans le dialogue avec la littérature brésilienne, ne correspondent pas à une perte ou à faire référence à des notions précédemment détenues. Notre proposition est une lecture de cette difficulté et les possibilités conceptuelles de la représentation, à partir de trois auteurs contemporains: Veronica Stigger, Ana Paula Maia et Cecilia Gianetti.

Biography: Professeur de littérature brésilienne de l'Université rurale fédérale de Rio de Janeiro, a étudié master dans Théorie Littéraire et Doctorat dans Littérature Comparée. Actuellement, il se consacre à la recherche sur les récits des constructions méta-affectifs dans le littérature brésilienne contemporain.

S1: RELIGION AND THE NOVEL

THE VERY LONG NOVEL AND RELIGION

V. Nemoianu

The Catholic University of America

Abstract: I would like to introduce the generic principle of “Very Long Novel” as opposed to “regular novel” and to “novella” or even “short story. We encounter “the very long novel” in medieval literature, Japanese and Chinese literature, Russian literature, and Western literature of the 18th-20th century literature. I will try to suggest a short general definition and outline several branches or modalities of this species. Examples will be provided.

I will argue that perhaps the most important common feature of the various “very long novels” is the relationship to transcendence i.e. the effort to imitate and/or to replace the cosmic creation and to present to the reader a complete (in as far as possible) portrait of reality as a whole.

This will be the nucleus and summary of a full book-length study.

Biography: Prof. Virgil Nemoianu (CUA, Washington DC 20064)

PAIDERASTIA AND TYRANNICIDE IN LIGHT OF THE LETTERS OF KHION

T.J. Figueira

University of Georgia

Abstract: Thomas J. Figueira will start with the thematic system comprising violent resistance to non-traditional or self-aggrandizing government by one man (rule by a mounarkhos judged a turannos). The ‘tyrant’ traditionally expresses his abstraction from social norms through sexual transgression. He enacts hubris on citizens’ wives, sisters, daughters, and adolescent sons. Since recourse to remedial violence by females is problematic, social convention places that onus on youths. Hence from the time of the botched coup d’état against the Peisistratids by the pederastic couple Harmodios and Aristogeiton, adolescent males form a natural resistance. Their homoeroticism may be proclamative or coded. Specifically, the paper will consider the transformation of this conceptual system in the Letters of Khion, a Greek pseud-epistolary novel about the assassination of the tyrant Klearkhos of Herakleia by a groups of young males. This work has been dated from the fourth century BCE (its setting is in 353) down to the second century CE. The adaptation of a mythopoetic or myth-historical thematic to a more domesticated, less gendered genre brought significant metamorphoses. Moreover, it is an open question whether the changing attitudes of Plato toward education and sexuality have been dramatized in a work ostensibly about his protégées.

Biography: Thomas J. Figueira

SIXTEENTH/SEVENTEENTH CENTURIES DEBATES ON COSMOLOGY AND ACCOUNTS OF CREATION

G. Mazzotta

Yale University

Abstract: My presentation focuses on some sixteenth/seventeenth centuries debates on cosmology and accounts of creation. It considers neo-Platonic theories of creation (Ficino and Pico); it reviews some Epicurean doctrines (especially the revival of Lucretius’ conceptions in his <De rerum natura>), and it will examine closely discussions put forth by Milton in his <Paradise Lost> and <Tasso’s Mondo creato> in their shared effort, respectively, to reconcile radically opposed doctrines and establish a clear-cut difference between them. But the underlying argument of this paper consists in showing that, notwithstanding the apparent divergences between the various doctrinal positions, they all converge on what can be called a “metaphysics of production”, whereby the human world of making and the theology of creation cannot quite be distinguished from each other.

Biography: Giuseppe mazzotta

Yale university USA

RELIGIOUS DISCOURSE AND METAPOETIC REFLECTION IN JEAN PAUL'S NOVELS: "REDE DES TOTEN CHRISTUS", "CLAVIS FICHTIANA", KAIN'S MONOLOGUE IN DER KOMET

M. Schmitz-Emans
Universitaet Bochum

Abstract: Jean Paul's „Rede des toten Christus“ (in the novel „Siebenkäs“), „Clavis Fichtiana“ (in the novel „Titan“) and the disturbing monologue of a character called Kain (at the end of the fragmentary novel „Der Komet“) strongly resemble each other with regard to form as well as content: Every text is conceived as a sermon, paroding the sermons of Christian preachers. Jean Paul has invented numerous and quite different preachers: odd and grotesque characters as the „Feldprediger Schmelzle“ (in „Des Feldpredigers Schmelzle Reise nach Flätz“), severe and sublime characters such as the court preacher Spener (in „Titan“), professional preachers like the Senior Schwers and his son Ingenuin (in: „Der Jubelsenior“), and characters that in spite of their secular profession write sermons in order to reflect about issues of outstanding importance. Sermons conventionally reflect upon (and performatively confirm) the relation between man and god, the secular world and eternity. In Jean Paul's sermon texts mentioned above, however, all transcendental realities are thoroughly questioned, and eternity appears just as an illusion of mortal beings that are doomed to be annihilated by time and death. These anti-sermons are written as profound thought experiments, and as such experiments they are linked with an important aspect of Jean Paul's self-understanding as a literary writer. Literature, as he argues in accordance with the philosopher Friedrich Heinrich Jacobi, depicts impressive images of desperation and annihilation that are situated far beyond philosophical or theological discourse, and by transgressing rational argument, literature can mediate spiritual truths via emotionality and sentiment. But there is still another reason to regard these prominent sermons as poetological texts: They address an absent auditory and thus refer to the specific situation of the writer as it is reflected many times by Jean Paul. Preaching is a central model for poetic production, as already Ursula Naumann has pointed out in her doctoral dissertation about „Predigende Poesie“. In my paper I will argue in favour of the thesis that Jean Paul focusses on the process of writing sermons in anticipation of a future public – and not on the process of directly addressing the public orally. Writing sermons, preaching on the paper, as one might put it, can be regarded as a basic model of poetic communication, and it exposes and reflects itself especially in Jean Pauls poetic sermons. A brief survey of Jean Paul's preachers and sermon writers will be the starting platform for my argument.

Biography: Monika Schmitz-Emans (*1956) studied in Bonn where she received her Doctorate degree in 1984 for her study on Jean Paul. In Bonn she also qualified for a professor title with the monograph "Schrift und Abwesenheit. Historische Paradigmen zu einer Poetik der Entzifferung und des Schreibens".

From 1992 to 1995, she was Professor for European Literature of the Modern Times at the Fernuniversität Hagen. She is a C-4 Professor for General and Comparative Literature at the Ruhr University in Bochum since 1995. From 1999 to 2005, she was the head of the DGAVL (German Association for General and Comparative Literature). Since 2007 she is the chairwoman of the Jean-Paul-Gesellschaft (Jean Paul Society). Since 2005 she is a member of the Academia Europaea.

Field of research and publications include: General literary theory and poetics, opus and poetics of individual authors, the relationships between literature and philosophy, literature and the arts, literature and music.

S4: COMPARATISME ET INTERMÉDIALITÉ

A L'OMBRE DE LA LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE : LA PRATIQUE CULTURELLE DE L'INTERMÉDIALITÉ DANS L'ŒUVRE ROMANESQUE D'ANDRÉ BRINK ET L'ŒUVRE POÉTIQUE DE JACQUES PRÉVERT

F. Guiyoba

Ecole Normale Supérieure de Yaoundé

Abstract: Nous partons de l'hypothèse que l'œuvre romanesque du Sud-Africain André Brink et l'œuvre poétique du Français Jacques Prévert foisonnent d'une intermédialité dont les jeux et les enjeux sont d'ordre culturel et, en conséquence, diamétralement opposés. En effet, la veine intermédiaire prévertienne nourrit un iconoclasme clairement et pleinement assumé, et ce suivant le principe antique de la satura qui est poussé ici à l'extrême, comme dans les Paroles de cet auteur. C'est le cas des textes comme « Lanterne magique de Picasso » et « Promenade de Picasso », entre autres. À l'inverse, l'intermédialité brinkienne sert une idéologie, non pas de discordia, mais de concordia, comme dans Une saison blanche et sèche ou Au plus noir de la nuit. Pour le montrer, nous nous appuyons sur la méthode d'analyse que nous avons proposée dans l'article Intermédialité du Dictionnaire international des termes littéraires (DITL), mais aussi et surtout sur l'application, à l'intermédialité, de l'intertextualité genettienne en tant qu'outil essentiel du comparatisme littéraire. D'où il apparaîtra que la littérature comparée est un excellent tremplin heuristique d'appréhension d'une intermédialité qui sert, d'une part, des desseins culturels agoniques parce que surréalistes-déconstructionnistes, et d'autre part des préoccupations iréniques parce que visant, chez Brink, la fraternisation entre les races et les nations. Ce qui se traduit chez Prévert par un mélange 'indigeste' des arts, et chez Brink par une rencontre harmonieuse de ceux-ci, comme dans L'œuvre d'art totale de Richard Wagner.

Biography: François Guiyoba est né le 30 janvier 1959 à Balamba (Cameroun). Titulaire d'un doctorat nouveau régime de l'Université de Nantes (1993) et d'une HDR de l'Université de Toulouse (2008), il enseigne la littérature comparée et des disciplines connexes à l'Université de Yaoundé 1 (Cameroun).

LE SUJET EN CONTREPOINT : VERS UNE POÉTIQUE DE LA FUGUE MODERNISTE

A. Viselli

University of Toronto

Abstract: Cette communication propose d'examiner le lien étroit qu'entretient la littérature avec la musique : en l'occurrence la structure musicale de la fugue chez les symbolistes français et les modernistes en Europe. La fugue – style musical perfectionné par Johann Sebastian Bach dans son œuvre posthume « L'Art de la fugue » – lorsque transposée en littérature transcende les frontières du genre musical et se manifeste sous la plume de maints auteurs par le biais du contrepoint, de la polyphonie aussi bien que d'autres figures de style – termes qui ne se traduisent pas toujours identiquement d'un genre à l'autre. Vaincre l'incommensurabilité ou l'incompatibilité de ces deux arts représente une source d'inspiration, voire la possibilité d'un nouveau processus esthétique littéraire pour des auteurs entre 1874 et 1941 tels que Verlaine, Gide, Joyce, Pound, Saba et Vittorini entre autres. Outre le rapprochement de la musique au roman et à la poésie, la fugue permet particulièrement à ces écrivains de s'interroger sur la représentation de l'être à travers le temps et l'espace – qu'il s'agisse de la figure du poète, du romancier, ou simplement du héros et du dynamisme de l'intrigue dans un récit. Nous montrerons, par le biais d'exemples tirés des ouvrages de Paul Verlaine (« Romances sans paroles »), d'André Gide (« Les Faux-monnayeurs »), de James Joyce (« Ulysses ») et d'Elio Vittorini (« Conversazione in Sicilia ») que ces auteurs, écrivant en différentes langues mais dans un contexte historique comparable se sont tournés vers une esthétique musicale et polyphonique où les sons se superposent en harmonie pour représenter ce qui reste impossible en littérature, celle-ci se caractérisant plutôt par sa linéarité : la simultanéité d'une subjectivité fragmentée.

Biography: Antonio Viselli est actuellement en dernière année de doctorat au Centre de littérature comparée à l'Université de Toronto. Sa thèse, sous la direction des Professeurs Roland Le Huenen et Ming Xie, s'intitule "The (Proto-)Modernist Subject in Time: Fugue and the Fourth Dimension." Il a publié des articles critiques sur Tristan Corbière, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Nanni Moretti et James Joyce.

HEINER MÜLLER ET HOWARD BARKER : DES TABLEAUX AU THÉÂTRE. L'INTERMÉDIALITÉ COMME PROGRAMME

S. Arlaud
Université Lyon 2

Abstract: Depuis le 17^e siècle, les beaux-arts sont indissociables de l'histoire du théâtre. Les décorateurs, les illustrateurs, les costumiers participent tous à établir cette nouvelle perception mimétique du théâtre et renforcent autant que possible l'effet de vraisemblance, clef de voûte du programme classique à travers trompe-l'oeil, prestiges et innovations techniques. Les "tableaux", les "images" et leur dialogue intermédial avec les textes et les mises en scène sont ainsi liées à l'histoire du théâtre et de la représentation, entré en crise dès la fin du 19^e siècle. Et pourtant, la mise en "images" des textes, même si elle ne se fait plus au nom du mimétisme, ne cesse pas. On peut même avancer que la place du scénographe devient de plus en plus prédominante dans la machine théâtrale contemporaine. Il n'est donc guère étonnant que la crise de la représentation théâtrale se joue précisément dans ce nouveau dialogue. L'image ne se place plus comme double, comme illustration du texte, elle réclame sa part d'autonomie et de contradiction.

Heiner Müller ne cessera de questionner la place de cet autre art, en le plaçant au cœur de sa production dramatique. Dans sa pièce programmatique Hamletmaschine (1977), il règle ses comptes avec les idéologies et avec la machine théâtrale qui les soutient à grands coups d'images-choc. Sur scène, l'acteur (qui est ou n'est pas Hamlet) déchire la photo de l'auteur, fend les têtes de Mao, Marx et Lénine à grands coups de hache et bafoue les monuments de la culture européenne. Les images sont alors à la fois le mal et le remède. Elles deviennent la clef de voûte de la société du simulacre, où l'image s'est substituée à la réalité qu'elle était censée représenter, mais aussi l'outil par lequel le simulacre peut être révélé. Müller absorbe ce nouveau système de représentation, le met au cœur de son dispositif dramatique dans Bildbeschreibung, bien sûr, mais aussi dans Verkommenes Ufer, Medeamaterial, Landschaft mit Argonauten. Le théâtre-tableau lui sert alors à trouver une nouvelle forme capable d'exprimer toutes les inconséquences, les paradoxes et toutes les apories de la réalité. Les images, les tableaux sont alors autant d'éléments qui viennent endiguer la machine théâtrale, mettre des bâtons dans les roues de cet engrenage cathartique, réconciliateur. Car pour Müller, toute visée réconciliatrice n'est que trahison et mensonge. L'intermédialité devient alors un véritable système poétique et politique, qui ouvre la porte au théâtre post-dramatique, terme-clef présenté par Hans-Thies Lehmann en 1999 pour rassembler les nouvelles esthétiques théâtrales de l'après 1968.

Ce texte de Müller servira de pont vers un autre auteur, à la fois dramaturge, théoricien et peintre, le Britannique Howard Barker. Le palimpseste Gertrude-Le Cri (publié en 2002) de Barker est une variation sur les oubliés de Hamlet, mais aussi sur la lecture hystérique sur fond de conflit générationnel qu'en proposait Müller en 1977. Ce n'est pas le seul point commun qui relie les deux auteurs. S'il n'a pas tenté la radicalité formelle de Bildbeschreibung, Barker développe dans Scenes from an Execution (1990) une réflexion similaire à celle de Müller sur ce que le théâtre (ou la peinture) peut dire de la réalité et sur sa place dans la société. Ce retour vers les "images" chez Müller et chez Barker, qui est également un peintre reconnu, servira de fil rouge à une réflexion sur la recherche d'une nouvelle forme théâtrale, résumée par l'un et par l'autre par le terme-clef de "catastrophe" et où le spectateur prend toute sa place. Le rapport dialectique entre le texte, les images et leur mise en scène se résume peut-être le mieux dans cette phrase de Heiner Müller, qui plairait certainement à Barker: "Sehen, heisst die Bilder töten." Pour voir, au sens Brechtien, il faut donc tuer les images, les idoles. Le théâtre contemporain est-il alors une mise à mort des images? C'est peut-être étrangement ce que propose Barker lorsqu'il revendique la part d'ombre du théâtre, l'obscurité complète, afin que le mystère puisse s'épaissir aux yeux du spectateur. Dans un article pour le Guardian (22 août 1988), Barker présente son théâtre de la sorte: "Depuis quelques années, je tente de créer un théâtre qui reconnaisse à son public des droits d'interprétation. Cela a impliqué la transgression des deux totems du théâtre contemporain: la Clarté et le Réalisme." Les tableaux de l'exécution sont aussi une exécution des tableaux.

Biography: Née en 1970, ancienne élève de l'ENS Fontenay/ Saint-Cloud, agrégée d'allemand et maître de conférences en études germaniques à l'Université Lyon II depuis 2000, j'ai publié ma thèse sur les Références anglaises de la modernité viennoise en 2000. Depuis je travaille sur les transferts culturels entre la France, les pays anglophones et les pays germanophones (musées, revues, théâtres), les discours 'identitaires' et 'nationaux' et le théâtre contemporain germanophone.

PHOTOGRAPHS, LOST, FOUND AND FABRICATED: THE ELUSIVE AND HAUNTING PORTRAIT OF THE MOTHER IN AND AROUND NARRATIVES OF TANIZAKI, KANAI, BARTHES AND GUIBERT

A. Sakaki
University of Toronto

Abstract: The prominent and formative absence of the "Winter Garden Photograph" in Roland Barthes' La Chambre claire (1980: English trans., Camera Lucida) has incited a host of valuable responses from critics and scholars. While the narrator's unfamiliarity with his mother depicted in the old photograph is resolved and elevated to a symbolic stature within Barthes' own narrative, the "punctum" coming from the temporal and existential disconnect felt by the viewer/son has been similarly explored in other narratives, such as Tanizaki Jun'ichirô's "Yume no ukihashi" (1959: English trans., "Bridge of Dreams"), Kanai Mieko's "Mado" (1976: English trans., "Windows") and Hervé Guibert's "L'image fantôme" (1981: English trans., "Ghost Image"). Building on my previous work on how these texts elaborate on the definitive photographs' incongruity with the viewer/narrator, I will focus in this paper on the fact that all of them are unaccompanied by the printed photographs described. In particular I will examine in Guibert the case of the photograph of the narrator's mother, which he fails to develop from the negative but which, in variations, appears printed in other books by the author: Suzanne et Louise (1980) and Le Seul Visage (1984). I will discuss the significance of the physical omission of the photographic images from the printed pages, the proliferation of description and interpretation of these absent images in text, and the effects of their being printed in other publications, out of context. This is an attempt at a better conceptualization of the incommensurable and volatile relationship between photography and narrative, two media often regarded, in the modern age of mechanical reproduction, as transparent and complicit with the formation of objective knowledge. I will demonstrate how photographs and narratives can defy expectations and challenge modern conventional notions of memory, identity and belonging by their performative ways of destabilizing the autonomy and integrity of visual and textual registers.

Biography: Atsuko Sakaki is Professor in the Department of East Asian Studies and the Centre for Comparative Literature at the University of Toronto. Her most recent publications include "The Face in the Shadow of the Camera: Corporeality of the Photographer in Kanai Mieko's Narratives," in Mechademia 7 (Fall 2012), "Waves from Opposing Shores: Exchanges in a Classical Language in the Age of Nationalism" in Richard King and Cody Poulton and Katsuhiko Endo, eds., Sino-Japanese Transculturation: From the Late Nineteenth Century to the End of the Pacific War (Lanham, MD: Lexington Books, 2012), "Tanizaki Jun'ichirô, or Photography as Violence," Japan Forum (2010), "Taming of the Strange: Arakida Rei Reads and Writes Stories of the Supernatural," in Peter Kornicki, Gaye Rowley, and Mara Patessio, eds., The Female as Subject: Reading and Writing in Early Modern Japan (Center for Japanese Studies, University of Michigan, 2010) and "Kaisetsu: Yume no hon to soine shite" in Kanai Mieko, Kishibe no nai umi (Kawade bunko, 2009). She is also the author of Obsessions with Sino-Japanese Polarity in Japanese Literature (Hawai'i, 2005) and Recontextualizing Text: Narrative Performance in Modern Japanese Fiction (Harvard, 1999), and translated and edited The Woman with the Flying Head and Other Stories by Kurahashi Yumiko (M.E. Sharpe, 1998). Currently she is working on three book projects, "Corporeality and Spatiality in Modern Japanese Literature"; (Gotô Meisei, Abe Kôbô, Hasegawa Shirô, Horie Toshiyuki), "Photographic Rhetoric in Modern Japanese Fiction" (Tanizaki, Abe, Mishima, Kanai, and Horie) and translation of short stories by Horie Toshiyuki.

S1: TRANSLINGUAL LITERATURE

WRITER SPEAKS WITH FORKED TONGUE: INTERLINGUAL PREDICAMENTS

S.G. Kellman
University of Texas

Abstract: For some writers, switching languages is seamless, painless, and complete. Though he affected the false modesty of bemoaning his "second-rate brand of English," Vladimir Nabokov in fact gave up what he called "my natural idiom, my untrammelled, rich, and infinitely docile Russian tongue" for virtuoso performances in an English tongue that, through his genius, also proved untrammelled, rich, and infinitely docile. Mary Antin composed a memoir, The Promised Land (1912), that celebrated her ability "to think in English without an accent" but elided the ordeal of acquiring English, "this beautiful language in which I think," and in fact omits any mention of her first language, Yiddish. However, for many others, the translingual trajectory places them in a treacherous linguistic DMZ, a space between languages in which they feel at home in neither. "I don't have the words for what I want," says Celaya, the "bilingual" protagonist of Sandra Cisneros's Caramelo (2002). "Not in English. Not in Spanish." In Monolinguisme de l'autre: ou la prothèse de l'origine (1996), Jacques Derrida recounts how he, a Jew growing up in Muslim Algeria, resided "au bord du français, uniquement, ni en lui, ni hors de lui, sur la ligne introuvable de sa côte" – in a liminal position neither inside nor outside the French language. In his 2003 memoir The Speckled People, Hugo Hamilton describes his childhood as a "language war"; raised by a German mother and an Irish nationalist father who prohibited the use of English at home, Hamilton haunted the interstices where German, Irish, and English collided. And Anton Shammas, a Palestinian Arab who writes in Hebrew: "I do not know/ One language on the one side,/ And one language on the other. / And I daydream in the no-man's land" (No Man's Land). Few writers demonstrate as severe a case of tedium lingua as Louis Wolfson (Le Schizo et les langues (1970)), whose revulsion toward his maternal language, the language of his terrifying mother, propelled him toward several other languages – including French, Hebrew, Russian, and German – that he did not entirely inhabit. However, the territory that Assia Djebar, an Algerian who came to French from Berber and Arabic, calls "in Ces voix qui m'assiègent... en marge de ma francophonie" (1999) – "l'entre-deux-langues" is inhabited by many other translinguals as well. Though language is of course not a place, many translinguals conceive of their situations through spatial metaphors. I intend to examine the contours of their imaginary space between languages and how several translingual writers try to make it their home.

Biography: A professor of comparative literature at the University of Texas at San Antonio, where he has taught since 1976, Steven G. Kellman was UTSA's first Ashbel Smith Professor (1995-2000). He has also taught at the University of California campuses of Berkeley and Irvine and at Bemidji State Minnesota and Tel-Aviv University. He received his Ph.D. and M.A. in comparative literature from the University of California at Berkeley and his B.A. in English & General Literature from the State University of New York at Binghamton. He has held the Fulbright Distinguished Chair in American Literature at the University of Sofia and a Fulbright Senior Lectureship at Tbilisi State University and twice served as Partners of the Americas lecturer in Peru. He was twice awarded the UTSA President's Distinguished Achievement Award in Research Excellence (1990-91, 2005-2006) and received the campus-wide teaching award (1985-86). Kellman has served as John E. Sawyer fellow at Harvard's Longfellow Institute and has held an NEH research grant, an NEH grant to South Africa, and a Fulbright-Hays grant to China. He was honored with the 2005 Arts & Letters Award of the San Antonio Public Library Foundation and the 2008 Gemini Ink Literary Excellence Award. Kellman is the author of Redemption: The Life of Henry Roth (Norton, 2005), which was honored with the 2005 New York Society Library Award for Biography and was praised in the San Francisco Chronicle as "not only a necessary addition to the annals of American literature, but also a trenchant exploration of the relationship between the horrors of life and the saving power of art." Kellman's other books include The Translingual Imagination (2000), The Plague: Fiction and Resistance (1993), Loving Reading: Erotics of the Text (1985), and The Self Begetting Novel (1980). He is editor or co editor of M. E. Savage's An American in the Making (2009), Switching Languages: Translingual Writers Reflect on Their Craft (2003), UnderWords: Perspectives on Don DeLillo's Underworld (2002), Torpid Smoke: The Stories of Vladimir Nabokov (2000), Leslie Fiedler and American Culture (1999), Into The Tunnel: Readings in Gass's Novel (1998), and Perspectives on Raging Bull (1994). Since 2001, he has co edited Magill's Literary Annual. A contributing writer for The Texas Observer and the San Antonio Current, Kellman received the 1986 H. L. Mencken Award for his column in the San Antonio Light. He was awarded first place in arts criticism by the Association of Alternative Newsweeklies in 2006 and received the McGinnis-Ritchie Award for Nonfiction for an essay in the Southwest Review during 2008. He is currently serving his fourth term as a director of the National Book Critics Circle, for which he also serves as vice president for membership, and was recipient of the NBCC's 2007 Nona Balakian Citation for Excellence in Reviewing. His essays and reviews have appeared in The American Scholar, Atlantic Monthly, Bookforum, Chicago Tribune, Chronicle of Higher Education, Huffingtonpost.com, Forward, Michigan Quarterly Review, New York Times Book Review, Georgia Review, The Nation,

Los Angeles Times, and Virginia Quarterly Review, among many other publications. Kellman was founding president of the literary center Gemini Ink and was elected into the Texas Institute of Letters.

INVOLUNTARY DISSENT: THE "MINORITY VOICE" OF TRANSLINGUAL IMMIGRANT MEMOIR

M. Besemeres

The Australian National University

Abstract: Involuntary dissent: the 'minority voice' of translingual immigrant memoir In Lost in Translation (1989), her evocative memoir of migrating at thirteen from Poland to North America, Eva Hoffman diagnoses her impatience with her American friends' fixation on their relationships to their mothers as a case of minority vision, which fails to connect with the terms of debate taken for granted by speakers of the dominant language: 'An oppositional voice – a voice that responds to a statement with a counterstatement and says no, you're wrong, it's not the mother but the daughter who's at fault – is part of the shared conversation. But a minority voice – a voice that introduces terms outside the tensions of a particular dialogue, terms that come from elsewhere – is usually heard only as an irritating mosquito buzz on the periphery, an intrusion that the participants in the main conversation want to silence quickly and with a minimum of rudeness, so they can get on with the real subject.' (1991 [1989]: 266) With reference to Hoffman's memoir and three essays, by Bulgarian-born French literary scholar Tzvetan Todorov (1985), Indian-born US author Gita Kumar (2000) and Russian-born Australian journalist Irene Ulman (2007), I look at how immigrant life writers represent experiences of introducing 'terms from elsewhere' into established local debates by virtue of their 'minority' outlooks on the issues at stake, as immigrants from another language background. My focus is on experiences of involuntary dissent. By involuntary dissent I refer to a situation of being seriously at odds with the very group one wants to belong to. Clearly, such a position is not exclusive to immigrants. The examples I discuss may resonate with other kinds of ambivalent group membership: shifting class identity and resulting tensions between family members, oppressive consensus around gender or disability, or everyday frictions sparked in crossing between the subcultures of workplace and home. I hope, though, to suggest how trans-lingual immigrants' accounts of involuntary dissent are nevertheless distinctive, and worth thinking about when reflecting on phenomena of dissent more generally.

Biography: Mary Besemeres, a Visiting Fellow at the Australian National University, is the author of Translating One's Self: Language and Selfhood in Cross-Cultural Autobiography (2002) and is co-editor of Translating Lives: Living with Two Languages and Cultures (2007). She was founding co-editor of the journal Life Writing.

TRICKSTERS AND SHAPE-SHIFTERS: MULTILINGUAL LEARNERS, WRITERS, AND PROTAGONISTS

N. Lvovich

City University of New York, Kingsborough College

Abstract: From the earliest human history, mythological tricksters have been protagonists of numerous fairytales, folklore, and visual art. Some examples of famous tricksters are: Greek God Hermes, Native American Coyote, French Monsieur Renard, and countless literary characters which inhabit and hold complex multilayered narratives, such as Woland, the "foreign professor"/Satan in Mikhail Bulgakov's celebrated Master and Marguerite. Tricksters are boundary-crossers, cross-dressers, transformers, and culture heroes—"gods of threshold" (Hyde 8) embodying ambiguity and change. Their symbolic modus vivendi is the liminal space within cultural ritual process (rite of passage). Tricksters disrupt and transform durable cultures, embody Change, and produce Art. The proposed paper will investigate a modern day neophyte trickster--an outsider, an immigrant, a foreigner, and an exile--a multilingual individual. Conceived as part of a larger creative project within the interdisciplinary framework of cultural anthropology, mythology, bilingualism/L2 theories, literary theory, narrative and visual art, this paper will propose the metaphor of a multilingual as a mythical trickster with Protean identity via the analysis of a fictional translingual writer, a protagonist in Barbara Kingsolver's novel, Lacuna. A loner, an orphan, a closeted homosexual, and a permanent foreigner in both lands (the U.S. and Mexico), Harrison Shepherd is a reflection of 'real' translingual writers and of 'real' L2 learners, the 'liminal' people and 'bricoleurs' whose linguistic subjectivities, ambiguities, and secrets resonate with mythical characteristics of "transgression, usurpation, and betrayal" (Kramsch 74). Reversing Steven Kellman's coinage of 'Translingual Imagination,' I will examine imagined Translingualism as a narratorial construction site of The Multilingual Subject (Kramsch) where literary "self-begetting" (Kellman) meets translingualism. Works Cited: Hyde, Lewis. Trickster Makes This World. New York: North Point Press, 1998. Kellman, Steven. Self-Begetting Novel. New York: Columbia University Press, 1980. Kellman, Steven. The Translingual Imagination. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2000. Kramsch, Claire. The Multilingual Subject. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009.

Biography: Natasha Lvovich is Professor of English and director of ESL Program at Kingsborough Community College of the City University of New York. She also teaches graduate courses in the M.A. program at Brooklyn College. Her background is in language and literature (French) and her Ph.D. is in applied linguistics/second language acquisition. Her loyalties are divided between creative writing and interdisciplinary scholarship—the intersection of bilingualism and of narrative and fiction written by "translingual" authors. Whether her inquiry is academic or "romantic," it questions the issues of language and psyche, lingua-cultural home, memory, exile, and creativity. Her publications include both academic and creative work, among which a book of personal essays, The Multilingual Self. Her creative nonfiction was published in a number of academic and literary magazines; one of her stories has been nominated for Pushcart Prize.

FICTIONS OF THE RUSSIAN-JEWISH DIASPORA: A "RUSSIAN" LITERATURE IN FOREIGN TONGUES?

A. Wanner

Pennsylvania State University

Abstract: The exodus of over 1.5 million Russian-speaking Jews from the former Soviet Union to Israel, North America, and Germany has triggered a new global phenomenon: over the past decade, a number of these émigrés have become successful writers in the languages of their host countries. Prominent examples include Wladimir Kaminer, Lena Gorelik, and Alina Bronsky in Germany, Vladimir Vertlib in Austria, Boris Zaidman in Israel, and Gary Sheyngart, David Bezmozgis, Lara Vapnyar, Anya Ulinich, Irina Reyn, Ellen Litman, and Sana Krasikov in the US. In addition, there are some important non-Jewish translingual Russian writers such as Andreï Makine (writing in French) or Olga Grushin (writing in English). Even though they have abandoned Russian as a medium of literary expression, or perhaps precisely because they have done so, most of these writers maintain, or manufacture, a strong Russian identity in their fictionalized self-representation. Paradoxically, as Jews they managed to become fully recognized as "Russians" only outside of Russia. While they have received a friendly response from readers and critics in the West, the reception of their books in Russia has been indifferent at best or hostile at worst. The territorial and linguistic move out of Russia into a constructed foreign "Russianness" raises a host of questions pertaining to transnational authenticity, including the role of language in a writer's national categorization, the function of cultural stereotypes in the fashioning of an ethno-national identity, and the value of Russianness vs. Jewishness as a brand in different literary markets. Surveying the literary activity of these émigré writers in Europe, Israel, and North America, this paper will address the question to what extent their writings qualify as part of a transnational and translingual "Russian" literature (similar to the question of a Jewish literature in gentile languages). By what means do these authors assert their Russianness discursively in texts written in French, German, English, or Hebrew? The discussion will include the use of spatial and chronological markers, hybrid linguistic forms, as well as open and hidden intertextual references to canonical works of Russian literature.

Biography: Adrian Wanner (Ph.D. in Russian Literature, Columbia University, 1992) is a Professor of Russian and Comparative Literature at Pennsylvania State University, where he served as head of the Department of Germanic and Slavic Languages and Literatures from 2001 to 2008 and is currently co-director of the graduate program in German. He has published numerous articles in Slavic and comparative literature journals and is the author of three monographs: Baudelaire in Russia (University Press of Florida, 1996), Russian Minimalism: From the Prose Poem to the Anti-Story (Northwestern University Press, 2003), and Out of Russia: Fictions of a New Translingual Diaspora (Northwestern University Press, 2011). In addition he has published five editions of Russian, Romanian, and Ukrainian poetry in his German verse translation.

S4: LITTÉRATURE ET PHILOSOPHIE

AESTHETICS AND PHILOSOPHY: JORGE LUIS BORGES AND THE LIMITS OF PRINCIPAL THOUGHT

P. Dove
Indiana University

Abstract: This paper explores the status of "philosophy" in the literary works (short stories and essays) of Jorge Luis Borges, a writer renowned for his literary engagements with philosophical debates and systems. The Argentine literary and cultural critic Beatriz Sarlo proposes (Un escritor en las orillas, 1995) that by taking up philosophical material Borges converts it into a machine for generating literary plot. Her reading is useful insofar as it forces us to confront the question of philosophy in Borges's oeuvre as a formal problem (the relation of narration to its own origins or conditions of possibility); what is at stake in Borges's literary appropriations cannot be illuminated through attention to ideational content alone. Building on Sarlo's position while also deviating from it, I take up a hypothesis developed by Reiner Schurmann in his posthumous Des Hegemonies brisées (1996), that the constitutive condition for thinking and for action is found in a gap or fissure at the heart of the arke—the origin or the first principle that would secure the rationality, authority and justice of a given order. If this is the case, if the rational order of any community necessarily covers over an absence, what does thinking (philosophy or theory) have to say about this situation? To what extent are the resources of the philosophical tradition able to account for the puzzling juxtaposition of articulation and brokenness (brisure) that Schurmann works through in his reassessment of the history of principal thought? And what happens when we expose philosophical thinking to a different order of analysis, such as the literary? I propose that Borges's meditations on aesthetics illustrate a similar thought of the impossibility of arke and of an uncanny identification of totality and its dissolution.

Biography: Patrick Dove is Associate Professor and Director of Graduate Studies in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese, as well as an adjunct professor in Comparative Literature at Indiana University. His first book, The Catastrophe of Modernity (Bucknell University Press, 2004), explores the use of "the tragic" as a index of Latin American modernity in writers such as Jorge Luis Borges, Ricardo Piglia, Cesar Vallejo and Juan Rulfo. He has also published extensively on issues related to literature, philosophy and politics in Argentina and Chile. His second book project, Literature and Interregnum, examines the crisis of sovereignty and its effects on contemporary Southern Cone literary production.

LA PHILOSOPHIE DANS L'ESSAI POSTCOLONIAL : OUVERTURE INTERPRÉTATIVE ET ESPACE DE DIALOGUE CHEZ WOLE SOYINKA ET EDOUARD GLISSANT

F. Alix
Université de Strasbourg

Abstract: Les relations entre littérature et philosophie sont souvent conçues à travers l'étude de romans ou de poèmes dont on exprime la signification philosophique. Une autre tendance est plus préoccupée par les procédés littéraires qui permettent de construire une signification intéressant la philosophie. Ainsi, Pierre Macherey parle d'"une pensée sans concepts, dont la communication ne passe pas par la construction de systèmes spéculatifs assimilant la recherche de la vérité à une démarche démonstrative" (Macherey, 1990 : 198). A l'inverse, Bruno Clément a tenté de voir comment des procédés littéraires sont mis en œuvre dans l'écriture philosophique (Clément, 2005). Dans les deux cas, les auteurs font porter leur attention sur un genre nettement défini comme relevant de la littérature (le roman pour Pierre Macherey) ou de la philosophie (le "discours" cartésien pour Bruno Clément).

Il est alors intéressant de reprendre la question des procédés littéraires qui permettent de construire une dimension et un sens philosophique en s'intéressant à l'essai postcolonial. L'essai est un genre marginalement littéraire (Obaldia, 2005) qui se situe à la frontière du texte philosophique. On ne peut donc pas définir sa démarche par une répugnance à user de concept, mais par le traitement original qui en est fait. On pourra alors redéfinir le rapport entre philosophie et littérature à partir des termes de Christine Baron : "la littérature peut exposer des concepts et des idées identifiables, lisibles tout en suggérant qu'aucun jeu interprétatif n'est achevé en lui-même" (Baron, 2007 : 115). Cette ouverture de l'interprétation passe par la création d'un espace de dialogue avec le lecteur et d'effets de dialogisme. Dans l'essai postcolonial, ce "passage par l'altérité" (Baron, 2007 : 237) contribue à la construction d'une "épistémè métisse" (Mangeon, 2010). On verra deux stratégies. D'une part, chez Wole Soyinka, les concepts sont inscrits dans une expérience spécifique, qui permet de mêler culture occidentale et culture africaine. L'essayiste fait ainsi porter sa réflexion à trois différents niveaux, l'universalité de la philosophie, la communauté de la culture, la spécificité de sa sensibilité. Il donne ainsi naissance à un humanisme pragmatique où tous trois s'entremêlent. D'autre part, chez Edouard Glissant, s'opère une réécriture d'un concept clef de l'œuvre de Félix Guattari et Gilles Deleuze, celui de rhizome. L'essayiste, jouant de l'intertextualité et du dialogisme, l'ancre dans son univers culturel. Mais, plutôt que de le spécifier, il lui donne ainsi une nouvelle résonance : il trouve de nouveaux champs d'application dans ce déplacement.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Agrégé de Lettres Modernes et ancien élève de l'ENS Lyon, Florian Alix termine actuellement à l'Université de Strasbourg un doctorat sur l'essai postcolonial, sous la direction de Romuald Fonkoua. Il a enseigné à l'Université de Strasbourg et à l'Université Michel de Montaigne Bordeaux 3. Il a été membre du laboratoire jeunes chercheurs "Littératures et études postcoloniales", affilié à l'ENS Lyon. Il est l'auteur de plusieurs articles sur les littératures maghrébines, subsahariennes et antillaises (F. Fanon, E. Said, V.Y. Mudimbe, D. Chraïbi...) et il a co-dirigé l'ouvrage Postcolonial studies : modes d'emploi, à paraître aux Presses Universitaires de Lyon.

S4 : FORCE ET VERTU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FACE A L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE

ECRIVAINS ET POSTURES PROPHETIQUES AU REGARD DE L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE : L'ECRIVAIN, PAR-DELA LE PROPHETE EMPÊCHE

M. Watthee-Delmotte, C. Meurée
FNRS/UCL

Abstract: Ecrivains et postures prophétiques au regard de l'histoire immédiate

1. L'écrivain, par delà le prophète empêché (Christophe Meurée & Myriam Watthee-Delmotte) Dans un premier temps, nous envisagerons un infléchissement dans la figure prophétique telle que la configure le discours littéraire de part et d'autre de l'Atlantique. La littérature de la seconde moitié du XX^e siècle avait multiplié, avec la guerre froide consécutive à la Shoah et à Hiroshima, les figures prophétiques visant à entériner l'inévitabilité d'une destruction de grande ampleur et à concevoir les formes d'élection post-apocalyptique. Cependant, le tournant des années 1980 constate progressivement la fin des idéologies, des grands récits, de l'Histoire, etc. et bien que les figures prophétiques demeurent, elles semblent subir une forme d'empêchement : la question de la transmission devient problématique car la « communauté discursive » n'assure plus la cohérence de l'interprétation ni ne construit d'horizon d'attente, les contenus étant devenus intransmissibles. Dès lors, la parole prophétique échappe à celui qui en est le vecteur ; un autre possible, d'ordre axiologique, émerge : la communauté symbolique se retrouve alors autour d'un discours esthétique, fictionnel. À travers les exemples croisés de La Possibilité d'une île de Michel Houellebecq (2005), de The Year of the Flood de Margaret Atwood (2009) et de Jan Karski de Yannick Haenel (2009), on esquissera ce qui apparaît, dans les années 2000, autour de ce phénomène : le traitement du motif de la lecture/relecture (de documents existants ou de textes fictifs) devient crucial, en ce sens que le texte n'instruit plus par son absorption (comme dans l'Apocalypse de Jean de Patmos), mais provoque l'incertitude et l'errance, voire induit la méprise et la condamnation, tout en se présentant comme le seul dépassement possible de la transmission empêchée.

Biography:

Myriam Watthee-Delmotte est Directrice de recherches du Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique belge et Professeur à l'Université catholique de Louvain (Louvain-la-Neuve), où elle a fondé et dirige le Centre de Recherche sur l'imaginaire. Elle est Membre de l'Académie royale de Belgique. Christophe Meurée est Chargé de recherches au Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique belge et Membre du Centre de Recherche sur l'Imaginaire de l'Université catholique de Louvain (Louvain-la-Neuve).

L'ÉCRIVAIN, VOIX DE LA COMMUNAUTÉ BRISÉE

J. Lambert¹, C. Meurée²

¹Université Catholique de Louvain-la-Neuve, ²FNRS/UCL

Abstract: Dans un second temps, nous analyserons la transcription, dans le cadre littéraire, des événements liés à l'attentat du 11 septembre 2001. La comparaison de la pièce de théâtre 11 September 2001/11 septembre 2001 de Michel Vinaver et du poème Petite Suite au 11 septembre d'Henry Bauchau permettra de faire émerger deux modalités particulières d'interdiscursivité. Dans la pièce de théâtre de Vinaver, ce procédé s'opère par la collation de fragments issus du discours journalistique produit au moment de l'attentat. L'interdiscursivité paraît mettre en évidence une certaine entreprise « mémorialiste » qui relève du ressassement, et donc de la perpétuation du bris de l'Histoire et de la communauté — entraînée dans un mouvement de claustration par un événement qu'elle ne parvient pas à dépasser. L'impuissance de cette entreprise est soulignée par le dramaturge, qui indique la nécessité de son dépassement par le biais de la littérature. Ce dépassement est aussi celui que propose Bauchau, adoptant une posture de type prophétique qui repose sur un principe d'espérance. Son poème n'est pas une reconstruction à partir des fragments de l'événement traumatique, mais une intégration de ce dernier au sein d'un texte conçu comme un espace de résonance interdiscursif plus vaste, qui place en écho des allusions littéraires allant du Moyen âge à l'époque contemporaine. C'est cette entreprise de « mémoire assumée » — reprise de l'événement et réinsertion de celui-ci dans le flux de l'Histoire — qui permet à l'écrivain d'insister sur la volonté d'un renouvellement, d'une refondation de la communauté brisée par la « communauté discursive » qu'est la littérature.

Biography: Jérémy Lambert, CRI

QUAND L'HISTOIRE IMMÉDIATE EST EXPLOSION : L'UNIVERS FICITIONNEL COMME "FRÉNÉSIE INTERROGATIVE" DANS L'ATTENTAT DE YASMINA KHADRA ET LES ÉTOILES DE SIDI MOUMEN DE MAHI BINEBINE

C. Tazartez
université Rennes 2

Abstract: Jean-François Soulet souligne que l'histoire immédiate se construit à partir de « raz de marée » qui détruisent « des éléments essentiels » du « cadre de vie » des hommes et les poussent à remettre en question « leur conception du monde »[1]. Ils suscitent une « frénésie interrogative » qui, selon Soulet, ne peut être satisfaite que par un « récit global et cohérent ». Les attentats terroristes font indéniablement partie de ces « raz de marée », et ont pour but cet « anéantissement » des repères aussi bien individuels que collectifs. S'ils font l'objet d'une démarche historique, ils constituent également un matériau pour le romancier. Cependant, pouvons-nous considérer que le romancier cherche à élaborer un « récit global et cohérent » à travers la construction d'une fiction ? Comment représente-t-il l'histoire immédiate lorsqu'elle est explosion ? Peut-il la saisir dans l'univers fictionnel ? Cherche-t-il à « apaiser la frénésie interrogative » suscitée par l'événement, ou bien exprime-t-il cette abondance de questions qui submerge ceux qui le vivent, sans pouvoir y apporter de réponse ? Participe-t-il à l'élaboration de l'histoire immédiate en fournissant une source d'analyse exploitable par l'historien ? Ou bien effectue-t-il un travail similaire à celui de l'historien en écrivant l'histoire immédiate ? Les romans de Yasmina Khadra, L'attentat (2005), et de Mahi Binebine, Les étoiles de Sidi Moumen (2010) interrogent deux attentats terroristes : celui réalisé par la femme du narrateur qui se fait exploser dans un restaurant de Tel Aviv, et celui perpétré par un groupe de jeunes issus de la décharge de Sidi Moumen en banlieue de Casablanca dans un hôtel luxueux de la ville. Comment ces univers fictionnels abordent-ils l'événement terroriste ? Comment les voix narratives cherchent-elles leur place – « individuellement et collectivement – dans le monde où [elles] vi[vent] » ? Ces deux récits construisent une quête de compréhension à travers une démarche mémorielle qui n'aboutit qu'à la mort des instances narratives. Comment s'organise le processus mémoriel et quelles fonctions peut-il avoir ? Le récit cherche-t-il et obtient-il la cohérence et la totalisation ?

[1] Tous les éléments entre guillemets sont des citations de l'ouvrage de Jean-François Soulet, L'histoire immédiate, Paris : PUF, « Que sais-je ? », 1994, pp.23-24.

Biography: Chloé Tazartez est doctorante en littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Rennes 2 où elle prépare une thèse sur les fictions du terrorisme dans le roman arabe et américain post 11 septembre sous la direction d'Emmanuel Bouju.

Elle est l'auteur d'un article intitulé « « Je suis de l'antimatière » », dans Interférences Littéraires, nouvelle série, n°5, « Le sujet apocalyptique », s. dir. Christophe Meurée, novembre 2010, pp. 151-166.

S2: LITTÉRATURE (COMPARÉE) ENTRE MONDIALISATION ET GLOBALISATION

URBAN SCAPES ET ENVIRONNEMENT NATUREL DANS LA LITTÉRATURE DU MONDE GLOBALISÉ

K. Kramer

Université de Bielefeld

Abstract: Le monde globalisé est caractérisée par l'émergence de topographies urbaines qui se prêtent à une description systématique à partir du concept du scape dans la mesure où elles définissent à la fois des formes d'organisation du savoir et de la perception tout en articulant le monde comme un environnement géophysique formé par l'intervention humaine. Si, dans la littérature, les urban scapes se manifestent souvent comme le site d'une confrontation de l'homme avec son oikos ou habitat naturel, ils ne s'inscrivent pourtant aucunement dans la perspective d'un retour à l'expérience immédiate de proximité locale fréquemment propagé dans les approches écologiques contemporains. Partant de la littérature hispanophone moderne, la communication se propose, au contraire, de dégager dans quel sens les processus de globalisation et/ou mondialisation amènent la constitution de scapes géophysiques qui se définissent par une interaction complexe entre le global et le local et deviennent ainsi le lieu d'une réflexion anthropologique portant sur les relations changeantes qui s'établissent entre l'homme et son environnement naturel et technique.

Biography: Kirsten Kramer Studium der Romanistik, Anglistik und Philosophie in Bonn, München und Paris (Abschlüsse: Maitrise, Université de Paris-Sorbonne; Erstes Staatsexamen, Rheinische Friedrich-Wilhelms-Universität Bonn)

1994-99:

Wissenschaftliche Mitarbeiterin am Institut für Italianistik der Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München und am Romanischen Seminar der Universität zu Köln (Französische, Italienische, Spanische Literaturwissenschaft)

Winter 2000:

Promotion mit einer Arbeit über Das ästhetische Subjekt. Formen autobiographischen Schreibens in der französischen Romantik, Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München

2001/2002:

Wissenschaftliche Mitarbeiterin am Romanischen Seminar der Universität zu Köln

2003-2005:

Postdoktorandin am Internationalen Graduiertenkolleg 625 "Institutionelle Ordnungen, Schrift und Symbole" (Technische Universität Dresden/Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes, Paris)

2005-2009:

Wissenschaftliche Mitarbeiterin am Institut für Romanistik der Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen (Spanische, Französische, Italienische Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaft)

2008:

Gastwissenschaftlerin am Instituto de Investigaciones Estéticas, Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, Mexiko Stadt

2010-2012:

Lehrstuhlvertretung am Romanischen Seminar der Ruprecht-Karls-Universität Heidelberg (Spanische, Hispanoamerikanische und Französische Literaturwissenschaft)

2012:

Habilitation mit einer Arbeit über Wissen, Aisthesis, Kalkül. Kulturtechniken visueller Welterzeugung in der frühneuzeitlichen spanischen Lyrik, Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen seit SS 2012:

Professorin für Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft/Romanistik an der Universität Bielefeld

LE MILIEU DU MONDE

J. Dünne¹, J. Knebusch²

¹Universität Erfurt, ²Université Paris III Sorbonne Nouvelle

Abstract: Notre contribution part de l'hypothèse que l'être-situé dans un « milieu » ne devrait pas seulement être appréhendé comme un être-situé dans un espace corporel du proche, mais aussi dans un espace créé par une mise en situation par le biais de médiums et de techniques-culturelles permettant d'« étendre » et de rendre plus complexe cette situation. À partir de là, nous voudrions concevoir, par le truchement de la littérature francophone et de sa géo-graphie, une mondialisation située permettant d'explorer les processus de mondialisation entre attachement à la Lebenswelt immédiate et appropriation du monde au moyen de médiums techniques ; cette appropriation définit alors un « cosmopolitisme situé » que l'on pourrait opposer à la version existentielle d'un « cosmopolitisme enraciné ».

Biography: Professeur de Romanistique à l'Université d'Erfurt

DE LA LITTÉRATURE-MONDE À LA TOTALITÉ-MONDE SELON EDOUARD GLISSANT

L. Gauvin

Université de Montréal

Abstract: De la littérature-monde à la totalité-monde selon Édouard Glissant par Lise Gauvin, Université de Montréal. La notion de « littérature-monde en français », mise en avant par un récent manifeste (Le Monde, 16 mars 2007), si elle recouvre toutes les littératures de langue française et en appelle à des relations transversales entre ces littératures, ne saurait faire l'économie des espaces littéraires spécifiques aux littératures dites francophones par rapport à la littérature hexagonale. Ni faire l'impasse sur la relation écrivains-publics qui s'y établit. Comment donc désigner les diverses littératures dites francophones sans les marginaliser, et, d'une certaine façon, les exclure ? Comment, par contre, ne pas constater le statut particulier de ces littératures qu'on a du mal à nommer. Littératures mineures (au sens de Deleuze et Guattari, d'après Kafka : une littérature qu'une minorité fait dans une langue majeure), minoritaires, petites littératures (au sens de Kundera : celles dont l'existence même est question) ? Tour à tour ces désignations ont été choisies pour décrire des systèmes littéraires à la fois autonomes et interdépendants. Je discuterai la notion de littérature-monde en rapport avec celle de Tout-monde et de totalité-monde proposée par Édouard Glissant

Biography: Lise Gauvin est écrivaine, critique littéraire et professeure émérite à l'Université de Montréal. Elle a publié des ouvrages consacrés à la littérature québécoise et aux littératures francophones, parmi lesquels L'écrivain francophone à la croisée des langues (Karthala, 1997 et 2006, prix France-Québec), Langagement. L'écrivain et la langue au Québec (Boréal, 2000), Écrire, pour qui? L'Écrivain francophone et ses publics. (Karthala, 2007). Elle a aussi dirigé des ouvrages collectifs sur Les littératures de langue française à l'heure de la mondialisation ainsi que sur Les métropoles culturelles dans l'espace francophone (Hurtubise, 2010 et 2011). Ont également paru en 2010 une suite d'Entretiens avec Édouard Glissant, sous le titre L'Imaginaire des langues (Gallimard) et, en 2012, un ouvrage intitulé Aventuriers et sédentaires. Parcours du roman québécois (Champion). Son essai intitulé La Fabrique de la langue. De François Rabelais à Réjean Ducharme (Seuil, « Points-essais », 2004 et 2011) a reçu une Mention spéciale du jury du Grand Prix de la critique du PEN français. Dans le domaine de la fiction, elle a fait paraître un essai –fiction, Lettres d'une autre ou Comment peut-on être québécois (e) (TYPO, 1987 et 2007), des recueils de nouvelles, Fugitives (Boréal, 1992), Arrêts sur image (L'Instant même, 2003), des récits, À une enfant d'un autre siècle, Un automne à Paris (Leméac, 1997 et 2005) et un court roman, Quelques jours cet été-là (Punctum, 2007). Elle collabore au journal le Devoir à titre de responsable de la chronique des « Lettres francophones ». Membre de la Société royale du Canada, elle a été Présidente de l'Académie des lettres du Québec en 2008 et 2009.

S4: THE ART OF NOT THINKING

TROPES OF NOT-THINKING SINCE ROMANTICISM: FROM EVOCATIONS OF POETIC VISION TO GROTESQUERY

M. Juvan

Research Centre of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts

Abstract: Tropes of Not-Thinking since Romanticism: From Evocations of Poetic Vision to Grotesquery Since romanticism, several techniques, narratives, motifs, and tropes have been thoughtfully invented in literature to make readers think that authors, while writing their texts, were not thinking: evoking poetic ecstasy and prophetic vision, picturing narcotic delusions, describing or imagining dream worlds and representations of unconsciousness, imitating “primitive” art, “wild thinking” or Buddhist nirvana, narrating acte gratuit, experimenting with coincidence or écriture automatique, dramatizing the absurd, or venturing into the transhuman through the aesthetics of the grotesque. Are all these literary devices merely signs that variously represent a disruption with modern Western rationality and Cartesian notion of subjectivity? Are they thus nothing but rhetorical tropes aiming to convince not only audiences, but authors themselves that they both can gain access to the existential transcendence through literary artworks as lacunae of not-thinking? If so, are these devices just another – however unconscious – product of theory, which is endemic to European post-enlightenment aesthetic discourse? Or, on the contrary, do they symptomatically mark some cognitive otherness that only emerges in the singularity of artworks, but escapes other discourses of modern society and their semiotic articulation? Given that language as symbolic order represents the Other, can the act of writing in fact completely avoid self-controlling and self-reflective thinking? After all, if trans-reflexive spontaneity of writing could be conceded, is the act of publishing one’s work possible without any calculation?

Biography: Marko Juvan (1960, Ljubljana), senior researcher and head of the Institute of Slovenian Literature and Literary Studies (Research Centre of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts) and Professor of Slovenian Literature at the University of Ljubljana. His current areas of interest include literary discourse, intertextuality, Slovenian literature and world literary system, cultural nationalism in romanticism, and spatial literary studies. He is in editorial boards of Primerjalna književnost, CLCWeb, Context and Slavica litteraria and co-edits the series “Studia litteraria.” 2002–06 he was president of the Slovenian Comparative Literature Association, 2007–11 member of the Executive Committee of the REELC/ENCLS, since 2008 he is in the ICLA Committee on Literary Theory. His recent publications include three books and one edited volume: Literary Studies in Reconstruction: An Introduction to Literature (Frankfurt/M. etc.: Peter Lang, 2011), History and Poetics of Intertextuality (West Lafayette, IN: Purdue University Press, 2008), Literarna veda v rekonstrukciji (Ljubljana: LUD Literatura, 2006), Primerjalna književnost v dvajsetem stoletju in Anton Ocvirk (Comparative Literature in the 20th Century and Anton Ocvirk), ed. by Marko Juvan and Darko Dolinar (Ljubljana: Založba ZRC, 2008).

THINKING AND NOT-THINKING IN HORACE'S ARS POETICA

P. Hajdu

Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Research Centre for HUmanities

Abstract: In his Ars poetica, a highly influential book of western literary theory, Horace mocks the poets that seem to rely on divine inspiration instead of a careful and self-conscious method of producing poetry. In other passages, however, he thinks that the process of poetic creation tends to be automatic if the topic, the genre, and metric is well chosen for the given poet. As if all his advices about the poet’s activities, and all the knowledge he tries to transfer were no more than a preparation for an unconscious creative process. Thinking provides the circumstances of a non-thinking activity of writing. Thinking and not-thinking seem to play their roles also in the consumption, especially in the appreciation of poetry. Here again, the speaker advertises an approach that is as conscious as possible, but many places imply that reader’s (listener’s) alertness may be harmful for the poetic effect. The paper will analyse the dynamics of thinking and not-thinking in Horace’s text about poetry.

Biography: Senior fellow of Institute of Literary Studies of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, managing editor of Neohelicon, member of ICLA’s executive council and theory committee. Does research in classical (mostly Roman) literature, 19th century literature and literary theory.

LA FICTION COMME ART DE LA NON-PENSÉE ?

F. Lavocat

Université Paris3-Sorbonne

Abstract: Dans ce papier, on s'interrogera sur le renversement, qui est intervenu dans les années 1990, autour des notions de fiction et de personnage. Le discrédit pluriséculaire concernant la fiction, supposée annihiler les facultés de pensée et ruiner la mission émancipatrice de l'art, s'est radicalement retourné : sous l'influence des théories de la fiction et du « tournant cognitif », la fiction est devenue hyperboliquement bénéfique, pour l'individu, pour la société, pour l'espèce. Cependant, on essaiera de montrer que ce qui se joue dans cette réhabilitation de la fiction est sa disparition, dans l'effacement toujours plus aboutie de la distinction entre fiction et non fiction, que l'on peut aussi analyser comme un recul de la théorie littéraire.

Biography: Françoise Lavocat Professeur de littérature comparée Université Paris 3 Sorbonne nouvelle Vice-présidente à la recherche de la Société française de littérature générale et comparée.

S1 BEYOND GEOPOLITICAL BOUNDARIES: KOREAN/ASIAN CINEMA IN PARALLAX VIEWS

ANOTHER IMAGE OF MODERNITY: A HISTORIOGRAPHY OF ASIAN CINEMA

T. Lee
Kyung Hee University

Abstract: The aim of my presentation is to discuss the way in which Asian cinema constructs its own identity since 1990s. What my paper focuses on is the aspect of Asian cinema which internalizes the gaze of the West for its own aesthetic justification. Cinematography as such in Asia stands for the modernization and the non-traditional way of life. The identity of Asia today is the invention of the modern world, in particular, the post-war world system depending on American-centered geopolitics. An issue raised with the identity of an Asian cinema is not the problem of nationality -- East Asia has rapidly been transformed from the rural community to the industrial and urban society dominated by industrialization and urbanization after the Second World War and the liberation from the colonial occupation. Furthermore, the reality of globalization has imposed East Asian countries to face up the cultural confusions between traditional values and Western values. The rampant transformation propelled modernization and globalization is tacitly interwoven with the logic of cultural forms such as cinema. In this way, my presentation analyzes another image of modernity through the formal logic of Asian cinema.

Biography: Alex Taek-Gwang Lee is a cultural critic and associate Professor in the School of English in Kyung Hee University. He obtained Ph.D. from The University of Sheffield, UK. He published books and articles on French and German philosophy, Korean cinema, popular culture, political issues and Fine Art, including This is What Cultural Criticism Means (2011), The Age of Impressionists (2011), The Fate of Theories after Althusserianism: Derrida, Zizek, Ranciere and Badiou (2010), The Rudeness of Good News: An Analysis of Korean Popular Culture (2009), On Futurism (2008), etc.

TRAUMA AND THE MELANCHOLIC TURN IN KOREAN CINEMA

M. Lee
Syracuse University

Abstract: To speak of Korean history as being marked by wars, colonialism, reparation, and civil massacres is to unavoidably speak of national and individual traumatic losses and posttraumatic psychic traumas, as well as of the return of memories. That is to say, fear, hysteria, and anxiety inherent in the psychic scars continue to dwell on in both Korea's individuals and the collective group and, more crucially, affect one's relationship to mortality, loss and mourning. When the trauma involves a tragic loss of the loved one, the psychic aftereffect of melancholy emerges as a vital issue. Korean cinema has become a crucial epistemic method and language to articulate these hidden psychological states and delineate the melancholic affect at both individual and collective levels; simply put, it is a visual archive of Korean traumas and the subsequent psychic manifestations. On this premise, this paper will examine the ways in which Korean cinema visualizes the psychic trauma emerging belatedly from the events of a catastrophic reality and traumatic loss, and utilizes melancholy to elaborate the innate pain and acting out. Over the course of this task, we will notice that the cinematic immanence of melancholy, paradoxically, generates sustainability in the traumatized subject, thereby sublimating the pain, rather than dissociation and repression emphasized in the Freudian notion of melancholy. Hence, I will argue that the visual manifestation of psychic trauma in Korean cinema presents the new nodal point of "melancholic cathexis" as the healing point, calling attention to "the return of melancholy" in the process of working through and mourning. A Petal by Jang Sun-woo the first Korean narrative feature film on the trauma of Gwangju Massacre will be used as a filmic example to address this counter perspective of the melancholic effect.

Biography: Meera Lee is Humanities Faculty Fellow and Associated Faculty to Asian/Asian American Studies at Syracuse University. Her research interests include contemporary Korean cinema and literature, postcolonial studies, trauma studies and psychoanalysis. As the recipient of the 2011 AKS fellowship, she is currently working on a book, tentatively titled Haunting Emotion: Han, Trauma and Healing.

MAPPING TRACES OF SPACE IN ASHES OF TIME REDUX (2008)

H.J. Chung
Kyung Hee University

Abstract: In an increasingly globalized context, theoretical and practical approaches of conceptualizing spatial narratives and geographical configurations are growing in importance. Transnational mobility is often manifested in cinema through tropes of mapping and navigating through composited cartographies that integrate numerous spaces and trajectories. How can we think about a film not only as an aesthetic text and a global commodity but also as a material object that retains traces of transnational circulations of film? In this paper, I present a case study: Hong Kong auteur Wong Kar-wai's Ashes of Time Redux (2008), a digitally restored version of a wuxia film released initially in 1994. Since Wong could retrieve only a portion of the original negatives from a laboratory in Hong Kong, the filmmaker recreated the film by looking for copies from various international distributors and storage vaults in overseas Chinatown film theaters. I propose seeing the film as a map that tracks multiple temporal and spatial trajectories: the distribution of international art house films, Hong Kong film history, cinematic circulations of the wuxia genre, and the geographical dispersion of Chinese diaspora.

Biography: Hye Jean Chung is a Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow in the Comparative Media Studies program at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She received her PhD in Film and Media Studies at UC Santa Barbara. Her primary research interests include transnational filmmaking, global media, digital cinema, and contemporary East Asian cinema. Her work has been published in issues of Cinema Journal and The Velvet Light Trap.

AN INTERTEXTUAL STUDY OF CHINESE(HONG KONG) MARTIAL ARTS FILMS AND KOREAN ACTION FILMS

D. Lim
Hankuk University of Foreign Studies

Abstract: The restoration of Korean film today could be said a result of various historical elements. Especially, influences from Hong Kong films of 1960~70's are considerable. This historical study between Korean and Hong Kong films sets up following research goals: Firstly, the way in which Koreans film accepted from Hong Kong films since 1960s and in what routes?; Secondly, which Hong Kong films were actually reflected in Korea during 1960~70's?; Thirdly, what was the impact of those texts on Korean films?; and Fourthly and finally, how can we evaluate so-called camouflage joint production between Korea and Hong Kong? I will discuss historical traces and experiences in the current condition of transnational journey and diagnose the meaning of the acceptance of films as inter Asian pop-culture. (Key Words: Korean Film, Hong Kong Film, Martial Arts, Intertextuality, Camouflage Joint Production)

Biography: Lim, Dae-Geun is an associate Professor, GS Department Global Culture and Contents, Hankuk University of Foreign Studies, has a Ph.D. on Chinese Literature and Culture(2002). He is the author of various books on Chinese Cinema, such as Story of Chinese Films, Introduction of Chinese Cinema, Shanghai Cinema in 20th century (co-author), etc. He is writing frequently on Chinese films and transnational pop-culture.

S2 LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE FACE AU POSTCOLONIAL, AU TRANSNATIONAL ET à LA MONDIALISATION / POSTCOLONIAL, GLOBALIZED, TRANSNATIONAL COMPARISON

ADAPTATIONS OF WESTERN LITERATURE IN COMMUNIST EASTERN EUROPE: FRANK HARDY'S POWER WITHOUT GLORY AND JOHN STEINBECK'S THE GRAPES OF WRATH

D. Cerce

University of Ljubljana, Faculty of Economics

Abstract: In his 1991 Introduction to Power without Glory, Jack Lindsay observes that many novelists have elicited a forceful reaction from the public by exposing various aspects of life which powerful interests prefer to keep hidden, but hardly any other novel in Australia and beyond has had "such a violent and tempestuous career at every moment of its writing, printing and initial publication as Frank Hardy's Power without Glory" (9). I would argue that the sensational hue and cry which erupted over Hardy's novel has a parallel in the reception of John Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath, and that the two novels share also other similarities. A juxtaposition of the two works by Hardy and Steinbeck is particularly relevant in terms of the role of literature and literary criticism in totalitarian Eastern Europe, which was characterised by the all-permeating ideology of Marxism and Leninism. Whereas contemporary critics agree that, just as it is impossible to neglect the political implications of literary masterpieces, so it is wrong to believe -- with George Levine -- that "all things are political," and on the basis of this theory, replace literary studies with cultural ones, the few critical voices defending the relevance of aesthetics in interpreting literature during the years following the communist takeover were outnumbered by those who embraced the need for politically and ideologically committed reading (Guran 96). It is not surprising, given the two authors' partisanship for the workers and their strong sense of indignation at the labour situation, that both novels were read simplistically and tendentiously, and served as a political tool. I aim to show that, despite apparently different motives behind writing their novels, each of the two authors produced a work that not only added significantly to the Depression era's socially conscious art, but also set its stamp on the world literary map for many years to come.

Biography: Danica Cerce is an Assistant Professor of literatures in English, teaching English at the Faculty of Economics, University of Ljubljana. She received a Ph.D. in Literary Sciences in 2002 and an M.A. in Australian literature in 1995 both from the Faculty of Arts, University of Ljubljana. She has presented on numerous international conferences, including ICLA, SCLA, EASA, ASAL, AULLA and others. In 2006, she was a keynote speaker at the 30th Commemorative Conference of the John Steinbeck Society of Japan, held at Kinjo Gakuin University in Nagoya. Her publications include the books Pripovednistvo Johna Steinbecka (Maribor: Mariborska literarna družba, 2006) and Reading Steinbeck in Eastern Europe (Lanham, New York, Toronto, Plymouth: University Press of America, 2011) and several book chapter, published by Scarecrow Press and Rodopi Press. In addition, she has written numerous articles on American, Australian and Slovene literature, published in various Slovene and foreign academic journals, including Antipodes, Steinbeck Review, Steinbeck Studies, JASAL, Acta Neophilologica, Slavisticna revija and others, as well as in conference proceedings, such as Obdobja, Discontinuities and Displacements, etc.

THE IM/POSSIBILITY OF ADAPTING SHAKESPEARE INTO PEKING OPERA: A CAST STUDY OF NATIONAL GAOGUANG OPERA COMPANY'S CLEOPATRA AND HER FOOLS

J. Chen, S. Lee

Chung-Jen College of Nursing, Health Sciences and Management

Abstract: National Guoguang Opera Company, a Peking Opera troupe in Taiwan, has aimed at reviving traditional Peking Opera since 1995. In order to enrich the contents of traditional Peking Opera, the troupe has tried to fuse the performances with Chinese novels, and Taiwanese folklore and legends. In 2012, An-chi Wang, the artistic director of the troupe, invited Wei-jen Chi, a Taiwanese playwright, to adapt Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra into Cleopatra and Her Fools in Peking Opera. Although Chi employed the techniques of metadrama to reinterpret/reproduce Shakespeare's play, Chi's Mandarin Chinese translation does not preserve but distort the poetry and the spirit of Shakespeare. Moreover, there are two problems derived from Chi's Shakespearean adaptation. One is related to the issue that Shakespeare's spoken drama and Peking Opera are seemingly incomparable because they are different performance genres. The other is about the problem that Chi's Mandarin Chinese translation cannot faithfully present the poetry of the original text. In order to unearth these embedded problems in Guoguang Opera Company's Cleopatra and Her Fools, we would like to adopt Richard Hornby's definition of metadrama and Walter Benjamin's notion in "The Task of the Translator” to discuss them in three aspects in this paper: 1) to compare the original and its theatrical adaptation, 2) to see if Shakespeare’s spoken drama and Peking Opera are in/comparable theatrical objects, and 3) to detect if Mandarin Chinese translation in Peking Opera is suitable for Shakespearean performance. In this paper, we argue that such an intercultural performance is neither a Shakespeare’s play nor traditional Peking Opera; instead, Cleopatra and Her Fools that National Guoguang Opera Company produced exposes the limits of Shakespearean performance in postmodern Taiwanese theatre. [KEY WORDS] National Guoguang Opera Company, Shakespeare, Peking Opera, Anthony and Cleopatra, metadrama, Mandarin Chinese translation, in/comparable theatrical objects, Wei-jen Chi, intercultural performance

Biography: Benjamin, Walter. “The Task of the Translator.” Illuminations. Trans. Harry Zohn. New York: Schocken, 1968. 69-82. Chi, Wei-jen. Cleopatra and Her Fools. Taipei: National Guoguang Opera Company, 2012. Shakespeare, William. The Tragedy of Anthony and Cleopatra. 2nd ed. Blakemore Evans. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, 1997. 1391-439. Hornby, Richard. Drama, Metadrama, and Perception. Cranbury: Associated UP, 1986.

THE INTERSTITIAL LANGUAGE AND TRANSNATIONAL EXPERIENCE

P. Bartoloni

National University of Ireland, Galway

Abstract: Public as well as private spaces are the results of cultural, social and political negotiations in which the present, the past and the future assume a fundamental role of mediation. It is in this sense that a place, be it a square, a street; and an object, be it a statue or a fountain often tell a story which is also the accumulation of memory and the ways in which memory is relived and presented. This dynamic and interactive narration is central to transnational experiences in which the temporal/spatial relation acquires further significance, and layers of meanings through the mediating role not only of temporal differences but also, if not primarily, of spatial encounters. Memory and space are related since the social objects of the past (i.e., squares, streets, statues, fountains) come to react as symbols of an imagined life with the concrete places of the present. This encounter demands representational and emotional responses, which are at the basis of cross-cultural dialogues. The investigation of transnational spaces implies first of all a conceptualization of the modalities of representation, starting from language. In this essay, and through a discussion of the Italian Forum in Sydney, I intend, firstly, to question the Heideggerian notion of language as the house of being, especially in the sense of a closed and localized space in which identity and its representational modes are declined according to specific rules and values. This will enable me to introduce the concept of a language-out-of-place that is a language whose processes of articulation are underpinned by interstitiality and hybridity. Secondly, I will argue that the language-out-of-place is propelled by a desire to externalize the personal, in the first instance, experience of identity through the cherished memory of the past. And thirdly, as this language comes to produce social objects (Dilthey), it activates a collective experience, whose destiny, in the words of Lacan, is to keep alive the symbolic sphere (the thing of representation) through its unavoidable disappearance in the very act of symbolization.

Biography: Paolo Bartoloni is Established Professor of Italian at the National University of Ireland, Galway (NUI Galway). He has published extensively on continental theory and philosophy, especially the work of Giorgio Agamben, Walter Benjamin, Martin Heidegger, Gianni Vattimo, and Mario Perniola, and its impact on the reception of authors such as Blanchot, Calvino, Caproni, and Svevo. His books and articles investigate temporal and spatial thresholds, stressing the inherent potentiality and interstitiality of modern art. He is currently working on the concept of thingness in European thought and art. Bartoloni is the author of The Cultures of Exile, Translation and Writing (Purdue UP, 2008); Interstitial Writing: Calvino, Caproni, Sereni and Svevo (Troubadour Publishing, 2003); co-editor of the thematic issue Ambiguity in Culture and Literature, CLCWeb, vol. 12, no. 4, December 2010; editor of Re-Claiming Diversity: Essays on Comparative Literature (La Trobe University, 1996), and co-editor of Intellectuals and Publics: Essays on Cultural Theory and Practice (La Trobe University, 1997).

TRANSFERT DU FEUILLETONISME FRANÇAIS EN GRÈCE DU XIXE SIÈCLE

P. Pappas

Centre for Greek Language

Abstract: "La Grèce est une province de la France". C'est ainsi qu'un illustre écrivain grec de la fin du XIXe siècle, Grigorios Xenopoulos, résumait la culture médiatique de son pays. En effet, le feuilleton français prédominait dans le poly-système littéraire grec du XIXe siècle. Les lectures du lecteur ordinaire formaient un panorama de littérature française, surtout populaire. Pendant tout un siècle, les romans diffusés et lus en Grèce sont des romans français, la langue enseignée à l'école est le français et la langue source du 80% des traductions publiées c'est encore le français. Le transfert culturel du feuilleton provoque des réactions et encourage le mimétisme. Notre intervention présentera un tableau de la présence de la littérature française et de son contexte en Grèce ; partant de la découverte d'Eugène Sue, notre recherche portera sur la diffusion étonnante de Dumas père, dont les romans seront traduits par milliers d'exemplaires, se penchera sur la mode des Mystères, sur la présence de Victor Hugo dans les livres et les journaux, sur l'apparition tardive de Balzac et l'introduction scandaleuse de Zola, n'oubliant pas les noms de certains auteurs très populaires (Soulié, Féval, Feuillet, Matthey-Arnould, Aimard, Jules de Gastyne, Xavier de Montépin, Ponson du Terrail, Emil Richebourg, Daudet et autres). Par ailleurs, nous examinerons les diverses sources de la culture médiatique, interrogeant les journaux de la Presse et du Siècle, du Petit Parisien et du Petit Journal, mais portant une attention plus particulière sur la Revue de Paris, la Revue des Deux Mondes et l'Illustration, qui ont servi d'original ; enfin nous décrirons les genres et courants littéraires prépondérants jusqu'au début du XXe siècle. Notre approche réfléchit à partir des théories et des concepts de transfert culturel (M. Espagne), de socio-poétique (Viala), de patronage (Lefevère), de champ littéraire (Bourdieu), de distant reading (Franco Moretti) et saura profiter de la littérature récente, grecque et française, sur le roman (Moullas, Tonnet, Queffelec, Tortel, Angenot, Quegnas etc.).

Biography: 2006-2012 PHD in Modern Greek Literature, University of Crete. Dissertation title: "The dialogue of Greek and foreign literature through literary translations 1830-1909". (Supervisor: Professor Alexis Politis). I have conducted research in numerous newspapers, journals, books and archive collections in Athens, Crete, Thessaloniki and the web and I have designed a database containing 15000 different titles. I have successfully presented aspects of my research in numerous Universities and Conferences. I will defend my dissertation in April. 2002-2005 MA in Modern Greek Philology, University of Crete. (9, 73/10). Dissertation Title: "Gabriele D'Annunzio in Greece" (10/10) 1997-2002 BA in Bachelor of Arts in Modern Greek Philology, Department of Philology, University of Crete (8, 1/10) Major publications - "A brief history of Greek feuilletons", International Scientific Meeting in the memory of Panayiotis Moullas, under publication, University Studio Press, Thessaloniki - "Alexandros Papadiamantis as a journalist and as a translator", Proceedings of the Conference "Alexandros Papadiamantis as a translator", under publication, Domos editions, Athens - "Seeking the multiple identity of the Greek translator 1830-1909", Kondyloforos, 9, February, 2010, 55-65 - "Towards a history of translators and translations 1830-1909", Apiliotis, October 2010. (<http://www.apiliotis.gr/ArticlesList.aspx?C=234>) - "First thoughts concerning literary translation 1870-1909", Neoi erevinites-filologoi, Society for the Study of Modern Greek Culture, 2010 - "Istotopography, or the digital sources of Modern Greek studies", Kondyloforos, 7, February, 2010, 207-210 - "La fortune de La ville morte et autres oeuvres dramatiques de d'Annunzio en Grèce", Studi Medievali e Moderni (N 2/2006), Loffredo di Napoli, 263-271 - "The dedications on the books of Stratis Tsirkas' library" http://www.ekebi.gr/appdata/documents/tsirkas_web.pdf) Grants and Fellowships -2008-2012 Holder of the Greek State Scholarship for Modern Greek Literature for PHD. -2008-2010 Holder of Melina Merkouri Foundation Scholarship for PHD. -2008-2009 Scholarship from the Foundation for Education and European Culture (Not accepted since I was granted with the State Scholarship). -2003- 2004 Greek State Foundation-I.K.Y. Scholarship (Excellent performance in the first year of the MA). -2002-2003 University of Crete Scholarship (Best performance in entrance exams of the MA). Major publications - "A brief history of Greek feuilletons", International Scientific Meeting in the memory of Panayiotis Moullas, under publication, University Studio Press, Thessaloniki - "Alexandros Papadiamantis as a journalist and as a translator", Proceedings of the Conference "Alexandros Papadiamantis as a translator", under publication, Domos editions, Athens - "Seeking the multiple identity of the Greek translator 1830-1909", Kondyloforos, 9, February, 2010, 55-65 - "Towards a history of translators and translations 1830-1909", Apiliotis, October 2010. (<http://www.apiliotis.gr/ArticlesList.aspx?C=234>) - "First thoughts concerning literary translation 1870-1909", Neoi erevinites-filologoi, Society for the Study of Modern Greek Culture, 2010 - "Istotopography" or the digital sources of Modern Greek studies", Kondyloforos, 7, February, 2010, 207-210 - "La fortune de La ville morte et autres oeuvres dramatiques de d'Annunzio en Grèce", Studi Medievali e Moderni (N 2/2006), Loffredo di Napoli, 263-271 - "The dedications on the books of Stratis Tsirkas' library" http://www.ekebi.gr/appdata/documents/tsirkas_web.pdf) Grants and Fellowships -2008-2012 Holder of the Greek State Scholarship for Modern Greek Literature for PHD. -2008-2010 Holder of Melina Merkouri Foundation Scholarship for PHD. -2008-2009 Scholarship from the Foundation for Education and European Culture (Not accepted since I was granted with the State Scholarship). -2003- 2004 Greek State Foundation-I.K.Y. Scholarship (Excellent performance in the first year of the MA). -2002-2003 University of Crete Scholarship (Best performance in entrance exams of the MA). Languages spoken -Greek (native) -English (Proficiency, University of Cambridge, grade A) -Italian, (fluent, European certificate, B1) -French (proficient, DELF 1-4) -German (working language)

LITTERATURE COMPARÉE ET ENSEIGNEMENT / TEACHING COMPARATIVELY

LE GENRE DU CONTE FANTASTIQUE DANS LE PROCESSUS COGNITIF ET SOCIAL DE LA LECTURE ET DE L'ÉCRITURE

A.A. Simão Fonseca
UNITAU

Abstract: Students reading skills and written production at the beginning of Middle school concern Portuguese teachers and have been calling language scholars attention in recent decades. Based on my own experience as a teacher and other teachers' experience accounts, I have noticed that the fantastic tale genre is seldom discussed in the Portuguese classes. However, it is an interesting genre for pre-teens who face a period of transition, seeking answers for situations that seem absurd. Teens enjoy reading something different from what they have read in Elementary school and also identify themselves with texts that are beyond their apparent reality. Although in general, students at this age are not used to reading and find it very difficult to write, the context of my classroom was favorable for this research which aimed to develop a project on fantastic tale genre with Middle school students. The specific objectives were to increase students' pleasure of reading not only the fantastic tales but also other kinds of reading and to write on fantastic tale genre. It was an action research divided in five times: 1 th) reading for recognition of gender; 2 th) interpretation of four fantastic tales; 3th) production of fantastic tales, 4th) and exposure correction of short stories; 5th) release of a book of short stories produced and edited. It was developed throughout the year 2011 and during the month of February 2012. The subjects were 6th grade students of a public school in Minas Gerais. It was based on the theoretical perspective of sociocognitive reading according to Marcuschi (2008), Koch (2005, 2008), Koch and Elias (2006); Bakhtinian concepts of language and speech genres (Bakhtin, 2010) and the literary approaches to fantastic tales. It followed the official documents PCN (BRAZIL, 1998), the Portuguese national curriculum for Elementary Education of Minas Gerais and the Basic Curriculum Content - CBC (MINAS, 2007) on reading and writing. The results showed that students can become proficient readers and good producers of texts if teachers are committed to the teaching and learning of these students.

Keywords: fantastic tale. gender. reading. written production

Biography: Je suis Master en linguistique appliquée en mettant l'accent sur la langue maternelle. J'ai un diplôme de troisième cycle en littérature portugaise et brésilienne. Actuellement développer la recherche sur la lecture et la production de textes mettant l'accent sur l'éducation des enfants et des adolescents. Je travaille comme professeur de langue portugaise à l'histoire élémentaire, moyenne et haute; e avec plus de 20 ans dans le rôle de l'enseignant.

TEACHING THE CULTURE OF PROXIMITY IN THE LITERATURE CLASSROOM

M.M. Guiney
Kenyon College

Abstract: The focus of this paper is on the literary object in the classroom, in both secondary and tertiary education. One of the achievements of literary theory in recent decades has been a reflection on the literary canon, defined as the corpus of texts appropriate for pedagogical use. Such reflection has revealed the unspoken assumptions underlying canon-formation, and has resulted in a much more open and fluid definition of a "teachable text". Now it is time to consider introducing yet another new category to the evolving pedagogical canon: the culture of proximity. The term, arising out of French debates over reforms to the discipline of literary studies, designates the culture that is most familiar, and therefore "proximate" to the students who enter the literature classroom. It acknowledges that we are in an era in which new media have radically altered the concept of "reading": the internet, video games, graphic novels are just a few examples of "culture of proximity", that is to say, with which most students already are familiar precisely because it is extracurricular. But to what extent, if any, can one speak of the "literariness" of the culture of proximity? Has the pedagogical canon become so fluid that we can speak of a commensurability between what students already know, and what we teach? Now that Pierre Bourdieu has exposed the ideological function of "legitimate culture" (in La Distinction, 1979), we need also to ask whether there is such a thing as "illegitimate culture" defined as proximate, popular, and therefore "not to be taught". Either we must find new reasons to exclude such culture from the classroom or, on the contrary, exploit the possible commensurability of proximate culture and taught culture, such as a putative "literariness" that would be common to both, in order more effectively to fulfill our pedagogical mission: to bring our students to a higher awareness and appreciation of literature in all of its manifestations. That is the challenge literature teachers face in our post-modern, globalized societies.

Biography: Mortimer Martin Guiney is a professor of French at Kenyon College in Ohio (USA). He obtained his PhD in comparative literature at Yale University in 1987. His current research is on controversies surrounding the teaching of literature, both in France and the United States. His book Teaching the Cult of Literature in the French Third Republic (Palgrave, 2004) looks at the ideological function of literary pedagogy at the turn of the last century. He coedited, with Ralph Albanese, an issue of Yale French Studies on contemporary debates over the discipline of French literature (French Education, Fifty Years Later, 2008), and is currently working on a book that will examine the endangered state of literary pedagogy, Literature and General Education.

INTERTEXTUALITY AS CONTEXTUALITY: EZRA POUND'S "IN A STATION OF THE METRO" FOR AN EDUCATIONAL SETTING

N. Takeda
Hiroshima University

Abstract: Ezra Pound's two-line poem, "In a Station of the Metro" (1916), is a remarkable node of intertextuality. The diptych is an adaptation of a Japanese haiku poem, as is indicated by the author. The American poet presumably knew the Oriental poem through an English translation. Concurrently, Pound's poem shows a trace of influence by the French symbolist, Stéphane Mallarmé's "Apparition" (ca. 1863), as well as the painter, Gustave Moreau's watercolor, entitled L'Apparition (1876). The picture is an intersemiotic translation of biblical passages. The female dancer featured in Moreau's work represents a productive motif for the fin-de-siècle art including Oscar Wilde's Salome. The above intertextual information is highly enriched for various responses, but, specifically, what is the relevance for the nonspecialized area such as an introductory course of comparative literature for the audience including science students, as I have in a Japanese university? Is a seemingly unanimous unexpectedness revealed by the heterogeneous students enough for actualizing an object of the presentation on intertextuality? My supposition is that their unexpectedness, which appears to be fugitive, may be viewed as a key to considering the relevance of the information, leading to the notions of self-exploration, self-fulfillment, and vicariousness in literature. Students in a classroom setting undeniably represent the prerogative client of our academic activities named comparative literature. The relevance of the information that we give them extends itself to the objective and the raison d'être of the humanities in general. The issue of this proposal necessitates the insights and responses from all members of my audience, i.e., colleagues from around the world.

Biography: BA in Liberal Arts, University of Tokyo, Japan, 1981. MA, University of Tokyo, Japan, 1984. PhD in Comparative Literature, University of Toronto, Canada, 1996. Associate Professor, Hiroshima University, Japan, 1997- .

HOW TO DO THINGS WITH "LITERARY YEARS"

C.S. Protokhristova
University of Plovdiv

Abstract: This paper discusses the possibility for the revitalization and the alternative utilization of the concept of "a literary year". The idea is contemplated in the light of single recent occurrences in Bulgarian literary studies analyzed against the backdrop of certain more general tendencies in current comparative literature studies. The presentation rationalizes the specific qualities of the concept such as its flexibility and adaptability, as well as its applicability to a wide range of methodological approaches. It goes on to consider the advantages of the methodology involved: a deeply penetrating analysis of events and developments that have occurred at a certain well-determined moment in literary history; a focus on the cross-section between a synchronic situation and diachronic development, which provides a unique opportunity to activate the potential of synchronic analysis in order to enforce diachronic study (Jauss); the shift of the analytical emphasis onto reception, which provides an opportunity to reconstruct the prevailing perception at a given moment in time; an illumination of the relations between literary texts and a wide range of social and aesthetic practices that stimulate the interdisciplinary aspect of comparative literature studies. The format of the literary years reinforces the contextualization of literary texts and opens a perspective towards synchronic intercontextual readings of texts that appeared simultaneously but otherwise seem ultimately incompatible. Special emphasis is given to the functionality of the approach of the literary years for creating alternative university courses in Comparative literature compatible with the methodological premises of cultural studies that might additionally justify the necessity for Comparative Literature and contribute to its significance as an academic discipline since such courses face the challenge of the ever growing pragmatic orientation of public opinion promising greater practical use of the knowledge acquired. The paper offers an account of a number of academic activities in Bulgaria that illustrate different appropriations of the concept and the corresponding methodological strategies.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Present Position: Professor, Doctor habil. Since May 1995 Chair of the Comparative Literature Department at PlovdivUniversity; Since 1997 - Member of the Committee for Literature at the Supreme Academic Board of the Council of Ministries; Since 1995 - Member of the editorial board of the magazine Ezik I literatura (Sofia); Since 1997 - Member of the editorial board of the magazine Stranitsa (Plovdiv) Degrees: 1973 - Graduated from Sofia University "St. Kliment Okhridski" Bulgarian philology (Minor Studies: English); 1983 - PhD in literature. Thesis; 2004 – Doctor habil. Dissertation;

LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE COMME DIALOGUE DES ARTS / COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AS DIALOG BETWEEN THE ARTS

LÉONARD FOUJITA ET JEAN GIRAUDOUX : DIALOGUE SILENCIEUX ENTRE DEUX ARTISTES CONTEMPORAINS

Y. Mase
Universite Waseda

Abstract: Alors qu'ils vivent à Paris dans les années 20 et fréquentent dans des cafés célèbres parmi lesquels la Rotonde, lieu connu pour la rencontre heureuse de Foujita et de Yuki en 1921, futur femme de Robert Desnos, ainsi que pour des épisodes insérés dans la narration d'un certain Jean dans le roman de Giraudoux intitulé Siegfried et le Limousin paru en 1922, il n'y a pas de traces qui prouvent eloquemment le lien d'amitié entre Jean Giraudoux et Leonard Foujita. Ceci est d'autant plus mystérieux qu'ils ont des amis communs et connus tels que Jean Cocteau et Paul Morand. Sans doute il se fussent sciemment, alors qu'ils se reconnaissent par l'entremise d'amis proches. Nous pouvons supposer que Giraudoux étant modeste et timide, Foujita divertissant et ouvert, celui-ci regardait silencieusement dans un coin de la Rotonde celui-ci provoquer le brouhaha par le choix de costumes ou de comportements ostensiblement atypiques. Voilà pourquoi la parution de l'essai de Giraudoux, illustré par le dessin de Foujita nous intrigue : Le combat avec l'image (1940). C'est un récit quasi autobiographique raconté à la première personne par un certain Jean, double de l'auteur, qui souffre sous l'Occupation allemande. Le texte se présente sous forme d'une espèce de dialogue entre le narrateur et la femme qui ferme les yeux, image peinte par la main de Foujita. D'après ce Jean, le point de départ de ce récit est l'arrivée mystérieuse de ce dessin chez lui, tête d'une dormeuse. A l'en croire donc, Foujita lui a laissé un dessin en quittant avec précipitation la France dès l'éclatement de la guerre en 1940. Mais, pourquoi Giraudoux n'a pas précisé le nom de la personne qui lui a laissé ce dessin ? Est-ce que c'est Foujita lui-même qui est venu le lui laisser en dépit de la situation tendue ? D'ailleurs, le nom de l'éditeur n'est pas marqué sur la couverture de ce livre, alors que la mise en page nous fait penser vivement au travail de Jean-Gabriel Daragnès connu pour la fameuse édition très richement illustrée de Suzanne et le Pacifique de Giraudoux. Toutes ces questions restent sans réponse. Le but de cette intervention est d'essayer de formuler la réponse hypothétique à ces questions, à partir de l'analyse du texte de Giraudoux appuyé sur la documentation au sujet de la relation professionnelle des gens non seulement dans le domaine théâtral mais aussi dans le domaine d'édition, tels que des décorateurs-peintres, illustrateurs, auteurs dramatiques, éditeurs de livres illustres.

Biography: Yukie MASE, terminée sa thèse de Doctorat sous la direction de Christine Hamon Sirejols en 2008, elle donne des cours de spécialité à l'université Waseda à Tokyo, dans le département des Arts du spectacle et cinématographique. Elle travaille sur le sujet interdisciplinaire depuis 2011 : le rapport organique entre le texte et l'image dans des livres illustres publiés pendant la période d'entre deux guerres.

LES NOTIONS D'ART DANS LES OEUVRES DE DEUX POETES QUEBECOIS, GILLES HENAUULT ET ROLAND GIGUERE

S. Lee
Sungkyunkwan University

Abstract: Cet exposé vise à approfondir les notions d'art à partir des œuvres poétiques ou critiques de deux poètes québécois, Gilles Hénault (1920-1996) et Roland Giguère (1929-2003). Ces deux poètes francophones ont tous traversé la période de la "Révolution tranquille" qui a apporté, jusqu'à la fin des années soixante, beaucoup de transformations au Québec sur le plan social, politique et économique. Leurs œuvres écrites des années 1940 à 1970 en particulier montrent alors de nouvelles visions théoriques qui élaborent ce qui sera la littérature nationale québécoise et non plus la littérature canadienne de langue française. D'ailleurs, pour eux, la poésie n'est pas seulement dans le résultat écrit. Elle constitue une manière de dire le monde et de le "voir" à travers sa propre temporalité. Elle peut donc cohabiter avec l'œuvre d'art visuelle (la peinture, le dessin, la sculpture etc.). En fonction de ces idées sur la poésie, l'œuvre artistique et leur pays, les deux poètes écrivent leurs poèmes et leurs textes critiques. Pour Hénault, la littérature consiste à exprimer ses propres réflexions sur la société et la culture québécoises pour bien comprendre la spécificité francophone de son pays natal, rappelée depuis le manifeste 'Refus global' écrit en 1948 par Paul-Émile Borduas et les Automatistes. En travaillant en 1953 à la radio, à la télévision ou au cinéma, et en dirigeant notamment le Musée d'art contemporain de Montréal 1966 à 1971, en tant que journaliste, critique d'art et de littérature ou scénariste, il a fondé la poésie moderne québécoise selon ses divers points de vue. Hénault pense que la poésie est parfois un mot de passe et l'écriture poétique établit une forme en mouvement rythmique. D'après cette démarche poétique, il réfléchit sur l'espace entre les mots du texte et l'espace entre les lignes de l'oeuvre d'art. Pour lui, la gravure, la peinture, l'art typographique font naître leurs lignes à travers le mouvement de la main de l'artiste, de même que la poésie ou "poïésis" en grecque fait naître les mots à partir de l'art du "faire" du poète, c'est-à-dire durant sa fabrication ou sa création due à sa main. D'ailleurs, le poète, le graveur et le typographe voient tous, de la même manière, l'envers du monde sensible. Hénault représente, dans ses poèmes laconiques comme certains cryptogrammes ou calligrammes, ses proses amples et ses textes critiques d'art, le monde d'images provenant de visions renversées, pour résoudre "une contradiction entre ce qui est donné et ce qui est désiré". Au-delà de la distance entre la forme du "langage" plastique et la forme du langage littéraire, il met en relation l'art et l'écriture. Giguère est un poète, un typographe, un graveur qui a été en pleine activité depuis les années 50 au Québec. Il a étudié une typographie et une sérigraphie dans une École des arts graphiques. Il a alors fondé en 1949 les Éditions Erta qui publiaient, selon chaque planche lithographique ou sérigraphique, les oeuvres originales nées des procédés graphiques des artistes à l'aide du linoléum ou de la soie. Ce poète réfléchit sur la beauté du monde représentée à la fois par "l'écriture" graphique et l'écriture poétique. Et son poème tel que <Abécédaire> par exemple est illustré par Gérard Tremblay sous forme de rouleau. Ses poèmes sont également accompagnés de lithographies ou de sérigraphies en couleur et en noir de différents artistes. D'ailleurs, ses textes sont quelquefois publiés sous forme de livres-objets placés sur la toilette typographique ou sous forme de portefeuilles ou d'albums. En particulier, le recueil de poèmes <Forêt vierge folle> montre bien des dessins-poèmes, des dessins-graphiques, des poèmes-collages, pour tout faire imaginer et tout faire dire selon "l'âge de la parole". Sa préférence envers cette double écriture qui met en rapport la poésie et la peinture consiste, peut-être, à réaliser, d'une manière très simple ou laconique, la poésie qui est "l'invasion de l'univers extérieur par le monde du dedans" et constitue l'espace commun et ouvert du dedans et du dehors.

Biography: - Licenciée ès lettres françaises à l'Université Sungkyunkwan à Séoul en Corée du Sud - Maîtrise ès lettres françaises à l'Université Limoges en France - Docteur ès lettres françaises à l'Université Paris 8 en France (Thèse : <L'Art dans la poétique d'Yves Bonnefoy>) - Professeure chargée de cours à l'Université Sungkyunkwan (Département de langue et littérature françaises) - Livres et articles (liste non exhaustive) * <La Corée ; hier et aujourd'hui>, traduit du coréen, collaboration, Académie d'Études Coréennes, 2009. * <La Poétique d'Yves Bonnefoy>, Korean Studies Information, 2010. * <La Poésie française [du Moyen âge au début du XXIe siècle]>, Korean Studies Information, 2012. * "La poésie française et le problème de son enseignement en Corée", <Études de Langue et Littérature Françaises>, numéro 83, septembre 2010. * "Les circonstances pratiques de l'enseignement de la poésie française, développées pour les étudiants débutants en langue française", <Enseignement de Langue et Littérature Françaises>, numéro 37, juin 2011. * "La notion de nature dans les oeuvres de Charles Baudelaire selon Yves Bonnefoy", <Comparative Literature>, numéro 54, juin 2011. * "Les identités de la langue française et de la littérature nationale coloniale, dans les poèmes de Senghor et de Césaire - sur les <Poèmes> et le <Cahier d'un retour au pays natal>", <Comparative Literature>, numéro 56, février 2012.

ASIAN ART & THOUGHT EXPOSED IN EUROPEAN SYMBOLISM, FOCUSING ON THE SYMBOLIST POETRY OF C. BAUDELAIRE & R.M. RILKE

S. Chin
chin sangbum

Abstract: C. Baudelaire, pioneer of modernity, laid the foundation for symbolist aesthetics with the creation of his outstanding poetry collection Les Fleurs du Mal, in which many mysterious Asian elements can be found. It is thus necessary to examine the reception process of Asian art and thought by Charles Baudelaire. As a second step the relationship between Japanese erotic aesthetics, Zen Buddhist elements and Taoist ideas appearing in Baudelaire's Symbolist poetry will be investigated. In particular the correlation of Baudelaire's core Symbolist concept 'Correspondance', in which mind, color and sound correspond with one another, and the Buddhist idea that material world and spiritual world are not two but one single unit will be examined. The German poet Rilke received many possibilities from French Symbolist poetry, which again had been influenced by Oriental art and ideas. Rilke, fascinated with Asian poetry and thought, created a Symbolist poetry encompassing the ideas of an inner world, the reincarnation of the soul, the unity of the universe and man, and the rebirth of birds. The relationship between Rilke's Symbolist concepts and Chinese literature, Japanese haiku poetry and Zen ideas shall be investigated. In addition, the extremely abstract suggestive techniques found in Rilke's later Symbolist poetry shall be compared to the techniques of Japanese woodcut prints and the relationship between Rilke's Thought of Oneness and Taoist thought shall be inquired into.

Biography: In March 1981 I started working as professor at the German Institute at Cheonbuk National University, Cheon-Ju, South Korea. In August 1983 I went on a month-long study trip through Germany. From March 1987 to Sep.

1987 I stayed as visiting professor at the University of Goettingen to research German literature. From October 1987 to September 1988 I had a scholarship from the Austrian Federal Ministry for Science and Research (BMWF), so I had the opportunity to do research not only on German and Austrian Literature, but also on the methodology of comparative literature at the University of Vienna. In December 1988 I published my Ph.D. thesis 'A Comparative Study on the Chinese reception of Goethe and Hesse' under Prof. Dr. Park Chanki at Korea University, Seoul, Korea. From March 1989 to date I have been working as Professor of Modern German Literature and Comparative Literature at Cheon-Buk National University. From March 1998 to Feb. 1999 I worked as research professor at the University of Vienna and - with the financial support of the Korea Research Foundation - accomplished a project titled 'Eastern Influences on Trends of Modern German Literature around the Turn of the Century'. At present I am active as former Chairman of The Association for the Comparative Study of World Literature in Korea and as board member of the Society for German Language and Literature and the Korean Hesse Academic Society'. In 2011 I was recognized by Chonbuk National University as Best Scholar, having published many valuable academic papers and books and having greatly contributed to the globalization of Korean culture. I was awarded two honorable prizes: the 2011 Korea Society Contribution Grand Prix and the 2011 Korea Innovative Leader Grand Prix. I have co-authored the books 'Eins und doppelt' (Peter Lang 2000), 'Transgressing Cultural and Ethnic Borders, Boundaries, Limits and Traditions' (Unisa 2004), 'Akten des XI. Internationalen Germanistenkongresses Paris 2005' (Peter Lang 2007), 'Beyond Binarisms, Crossing and Contaminations', Studies of the Germanistenkongress Warschau 2010 (Peter Lang 2012), and others. I have published among others 'The meeting of East Asia and German Literature', (Hanguk Academic Information Publishing Co. 2011), 'The Search of the East in Western Art', (Jibmundang 2011), 'A Comparative Study on Korean Literature & German Literature', (Parkijong 2012). My research focuses on the interrelationships of Far East and German Literature, East Asian influenced on trends in German literature at the turn of the century, and on European art trends.

SAPPHO IN THE VISUAL ARTS: TEXTUAL, CINEMATIC, AND ARTISTIC TRANSLATIONS OF "GLUKUPIKRON"

N. Sakandar

University of Minnesota

Abstract: The boundary between translation and adaptation is vividly seen in the landscape of the Ur-text; an originator; mosaic content transferred from one source to another. In the fragments left to us by Sappho, the compound word glukupikron was discovered, roughly translated into sweetbitter (or bittersweet), a painful longing. The word gives us an understanding of her Eros. When discussing boundary and translation, where is the connection between poetry and the arts (fine art, music, cinema)? We know Sappho in two ways: visually, through the striking images of Grecian urns, she was also a popular subject for painters through different periods, Romantic, etc.; and orally, her poems were set to music, the lyre. This paper argues that glukupikron is a type of Ur-text by examining its boundlessness through the paintings of Gustav Klimt, the music of Franz Schubert and Richard Wagner, and the poems of Paul Celan and Charles Baudelaire. The paper will also look at the relationship between the sublime and glukupikron, and in what way the translation of mimesis from verse into art is responsible for the boundary itself. In order to discuss the translation from word to verse to art, one must also look at the string of translators who have carried Sappho's fragments from one language to another. The paper explores two types of translations: mosaic - content-based translations into different mediums, and language - the role in which translators have approached glukupikron from different periods and landscapes, and how their versions of the Ur-text adapted Sappho's Eros (and the sublime), as well as redefining the peripheries of its meaning.

Biography: Nasir Sakandar is from San Diego, California, and holds a Bachelors of Arts degree in History from San Diego State University. He is currently an MFA Candidate at the University of Minnesota. His work and reviews have appeared or are forthcoming in Hayden's Ferry Review, Rain Taxi, La fovea, L'Allure Des Mots, and other places. He is Co-Editor-in-Chief for Dislocate Magazine.

S1 LITTERATURES POSTCOLONIALES / POSTCOLONIAL LITERATURES

COMPARATIVE STUDY AND IMPERIAL WORLD MAP: JOSEPH CONRAD'S ONTOLOGY OF SPACE

J.S. Kang

University of Minnesota

Abstract: This paper seeks to develop a reading of the postcolonial scene that highlights the uneven coexistence of different temporalities. This investigation draws on Antonio Gramsci's "Some Aspects of the Southern Question" and "Super-City and Super-Country," as well as Ernst Bloch's Heritage of Our Times. The notions of backwardness and non-synchronicity, as articulated by Gramsci and Bloch, redirect our focus from the hierarchical division between Europe and the rest of the world to the discrepancies within the nation and among the nations. Gramsci utilizes the idea of backwardness by attending to the geographical conundrum of the north-south disproportions in Italy. This notion of backwardness merges with Bloch's observation of non-synchronous contradictions that comprise contemporary Germany. Their mutual concern is regarding which backward (or non-synchronous) elements can meet the dialectical imperative and form the transformative potential of the present. Plus, an exploration of backwardness and non-synchronicity necessarily invites the question of progress. My paper will compare the theories of Gramsci and Bloch with Walter Benjamin's idea of progress, most notably in "N [Re The Theory of Knowledge, Theory of Progress]." Benjamin helps articulate Gramsci and Bloch's complex attitudes toward progress: while resisting the idea of linear teleological progress, they neither fall back on the romanticized version of the peasantry nor fetishize the technocratic solutions. Through this particular constellation of Gramsci, Bloch, and Benjamin, I seek to arrive at a more nuanced critique of how imagined spaces of the periphery figure in Joseph Conrad's narratives. While challenging Conrad's modernist ontology of space, this paper will expand on Edward Said's arguments in Culture and Imperialism. As Said himself points out, the problem of the "imperial world map" is inseparable from a certain tradition of the "comparative study." Ranging from Erich Auerbach to Matthew Arnold, this tradition is predicated not only on an opposition to "strident nationalism" but also on an equally problematic cultural vision of trans-nationalism, whose universality supposes the crisis-free ideal realm. I argue that Conrad's narratives become complicit with and continue this tradition, through their failure to achieve a subversion of the imperial world map. Focusing on the spatial realities in Lord Jim (1900), Nostromo (1904), and The Secret Agent (1907), I will demonstrate that both theoretically and practically, the ideas of backwardness and non-synchronicity constitute a critique of the "comparative study" scheme.

Biography: I am currently a PhD candidate in English at the University of Minnesota. My research interest is in peripheral modernism. Most recently, I have presented the paper, "Between Ingenuousness and Irony: Max Havelaar as Immanent Critique," at the international conference "Generation M: Resetting Modernist Time" in Amsterdam (May 11-12, 2012).

LE COMPARATISME DANS LES LITTÉRATURES POSTCOLONIALES : UNE ÉTUDE DES ÉCRITURES DE RÉSISTANCE À TOUTES LES ASSIMILATIONS

C. Angué

Université Paris Ouest Nanterre La Défense

Abstract: En cette ère de mondialisation des échanges, les particularités régionales s'estompent au profit d'une tendance commune, voire dominante. L'analyse de ce phénomène doit tenir une place importante dans les études littéraires et particulièrement dans le champ des littératures postcoloniales car l'approche comparatiste permet de penser les différences de façon positive. Si la colonisation peut tenir compte des spécificités territoriales, l'évangélisation tend à effacer voire interdire religions, langues et pratiques culturelles antérieures. En Polynésie, elle s'est ajoutée à la création d'un topos littéraire puis d'un stéréotype touristique. Les explorateurs et les écrivains voyageurs des dix-huitième, dix-neuvième et vingtième siècles ont « plaqué » sur les terres polynésiennes les mythes antiques et bibliques de la culture européenne, gommant ainsi les différences entre fiction et réalité et effaçant au passage les mythes traditionnels. Le comparatisme étudie ici la réécriture des mythes, mais aussi les stratégies « occidentales » employées à Tahiti et en Nouvelle-Zélande, ainsi que leur efficacité ; il tient compte de leurs évolutions dans le temps et dans l'espace. Aujourd'hui, de nombreux écrivains polynésiens répondent à cette forme de violence culturelle. En se moquant des écrivains voyageurs, en rejetant les images coloniales, en détournant le vocabulaire des missionnaires, ils affirment leur particularité. Ils revendiquent une identité propre, solide et fière et s'opposent – parfois sans la nommer – à la mondialisation perçue comme une nouvelle tentative autoritaire d'assimilation à la culture « occidentale ». Pourtant, le comparatisme permet de mettre en lumière un phénomène capital : le rejet d'une domination culturelle extérieure ne se présente en rien comme un nationalisme. Il insiste au contraire sur l'harmonie régionale : refusant un isolement stérile, les écrivains insulaires exaltent la civilisation polynésienne. De même que les mythes, les frontières géo-politiques ont été importées par les anciennes puissances coloniales, elles doivent donc tomber dans les œuvres contemporaines. C'est en créant une « puissance » culturelle océanienne que ces écrivains résistent aux influences extérieures. Leur démarche n'est nullement auto-centrée : Chantal Spitz écrit en français et Witi Ihimaera en anglais ; ils utilisent les armes linguistiques et poétiques de la culture dominante pour affirmer leur richesse spécifique. Le comparatisme présente un intérêt majeur : par la confrontation des œuvres polynésiennes contemporaines à celles des Occidentaux d'hier et d'aujourd'hui, nous percevons la force et la beauté de la réponse postcoloniale.

Biography: Actuellement en deuxième année de Doctorat en Littérature Comparée à l'université de Paris Ouest Nanterre La Défense, Chloé Angué a obtenu un contrat doctoral et prépare sa thèse sous la direction de Sylvie Parizet. Son travail porte sur « le rôle de l'imaginaire biblique dans l'œuvre des écrivains francophones et anglophones du Pacifique aux 20^{ème} et 21^{ème} siècles ». En 2011, elle a publié dans la revue électronique Loxias un article consacré au théâtre de l'auteur tahitien Jean-Marc Pambrun : « Les parfums du silence et La lecture de Jean-Marc T. Pambrun : le refus du second rôle » (<http://revel.unice.fr/loxias/index.html?id=6817>).

DISCIPLINING DEMOCRACY

S. Pillay

University of the Western Cape

Abstract: The modern university in Africa is a postcolonial phenomena that has, in its institutional and disciplinary forms, replicated the European organization of knowledge. Early attempts to articulate a role for higher education in Africa took divergent views. Some argued the need to formulate a role for the university that emphasized nationalist visions of Africanizing the social composition of the university. Others argued that the university should be structured to provide the human resources through which developmental needs were to be met. Structural adjustment programmes in the late 1980s and throughout the 1990s decimated the resource allocation to African higher education institutions and led to large scale migrations of critical scholars to the European and North American metropolises. University research became dependent on external funding, which shifted the priorities of research, driven by the interests and priorities determined by donor agencies of the North. This has given rise, argues Mahmood Mamdani, to the dominance of a market-led rationale in university research of which a 'consultancy culture' is symptomatic. Mamdani has argued that there is currently no existing alternative model to the consultancy culture: 'it will have to be created'. An initiative is underway under his direction at the Makerere Institute for Social Research to create an example of a possible model. The Center for Humanities Research at the University of the Western Cape in South Africa has joined these discussions as a partner institution to the MISR initiative, and we have held a series of workshops to establish the intellectual vision which would frame a rethinking of what it means to do humanities and social science research in a postcolonial university in Africa today. This paper is an individual reflection on one aspect of this project premised on the following questions: if we are to undo the colonial legacy of knowledge production in Africa, and think Africa as a place from which to think the world, what would be the intellectual challenges that lie ahead? Drawing on Latin American, Asian experiences, and other African experiences, this paper explores the question of the epistemological and conceptual foundations through which we might think about the renewal of the humanities and social sciences by tracking the intellectual career of a concept in Political Science in Africa: 'democracy' and 'democratization'. It takes stock of the ways in which colonialism, nationalism, modernization theory and Marxism have shaped the conceptual categories through which we make sense of democracy and argues for a critical reworking of these pasts in order to develop a conceptual grammar which illuminates the predicaments of Africa, not as a failure, but as an assessment of its concrete forms. This involves translating African political practices into theoretical insights. The paper interrogates the ways in which 'democracy' and 'democratization' is thought, variously in historicist, quantitative, indexical and modular forms that undergird the externally imposed assumptions about democracy in the discipline of Political Science as it exists on the continent.

Biography: Suren Pillay

Assoc. Professor

Center for Humanities Research, University of the Western Cape South Africa

TRANS-PACIFIC VISTAS: INDIGENOUS VOICES ON THE POSTCOLONIAL STAGE AND COMPARATIVE METHODOLOGY

M. Maufort

Université Libre de Bruxelles

Abstract: Trans-Pacific Vistas: Indigenous Voices on the Postcolonial Stage and Comparative Methodology Marc Maufort University of Brussels (Belgium) This paper seeks to explore how the discipline of comparative literature could help scholars determine how Indigenous theatre avoids homogenization in today's "global village." Analyzing the growing body of Aboriginal drama in contemporary Canada and Oceania from a comparatist perspective sheds light on the myriad ways in which Indigenous playwrights negotiate globalization so as to preserve the uniqueness of their specific cultural and aesthetic traditions. At the dawn of a new century, Indigenous drama in Canada and Oceania is constantly recreating itself, thus evading easy categorizations and definitions. A detailed study of contemporary Indigenous theatre in these different parts of the world suggests how the discipline of comparative drama could contribute to a reconsideration of the theoretical concept of World literature, as formulated by David Damrosch. As is well-known, Damrosch regards world literature as a network of circulation of literary works. He views it as a mode of reading taking into account the specific local environment in which the foreign literary work is received. In this regard, he usefully refers to the notion of refraction, which evokes a sense of cultural in-betweenness echoing Homi Bhabha's postcolonial theories. Indigenous drama, as the case studies of this paper will exemplify, offers instances of "refraction" of Western dramatic tradition along Native idioms, in a bold gesture of reaffirmation of local cultural paradigms. Adopting a trans-pacific perspective, I shall compare and contrast works by Marie Clements, one of today's prominent Métis dramatists in Canada (The Edward Curtis Project--2010, Tombs of the Vanishing Indians--2012), Victoria Kneubuhl (Hawaii; Ola Na Iwi [The Bones Live], 1994), Toa Fraser (Fiji; Paradise, 2001), and Andrea James (Yanagai! Yanagai!, 2003). These emerging writers "refract" the conventional limits of dramatic form in order to resist being exoticized, indeed levelled out as imagined "Others" by mainstream Anglo-Celtic audiences. Thus, comparative literature remains an indispensable tool through which to examine the contradictions inherent in the fraught process of globalization.

Biography: Marc Maufort is Professor of English, American and postcolonial literatures at the Université Libre de Bruxelles (Belgium). He is the current European Secretary of the International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA). Maufort has authored three monographs: Songs of American Experience: The Vision of O'Neill and Melville (1990), Transgressive Itineraries. Postcolonial Hybridizations of Dramatic Realism (2003), and Labyrinth of Hybridities. Avatars of O'Neillian Realism in Multi-ethnic American Drama (1972-2003) (2010).. He has co-edited a number of critical anthologies, including Performing Aotearoa: New Zealand Theatre and Drama in an Age of Transition (2007) and Signatures of the Past. Cultural Memory in Contemporary Anglophone North American Drama (2008).

S3 LES RELATIONS ORIENT/OCCIDENT / EAST-WEST RELATIONSHIPS

KARYÈS, CAPITALE MÉDIÉVALE DE LA RÉPUBLIQUE MONASTIQUE DU MONT ATHOS : POÉTIQUE VIVANTE DE LA VILLE AU CARREFOUR DE L'ORIENT ET L'OCCIDENT, VUE DE L'ASIE DE L'EST

J. Sourd

Diocesan Boys' School

Abstract: Située à mi-chemin entre l'Orient et l'Occident la presqu'île du Mont Athos en Chalcidique (Grèce du Nord) a attiré comme un aimant (R. GOTHONI, 2008) toutes les nations du monde depuis sa fondation en 963 par Saint Athanase, l'Athonite. Considérée comme le joyau du Jardin de la Vierge, la ville de Karyès apparaît comme une micro-cité médiévale dont les bâtiments furent étudiés par l'architecte Paul Mylonas (MYLONAS, 1972) (et dont les récits des voyageurs occidentaux abondent dans le champ des imaginaires partagés). Cependant, les Asiatiques jouent depuis peu un rôle dans cette vision de l'imaginaire de cette nostalgie byzantine à travers les récits de voyage du Japonais Haruki Murakami (MURAKAMI, 1990) les travaux de l'historien d'art byzantin de l'université de Waseda, Tomoyuki Masuda (MASUDA, 1990) ou des photos du Hongkongais Jonathan Wong (2002-2005). Ce sont ces visions de Karyès, appelée autrefois en grec « Mesi » (Milieu), que nous souhaiterions aborder dans notre exposé afin de montrer comment les nouveaux découvreurs de Karyès ont créé une nouvelle « poétique de la ville » au sens développé par Pierre Sansot dans son ouvrage (1996) du même titre.

Références bibliographiques :

- Della DORA, Veronica, Imagining Mount Athos: Visions of a holy place, from Homer to World War II, University of Virginia Press, 2011.
 GOTHONI, René, The Monastic Magnet, Road to and from Mount Athos, Peter Lang Publishing, 2008.
 MASUDA, Tomoyuki, Illustrations du Codex 587 du Monastère de Dionysiou au Mont Athos, Contribution pour l'étude des lectionnaires byzantins (en grec), dissertation, Université Aristote de Thessalonique, 1990.
 MURAKAMI, Haruki, Uten Enten (De Karyès à Stavronikita), Tokyo, Shinchosha, 1990.
 MYLONAS, Paul, 'Le Protaton à Karyes et le Peintre Manuel Panselinos' (en grec), Nea Estia, 1,089 (1972), pp. 1,657-62
 SANSOT, Pierre, Poétique de la ville, Paris, Armand Colin, 1996.
 SCHAMA, Simon, Le Paysage et la Mémoire, Paris, Seuil, 1999.
 WONG, Jonathan, Photos du Mont Athos, inédites, 2002-2005.

Biography: Jean-Michel SOURD

Head of French Department

Diocesan Boys' School

131 Argyle Street,

Mongkok, Kowloon

HONG KONG S.A.R.

Doctorant à Paris IV- Sorbonne sous la direction du Professeur François Moureau, Thèse en cours: "Le Voyage initiatique au Mont Athos dans les récits francophones des pèlerins de la Sainte Montagne du XVIe siècle jusqu' à nos jours, Rapports Texte/image."

FAMILIARISING THE EXOTIC: EUROPEAN KĀLI-BHAKTI IN EARLY MODERN CALCUTTA - "YOU'LL FIND MOTHER IN ANY HOUSE. DO I DARE SAY IT IN PUBLIC?"

G. Chakrabarti

Freie Universität Berlin Raum KL

Abstract: One of the most interesting socio-cultural traits in late-eighteenth-century South Asia was the disarmingly-involved and comparativist manner in which European travellers responded to the richly-syncretised field of devotional spirituality in the eastern India; the preponderantly-shakta orientation of early modern Bengali configurations of religious devotion led, especially in the vicinity of the rather-heterodox city of Calcutta, to the familiarisation of European migrants to the Goddess Kali, who seemed to represent a certain subaltern decentring of the ritually-entrenched codes of elite Hindu devotionism. Anthony Firingee, (Antoni Phiringi) originally Hensman Anthony (?-1836), was a folk-poet/bard, who, despite being of Portuguese origin, was famous for his much-feted devotional songs in Bengali towards the beginning of the 19th century; he was also celebrated for his performance in literary face-offs, occasionally of a competitively-scurrilous nature, known as Kavigan2 (bardic duels) with the then crème de la crème of Bengali composers, viz., Bholā Moira, Ram Basu and Thakur Singh. He married a Hindu Brahmin widow, who was called Saudamini, and was substantially involved with not only the Bengali culture and language but also Hinduism, especially in its tantrika configuration. Anthony, eventually, mastered the language and composed numerous canonical devotional songs addressed to the Goddesses Kali and Durga. His agamani songs, celebrating the return of Goddess Durga to her parental home-- a process that marks the Bengali autumn-festival of Durga Puja-- and he was instrumental in the construction of a temple to Goddess Kali in the Bowbazar-area of North Calcutta that is nowadays famous as the Phiringa« Kalibari (foreigner's Kali temple). The proposed paper will look at the cultural polysemy between a "local" Indic religious tradition and the "cosmopolitan" acculturation of a European traveller, through a comparativist analysis of devotional song-texts and cultural-historical sources and records. Of special interest should be Edward Said's formulation, which locates it in the intersection of power and knowledge, of the "Orientalism"-discourse. Said's analysis of the "Orient" as a "cultural construction", through a renegotiation of the Foucauldian power-knowledge-nexus and Gramscian hegemony, helps in constructing a discursive model for a literary-cultural comparativism as the key-stone of transcontinental cultural transactions. In this paper, the literary-cultural construction of a religious hybridity, operating between and cross-fertilising Indo-European cultural conjunctions, will be examined through the study of individual agency, in this case of Hensman Anthony, and literary borrowings.

Biography: Autor: Gautam Chakrabarti

Lehrbeauftragter in Universität Potsdam & Doktorand, ERC-Projekt „DramaNet“
Peter Szondi-Institut für Allgemeine und Vergleichende Literaturwissenschaft
Friedrich Schlegel Graduiertenschule für literaturwissenschaftliche Studien
Freie Universität Berlin

L'EUROPE SOUS LE CHARME DE L'AFRIQUE ! TOMBOUCTOU, AUTREFOIS DESTINATION DE RÊVE DES CHERCHEURS-VOYAGEURS EUROPÉENS : ANALYSE CRITIQUE DES RÉCITS DE VOYAGE DE MUNGO PARK (1771-1806), RENÉ CAILLÉ (1799-1838) ET HEINRICH BARTH (1821-1865)

L. Yéo

Université de Cocody-Abidjan

Abstract: De grands explorateurs ont parcouru le monde sur les cinq continents, du Nord au Sud, de l'Est à l'Ouest, à pied, en bateau, à cheval ou en pirogue, de déserts en steppes, des glaciers aux jungles impénétrables, d'océans en détroits. Ces voyageurs rencontrèrent des peuples étrangers et des régions exotiques et mythiques ; ils firent des témoignages de leurs rencontres et expériences sous diverses formes d'expression. En témoigne bien le nombre important de récits de voyage sur Tombouctou au Mali. Fin Novembre 2011, la ville faisait la « une » de la presse française. L'évènement : « Mali : trois Européens enlevés, un autre tué à Tombouctou » (Libération du 25. 11. 12). Avec la déclaration d'indépendance de l'Azawad par les touaregs maliens le 6 Avril 2012, Tombouctou devient davantage un thème d'actualité. Ville fondée par les Touareg au Ve siècle de l'hégire, Tombouctou a fait rêver l'Europe durant plusieurs siècles. Mais pourquoi cette ville dite « mystérieuse » a-t-elle fait autant fantasmer l'Occident? Qu'est-ce qui faisait le charme ou la particularité de cette cité en terre africaine ? Pourquoi exerçait-elle une attraction aussi forte sur les chercheurs, voyageurs et savants européens (Mungo Park, René Caillé, Heinrich Barth, Gordon Laing, Oscar Lenz, etc.) ? Jouit-elle aujourd'hui encore du même intérêt qu'avant ?

Nous nous proposons de répondre à ces questions en nous appuyant sur quelques écrits de quelques voyageurs européens : « Assurément le voyage n'est pas aussi simple que celui de Nice ou d'Alger. S'étant endormi dans un wagon, au départ de Paris, on ne se réveille que six semaines plus tard dans un chaland-pirogue sur le Niger. Cependant on va voir que tout n'est pas difficultés dans cette longue route, ni barbarie dans ces pays hier encore mystérieux. » (Félix Dubois 1897 : 1). Ce discours sur Tombouctou est-il radicalement différent du discours classique sur l'Afrique noire, « longtemps figée dans les représentations de l'imaginaire médiéval qui en faisait une terre d'opprobre et de malédiction, et au cœur duquel peu de voyageurs s'étaient jusque-là aventurés » ? (Jacques Chévrier, 1999 : 4) Quelle analyse critique peut-on faire des mises en scène de rencontres interculturelles entre Européens et Africains dans les écrits européens sur Tombouctou, ville multiculturelle par excellence, composée d'Arabes d'origine marocaine, de Sonraïis, de Touaregs, de Mandingues et de Peuls ?

Biography: Dr. Lacina Yéo
Maître-Assistant
Université de Cocody-Abidjan
Département d'Études germaniques
Actuellement: Enseignant-Chercheur Invité "Höffmann-Dozent für Interkulturelle Kompetenz"
Universität de Vechta/Basse Saxe/Allemagne

SHANGHAI BETWEEN EAST AND WEST: IN SEARCH OF A COMPARATIVE METHOD FOR OUR OWN TIME

L.E. Bernstein, R. Schumaker
University of Maryland University College

Abstract: As we reflect on the strengths and limitations of a comparative approach to literary studies for contemporary classrooms and public discourse, the representation of Shanghai in literature and film during the period from the May 4th Movement through the turn of the 21st century offers a propitious focus for our discussions. This particular time and place – Shanghai from the end of the first World War to present – presents an ideal comparative model for three main reasons: historically, as one of the great ports of China, Shanghai provides an opening to other East Asian countries as well as to the Western world; politically, a long, complex, sometimes tragic history of extraterritoriality in the form of both a legal structure and the international Concessions and Settlements lays the framework for rich, intricate, and dynamic connections between events, peoples, languages, and literatures; finally, a very large number of writers, both Asian and Western, write and mutually influence each other in texts about Shanghai through much of the 20th and certainly the 21st century. Literary and cinematographic representations of historical Shanghai reveal political amorphousness, volatile traditions, productive exchanges, and continuing, chronic threat and aggression, in ways that parallel and presage the salient characteristics of our own global period and indicate critical lessons for contemporary scholarship and teaching. By juxtaposing, analyzing, and evaluating diverse film and fictional versions of Shanghai, we will suggest a comparative method that can be applied to a range of literary and cultural contexts, in both academe and the public spheres. In particular, we will focus this presentation on a comparative analysis of precise authors and filmmakers whose depictions of historical Shanghai address social, political, cultural, and economic issues reflect the complex issues of our contemporary situation: technology, globalization, and the dissolution of national boundaries; linguistic and socio-cultural displacement and integration of immigrants within majority-ethnic communities; diasporic identities and racial and class inequalities. The paradoxes of Shanghai as a city and cultural symbol -- a mixture of ancient and modern; at the cultural crossroads of East and West; the site of both the founding of the Chinese Communist Party and the excesses of Western Capitalism and Imperialism – have led to an incredible array of stories, novels, and films that are particularly suited to our comparative approach. We will focus on the way in which the representation of Shanghai by writers and filmmakers with transnational (immigrant, expatriate) and hybrid (multi-national, multi-racial/ethnic) identities break down ideological notions of “East” and “West,” “primitive” and “advanced” societies. In so doing, we will address the elements of Orientalism present in these works, as well as in traditional U.S. and European study, in which China and Asia function as Other to an imaginary, homogenous Western civilization. In Writing Diaspora: Tactics of Intervention in Contemporary Cultural Studies (Indiana UP, 1993), Rey Chow decries the “general lack of exchange between scholars of Asian and Western literatures” and “Western cultural hegemony [in which] even when studies of a comparative nature are undertaken, the terms of reference are often provided by the West” (123). Our methodology resists such cultural co-optation by comparing texts by both Asian and non-Asian writers and directors, and by calling into question aesthetic moralizing while emphasizing ethical interpretive practices. We will analyze the following stories, novels, and films: Texts · Somerset Maugham, The Painted Veil (1925) · Mao Dun, Rainbow (1930) · Andre Malraux, La Condition Humaine (1933) · Eileen Chang, Lust, Caution (1979) · Kazuo Ishiguru, When We Were Orphans (2000) · Wang, Anyi, The Song of Everlasting Sorrow (2008) · Qiu Xiaolong, Years of Red Dust (2010) Films · Maxu Weibeing, Song at Midnight (1937) · Stephen Spielberg, Empire of the Sun (1987) · Ye Lou, Suzhou River (2000) · Ye Lou, Purple Butterfly (2003) · John Curran, The Painted Veil (2006) · Ang Lee, Lust, Caution (2007) Our presentation will have a double axis. First, we show that, despite the national and political diversity – Chinese, Japanese, French, British, American – the representation of Shanghai has a relatively straightforward structure but nevertheless points the way to apories of great interest. Second, this problematic conceptual framework anticipates contemporary needs, dilemmas, and challenges, and thus serves as an especially powerful methodological instrument for navigating the literature and, more generally, the events of the 21st century.

Biography: Lisa Bernstein is an associate professor for the University of Maryland University College and Academic Exchange Specialist for the U.S. Department of State. She has taught courses on Global Literature and Social Change, Contemporary World Literature, Women’s Studies, and Critical Approaches to Literature, as well as courses in German language and culture. Her research interests include twentieth-century African, Caribbean, and German art and literature by women, feminist theory, and new technologies in teaching. She is editor of (M)Othering the Nation: Constructing and Resisting National Allegories through the Maternal Body (Cambridge Scholars Press 2008), and recently published an article, "Between Complicity and Resistance: Christa Wolf and Nadine Gordimer," in Truth to Power: Public Intellectuals In and Out of Academe Eds. Silvia Nagy-Zekmi and Karyn Hollis (Cambridge Scholars Publishing 2010). Richard Schumaker is an associate professor at the University of Maryland University College and an assistant director in its Center for Teaching and Learning. He was educated at the University of California and University of Paris IV, from which he holds three graduate degrees. Having taught in Germany and Italy, he has divided his professional life between Europe and the United States. Over the years, he has presented at Oxford, Glasgow, Paris, Regensburg, Palma, Bourdeaux, Baltimore, College Park (MD), Santo Domingo, Aruba, and St Petersburg, Russia. Recently he presented and published at the China-US Forum in Nanjing, PRC. Along with his co-author, Lisa Bernstein, he's organizing a session at the Boston 2013 session of Northeastern Modern Language Association entitled, "Representations of Shanghai: Film and Fiction."

Friday, July 19, 2013

S2 LITTERATURE COMPAREE ET MONDIALISATION / COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND GLOBALIZATION

LITERATURE IN THE AGE OF GLOBALIZATION

Y. Tso

National Taiwan Normal University

Abstract: Literature in the Age of Globalization

While national literature is still a viable classification for departments, its studies is in a time of transition as its methodologies are redefined, and as its boundaries become fuzzier. Given this time of transition, questions about new directions for the study of literature should be considered: what other terrains could and should be chartered for research and scholarship and for programs, departments, centers and other broader divisions within the university? Re-categorization also gives rise to questions about the manuscripts journals accept and about the themes of conferences as well as to questions of a higher level such as if increments of ground-breaking scholarship necessitates the birth of new fields.

In my opinion, the answer is affirmative. A great writer is no longer, or at the very least less than in the past, defined by one single literature or department and must be examined by the oeuvres—their genres, languages, theoretical affiliations, readership and other penchants. For example, when Gao Xingjian visited my university this year, rather than from one or two departments, the Graduate Institute of Performing Arts, the Department of Chinese, the College of Liberal Arts, the Center for General Education, as well as scholars from a wide variety of departments of other universities convened for this literary festival. Moreover, invoking the fact that contemporary poets cite as their influences poets such as Paul Celan, Du Fu, Rainer Maria Rilke and Charles Baudelaire and rhapsodize about these international luminaries makes one realize that national, cultural or Samuel Huntington's civilizational boundaries cannot crimp the reading and writing of literature by imposing national, linguistic or continental borders.

The solution for structuring research, courses and the university would be to reflect the globalizing trend: departments can be encouraged to rename or to carry multiple descriptors; faculty and courses can straddle departments and programs, and broader units and new courses, programs and departments should be created on campus to cope with this change. Journal editors, reviewers and publishers can support rising fields with special issues, series and marketing labels. Students should be taught to sign up for classes in other and affiliated departments including comparative literature where literature and theories are taught with more rigor either in their own languages or with linguistic and contextual matrices in mind.

With this transnational and global awareness, scholars can appreciate with even greater acuity literature's achievements in its forms and thoughts as well as the linguistic liaison and cultural connectivity Lisa Lowe, Stuart Hall and other critics suggest. Moreover, to illustrate literature's interconnectedness within the context of globalization, this paper examines comparatively the poetry of Jorie Graham and Bei Dao; Graham comments on both the power and disempowerment of global media and on interpretation and closure, whereas Bei Dao's insistence on the subjective and deployment of narrative gaps as well as quirky metaphors illuminate the condition of humans as fellow travelers and readers in this global era.

Biography: Dr. Yi-Hsuan Tso is Assistant Professor at the National Taiwan Normal University. Her publications include journal articles about American multicultural poetry, Rita Dove, Keats, feminism, Taiwanese cinema, encyclopedia entries on contemporary American poetry, a translation that constitutes a chapter of a psychology textbook, an interview of a Taiwanese Canadian poet, poems and newspaper articles.

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE: FROM A NATION-BASED PERSPECTIVE TO A CROSS CULTURAL APPROACH

G.I. Pacheco

UNIVERSITY OF COSTA RICA

Abstract: Comparative literature is an academic field that invites balance and equity; two elements are compared in a dynamic game that exposes differences and similarities. Either comparing two literary works, from a traditional comparative perspective, or comparing literature to artistic productions, philosophical or sociological concepts, religious, political or artistic views, comparative literature is by nature interdisciplinary. Originally, the comparatist's intention was to explore a national literature and then to study another national literature in order to establish connections. However, the concept has evolved; the intention now is to go beyond national boundaries to increase the understanding of other cultures. That is why this field is seen as the forerunner of Cultural Studies.

Cultural Studies was proposed as a social articulation that denied the separation of high and low cultures, a set of practices that wanted to erase boundaries among disciplines and discourses. It includes a variety of areas such as history, gender, race, ecology, film studies, textuality, and popular culture, to name a few. It has no specific methodologies but rather employs a variety of different approaches. One of the goals of Cultural Studies is to understand the processes that shape culture and society as well as their transformations.

So far, the similarities between the fields of Comparative Literature and Cultural Studies are clear: both are interdisciplinary, both are dynamic, both want to understand human nature by means of people's different manifestations and both want to erase boundaries either geographic, linguistic, textual, social or cultural. By embracing these two fields and using comparative methods to explore relationships of power, social processes, communal struggles or identity dilemmas, scholars have validated both fields.

Since the field of Cultural Studies is broad, my proposal is to concentrate on one area of Cultural Studies, popular culture. Taking into account that Pop culture can be defined as the ideas, views, attitudes, images or artifacts that permeate society and has been studied by scholars from different fields, my proposal will be to present an analysis of lyrics claiming "freedom and fraternity" and produced in the 1980's in the Americas from a comparative perspective. Thus, musical pieces written in English and Spanish will be selected while the methodology and theory of Comparative Literature, reinforced by the premises of popular culture from a Cultural Studies approach, will show how an academic field, Comparative Literature, can expand into cultural dimensions in order to clarify human concerns.

Biography: Gilda Pacheco, Costa Rican, is a full professor at the University of Costa Rica. Former Coordinator of the Master's Program in English Literature and former Director of the Graduate Program in Literature, she is currently the Director of the School of Modern Languages at the University of Costa Rica. She received a B.A. in English, a B.A. in French, and a M.A in English Literature from the University of Costa Rica. As a Fulbright scholar, she earned a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature at The Pennsylvania State University in the United States. She has published many articles and stories in academic journals and, with Kari Meyers, has co-authored three books: An Introductory Guide to Literary Criticism (2003), The Telling and the Tale: An Introductory Guide to Short, Creative Prose (2006) and Women and/in Literature: Unique Voices, Shared Visions (2011).

A POSITIVE APPROACH TO LITERARY GLOBALIZATION

F. Tarlaci

University of Texas at Austin

Abstract: From its being an "expanded canon" to its being "a mode of reading, the theories of world literature have generated a good amount of criticism, which has, in fact, enriched all the debates around it in the last couple of decades. Just like world literature, globalization is contested because, supposedly, it threatens cultural specificities and has a potential to erase them. As a constantly expanding phenomenon, globalization reached all areas of humanities including literature and culture today. Thus it is indispensable to discuss one without the other when it comes to literature in general. With world literature, texts from all around the world gain circulation, often in translation. However, it does not necessarily have to eliminate local and cultural color of a text when it moves from its national borders to the world of literature. This would make the arbitrary divisions between Western and non-Western literatures seem less important than they are considered to be, and allow world literature to be the common ground where such divisions would dissolve. In order to attain this condition, politics of translation, as articulated by Venuti, Lefevere, and Bassnett in their books on translation, need to be carefully examined by comparatists and other scholars of humanities in translated texts in order not to end up with a stack of culturally flattened texts and call it "world literature." This paper argues that it is possible to maintain differences of texts originated in diverse cultures and make them global at the same time. It is indispensable today to avoid globalization; however forming a literary state where cultural specificities are protected while making national literatures available to the rest of the world is attainable with careful consideration of translation politics.

Biography: Fatma Tarlaci is a Ph.D. candidate in Comparative Literature at the University of Texas at Austin. Her research interests include the relationship between national and world literature, translation as a comparative tool, and the concept of national identity in the contexts of globalization.

LOCAL/GLOBAL LITERACY: ENGAGING WITH THE POETICS OF TRANSITION

M. Abdel-Messih
Kuwait University, Arts College

Abstract: At a time when the global interrelates to the national, when comparative critics propose a "transnational literacy" (Spivak), new modes of reading "world literature" (Damrosch), a "postcolonial horizontal reading" (Brydon), an "Other Thinking", a "critical cosmopolitanism" replacing colonial difference (Mignolo), there yet persists a discordant centre-periphery discourse dividing, Europe and the Middle-East, or Latin and Arabic, segregating cultures with numerous intersections along history. The "Middle-East" is a colonial categorization used interchangeably with Islam, Arabs and Mediterranean, which rejects the historical varieties of the region. Area studies form part of the old borders set by colonial Europe, and according to Mignolo, set a distinction between disciplinary knowledge and subaltern knowledge, ignoring the fact that disciplinary knowledge attributed to Europe has come as a process of incorporating other knowledges. My methodology is informed by Western scholarship, while embracing a postcolonial perspective, aiming at introducing further perspectives on planetary cultural processes. Western categorizations based on colonial difference, as well as Arab reductive nationalisms need to be countered through a planetary comparative approach that conciliates area studies and comparative literature. This would map transcultural relations that promote new perspectives on global literacy. So far, in Arab speaking local-based institutions, literature has frequently been locally situated, while Western literature 'othered' as a rival. National institutions have frequently maintained an ambivalent relationship with Europe, whose modernizing project came along with colonization. In the struggle for independence, the nationalists' developed an inverse discourse turning national literature into a self-enclosed system. National conflicts between imitation and innovation were not an issue of concern in postcolonial studies; lately, socio-political changes have drawn postcolonialists' attention to indigenous conflicts (Young), and ways of incorporating their problematics among world theoretical concerns. The aim of this research is to map Avant-gardism - or the 'other writing' in Egypt as part of a planetary movement that has materialized in response to cultural secularism, confronting the sanctification of literary traditions as part of national legacies. My focus will be on Egypt - not as a nation - but as a cultural hub - a site of intervention, where cultural transformations have been taking place in continuum, during times of transition. In the European narrative hegemony, Arab cultural transformations came in response to contacts with Europe in the mid-nineteenth century. Accordingly, Napoleon's French campaign to Egypt was considered as the driving force initiating modernity and modernization, a hypothesis denying a long history of Egyptian-French mutual translations. This also negates a long history of cultural production in Egypt providing inspiring resources to oppositional movements contesting classical 'Arabism'. Unlike some Western avant-garde movements' rupture with the past, avant-gardists in Egypt excavated buried remnants, thus reviving Egypt's multiple histories. Cultural transformations in Egypt did not initiate in rhetoric and theory, rather in verbal and visual cultural productions. Most of these productions were transnational; the Egyptian Surrealists, who worked in close alliance with the international Surrealist movement, stand out as a prominent example, introducing new ways of reading self-other relations, eventually promoting cultural transformations. Oppositional poetic groups emerged in the seventies (Aswat and Ida'a), and in the nineties, proponents of the 'Other Writing' have continually retained a conflicting relationship with institutions of Arabic for breaking with their stultified rhetoric. Despite being largely inspired by popular knowledge and aligning with the subaltern position, they hardly gained popular acclaim. Towards the turn of the third millennium, due to a continuum of transformations, avant-garde and popular collectives syncretized poetics and politics; currently the cultural renditions emerging sporadically in response to the Egyptian Revolution have synchronized several styles and temporalities. They are more of a bricolage breaking with the canon and opening new vistas on former resistant cultural processes. One of the objectives of this research is to map local/global modes of intervention. Subsequently, the paper will be speculative and interventionist: it will counter 'Arabism' in conformist readings without collapsing the difference between Arab and European cultural renditions. "Transliteracy", "critical cosmopolitanism", or changing modes of reading "world literature" is effectuated when comparative critical scholars are able of speaking about the specificities of their worlds and cultural productions (Jameson). Rendering the invisible, visible is a postcolonial intervention in the Eurocentric paradigm. Multiple perspectives will ensue depending on different locations; a comparative reading does not collapse difference but becomes an intermediary strategy conveying the interdependence of global cultural processes by bolstering the space in between. This may hopefully reactivate a European-Arab cultural dialogue, a stimulant for rethinking standardized visions of the world.

Biography: Marie-Therese Abdel-Messih. Professor of English & Comparative Literature Universities of Cairo, and Kuwait (on secondment). Member of the International Advisory Board & Associate Editors of CLCWeb: Comparative Literature and Culture, Purdue University; Member of Board of Trustees: The International Prize for Arabic Fiction (IPAF) supported by the Booker Prize Foundation; Member of the Advisory Board of the National Centre for Translation. Among translations and numerous articles in English and Arabic, she has authored books in Arabic: A Transcultural Reading of Literature (1997; 2004); Visual and Verbal Cultural Representations (2001); National Culture: Global or International Options (2006; 2009).

HISTOIRE, PHILOSOPHIE ET COMPARATISME / HISTORY, PHILOSOPHY, AND COMPARISON

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AT THE CROSSROADS OF PHILOSOPHY AND HISTORY

H. Meretoja
University of Turku

Abstract: In my paper, I would like to explore how comparative literature could be developed into a direction that takes better into account both the philosophical and historical presuppositions underlying literature and research in comparative literature. I will propose developing a contextualizing approach that analyses literature from both philosophical and cultural-historical perspectives. This approach is based on the view that literature always has certain philosophical presuppositions or commitments – it has certain ontological, epistemological and ethical underpinnings: that is, a certain underlying view of what reality is like and what human existence is about, a certain view of our epistemic relation to the world, and a certain view of the sense in which we are moral and political agents, acting in the world with others. These philosophical presuppositions, in turn, do not come from nowhere; they are formed in a certain historical world, and can be historicized. In my research, for example, I have tried to relate various philosophical views on subjectivity and narrativity to the wider post-war socio-historical and literary context. Hence, I have tried to look at the ways in which literature exists, in a sense, at the crossroads of philosophy and history – but without reducing literature into either one, but trying to be sensitive to its particularity, complexity and irreducibility as literature.

The challenge of such a comparative, contextualizing approach is to combine close analysis of particular novels with an effort to place them in relevant cultural, sociohistorical, philosophical and theoretical contexts so that the analysis throws new light on both the novels and the contexts. There should be a constant interplay between the analysed novels and the relevant contexts, and the theoretical-conceptual tools should not be rigidly defined at the beginning, but held open to reinterpretation as the research proceeds; this makes conceptual self-reflection a crucial part of literary analysis. In my paper, I will also examine what theoretical means we have to better understand this dialogue that takes between literary theory and objects of interpretation. I will suggest that contemporary critical hermeneutics provides resources that have not yet been fully acknowledged in helping us understand the dialectic movement between the general and the particular that is at work in the interpretation of literary texts in the light of theoretical concepts. In this dialectic movement, the pole of the general can be seen to comprise a mélange of relevant theoretical, philosophical and socio-historical contexts and the pole of the particular the literary texts under scrutiny. The approach I thereby suggest is not a new theory in the traditional sense but rather reflection on the conditions and presuppositions underlying literary production, literary interpretation and the dialogue between them.

Biography: Dr. Hanna Meretoja studied Comparative Literature, Philosophy, Cultural History, Art History and Media Studies, before completing her PhD in 2010 at the University of Turku. Since 2001, she has been working in various teaching and research positions at the Department of Comparative Literature, and has also conducted doctoral research at the University of Tübingen (2002-2003), Sorbonne Nouvelle (spring 2004) and Uppsala University (spring 2008). Meretoja's dissertation The French Narrative Turn: From the Problematization of Narrative Subjectivity in Alain Robbe-Grillet's Dans le labyrinthe to its Hermeneutic Rehabilitation in Michel Tournier's Le Roi des Aulnes (2010) analyses the crisis and return of narratively understood subjectivity in relation to various philosophical traditions, to the postwar socio-cultural situation and to current debates in narrative studies. In her postdoctoral research, Meretoja explores the ethical dimension of the narrative process in which cultural memory and identities take shape. She focuses particularly on twentieth-century "perpetrator fiction" that delineates the experience of those involved in National Socialism and unearths the simultaneous impossibility and necessity to integrate traumatic experiences, through storytelling, to cultural memory. Meretoja is particularly interested in the interrelations between literature, philosophy and history. In several publications, she has explored the philosophical (ontological, epistemological, ethico-political) and cultural-historical underpinnings of selected novels from the postwar period to the present. She has also published theoretical articles on the methodology and philosophy of literary studies. Her research interests include the intersections of ethics and aesthetics, narrative studies, hermeneutics, questions of subjectivity, identity and otherness, cultural memory, war and trauma, consumer culture and the socio-critical potential of art. Meretoja's articles and conference papers deal with a range of novelists from the French nouveaux romanciers, Michel Tournier and Günter Grass to contemporary novelists such as Michel Houellebecq, Siri Hustvedt, Julia Franck, Jonathan Littell, Caryl Phillips and Muriel Barbery. With her colleagues, she has launched "Café Voltaire" (Helsinki: Avain/BTJ Finland), a series of essay anthologies that deal with contemporary literature from various countries. She has co-edited the first and third volumes of the series (on French and German literature), and is currently the Chief Editor of the series.

NODES AND HOLES. COMPARATIVE LITERARY HISTORY AS A SKETCHY MAP OF LITERATURE

O.A. Dubalaru Fotache
University of Bucharest, Faculty of Letters

Abstract: Twenty years ago, a new discourse emerged in the field of literary science. The necessity of a comparative literary history was recognized by historians and theorists alike as a feasible solution for the longtime crisis of literary history. Mario J. Valdés, one of its most important theorists, defined the new science in his Introduction to Comparative Literary History as Discourse (1992) as “a history of communicative developments” (3) that “responds to texts as form, as historical reflection and as reading experience” (4). The key assets of this new hybrid discipline – a mélange of comparative literature and literary history – were, in his view, the focus on the literary system as a whole and the displacement of the historian’s interest from the study of influence to that of intertextuality. Drawing the image of a literary system recalls the structuralist ambition of a Lucien Goldmann who attempted the reconstruction of a world view. In the footsteps of Claudio Guillén’s seminal book on Literature as System. Essays Toward the Theory of Literary History (1971), this blend of nouvelle histoire and genetic structuralism signals the arrival of the new topographical turn in human sciences (Sigrid Weigel, 2009). As Guillén writes, “artistic wholes and literary systems are, like great cities, complex environments and areas of integration” that involve multiple diachronic slices within a section of historical time. The fate of the new discipline was spectacular, if one were to cite the names of Denis Hollier, Franco Moretti, Marcel Cornis-Pope, John Neubauer, and, to some extent, Emory Elliott and Sacvan Bercovitch. My paper proposes a theoretical survey of the assumptions, concepts, and methods employed by comparative literary histories, followed by an analysis of two case studies (Hollier’s A New History of French Literature, 1989, and M. Cornis Pope & J. Neubauer’s History of the Literary Cultures of East-Central Europe. Junctures and Disjunctures in the 19th and 20th Centuries, 2004-2010). The focus of the analysis will be on the concept of the ‘node’ as a rewriting of the traditional ‘event’, a move that implies a methodological shift with significant consequences. What is left behind by such a choice (the ‘holes’ or indeterminacies with which Roman Ingarden once identified the mobile nature of the literary artwork) calls for an increased contribution from the reader of such a literary history. The extent to which a structural perspective could join a pragmatic one will represent the main question of such an endeavor.

Biography: OANA FOTACHE DUBALARU is Assistant Professor of Literary Theory at the University of Bucharest (Romania). Ph.D. in literary theory (2006). She has taught courses and published on modern literary theory, comparative literature, and exile studies. Her recent publications include: “Postcards from Europe. Representations of (Western) Europe in Romanian Travel Writings, 1960-2010”, forthcoming in M. DeCoste, D. MacDonald, R. Kilbourn (eds.), Europe in its Own Eyes/ In the Eyes of the Other (Wilfrid Laurier UP, 2012); “‘Global Literature’ – In Search of a Definition”, in L. Papadima, D. Damrosch, Th. D’haen (eds.), The Canonical Debate Today. Crossing Disciplinary and Cultural Boundaries (Rodopi, 2011); “Narrating the Communist Prison: An Interpretive Model of Some Romanian Case Studies”, in Journal of East European Studies, Seoul: Hankuk Univ. of Foreign Studies, December 2011; Discourses on Method in Postwar Romanian Literary Criticism (in Romanian; Univ. of Bucharest Press, 2009). She is currently a postdoctoral fellow of the University of Cluj (Romania).

« MELANCOLIE POSTCOLONIALE ET FIGURATIONS PROSPECTIVES DE L’HISTOIRE »

M. García
UNIVERSITAT AUTONOMA DE BARCELONA

Abstract: Si les sociétés postcoloniales et les littératures de ces sociétés ont en commun une trajectoire historique marquée par l’expérience de la colonisation et par la relation de violence qu’elle instaure, le danger consistant à faire de la colonisation le marqueur déterminant de l’histoire de ces sociétés a été souligné par la critique (Appiah, 1994). Ce reproche ne semble pas avoir modifié substantiellement la vocation avant tout historiographique et mémorielle du roman postcolonial, avec indépendance de l’origine géographique de ses auteurs, de telle sorte que, sans déterminer entièrement leurs productions, la mémoire du passé colonial « demeure la clé de leur juste interprétation » (Sultan, 2011: 28). Jean Bessière a signalé que le risque inhérent à cette démarche est la réduction des figurations littéraires du politique à une vision pathologique du social dans les pays postcoloniaux (Bessière, 2009, 7). Les fictions postcoloniales africaines que nous examinons ici s’écartent de cette tendance mémorielle pour se tourner vers le futur. Elles font partie d’une nébuleuse de pratiques génériques aux contours diffus qui connaît un vif succès à l’échelle mondiale (roman d’espionnage, thriller, roman d’anticipation, politique-fiction, roman géopolitique). Au-delà de la réflexion sur des aspects contemporains --inquiétude de l’individu face à la perte de pouvoir des structures étatiques et à la montée du terrorisme international, destruction de l’homme et de la planète-- des romans comme Dakar transgress (Samba Lo Nyombo, 1995), Aux États-Unis d’Afrique (Abdourahman Waberi, 2006), Passage des larmes (Waberi, 2009), Wall Street re-berlingue l’Afrique (Félix Ulombe Kaputu, 2010) ou Cidade dos Espelhos (João Paulo Borges Coelho, 2011) proposent des re-figurations de l’Histoire qui vont à l’encontre d’une lecture politique progressiste des pays anciennement colonisés. Il ne s’agit plus, ou plus seulement, de dénoncer le poids d’un passé qui surplombe le présent, de dire le désenchantement après la période euphorique des indépendances ou de jeter le discrédit sur l'utopie politique. Ces textes, en redisant le passé non plus dans le présent mais dans le futur, proposent une réaction à la désespérance que la notion de mélancolie postcoloniale formulée par Paul Gilroy (2005) ne permet pas d'expliquer de manière satisfaisante. Comme le note Stéphane Mosès dans L'Ange de l'Histoire : « La fin de la croyance en un sens de l'histoire n'entraîne pas l'abolition de l'idée d'espérance. Au contraire, c'est précisément sur les décombres du paradigme de la Raison historique que l'espérance se constitue en catégorie historique » (1992: 24). Aussi, l'Histoire comme catastrophe propre de ces récits dystopiques permet-elle paradoxalement de construire des passages fictionnels de l'Histoire à partir d'un « futuro que não deu em nada » (Borges Coelho). Ces passages, qui ne s'inscrivent plus dans la temporalité du progrès, restituent à la mélancolie la portée politique que Benjamin lui avait donnée.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Mar Garcia est enseignante de littératures et de cinémas francophones à l'Université autonome de Barcelone, où elle dirige l'équipe Litpost (Groupe de Recherches en Littératures et autres Arts Postcoloniaux et Émergents) depuis 2005. A publié de nombreux articles et chapitres où elle examine les processus de production, circulation et réception des littératures et des cinémas africains et de l'océan Indien ainsi que les écritures postcoloniales de l'exotisme. A coédité plusieurs volumes dont Indicities/Indices/Indicios. Hybridations problématiques dans les littératures de l'océan Indien (2010) et Violences symboliques et institutionnelles dans les littératures de l'océan Indien (à paraître en 2012). Elle prépare une étude sur l'œuvre d'Ananda Devi.

S2 DE L'ESPACE CULTUREL A L'ESPACE ESTHETIQUE / FROM CULTURAL SPACES TO AESTHETIC SPACES

WRITING AGAINST TERROR IN NETWORK CENTRIC BATTLE SPACE: DELILLO'S LATER FICTION

M. Leps
York University

Abstract: Writing against Terror in Network Centric Battle Space: DeLillo's Later Fiction The notion of network helps us to lift the tyranny of geographers in defining space and offers us a notion which is neither social nor 'real' space, but associations. — Bruno Latour "Network Centric Battle Space," made possible through LINK 16, refers to a warfare technology-enabled space generated by multiple actors who feed information in real time to a shared system during combat. Developed both to improve efficiency and decrease "friendly fire" casualties, the system allows a network of information to be co-produced among naval, air, and ground forces while they are engaged in combat, to synchronize and compound lethal force. This technology was developed more or less at the same time that Bruno Latour et al. were developing Actor-Network Theory (ANT), in an effort to re-tool and re-focus sociological investigations of knowledge/power relations. Articulating the findings of Greimassian structural semantics, Foucauldian discourse analysis, and Law's sociological work on heterogeneities and the performativity of method, the theory constitutes, in Latour's words, "a powerful tool to destroy spheres and domains, to regain the sense of heterogeneity and to bring interobjectivity back into the centre of attention. Yet, it is an extremely bad tool for differentiating associations. . . . It is thus necessary, after having traced the actor-networks, to specify the types of trajectories that are obtained through highly different mediations. This is a different task." My paper begins this different task by focusing on Don DeLillo's last four novels, written in "the days after" the attacks on the World Trade Center, to go beyond their individual forms of resistance to the global war on terror and draw a network of relations among them. Redeploying Bakhtin's notion of the text as an unrepeatably event co-produced by the author and reader, my paper argues that DeLillo's last four novels summon the reader to produce and experience modes of resistance to the totalizing force of terror through a network of virtual narrative associations among economic, political, aesthetic, and ethical links that the reader must realize.

Biography: Marie-Christine Leps specializes in literary theory and discourse analysis. Her book, Apprehending the Criminal: The Production of Deviance in Nineteenth-Century Discourse (Duke University Press) traces the production and circulation of knowledge about the criminal in criminology, the press, and crime fiction, and shows how the delineation of deviance served to construct cultural norms in England and France. She has published articles on social discourse, narrative realism, intertextuality, the novels of Don DeLillo, and various aspects of the "Information Age," concerning issues of governmentality, race, and gender. Together with Lesley Higgins she co-authored articles on governmentality, fiction, film and history, and is currently writing a book on Woolf, Foucault, and Ondaatje. She is the Director of the Graduate Program in English and is cross-appointed to the Graduate Program in Social and Political Thought at York University, in Toronto.

LES ESPACES DE LA MEMOIRE: MARCEL PROUST, THOMAS MANN ET HUGO VON HOFMANNSTHAL

R.M. Dimian
Univ. Stefan cel Mare Suceava

Abstract: Liée surtout à une émotion ou à une sensation de l'espace, la mémoire involontaire fut l'un des thèmes identitaires les plus fascinants de la littérature du début du XXe siècle. Notre exposé propose une analyse de la manière dont plusieurs classiques de la modernité, tels que Proust, Th. Mann et Hugo von Hofmannsthal, choisirent de représenter la liaison entre la mémoire et l'espace.

Biography: Raluca Dimian Hergheligiou est docteur ès lettres de l'Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes de Paris et de l'Université De Iasi ; Roumanie, depuis 2008. Depuis 2006 elle enseigne la littérature allemande moderne, française et comparée à l'Université de Suceava, Roumanie. Ses activités de recherches se regroupent autour du comparatisme allemand-français, de la temporalité littéraire et de l'autoction.

BODY, SPACE AND EMOTION: THE PERSPECTIVE OF EXPERIENCE

I. Grosu
Université de Limoges

Abstract:

Space is not neutral. It is filled by the values human beings give to it. Perception transforms space into a habitable (experience of topophilia) or inhabitable space (experience of fear), while emotions contribute to the construction of a certain representation of it. All senses contribute to the perception of space and to its representation by the human beings. Since space affects us and arouses feelings and emotions, how does human body react to it? Body is a metaphor for space (Porteous), especially female body. Body is a space itself, a structure that is affected emotionally by the space it perceives, occupies and where it evolves. Criteria of appreciation of space are different for each of us; homescape (Porteous, Bruno) or intimacy can be a place of fear, even terror (as in the case of Bukowski) or of topophilia (such as theorized by Bachelard, Yi-Fu Tuan, Gillian Rose). Emotions aroused by the perception of space contribute to its representations as expanded or shrunk space and affects the perceiving subject. In the relation between body, space and emotion, the question is how is space perceived and what elements of experience contribute to a certain representation of the lived space?

Biography:

Ph D Candidate in Comparative Literature EHIC, Université de Limoges

S3: ANTIQUITÉ/MODERNITÉ : UN LABORATOIRE DU COMPARATISME — ANTIQUITY/MODERNITY: A LABORATORY FOR COMPARATIVE STUDIES

TABLE-RONDE / ROUND TABLE - MODÈLES FÉMININS ANTIQUES DES FEMMES ÉCRIVAINS DES XVII^E ET XVIII^E SIÈCLES.

A. Debrosse

Université Paris Sorbonne (CRLC)

Abstract: Aux XVI^e et XVII^e siècles, les femmes écrivains se multiplient et leur statut change nettement. Il s'ensuit une recherche de nouveaux modèles propres à soutenir leurs aspirations nouvelles. La redécouverte de l'Antiquité permet aux femmes de trouver les autorités adéquates.

Ainsi, à l'époque médiévale, leur modèle était Proba Falconia, dont les Centons virgiliens circulaient largement et qui est la première femme dont l'œuvre ait été imprimée ; au XVI^e et surtout au XVII^e siècle, Sappho prend sa place, au point qu'elle est aujourd'hui beaucoup plus célèbre que sa consœur latine. William Kemp et Hélène Cazes montrent à quel point la chute de Proba a été vertigineuse, puisque ses Centons, très diffusés au Moyen-Âge, ne connaissent pratiquement pas de réédition entre 1522 et 1588 et que ses imitateurs, jadis nombreux, deviennent plus rares. Parallèlement, à partir de l'editio princeps de Sappho par Henri Estienne en 1554, les vers de la poétesse sont de plus en plus diffusés et imités par les plus grands poètes français, de Ronsard à Racine.

Ces deux modèles sont étonnamment antinomiques : c'est comme si on avait choisi de remplacer un modèle par son exact opposé. En effet, si les femmes pouvaient parfois déchiffrer la langue latine, familière aux lecteurs du XVI^e siècle, elles étaient plus rares à lire le grec. De plus, Sappho appartient résolument à la sphère païenne alors que Proba écrit une Vie de Jésus-Christ. Les Centons de Proba sont utilisés dans l'enseignement où on préfère éviter Sappho. Enfin, l'œuvre de Proba, entièrement conservée, est beaucoup plus lisible que celle de Sappho, très fragmentaire. À une époque où l'on ne goûtait pas encore les paroles en archipel, la mode sapphique pouvait tenir de la gageure. Par ailleurs, adopter un modèle comme Sappho n'est pas chose aisée, car si elle est louée par Platon, elle est largement décriée pour la conduite de vie qu'on lui impute, alors que Proba est irréprochable.

On a donc substitué à une figure familière et incontestable un parangon exogène et polémique, tant sur le plan linguistique que sur le plan culturel. Nous voulons comprendre pourquoi, malgré les difficultés soulevées par l'adoption de ce nouveau modèle par et pour les femmes écrivains des XVI^e et XVII^e siècles (en France et en Italie), Sappho est devenue incontournable et quelles ont été les stratégies pour la rendre acceptable.

Biography: Thèse ayant pour titre "La souvenance et le désir" : la réception des poétesses grecques aux XVI^e et XVII^e siècles (France et Italie), sous la direction de François Lecercle, Paris-Sorbonne. Soutenance le 29 juin 2012. Situation actuelle : boursière de la Fondation Thiers.

LES TRADUCTIONS DE TRAGÉDIES ANTIQUES : PARATEXTE THÉORIQUE, LABORATOIRE CRITIQUE

Z. Schweitzer

MCF, Université de Saint-Etienne

Abstract: Étudier la conception de l'Antiquité énoncée dans les paratextes des traductions des tragédies latines permet un décentrement du regard porté sur le théâtre antique: ce théâtre antique n'est pas seulement un modèle ou un repoussoir selon les époques et les pays, il ne se réduit pas à des influences ou à une référence, circonscrite temporellement, et l'histoire de leurs traductions n'est pas seulement la corroboration d'une histoire littéraire générale. L'étude du discours sur la tragédie latine et l'Antiquité permet de comprendre la circulation et l'élaboration de notions et d'idées sur la tragédie et de dresser un panorama nuancé des regards portés sur l'Antiquité. Les tragédies de Sénèque fonctionnent comme un laboratoire pour la théorie du théâtre moderne; l'étude des différentes conceptions de ce théâtre énoncées dans le paratexte invite à une appréhension nuancée, et peut-être non linéaire, de l'histoire du genre. En ce sens, il s'agit d'un laboratoire méthodologique pour le comparatisme.

Biography: MCF en littérature comparée, Université de Saint-Etienne

S3: AKHMATOVA ET LES POÈTES EUROPÉENS

ANNA AKHMATOVA : PARTICULARITES DE LA TEXTOLOGIE ET DIFFICULTES DE PUBLICATION

N. Kraineva

Bibliothèque nationale de Saint-Pétersbourg

Abstract: A préciser

Biography: Directrice du département des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque nationale de Saint-Pétersbourg

COMMENT TRANSPOSER DES RYTHMES POÉTIQUES ?

J. Backès

Paris IV Sorbonne

Abstract: Rien ne semble plus facile que de reproduire, en traduisant, un modèle de vers. Les formes grecques antiques ont été transposées en russe avec succès. La poésie d'Akhmatova, pour un traducteur français, pose d'énormes questions. La « crise de vers » qui affecte la poésie russe à la fin de l'époque symboliste — certes moins grave que celle qu'a connue le symbolisme français — pose des problèmes nouveaux, qu'il faut aborder non pas en examinant les types de vers les uns après les autres, mais en observant comment ils se juxtaposent et s'opposent, dans un recueil, dans un cycle, voire dans un seul poème.

On tentera de poser des questions ; il est peu probable qu'on fournisse des solutions indiscutables.

Biography: Jean-Louis Backès Sorbonne Paris IV

RENATO POGGIOLI, UN TRADUCTEUR D'EXCEPTION D'ANNA AKHMATOVA EN ITALIE

L. Toppan

laura.toppan@univ-nancy2.fr

Abstract: Renato Poggioli (né à Florence en 1907 et mort aux Etats-Unis en 1963) a été un critique littéraire très important en Italie pendant les années 20 et 30 du XXème siècle, avant d'émigrer aux Etats-Unis parce que profondément antu-fasciste et donc contre le régime dictatorial mis en place en Italie.

De l'autre côté de l'Océan, il a enseigné entre 38 et 63 aux Universités de Brown et de Harvard.

Poggioli a été traducteur d'auteurs russes et enseignant de Littérature russe en Italie. Il est connu pour son essai Théorie de l'art d'avant-garde, traduit en anglais avec le titre The Theory of Avant-garde

Dans plusieurs articles ou volumes, nous trouvons de traductions des vers d'Achmatova :

1929: Anna Achmatova, Versi [Proprio sul mare; Prima di primavera c'è dei giorni; Risvegliarsi quando albeggia; Sul lago s'è fermata ora la luna], traduzione dal russo di Renato Poggioli. – "Rivista di letterature slave", IV, 4, luglioagosto 1929, pp. 277-286.

1931 : Anna Achmatova. – "Il convegno", XII, 3, marzo 1931, pp. 103-106.
Anna ACHMATOVA, Proprio sul mare, versione dal russo di Renato Poggioli.
– "Il convegno", XII, 3, marzo 1931, pp. 107-115.

1933: Poeti russi del Novecento [Sergej Esenin, Canzone canina; Anna Achmatova, Luna sul lago; Marina Cvetaeva, Lettera; Nikolaj Gumilëv, Due canzoni]. – "L'Italia letteraria", 7 maggio 1933, p. 7.

Renato POGGIOLI (a cura di), La violetta notturna. Antologia dei poeti russi del Novecento [contiene poesie di Aleksandr Blok, Michail Kuzmin, Vladislav Chodasevic, Ėž, Nikolaj Gumilëv, Anna Achmatova, Osip Mandel'sĖtam, VjacĖslav Ivanov, Igor' Severjanin, Vladimir Majakovskij, Sergej Esenin, Marina Cvetaeva e Boris Pasternak], Lanciano, Carabba, 1933, 168 p.

1949 : Renato Poggioli réuni ses traductions dans le volume : Il fiore del verso russo, Torino, Einaudi, 1949 (pour lequel il a même reçu les critiques de la part du Parti Communiste Italien).

Le but de notre intervention est de mettre en relief comme Poggoli a contribué, à travers ses traductions, à faire connaître au milieu littéraire italien les vers et les idées des grands poètes russes, notamment d'Anna Achmatova, dans un moment très dure de l'histoire italienne, le fascisme. Pendant cette période, en Italie - et surtout dans le milieu littéraire de Florence - il y a eu toute une floraison de traduction de poètes étrangers (Carlo Bo traduit de l'espagnol, Leone Traverso de l'allemand et Renato Poggioli du russe) : la traduction devient une manière de se ressourcer, loin des diktats étouffants de la culture officielle.

En 1935, Mario Luzi - grand poète florentin, 1915-2005 – suivi le cours de Littérature russe de Renato Poggioli à l'Université de Florence. Ils deviendront très amis. Luzi eût l'occasion de rencontrer Anna Achmatova le 13 décembre 1964 à Taormina pour une remise de prix et il fut marqué par cette rencontr, qu'il décrit dans un beau texte publié dans le volume Perse e brade, a c. di Stefano Verdino, Newton Compton, Roma 1990 (p.46).

Les textes de Poggioli et de Luzi concernant Achmatova, mériteraient d'être connus par un public français (ou étranger), parce qu'il met en valeur le statut « européen » de la poète.

Biography: Laura Toppan: MCF au Département d'Italien, Université de Lorraine (Nancy)

S2: ORIENT/OCCIDENT: THE COMPLEXITIES OF CROSSING BOUNDARIES

COLLECTORS OF WORLDS: EUROPEAN TRAVELERS AND THEIR MIDDLE EASTERN COLLABORATORS

P.L. Horta

New York University Abu Dhabi

Abstract: This paper forms part of a book manuscript on the role of cross-cultural collaboration in the expansion of the canon of the tales of the 1001 Nights. Taking its methodological cue from a novelized life of Sir Richard Francis Burton, Iliya Troyanov's The Collector of Worlds, this paper asks us to revisit the familiar travelogues and ethnographic works of Lane and Burton from the vantage point of their local collaborators, who in real life as well as in fiction had their own visions of figuratively or literally traveling West. My purpose here is not only to showcase recent research but ask questions that should resonate with other researchers of cross-cultural travelogues. What are the uses and limits of the framework of Orientalism to understand the intertwined dialogues of the Nights collaborations? What other theoretical formulations—around heterotopia, cosmopolitanism—might complement the familiar debates on Orientalism that have dominated the field? What are the cognitive effects of cross-cultural travel and collaboration?

Biography: Paulo Lemos Horta

Assistant Professor of Literature, New York University Abu Dhabi

FROM CURIOSITY TO CRITICISM - THE DISMANTLING OF ORIENTAL DESPOTISM IN MONTESQUIEU'S LETTRES PERSANES

A. Fastrup

University of Copenhagen

Abstract: From Curiosity to Criticism 'Montesquieu's transformation of Oriental despotism' in Lettres Persanes Anne Fastrup, University of Copenhagen Montesquieu's knowledge of the Orient and Oriental despotism stemmed from the seventeenth century travel literature, i.e. Jean de Thévenot's Relation d'un voyage fait au Levant (1664), Jean-Baptiste Tavernier's Nouvelle Relation de l'intérieur du Grand Seigneur (1676) and, in particular, Jean Chardin's Voyages en Perse et autres lieux de L'Orient (1680). As Nicolas Dew has demonstrated in Orientalism in Louis XIV's France (2009), these travel accounts, written by people who had travelled for many years in the Ottoman Empire and Persia, were part of a broader intellectual culture of curiosity. According to Furetière's Dictionnaire Universel, a curious person is someone who takes an interest in: 'les choses nouvelles, secrettes, rares & curieuses'; he has a 'dèsir d'apprendre, de voir les bonnes choses, les merveilles de l'art et de la nature. C'est un curieux qui a voyagé par toute l'Europe, un curieux qui a feuilleté tous les bons livres, tous les livres rares.' An important element in the travel culture of les curieux was the publication of the voyageur's observations of the foreign culture in widely read travel accounts. In these travel narratives, we can see a desire to represent the foreign culture, that is customs, habits, religion, political organisation, people etc. as extraordinary phenomena. So if the curious on the one hand tried to represent the Oriental culture as object of direct observation, he tried on the other hand to make this culture appear in a particular form, that is as 'merveilles' or 'comme des choses rares et curieuses.' Hence, on the cover of the travel accounts and in the chapter headings, the author would promise the reader that he or she was about to encounter 'merveilles', 'singularités' and 'curiosités'. The sultan's harem with its secret and impenetrable world of eunuchs and imprisoned women constituted probably one of the most extraordinary curiosities to be found in the Oriental culture. Furthermore, this world of unrestrained power and blind obedience was not only presented as the domestic sphere of the sultan; it was also considered to be the quintessence of what Europeans, since the end of the seventeenth century, had termed Oriental despotism. The representation of the harem and thus of Oriental despotism is not only a recurrent element in travel accounts (and in the related histoires générales), it is also exemplary for this particular mixture of observation, imagination and sensationalism that meet and converge in the curious viewpoint. As nobody apart from the sultan (or the shah) had access to the harem, the writer had no other choice than to admit that he was presenting 'un monde inconnu' (Chardin) and 'es imaginations & des conjectures' (Tavernier). On the other hand it is revealing that all three travellers 'Thévenot, Tavernier and Chardin' promise that they will introduce the reader to hitherto unknown singularities about the harem. In my paper, I will argue that the representation of Oriental despotism in Lettres persanes dismantles or demystifies the curious Orient. By using the epistolary novel, Montesquieu is opening the door into the closed and mystical world of the harem. He puts the reader in a new intimate relation to the 'despot' and to the women of the harem. By adapting elements from the libertinage, he - or his novel - causes a cultural transformation in which curiosity evolves into a search for pleasure and the Oriental harem into a tool for political criticism of French absolutism.

Biography: Anne Fastrup (born in 1963), Associate professor of comparative literature at the University of Copenhagen. Since 2008 cooperates on a collective research project called Islam in European Literature.

TRAVEL AND ROMANCE: CONTEMPORARY ARABIC AVATARS OF THE ANCIENT NOVEL

P. Kennedy

New York University-Abu Dhabi

Abstract: A number of the novels of the Lebanese novelist, Rabee Jaber, who recently won the Arab Booker prize for America, seem to be inspired by medieval forms of narrative (romance; the popular Arabian epic; the ancient novel; the Odyssey ...); those of his novels that feature travel across ethnic divisions as well as geographic borders pay tribute to a fairly paradigmatic form of writing, but more essentially explore complex ambiguous issues of identity and sectarian affiliation. There is a precarious optimism in his writing in this respect. This paper will consider some of the earlier forms of writing to which Jaber appears to have a literary atavistic relationship, but focus on two or three of his own works.

Biography: Philip Kennedy, NYU Abu Dhabi

Associate Professor of Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies, Comparative Literature, New York University-Abu Dhabi

S3 POETIQUES ET SAVOIRS SCIENTIFIQUES

POUR UNE ESTHÉTIQUE DES TRANSFERTS ÉPISTÉMOLOGIQUES

S. Olson Niel

Abstract: Le darwinisme a inspiré fortement les écrivains du dix-neuvième siècle. Cette théorie scientifique continue encore à influencer notre société postmoderne de manière plus ou moins visible. Moby Dick de Melville et La Bête humaine de Zola sont, par excellence, des œuvres darwiniennes qui figurent le combat pour la vie. Au vingtième siècle, Romain Gary écrit Charge d'âme. Le darwinisme a influencé fortement ce roman dénonçant la prolifération nucléaire et la surexploitation énergétique. L'homme semble être capté par une « techno et socio système » qui met en péril ses stratégies biologiques de survie. Récemment, Michael Cunningham dans Le Livre des jours (Specimen days) dépeint trois époques où l'homme se bat pour sa survie. Il imagine un futur où l'être humain sera concurrencé par des robots doués de sentiments et des extraterrestres apatrides. Tout semble annoncer l'extinction probable de notre espèce. Par contre, ce darwinisme n'existe pas à l'état pur dans les œuvres littéraires. Il s'allie à d'autres théories scientifiques afin de créer de nouveaux paradigmes permettant de remettre en question notre perception de la réalité. L'optique joue un rôle central dans Moby Dick. La lutte pour la survie dans le roman de Melville demeure invisible cachée dans les ténèbres de l'océan. Elle est une réalité angoissante, aussi terrible que le blanc de la baleine. Seul le spectre des couleurs peut figurer la splendeur de la lutte darwinienne pour la vie. Dans La Bête humaine, le narrateur met en scène des catastrophes ferroviaires pour évoquer la décadence sociale. Le combat pour la vie s'achève dans la violence de l'entropie. Comme au dix-neuvième siècle, les écrivains postmodernes incorporent d'autres modèles scientifiques. Dans Charge d'âme, la théorie de la relativité d'Einstein sert à dépeindre les angoisses planant sur l'avenir de l'homme, animal en voie de disparition. Si toute matière peut être transformée en énergie, alors l'âme humaine peut devenir une force énergétique. Tel est le sujet de Gary. L'homme utilisera l'âme humaine pour faire fonctionner les machines d'un monde déshumanisé. De même, Michael Cunningham s'inspire de la thermodynamique, de la cybernétique pour dépeindre l'horreur d'un avenir sans rédemption pour l'humain. La sélection naturelle annonce la mort de l'homme, puisque des espèces concurrentes (robots et aliens) anéantiront le genre humain.

Les théories scientifiques subissent un transfert particulier dans ces quatre romans. Les écrivains inventent des œuvres qui ont leurs propres paradigmes selon Pierre Bayard. Ses théories ne deviennent pas des idéologies scientifiques (Canguilhem), mais elles nous apparaissent comme des figurations du psychisme humain capables de dépeindre nos angoisses les plus profondes. A chaque rupture épistémologique, l'être humain doit faire face à l'inconnu. Melville et Zola sont confrontés aux angoisses légitimes d'une société qui s'industrialise. Gary et Cunningham constatent la déshumanisation et la robotisation de notre monde. Les transferts épistémologiques nous aident à nous confronter aux dangers des forces destructrices et létales : les pulsions de mort. Ils donnent une conscience à la science. Si la nature pousse l'homme à la détrôner, la littérature aide l'homme à rester maître de lui-même. C'est pourquoi Cunningham introduit, dans Le Livre des jours, la poésie de Whitman pour empêcher le règne du « déshumain » qui est au centre de la pensée du psychanalyste Pierre Fédida. La littérature symbolise les ruptures épistémologiques et leur donne du sens ce qui permet à l'homme de ne pas renoncer à lui-même. Grâce à ces transferts, il peut porter le poids de son existence. C'est pourquoi il importe de défendre une esthétique des transferts scientifiques en littérature.

Biography: Je m'appelle Sébastien Niel. Je viens de soutenir ma thèse Zola et l'inconscient sous la direction de Pierre Bayard (mention : très honorable avec félicitations du jury). J'ai utilisé la littérature pour déconstruire la théorie freudienne de la pulsion afin d'inventer un autre modèle qui s'applique plus particulièrement aux phénomènes de groupe. J'ai écrit un article récemment dans les Cahiers Naturalistes où je compare le travail de Winnicott et une nouvelle de Zola qui met en scène des angoisses d'effondrement psychique. Membre de l'A.C.L.A., j'ai eu l'honneur d'être sélectionné pour participer à la conférence annuelle de cette association en 2011. J'ai participé au panel de Catherine Labio rendant compte des différents langages de la crise économique dans la littérature (de l'époque médiévale jusqu'au naturalisme espagnol). De plus en plus, vivant dans un milieu américain, j'utilise mon approche analytique afin d'observer les modèles théoriques cachés dans la littérature et tente de créer des liens entre les romans postmodernes français et les récits américains.

LA POETOLOGIE

T. Vercruysse
Universität des Saarlandes

Abstract: Dans le discours qu'il consacre à Goethe, Valéry propose significativement un parallèle entre la maîtrise de la forme linguistique de nature poétique et la forme naturelle modelée par la plante :
« (...) dans le poète ou dans la plante, c'est le même principe naturel : tous les êtres ont une aptitude à s'accommoder, et cette aptitude variable mesure leur aptitude à vivre, c'est-à-dire à demeurer ce qu'ils sont, en possédant plus d'une manière d'être ce qu'ils sont. » (Œ, I, 538)

Même si Valéry n'avait de Spinoza qu'une connaissance de seconde main, et qui ne semble guère l'avoir enthousiasmé, il apparie le "conatus", par lequel le poète et la plante persévèrent dans leur être (« demeurer ce qu'ils sont ») avec le potentiel transformateur (« possédant plus d'une manière d'être ce qu'ils sont »). Le lieu de leur articulation est le "kairos", la circonstance, qui détermine les variations de l'être dont le devenir est une dimension, comme l'ont montré les philosophes de Nietzsche mais aussi de Simondon, théoricien de l'information. Goethe parviendrait à lire « la totale arabesque qui relie » les avatars de la métamorphose, la ligne exercée par la modulation des forces formatives s'adaptant aux circonstances :

« Goethe passionnément s'attache à l'idée de métamorphose qu'il entrevoit dans la plante et dans le squelette des vertébrés. Il recherche les forces sous les formes, il décèle les modulations morphologiques (...) Il décrit avec la plus grande exactitude les effets de l'adaptation, et quelques-uns des tropismes qui régissent la croissance des plantes, l'équilibre de puissances qui s'établit et se rétablit, heure par heure, entre une loi intime de développement et le lieu et les circonstances accidentelles. Il est un des fondateurs du transformisme. » (Ibid., p. 543).

À l'instar d'Atikhè dans "L'Âme et la danse", l'arabesque est « l'acte pur des métamorphoses ». Si Goethe contribue à fonder le transformisme, représenté par Lamarck puis par Darwin, c'est qu'ils sont à l'écoute des circonstances, de l'imprévisibilité du "kairos" que les néo-darwiniens ont précisément refoulé pour penser la technè de la nature comme une version plus sophistiquée du mécanisme de la nature. C'est ainsi que François Jacob affirme le primat déductif du « programme génétique » dans "La logique du vivant" ; seulement, et l'oubli est révélateur, il passe sous silence les avancées de l'embryologie du XXe siècle, ses arabesques, ses diagrammes que Deleuze, dans "Logique de la sensation" louait chez l'embryologue Dalcq. L'arabesque prévalant dans la logique ou les logiques de la sensation mises au point par Valéry, Deleuze, Léonard et Goethe, malgré les divergences évidentes qui peuvent se dégager entre eux, s'oppose donc à la logique du vivant de François Jacob et du néo-darwinisme, qui en voulant congédier le transformisme de Lamarck, a en fait trahi Darwin. Jean-Marie Schaeffer, par ailleurs éditeur des Ecrits sur l'art de Goethe (contenant ses écrits sur la morphogenèse) s'appuie sur "L'origine des individus" (Fayard, 2008) de Kupiec pour réfuter la notion de « programme génétique ». Kupiec milite, contre le néo-darwinisme, pour un retour à Darwin : « selon Kupiec les inducteurs embryogénétiques trouvés à ce jour sont des inducteurs non spécifiques, c'est-à-dire qu'ils sont susceptibles d'induire des réponses différentes selon les circonstances. » (J.-M. Schaeffer, "La fin de l'exception humaine", Gallimard, NRF essais, 2007, p. 172).

Cette prise en compte de la circonstance, du "kairos" (qui apparaît aussi dans le commentaire du texte fondateur de Diderot sur l'embryologie par Prigogine et Stengers : « apparition (...) de formes différenciées précisément au moment et à l'endroit opportuns » La nouvelle alliance, Gallimard, folio-essais, p. 135) doit nous guider pour élaborer une poétologie généralisée qui mettrait au centre, ou en filigrane, les ondulations serpentes et significatives de l'arabesque.

Biography: Thomas Vercruysse, Docteur en littérature, Assistant à l'université de la Sarre

SCANDINAVIAN DETECTIVE FICTION AND POPULARIZING SCIENCE

R. Shideler
UCLA

Abstract: AILC/ICLA 2013 Proposal Ross Shideler Detective Fiction and Popularizing Science This paper will suggest that Detective Fiction has been for many years and continues to be a forum for the popularization of contemporary science. Literature has often served as a means of making the reading public aware of contemporary scientific theories and discoveries. But scientific methods and theories have consistently played a major role in detective fiction. Sherlock Holmes and his uncanny ability to observe and analyze has served as the archetype for using apparently scientific methods to solve crimes. Scandinavian detective fiction has taken up Holmes' mantle. Smilla Jespersen in Smilla's Sense of Snow by the Dane Peter Hoeg, Lisbeth Salander in The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo by the Swede Stieg Larsson, and Igi Heitmann in The Butterfly Effect by the Norwegian Pernille Rygg are all examples of what one might call variants of a female Holmesian detective. This paper will examine how these detectives use scientific methods, theories, and instruments to solve the crimes in which they become involved, and how these representations serve to popularize contemporary science.

Biography: Ross Shideler's most recent book is Questioning the Father: From Darwin to Zola, Ibsen, Strindberg, and Hardy. He has written two other books, translated two plays from Swedish, co-edited one book with Kathleen Komar, and published over 75 articles, poems, and reviews. He was the ICLA Treasurer for the Americas from 2004-2010, President of the Society for the Advancement of Scandinavian Study, 1999-2000, and an Associate Dean in the Graduate Division of UCLA, 2003-2012.

S2: TRANSLATION AT THE BORDERS

A PROPOS DE TRADUCTION ET D'ECRITURE. ETUDE DE TEXTES AU CARREFOUR DES ETUDES DE TRADUCTION ET DES SCIENCES LITTERAIRES: LE CAS DES ECRIVAINS-TRADUCTEURS

S. Vanasten

Université catholique de Louvain

Abstract: La présente proposition prend appui sur cette considération selon laquelle les sciences de la traduction peuvent constituer un apport non négligeable à l'analyse du texte littéraire. Durant ce bref exposé, il s'agira de démontrer que certaines considérations issues des études de traduction peuvent s'avérer éclairantes pour l'interprétation, la description historique, la transmission et réception matérielle de textes littéraires dits originaux (c'est-à-dire non traduits ou du moins présumés non traduits). Pour le champ littéraire néerlandophone, où la traduction constitue une part considérable de la production littéraire, une telle perspective interdisciplinaire et croisée est susceptible de livrer des enjeux intéressants. Le cas sur lequel je propose de m'arrêter est celui des écrivains-traducteurs, plus précisément d'écrivains néerlandophones établis (selon l'histoire littéraire) qui, à côté de leur oeuvre créatrice, ont également traduit, de manière officieuse ou officielle, des textes littéraires; d'un point de vue institutionnel et systémique, ceux-ci ne peuvent être détachés de leur trajectif créatif, parce légitimés par une seule et même signature. Citons en guise d'exemple Jan Greshoff, Frank Kellendonk, Leopold, Theun de Vries, Hugo Claus, Paul Claes, Gerrit Komrij, Leonard Nolens, Anneke Brassinga, Paul Rodenko ou encore Cees Nooteboom... Traduire a une incidence sur mon style, avoua un jour l'écrivain néerlandais Frans Kellendonk. "Oui, telle est pour moi la véritable raison pour laquelle je traduis. Je le fais comme un pianiste jouerait des gammes"^[1] Chez le poète flamand Leonard Nolens, traduire et écrire co-existent également de la manière la plus intime dans l'atelier du poète, la traduction s'inscrivant ici dans un rapport d'antériorité, palimpsestique, à la création.^[2] Hugo Claus quant à lui considérait le traduire, selon ses propres dires, comme des exercices de doigté, de vélocité, pour se préparer à la véritable prestation artistique. Comme si traduire de la littérature et faire de la littérature (dichten) étaient pour ces auteurs finalement deux versants de la même médaille: écrire. Alors que les traducteurs sont, ces dernières décennies, de plus en plus considérés comme des co-auteurs, les traductions littéraires de ces écrivains invitent à être ré-examinées sous un nouvel angle. Si, comme diverses signes l'indiquent, l'écriture de ces auteurs a manifestement été influencée par leur pratique de traduction, l'oeuvre littéraire originelle de ces écrivains-traducteurs en appelle à une nouvelle approche interdisciplinaire, plurielle et comparée, qui rendrait compte de cette interpénétration réciproque dans la production littéraire et de cette vie embryonnaire double – traductrice, créatrice, hybride – entre les langues. Quels apports théoriques et possibles interprétatifs les recherches en traductologie – qui ont pris ces dernières décennies un envol considérable à l'échelon international (le 'translational turn' dont parle notamment D. Bachmann-Medick pour les cultural studies) – offrent-elles pour la compréhension des textes littéraires en propre? Peu de recherches ont été initiées à ce sujet pour la production littéraire néerlandophone moderne. Le cadre théorique de la communication prendra principalement appui sur les travaux de Mathilde Vischer (La traduction, du style vers la poétique, Philippe Kaccottet et Fabio Pusterla en dialogue, 2009), Efrain Kristel (Invisible Work. Borges and Translation, 2002), Federici Federico (Translation as stylistic Evolution: Italo Calvino Creative Translator of Raymond Queneau, 2009) ainsi que sur divers travaux en cours en France (Louise Ladouceur et Sathya Rao, 2010) et en Estonie (Tartu, 2011). La présente proposition s'emploiera à explorer quelques-unes de ces pistes et à tester leur valeur opératoire à l'épreuve d'un corpus de textes-traductions néerlandophones en provenance du domaine francophone. (Comment par exemple une poétique d'écrivain peut-elle être reconstruite via l'étude des variantes – de la traduction au texte 'original' –? Comment par le travail de traduction et de lecture l'émergence et la composition d'une bibliothèque d'écrivain peut-elle être éclairée, etc.)

[1] Charlotte de Cloet, Tilly Hermans en Aad Meinderts, 'Oprecht veinzen.' Over Frans Kellendonk.. Meulenhoff / Letterkundig Museum, Amsterdam / Den Haag, 1998 (Schrijversprentenboek 43), p. 127. [2] Anneleen De Coux, 'Mijn leven in 't net', dans: De Tijd, 08-10-2005.

Biography: Stéphanie Vanasten est docteur en philosophie et lettres (littératures germaniques et comparées) de l'Université catholique de Louvain (Louvain-la-Neuve, Belgique). Elle est chargée de cours en littérature néerlandaise à l'UCL depuis 2011. Aspirante puis chargée de recherches du Fonds de la Recherche Scientifique-FNRS, elle fut également, de 2005 à 2011, chargée de cours invitée à temps partiel à l'Université catholique de Louvain et aux Facultés universitaires St-Louis. Sa thèse de doctorat, consacrée à la question du grotesque chez Günter Grass et Hugo Claus, traduit la portée comparatiste de ses travaux orientés vers la période contemporaine et son intérêt pour des questions de théorie littéraire et de création artistique au carrefour de diverses traditions esthétiques, philosophiques et linguistiques. Poursuivant dans cette voie, elle s'est ensuite spécialisée dans l'étude comparée de l'oeuvre de l'écrivain belge néerlandophone Hugo Claus. Au départ d'une interrogation sur le rapport qu'entretient l'oeuvre clausienne avec la francophonie, elle a développé ces dernières années une série d'analyses croisées sur l'impact du traduire dans l'oeuvre littéraire et l'écriture créatrice de Claus. Ses recherches touchent à l'articulation épistémologique et anthropologique d'une réflexion concrète sur les textes et l'hybridation de leurs langages au champ des transferts culturels et de l'interculturalité, en particulier pour la néerlandistique.

REDRAWING THE BOUNDARIES OF TRANSLATION: JAMES JOYCE'S "OXEN OF THE SUN" EPISODE IN ULYSSES AND THE ISSUE OF TRANSLATABILITY

I. Grubica

Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, lecturer

Abstract: James Joyce's Ulysses is one of the key modernist texts that overtly challenges the conventional notion of translation and calls for its reconsideration. Written in encyclopaedic mode and being, as Umberto Eco has viewed it, a composite, transitional or hybrid text, grounded in intertextuality and parody it not only stages the modernist celebration of translation embodied in an ongoing, albeit subversive, dialogue with tradition but also evokes the concept of translation as border-crossing and exile. My paper, therefore, proposes to rely on the examples from Ulysses and its translations into several languages as an energizing platform for problematizing and illustrating the porous borderline between translation and adaptation. Both concepts are closely intertwined with the architectonics of Ulysses as the reinscription of other texts in the novel in various forms of intertextuality and pastiche, forging a textual archive and a complex repository of cultural memory. My paper will argue that the translation of this novel into other languages is always a multiple coded process that defies the traditional criterion of fidelity and redraws the boundaries of translation, since the task of the translator is to decode the ambivalences of infinite semiosis in the novel and encode them in another language and culture, enacting translation as an open intercultural dialogue. To illustrate this my paper will focus on the 'Oxen of the Sun' episode which is concerned with gradual embryonic development of life as well as language. This episode is a pastiche of classic English prose styles, often considered an anthology of styles. Discussing examples from two different German, two French, two Italian and two Croatian translations of Ulysses and bringing into discussion the issue of translatability (as discussed by Benjamin and Derrida) my paper will show how the translators came to terms with the linguistic, stylistic, rhetoric and cultural barriers between source text/culture and target culture and which strategies they adopted to legitimise the border-crossing between translation and adaptation.

Biography: IRENA GRUBICA is a lecturer in the English Department at the University of Rijeka, Croatia, where she teaches Modern Irish literature and English Neo-Classicism and Romanticism. Her interests include 19th and 20th-century English and Irish literature, translation studies and cultural criticism. She graduated in Comparative Literature and English Literature from the University of Zagreb. Her MA thesis (amounts to 334 pp.) is on the two Croatian translations of Joyce's Ulysses and her doctoral thesis is on cultural memory in Joyce's novels. She has published a chapter on Joyce and Translation in the book Joyce and/in Translation, ed. by Rosa Maria Bosinelli, Joyce Studies in Italy, 10, 2007, pp.107-114. She was a Chevening Scholar at the University of Oxford in the year 2004/5 conducting research in Joyce and Irish literature under the supervision of Jeri Johnson, and a visiting scholar at the James Joyce Institute in Zürich. She has published articles on Irish and English authors in various Croatian and English periodicals and contributed to several volumes of essays, including the book The Reception of Oscar Wilde in Europe (London, Continuum 2010). She is the author of a foreword to the first Croatian translation of Beckett's Molloy and the organizer of several international panels and seminars where she invited a large number of scholars from American, Canadian, Japanese, British and other European Universities (e.g. at James Joyce Symposium Tours 2008 (organizer of the Seminar on Joyce Translation and Translatability), IASIL Maynooth 2010 (organizer of the panel Joyce, Culture, Memory: New and Old Perspectives), ESSE Turin 2010 (organizer of the seminar The Fantastic in the Fin de Siecle), IASIL Leuven 2011 (organizer of the panel Language, Memory, Symbolism: Reconciling Conflicting Identities in Irish Literature), ESSE Istanbul 2012(organizer of the seminar The Art of Autobiography). She organized an international interdisciplinary conference in Rijeka Literature, Culture and the Fantstic: Challenges of the Fin de Siecle(s), Croatia that gathered 50 scholars from 15 European countries. She presented her work at more than twenty international conferences in Europe and in America. She is an American Salzburg Seminar Alumna and an active member of ESSE and IASIL.

TRANSLATING GENDER: THE FERTILITY OF RENAISSANCE IMITATIO

V. Finucci

Duke University

Abstract: Given the well-established practice of imitating master works in the early modern period as a way for authors to define their appropriation of the past and get "authorized" in the bargain, I plan to examine how translation—in the sense of working through a model to be imitated and of adapting ("personalizing") well-known plots through control of their intertexts—offered women writers a way to insert gender into the creative process. I will specifically concentrate on a particular scene that found a life of its own in many 16th and 17th century pastoral romances. It is most famously present in Torquato Tasso's Aminta (1573), where a satyr abducts a nymph in the woods and ties her up to a tree with her long tresses. He will free her in exchange for her agreement to satisfy his lust. Happily the nymph is saved from the sexual predatory nature of her imprisonment by an outside event. The scene became so famous that it soon constituted the sine qua non of any pastoral romance.

Friday, July 19, 2013

However, women writers unsurprisingly found the scene difficult to accommodate and thus worked to change its parameters. As a result, their nymphs are not saved by a deus ex machina device but by their own intelligence and cunning. I will focus on how Isabella Andreini in her Mirtilla (1588) and Valeria Miani in her Amorosa speranza (1604) dealt with the subject. They were the first women writers to pen pastoral romances in Italian literature. Each felt obliged to revisit Tasso's archetype and each translated it for the stage with a different strategy, thus showing that the insertion of gender into customary Renaissance imitatio requirements produces a different equation, one not only woman-friendly but more realistic and palatable

Biography: Valeria Finucci, Professor, Romance Studies Department, Duke University

S2: ARAB SPRING AND THE PERSPECTIVES OF ARAB COMPARATIVE SCHOLARSHIP

ECRITURE DE SOI DE FEMMES ÉGYPTIENNES, DE LA NAHDA À LA VEILLE DU 25 JANVIER: MALAK HEFNI NASSEF (1886-1918) ET LATIFA AL ZAYYAT (1922-1996)

A. Rachid
Université du Caire

Abstract: Deux moments caractérisent l'éveil d'une conscience de soi liée à l'avenir d'une nation : la Nahda ou renaissance des débuts du XX^{ème} siècle et la fin de ce siècle où de multiples voix féminines renouvellent cette conscience et l'adaptent au changement des temps. Deux femmes célèbres me permettront d'illustrer ces propos : Malak Hefni Nassef et Latifa Al-Zayyat.

Dans sa correspondance avec May Ziadé, écrivaine et intellectuelle libano-egyptienne célèbre, Malak prononce ces paroles douloureuses et cependant nourries d'espoir : Que l'homme nous laisse libres de réfléchir à ses idées et de choisir les plus raisonnables. Qu'il n'entrave pas notre libération comme il s'est acharné à nous asservir. Nous ne supportons plus son esclavage. Nous qui ne craignons ni l'air, ni le soleil, ses yeux, sa voix nous font trembler. C'est également le chemin d'une libération qui anime l'ensemble de l'oeuvre de Latifa Al-Zayyat (autobiographie ou autofiction), avec ses moments forts (La porte ouverte), ses doutes et ses déceptions (la Vieillesse et autres récits). Cependant, à la fin de son récit de prison (Perquisitions, feuillets personnels), l'espoir renaît : Je me dirigeais de la porte des WC à celle du dortoir et le chemin me parut étroit, tortueux et sombre. Je traversais l'encombrement du couloir, ses débris et son obscurité, j'ouvris la porte dans toute sa largeur et me retrouvais dans le plein de la cour et la lumière du soleil. Et il me vint à l'esprit, assise au bord de mon lit, que j'étais enfin en mesure de ranger mes papiers qui demeuraient enfouis dans leurs cachettes secrètes.

Biography: RACHID, Amina (Université du Caire, Egypte)

COMPARATISME ET DESPOTISME

O.M. Jemni
Faculté des Sciences humaines et

Abstract: Dans le cadre du workshop « Arab Spring and the perspectives of Arab comparative scholarship / Le Printemps arabe et les perspectives de la Littérature Comparée », s'inscrivant dans la perspective générale du XX^{ème} congrès de l'AILC/ICLA « Comparative Literature as a Critical Approach /Le comparatisme comme approche critique », nous nous proposons de nous interroger sur les rapports « Comparatisme / Despotisme » dans l'intention d'essayer de prévoir l'avenir de la littérature comparée dans le monde arabe suite à ce phénomène exceptionnel des débuts du vingt-et-unième siècle,

Le comparatisme est ici entendu – dans son sens le plus large et incessamment renouvelé dans ses dimension théoriques - comme approche critique fondée essentiellement sur l'étude comparée des savoirs - linguistiques, religieux, mythologiques et surtout littéraires- de langues différentes et sur le dialogue entre cultures différentes, englobant de nouvelles théories comparatistes et de nouveaux champs de recherche : Cultural studies, Gender studies, Post-colonial studies, anthropologie culturelle, multiculturalisme, médiologie , concernant la littérature écrite, les différentes formes d'expression artistiques, les arts de l'image, etc., et s'étendant même - dans le contexte de mondialisation de l'heure actuelle - à la comparaison éventuelle des territoires, des nations, , des états, des souverainetés, des systèmes., etc. La deuxième moitié du couple concerne le despotisme. Nous entendons ici essentiellement le despotisme, dans son acception la plus étendue, et dans son sens plutôt moderne, c'est-à-dire toute forme de gouvernement où un individu, un groupe, ou un parti, règne avec « un pouvoir politique absolu et de manière abusive au regard des lois » (wikipedia). Despotisme éclairé ou pas, à caractère religieux ou séculier

- Le despotisme, par sa nature, exclurait-il , ou du moins , contesterait-il l'idée de comparaison qui est le fondement même du comparatisme ?

- Le despotisme aurait-il un impact direct ou indirect sur la réception de l'autre, sur les courants d'idées, la migration des idées, l'édition , la traduction, la réécriture, l'adaptation ainsi que tout forme de réflexion , de création ou de production culturelle et sur leurs différents enjeux poétiques et esthétiques ?

- A quel point le despotisme pourrait-il s'opposer ou imposer des limites à des nouvelles notions de comparatisme telle que la notion d'écocritique, de géocritique , de transcontinentalités littéraires, de littérature mondiale, de multiculturalisme, notions éminemment ou à connotations politiques et objet de conflits à caractère et/ou à connotations idéologiques ?

- Dans quelle mesure le comparatiste se trouve-t-il confronté – dans ses pratiques comparatistes individuelles ou collectives - aux diverses formes, figures et cas du despotisme ? Et à quel point le despotisme aurait-il la capacité de faire face aux organismes, institutions, associations, sociétés savantes se réclamant du comparatisme ?
- Comment pourrait-on situer le rapport « comparatisme/despotisme » dans le cadre de la dynamique des processus de transformation : passages, transferts, frontières, territoires, et comment et par quel moyens le despotisme pourrait-il empêcher la diversité culturelle, l'ouverture sur l'autre ?
- Le comparatisme prend-il le risque d'une dénaturation dans cette confrontation avec le despotisme et ses agents ?
- Le Comparatisme ne serai-il pas, enfin de compte, une approche critique du despotisme ??

Il s'agira, donc, dans cette communication, de cerner, tant que possible, les différents aspects du rapport « comparatisme / despotisme » et d'essayer de fournir quelques éléments de réponse à ces interrogations.

Biography: MOKDAD, Omar Jemni (Université de Tunis)

L'INSTRUMENTALISATION POLITIQUE DE L'IDENTITÉ NATIONALE ENTRE LA FRANCE ET L'EGYPTE

A. Moghith
Université de Helwan

Abstract: En janvier 2010 le Président Sarkozy, dans un contexte de crise économique et de baisse graduelle de popularité, un an avant la campagne des élections présidentielles, lance un débat officiel sur l'identité nationale. Selon lui l'identité de la France, surtout sa laïcité, est menacée. Ce qui est visé dans ce débat c'est l'Islam, que le Président et son gouvernement essayent de stigmatiser comme un danger pour l'identité française.

Un an plus tard au cours du printemps arabe le même débat est lancé en Egypte, au cours de la polémique autour des principes dits supra-constitutionnels, sensés protéger les libertés fondamentales des citoyens.

L'extrapolation est arrivée au point que les partis religieux ont organisé le vendredi 29 juillet 2011 une manifestation "millionnaire" sous le slogan: la défense de l'identité.

Ici l'identité de l'Egypte, et surtout l'islam, est menacée. Ce qu'est visé dans ce débat c'est la laïcité que les hommes politiques et les idéologues des courants religieux essayent de stigmatiser comme danger pour l'identité égyptienne. Malgré l'opposition tranchante: en France la laïcité est en danger, l'islam c'est le danger ; en Egypte l'islam est en danger, la laïcité c'est le danger, on peut remarquer beaucoup des traits communs.

Dans les deux cas, les défenseurs de l'identité nationale partent d'une vision volontariste qui suppose que l'identité se forme à partir des décisions intentionnelles prise par l'Etat ou les acteurs politiques; l'agitation se passe dans un contexte électoral; l'opposition politique dénonce violemment une manipulation, voire un jeu dangereux pour la cohésion sociale; enfin les analyses des nombreux philosophes et intellectuels français et égyptiens considèrent que l'identité nationale, dans ce débat provoqué, est un masque derrière lequel se cachent des stratégies politiques anti démocratiques: priver les citoyens français de leur droits culturels, et priver les citoyens égyptiens de leur droits politiques.

Biography: MOGHITH, Anwar (Université de Helwan, Egypte)

DISCUSSIONS

S3 GENDER AND GENRE IN COMICS

THE SHAME INOCULATION: MORRISON'S THE FILTH

D. Coughlan
University of Limerick

Abstract: The double identities of comic book superheroes are structured in such a way as to suggest that strength in the masculine public sphere is the truest sign of manhood. At its extreme, the hypermasculine superhero embodies a dominant masculinity armoured against any possible infection by the feminine, even if that means rejecting love, marriage, and the home. Yet, at the same time, this armoured self can be read as the expression of a sense of male shame and inadequacy, with the hero removing himself from the home because he cannot trust himself given the, often sexual, violence that defines him as a man. As early as 1993, Grant Morrison was concerned with "the idea of diffusing the hard body," the results of which are evident in "Animal Man," "Doom Patrol," and "Flex Mentallo," for example. But it is in "The Filth" that he tries to show how, as he says, "the shabbiest, shittiest life you can live," one defined and limited by shame, guilty, fear, hatred, and loneliness, "can be redeemed into glory by the power of imagination." Here, the hero seemingly is Ned Slade, a high-ranking officer of the "supercleansing" operation The Hand, whose off-duty persona is Greg Feely, a single man, addicted to pornography and accused of paedophilia, but fiercely dedicated to his cat Tony's well-being. Shifting between worlds of differing scales and dimensions, "The Filth," as its name suggests, studies the interactions of perversion and policing and, in the process, the superhero's part in redeeming male shame.

Biography: Dr David Coughlan is a Lecturer in English at the School of Languages, Literature, Culture and Communication, University of Limerick. He has published on contemporary American fiction and graphic narrative in the journals "College Literature," "Critique: Studies in Contemporary Fiction," and "Modern Fiction Studies," as well as in a number of edited collections and the "Blackwell Encyclopedia of Twentieth-Century Fiction." Most recently, he was contributing co-editor of a special issue of the journal "Derrida Today" on Where Ghosts Live.

GIRLS AND THE BANDE DESSINÉE: JENNY'S PINK DIARY AND EUROPEAN SHŌJO MANGA IN THE 2000S'

N. Hiraishi
University of Tsukuba

Abstract: In its long history, the bande dessinée (BD, Franco-Belgian comic) has developed a rich world and style. In this paper, I would like to explore the expansion of the BD world through cross-cultural interaction in the genre, focusing on a French manga-style girl's comic: Jenny's Pink Diary (2006-2008). Japanese manga was introduced to France and became the subject of attention in the last decade of the 20th century. Frédéric Boilet created the term "Nouvelle Manga," and started his attempt to bridge French BD and Japanese manga, targeting adult audiences by narrating the universal realm of daily life. On the other hand, Japanese comics attracted young girls as well as boys; reinforced by the popularity of some animated television series, Japanese girl's comics has established a presence and fostered the creation of Shōjo manga (manga-styled girl's comic) in Europe. In the 2000s, several shōjo manga works appeared in Europe, including Shakespeare's adaptation of Romeo and Juliet. Amongst these works, Christina Plaka's Yonen Buzz (2005-2008, published in Germany) and Jenny's Pink Diary deserve particular attention. In both works, the scenes are set in Japan: the characters are (at least in the beginning) Japanese high school students, wearing uniforms. This fact might indicate that the girls' fantasy aroused by manga is likely to be connected to "Japanese" school life, while the sharing of the codes and mannerisms of shōjo manga shows us that this genre has become firmly established in the minds of European readers. Moreover, the merging of BD style with manga style produces intriguing descriptions. A close examination of Pink Diary leads us to some distinctive features of this work, such as the attentive description of the inner feelings of the characters. The technique for depicting inner feelings with an innovative page layout had been cultivated in the seventies by some manga artists, and has become the chief distinction of shōjo manga. Jenny's combination of specific features of manga and of bande dessinée explores and pioneers a new frontier in BD for girls.

Biography: Noriko Hiraishi is Associate Professor of comparative literature at the University of Tsukuba, Japan. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Tokyo. In addition to her ongoing interest in European fin-de-siècle literature and modern Japanese literature, her current research includes studies of contemporary Japanese literature and culture. Recent publications are as follows: Adapting "the West": Agonizing Youths and Schoolgirls in Modern Japanese Literature. Tokyo: Shinyosha, 2012 (in Japanese). "Japan in European Shōjo Manga: The Cases of Yonen Buzz and Pink Diary." In Japanese Comparative Literature Association, ed., Words Crossing Borders: Japanese Literature in the World. Tokyo: Sairyusha, 2011 (in Japanese). "The Quest for "Modern Love" in 1910-20s' East Asia through the Reception of Ellen Key's Works." In Shigemi Inaga, ed., Artistic Vagabondage and New Utopian Projects: Transnational Poietic Experience in East-Asian Modernity (1905-1960). Kyoto: International Research Center for Japanese Studies, 2011. "Shojo and Rococo: the Girl's Description in Dazai Osamu's Joseito (Girl Student)." In Yumiko Masuda and Junko Saeki, eds., Femininity in Japanese Literature. Kyoto: Shibunkaku, 2011 (in Japanese). "Degenerate Flâneuse: Contradictory Images of Urban New Women in Modernizing Tokyo." In Eduardo F. Coutinho, ed., Identities in Process: Studies in Comparative Literature. Rio de Janeiro: Aeroplano, 2009.

WHILE MY GORILLA GENTLY WEEPS

T. Lassiter

Indiana University of Pennsylvania

Abstract: Alan Moore is recognized as a graphic novel writer who speaks to the twenty-first century reader in multiple ways culturally, politically, artistically, and otherwise. The range of critical interpretations and explorations of his texts is indicated, for example, in Studies in Comics 2:1, where he and his works were the subject. While his more overtly political texts like Watchmen and V for Vendetta currently garner popular attention, his graphic novel Promethea is less studied. This presentation addresses that gap, focusing particularly on the Weeping Gorilla trope. Moore himself claims he added the gorilla because he thought "that would be so stupid and I needed more elements that are stupid. I need irrelevant themes I can just throw in..." Despite Moore's declarations, I find Weeping Gorilla a very interesting character and not "stupid" at all. It fuses the Silver Age of comics, inverts the traditional romance comic, and delves into existential angst. Comments such as "Choke! Modern life makes me feel so alone" and "Go on, ask me about my marriage" offer prime opportunities to explore those elements and consider their implications in the postmodern age. This presentation examines Weeping Gorilla's comments from postmodern, global and feminist perspectives. Ultimately, though, I hope to show how a gorilla can be more human than some of the rest of us. (This is to be submitted under the Comparative and Narrative Approaches in Comics Studies panel)

Biography: Tracy Lassiter is a PhD student at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. She has previously presented at the ICLA Congresses in Hong Kong and Korea.

S2: LE MOUVEMENT SYMBOLISTE ET LES MALADIES MENTALES

HYSTERIA AS A CREATIVE CONDITION IN ALEXEI REMIZOV'S SOLOMONIIA

J. Friedman

Herberger Institute for Design and the Arts, Arizona State University

Abstract: The proposed paper deals with the phenomenon of hysteria as it was presented in Alexei Remizov's 1928 tale Solomoniiia, which evolved through six in-print versions, and three original illustrated albums Remizov produced in the mid-1930s. I will argue that Remizov's interpretation of mental illness as a manifestation of abnormality that provides a creative advantage is rooted in his symbolist past, while proving opportune for his surrealist present.

The protagonist of the story, Solomoniiia, is an innocent young country girl who promised herself to God, but is married off to a local shepherd against her will. On her wedding night she has a vision of the devil that assumes the place of her husband. This is followed by many more explicitly sexual apparitions, demonic torture, and the birth of the devil's offspring. Although the original 1928 narrative describes Solomoniiia's malaise as a demonic, or to be more accurate, phallic possession, the subsequent French translation of the text by the surrealist poet Gilbert Lély published in Paris periodical Hippocrate (1935: no. 10) frames Solomoniiia as a hysteric, thus linking the tale to the contemporaneous surrealist debate about the relationship between mental illness and creativity. The tale's subsequent versions strongly suggest that it was Solomoniiia's possession, her "sickness" that produced her creative vision. Despite being a victim, a person possessed, Solomoniiia's strength was in her ability to transgress the limitations of the diurnal consciousness. Her visions released her imagination, and her possession (hysteria) was the impetus for this release of imagination.

Alexei Remizov (1877–1957) entered the busy St. Petersburg art scene in 1905, following his return from Siberian exile, and soon found a place among the symbolists, establishing himself at the forefront of literary experimentation. After his reluctant emigration abroad in 1921, Remizov finally settled in Paris in 1923 where he continued to write and publish fiction, now supplementing his writings with single-copy illustrated albums in India ink and watercolor. Over the period of almost twenty years he produced nearly 250 of these albums. My paper will examine one such album, the 1935 Solomonie la Possédée, in the context of the symbolist and surrealist discourse on mental illness and its connection with creativity.

Biography: Dr. Julia Friedman

(Herberger Institute for Design and the Arts, Arizona State University)

BETWEEN THE HYPNOTIC AND THE HALLUCINATORY: AESTHETIC EXPERIENCE AND THE POETRY OF MALLARMÉ

C. Sciortino

University of California

Abstract: In France from 1889 to 1900, in the shadow of Jean-Martin Charcot, the expansion of the so-called "New Psychiatry" was so intense that Jules Héricourt could declare the "absolute truth of the unconscious." The developments in the study of suggestibility and the unconscious led to an effort to link them to aesthetic experience. Henri Bergson in Time and Free Will (1889) compares aesthetic experience to a state of hypnosis, since both aim to put the consciousness to sleep and open it to the suggestion of an idea. Paul Sourier in La Suggestion dans L'Art (1893) saw in hypnotic trance and hallucinatory experience the elements of aesthetic experience, writing:

In the illusions produced by paintings aren't there some aspects of the hallucination?...Between the hypnotic state and ecstasy of the beautiful, between the effects of suggestion and those of art?

Gabriele Séailles in, "Essai sur le génie dans l'art," argued that since sensation has the same nature as a mental image and can only exist through it, works of art are "hallucinations grafted onto true perceptions," pointing to the example of seeing a figure in a cloud. Sourier alluded to the power of the hypnotic object of the gaze to take possession of the beholder, describing how the fascination of the visual might lead one to "remain absorbed for hours gazing at a curtain fringe, a brilliant reflection in a mirror, or a flower in a piece of tapestry”.

This paper examines the ambivalent terrain of hallucinatory and hypnotic elements in the poetry of Mallarmé and related poets in his circle. It will look at the relationship between aesthetic experience—especially Mallarmé’s search for the elusive ideal in his poetry—and hallucinatory-hypnotic experience to consider how his poetry both reflects and aims to induce a psychic state that moves ambiguously between hallucinatory madness (or possession) and the hypnotic properties of aesthetic experience articulated by Bergson, Séaille, and Sourier.

Biography: Cassandra Sciortino,
Ph.D student,
University of California, Santa Barbara

PLUSIEURS TYPES DE FOLIE DES PERSONNAGES LITTÉRAIRES QUE L’ON TROUVE DANS DES ŒUVRES D’INSPIRATION HELLÉNISTE CHEZ LES ARTISTES RUSSES DU DÉBUT DU VINGTIÈME SIÈCLE

N. Gamalova
université Jean Moulin Lyon 3

Abstract: Cette contribution se propose d’étudier plusieurs types de folie des personnages littéraires que l’on trouve dans des œuvres d’inspiration helléniste chez les artistes russes du début du vingtième siècle. Dans la tragédie "antique" d’Innokenti Annenski, Le roi Ixion (1902), et dans les traductions par ce même auteur des tragédies d’Euripide (Oreste et Héraclès furieux), nous considérerons la folie représentés (d’une manière « visuelle » et « picturale ») comme possession par la déesse Lyssa et comme persécution par les Érinyes. La comparaison avec Érinyes (1889) de Leconte de Lisle permettra de voir la différence, dans le traitement de la personnification de la démence et de l’épouvante, chez un Parnassien français (Leconte de Lisle) et un Symboliste russe (I. Annenski). Ensuite, nous étudierons les descriptions de la démence bacchique dans Loadamie (1902) d’Annenski et dans sa traduction des Bacchantes d’Euripide. Une autre folie encore, venant des Muses, caractérise le héros d’Annenski Thamyris le citharède (1906).

Biography: Natalia Gamalova, Maître de Conférence
université Lyon 3

MALADIES MENTALES ET OBJECTIF D’UN POÈTE SYMBOLISTE

V. Maslova
Académie des Sciences

Abstract: Beaucoup d’artistes de la fin du 20ème siècle ont souffert des maladies mentales ou ont manifesté des symptômes de celles-ci. Il suffit de citer Van Gogh, Salvador Dali, M.Vrubel, A.Rimbaud, F. Dostoïevski. D’habitude on analyse l’influence de la maladie mentale sur l’œuvre de l’artiste. Il est beaucoup plus rare d’analyser le processus inverse. Il est normale de se demander si une certaine déviation à la norme qui frôle la maladie soit déterminante pour la création artistique. Si oui, pouvons - nous expliquer la stylistique originale de l’œuvre artistique du point de vue de médecin, si nous pouvons dire que c’est l’état de déséquilibre psychique qui plonge le poète dans la haine et le dégoût, le remet aux démons du Mal. Ne serait - ce plus raisonnable d’analyser les œuvres des poètes et peintres - symbolistes qui ne cessent d’évoquer le sujet de solitude, anxiété, fatigue, rêve à partir de leurs propres positions artistiques. Les objectifs que poursuit un artiste symboliste sont radicalement différent de ceux des artistes appartenant à d’autres tendances. Son but est de se plonger dans un état qui lui permettrait de s’accorder à la musique de sphères et d’y capter les images nécessaires. Or, l’artiste cherche à créer une "démence consiente". Pour lui la mission d’un poète est de participer à la création du monde et y compris grâce au langage suggestive. Rimbaud trouve son langage par la voie de dérégulation de tous les sentiments. Pour voir si les symbolistes ont pu atteindre leurs objectifs nous allons faire appel à la "théorie de donneur-récepteur".

Friday, July 19, 2013

Tout comme pour la transfusion de sang il faut avoir la compatibilité des groupes sanguins et du facteur rhésus il faut avoir un certain degré de compatibilité entre l'œuvre artistique et sa perception par le public. Nous supposons que le degré de cette compatibilité détermine le succès d'un œuvre. A son époque les symbolistes n'ont pas eu le succès en dehors de leurs cercles. Aussi, Verlaine a-t-il donné le nom de "maudits", d'incompris et d'abandonné à lui - même et ses confrères. Mais déjà le 20ème et le 21ème siècle ont vu le symbolisme occupé de place de valeur d'un histoire de l'art et de la culture.

Biography: Vera Maslova,
Etudiante 3ème cycle en philosophie
Institut de Philosophie
auprès l'Académie des Sciences de la Fédération de Russie

S3 MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE

OCCIDENT AND ORIENT - SEARCHING FOR JUXTAPOSITION IN CONTEMPORARY POSTCOLONIAL NOVELS

A. Stanecka

Jan Kochanowski University

Abstract: The presentation is going to be devoted to variety of images depicted in postcolonial contemporary British novels. The author is going to base her ideas on different ways of presenting white British culture versus culture of ethnic minorities living in the United Kingdom. Quoting and supporting the discussion with well known ideas of Edward Said and his Occident and Orient division the author will try to answer the following questions: which of Said's ideas are present in the XXI-th century Britain? Which elements of the concept of Occident and Orient are to be found in contemporary London? Which of the notions discussed in Orientalism continue, and which of them, if any, became the voice of the past. The author will endeavour to answer the questions comparing novels of contemporary writers such as Zadie Smith, Gautam Malkani or Hanif Kureishi. Finally, the question whether such a variety of presentation is successful or not will be answered.

Biography: Agnieszka Stanecka wrote her PhD on postcolonial studies (University of Silesia, Poland). She has wide experience as an academic teacher. Currently she is a lecturer at the Jan Kochanowski University of Humanities and Sciences, a branch in Piotrkow Trybunalski, Poland. She is interested in gender studies, feminist studies the issue of marginalization, blurred identities and hybridity of postcolonial subjects.

L'EXIL EN OCCIDENT

M. Salvioli

Université Catholique de Louvain

Abstract: L'Exil en Occident Le thème de l'exil apparaît un pôle catalyseur des problématiques de la littérature de la migration, d'une littérature du dépaysement. En particulier, dans la littérature des «périphéries» il est question, maintes fois, de «l'exil en Occident», d'un exil au «centre». Dans cette perspective la communication propose de se situer dans une «périphérie» très féconde par rapport au thème choisi, le monde arabe, et plus spécifiquement dans sa partie occidentale, le Maghreb (Maroc, Tunisie, Algérie). L'étude portera sur deux ouvrages maghrébins qui, déjà dans le titre, font référence à l'exil: al-Ghurba (1971) de Abdelfattah Laroui et L'exil occidental (2005) de Abdelwahhab Meddeb. Le premier, al-Ghurba, un roman écrit en arabe par l'intellectuel marocain connu en France et ailleurs pour ses essais d'histoire et théorie politique en français, est traduit sous le titre L'exil, terme qui correspond en effet à celui arabe, sans d'ailleurs pouvant lui rendre sa polysémie, désignant la condition de vivre dans un pays autre que le sien ainsi que tous les sentiments de souffrance, malheur et aliénation liés à cette condition. Dans al-Ghurba, à travers l'histoire de Chuhayb, autrefois nationaliste passionné mais désormais observateur désenchanté de la réalité de son pays, et celle d'Idris, cherchant en vain une solution à l'impasse dans le voyage en France et l'amour pour Marie, l'exil représente la condition de l'intellectuel déçu de la période post-indépendance, il est à la fois l'exil en pays natal et l'exil réel en Occident. Par le second ouvrage, L'exil occidental, l'écrivain franco-tunisien Abdelwahhab Meddeb qui vit à Paris mais se définit «errant», propose une dimension existentielle et philosophique de l'exil, à partir de l'œuvre du mystique persan Sohrawardi (1155-1191) et de sa propre expérience, nous invitant à partager l'épreuve de l'étranger, de la poésie préislamique aux émigrés de Tanger, en passant par Tunis, New York et le Japon, mais aussi par la désolation de Auschwitz. On pourrait donc constater une évolution du thème dans deux oeuvres qui appartiennent à deux périodes différentes - même s'il faut rappeler que la distance temporelle serait beaucoup moins importante si on ne considérait que le champ littéraire français, où la traduction de al-Ghurba est parue en 1999 -, qui ont deux pays d'origine distincts et parlent deux langues différentes, mais à partir d'un univers culturel commun. La comparaison entre ces deux œuvres vise à enrichir la réflexion sur la littérature de la migration, ses sujets et ses stratégies discursives, en abordant le thème spécifique de l'exil, mais surtout en posant la question de l'appartenance de la littérature du Maghreb à plusieurs champs littéraires (français, occidental, maghrébin, arabe) comme celle de son statut au sein des différents champs. Au niveau plus élevé, théorique, cette communication concerne le rôle de la critique comparatiste d'une part dans la définition de la littérature de la migration, qui pourrait comprendre selon nous même les ouvrages d'auteurs qui ne résident pas toujours à l'étranger et qui n'écrivent pas forcément dans la langue de l'autre, et d'autre part dans la définition de la littérature maghrébine et de la littérature postcoloniale en général. La critique comparatiste peut nous conduire, selon notre avis, à étudier la production bilingue ou plurilingue du Maghreb comme un seul organisme constitué par plusieurs composantes qui dialoguent entre elles. Cette démarche représente une nouveauté dans les études comparatistes ainsi que dans les études arabes, car les deux composantes principales de la littérature maghrébine, arabe et française, ont été jusqu'à maintenant considérées et étudiées comme deux entités séparées. Et c'est la démarche que nous avons essayé de proposer dans notre thèse et notre livre sur la littérature marocaine (Voci da Tangeri. Identità, cultura e letteratura in Marocco, Diabasis 2010) et que nous continuons à parcourir dans notre projet de recherche postdoctoral sur la littérature maghrébine de voyage, Migration à Nord: voyage et autofiction dans le roman maghrébin (marocain, tunisien, algérien) en français et en arabe, dont cette communication voudrait présenter un échantillon ainsi que ses implications théoriques.

Biography: 1. Name: SALVIOLI 2. First name(s): Marianna 3. Permanent address: via P. Capone, 7 - 84122 Salerno (Italy) 4. Date of birth: 19/10/1978 5. Place of birth: Salerno 6. Nationality: Italian SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION · Ph. D in Linguistics and Comparative Literature: 02/07/2008, University of Naples Suor Orsola Benincasa, SESA (Scuola Europea di Studi Avanzati) - SUM (Istituto di Scienze Umane) and Ph. D. in Langues, cultures et sociétés: 02/07/2008, INALCO (Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales), Paris (joint tutorship), mention Très honorable avec félicitations du jury à l'unanimité (Honors). Thesis title: Voci da Tangeri. Identità, cultura e letteratura in Marocco (French summary Voix de Tanger. Identité, culture et littérature au Maroc). Supervisor: Professor Maria Teresa Giaveri (Naples), Joint advisor: Professor Luc Deheuvels (INALCO). Jury: Maria Teresa Giaveri, Luc Deheuvels, Gisèle Vanhese, Elisabeth Vauthier. Four-year degree course in Comparative Studies (languages and literatures: Arabic and French): 27/11/2001, University of Naples "L'Orientale", mention summa cum laude (110/110 e lode) Fellowships: Post doctoral fellowship co-founded by the Marie Curie Actions of the European Commission: Université Catholique de Louvain, Belgique, 7 may 2012- 6 may 2014 · Graduate fellowship: Rabat, Morocco, 5 January-30 June 2009 (six months), Service de Coopération et d'Action Culturelle (SCAC) of the French Embassy of Morocco. Internship to improve Arabic at Centre d'Etudes Arabes (CEA) of Rabat, certificate obtained. · Graduate Fellowship: Italy, 2005-2008 (3 years), SUM (Istituto di Scienze Umane). · Graduate Fellowship in "Improvement in foreign countries" at the University Paris III-Sorbonne Nouvelle: Paris, France, 2002-2003 (12 months), University of Naples "L'Orientale". · Intensive Modern Arabic course certificate at Bourghiba Institute: Tunis, Tunisia, 3 April-1st June 2000 (2 months), Italian Foreign Ministry, Scholarship to Tunisia. RESEARCH ACTIVITIES · Yearly appointment as Lecturer (Professore a contratto) in Comparative Literature: University of Naples "L'Orientale", 2010-2011. · Yearly appointment as Lecturer (Professore a contratto) in French Language: University of Naples Federico II, 2010-2011. · Course at the Doctorate school in Gender Studies on the book La grande avventura di essere me stessa devoted to Simone de Beauvoir: University of Naples Federico II, 28 April 2010. · Yearly appointment as Lecturer (Professore a contratto) in Italian Language and Culture: Italian Institute of Culture in Rabat (Morocco), January-Mai 2009. · Yearly appointment as Lecturer (Professore a contratto) in pedagogical, linguistic and cultural training of Leonardo scholars for European Union Projects TEXT 2004/2005, TECXT 2005/2006: University of Naples "L'Orientale", 2004-2007. As part of a PRIN project (Prin, Progetto di ricerca scientifica di rilevante interesse nazionale 2009-2012) I'm involved in the National project at the University of Turin (director: Professor Maria Teresa Giaveri). The title of project is Plotting the Future: Prophecy and Disenchantment in Literary and Musical productions from Early Modern to the Post Modern Age between The East and The West. My specific project concerns the prophecy in the Modern Arabic Literature, in which it becomes a favorite theme since Khalil Gibran's The Prophet (1923). member of scientific societies: · Compalit (Associazione per gli Studi di Teoria e Storia comparata della Letteratura) · SeSaMo (Società per gli Studi sul Medioriente) · CESET (Centro per lo Studio e l'Edizione dei Testi), University of Naples "L'Orientale" · SBLGC (Société Belge de Littérature Générale et Comparée) Publications Book Voci da Tangeri. Identità, cultura e letteratura in Marocco, postfazione di Luc-Willy Deheuvels, Diabasis, Reggio Emilia 2010, collana Imago Mundi, 250 pp. ISBN 978-88-8103-691-2

<http://www.diabasis.it/database/diabasis/diabasis.nsf/pagine/6AB604A391C2ED73C12576E1005E3CD2?OpenDocument>
Editor of book: F. de Cristofaro, G. Episcopo, M. Salvioli (eds.), Oriente e Occidente. Atti del convegno annuale dell'Associazione per gli Studi di Teoria e Storia comparata della Letteratura – Compalit, Napoli, 13-15 novembre 2008, rivista online «Between», n. 2, nov. 2011, <http://ojs.unica.it/index.php/between> (forthcoming). Articles in journals with peer review: 1) Miti e contromiti di Tangeri. Da Au Grand Socco a Soco Chico, rivista online «Mesogea segni e voci dal Mediterraneo», n. 4/2011, <http://www.mesogeamag.it/voci-e-pensieri/item/29-miti-e-contromiti-di-tangeri-da-au-grand-socco-a-soco-chico.html> 2) al-Hijra ila al-shamal aw al-kitaba al-jadida li 'l-gharb ("La migrazione a Nord o la riscrittura dell'Occidente"), «Ribat al-koutoub», n. 7-8, nov. 2009, <http://www.ribatalkoutoub.ma/spip.php?article151> 3) Laboratorio tangerino. al-Khubz al-hafi (Il pane nudo) di Mohamed Choukri nelle traduzioni di Paul Bowles e Tahar Ben Jelloun, «Recto/Verso», revue de jeunes chercheurs en critique génétique, n. 3 – la Création en collaboration, juin 2008, <http://www.revueverso.com/spip.php?article100> 4) Un dramma-apologo di Sa'ad Allah Wannus: "L'elefante o Re del tempo", «Mesogea segni e voci dal Mediterraneo», n. 2/2005, pp. 66-73. 5) Cultura scientifica e farsa popolare: Tayf al-Khayâl e Pantagruel, le vicende di due eroi "trasgressivi" a confronto, «Annali dell'Istituto Universitario Orientale» – Sezione Romana, XLIV, 2, luglio 2002, pp. 641-686. Proceedings of colloquia: 6) Interzone et labyrinthe: William Burroughs et Mohamed Choukri à Tanger, in A. Hibbard, B. Tharaud (eds.), Bowles Beats Tangier, International Centre for Performance Studies, Tangier 2008, Series: Conferences and Colloquia n. 5, pp. 115-124. 7) Migrazioni a Nord. Visioni d'Occidente nella letteratura araba, in F. de Cristofaro, G. Episcopo, M. Salvioli (a cura di), Oriente e Occidente. Atti del convegno annuale dell'Associazione per gli Studi di Teoria e Storia comparata della Letteratura – Compalit, Napoli, 13-15 novembre 2008, rivista online «Between», n. 2, nov. 2011, <http://ojs.unica.it/index.php/between> (forthcoming) 8) La genesi editoriale de Il pane nudo di M. Choukri: un'officina interculturale, in Atti del Convegno di studi La nascita del testo, Ischia 21-22 giugno 2010 (Mesogea, Collana Castelli di carta, forthcoming). 9) La nascita del romanzo arabo: traduzioni, plaghi, invenzioni, in Atti del Seminario dottorale Traduzione e innovazione dei canoni e dei sistemi letterari, Torino 19-20 aprile 2010 (Mesogea, Collana Castelli di carta, forthcoming). 10) Laboratorio tangerino di Paul Bowles: comunicazione interculturale o "technique d'un viol"? , in Atti del convegno di studi La scrittura sulla scrittura, Napoli-Ischia 17-20 giugno 2008 (Mesogea, Collana Castelli di carta, forthcoming). 11) Riscrivere Tangeri: "Il pane nudo" di Mohamed Choukri, in Atti del convegno internazionale Le città letterarie, Ischia, 28-29 giugno 2006 (Mesogea, Collana Castelli di carta, forthcoming). Translations: M. Bennis, Lectio magistralis La poesia e l'appello alla promessa (a cura di M. Salvioli), poesia inedita La gioia del danzatore trad. di M. Salvioli e P. F. Iacuzzi, «Semicerchio rivista di poesia comparata», XLIII (2011/2). Maram al Masri, Ti guardo, trad. dall'arabo di M. Salvioli, Multimedia edizioni, Baronissi 2009. Reviews: Salma Khadra Jayyusi (Ed.), Modern Arabic Poetry. An Anthology, New York, Columbia University Press 1991 (Reprint), 498 pagg., «Semicerchio rivista di poesia comparata», XXXVI (2007/1), pp. 92-93. Adonis, In onore del chiaro e dello scuro, con un omaggio di G. Conte, Edizioni Archivi del Novecento, Milano, 2005, coll. "A mano libera", «Semicerchio rivista di poesia comparata», XXXIV (2006/1), p. 61.

MIGRATION, EXILE AND IDENTITY: YOUNG ARGENTINE WRITER CONFLICT

G. Wamba

Universidad Nacional La Plata Argentina

Abstract: The aim of this work is to make an approach to a subject which not only provides a new way of focusing on the issue of Argentine migrant in European literature but also reveals the collective historical memory of a culture in crises (the Argentine culture). Consequently, we describe the convergence occurring on developing this subject in relation to the Argentine migrant in Spain, France and Germany like a European who does not accept his Latin American condition. However; this migrant usually does not renounce to his Argentine identity and, even immersed in a different culture, claims to be different from other migrants. This recent uprooting experience and the historical memory and exile of his parents reinforce the dialogue of literature with the Argentine history of the seventies. Therefore, we shall focus, on the one hand, on the use of stereotypes and ideologemes for creating a intermedial image of the Argentine migrant in other European cultures and languages and; on the other, on describing the way in which he builds up, at the same time, a narration of the collective past. Laura Alcoba in France La casa de los conejos (2010) Los pasajeros del Anna C. (2012) Patricio Pron in Spain El comienzo de la primavera (2008) El espíritu de mis padres sigue subiendo en la lluvia (2012), Maria Laura Barbetta in Germany (Änderungsschneiderei Los Milagros, 2009)

Biography: Professor, Dr. Graciela Wamba Gaviña She studied at National University of La Plata where she got the Degree of Doctor of Letters with Germanistic orientation. She was awarded fellowships for research and assistance to congresses and seminars by the German Government. (DAAD), in many opportunities. CONICET scholar and researcher, at present, she is Professor of German Literature and German Training Course in the Faculty of Humanities and Education Sciences of University of La Plata. and Master of Compared Literature. She is member of national and international institutions of German Literature and Compared Literature. She has published several works in national and foreign journals related to her specialty. At present, she performs research tasks in the Literature Center and Compared Literatures of the aforementioned University. Professor Wamba working areas are: Contemporary German novel, migration literature, compared literatures and philosophy. Professor Wamba last publications The Swiss exile of German writers: opposites symbiotic situation Bertolt Brecht, Georg Kaiser and Robert Musil, in German Argentine Annual Book, 2007.III, pp 211-222 Frankreich, Italien und andere europäische Länder in der neuesten argentinischen Literatur, Kailuweit, Rolf, Pfänder, Stefan, Vetter, Dirk, (Hrsg) Migration und Transkription, Frankreich, Europa, Lateinamerika, 2010, Berlin:Berliner Wissenschafts Verlag:179-191 Hermann Broch and Virgilio, Exile as a constant in European literature. Concerning The death of Virgilio de Hermann Broch., in Galán, Lia, Chicote Gloria, Cultural Dialogues, Act III Seminary on Classical and Mediaeval Studies,2009, 681-694. -Evil Stereotype in Nazism and Argentine History Concerning Spider woman kiss of Manuel Puig in Minellono, María Mirror distortion. Text representation of Argentine and compared literature strategies. La Plata, Ediciones al Margen, 2008, 263-270 The miniseries 'Winds of Water' (2006) of Juan José Campanella. Cine and literature in the generic crossing. About a conflict between two cultures: Argentine, Spain and the migrant issue (past and present) Act III International Congress CELEHIS" Argentine, Latin American and Spanish Literature ". Mar del Plata, 2008.. The generic crossing in the miniseries Winds of Water of Juan José Campanella. The migrant issue: Argentine and Spain in : Criticism and Hispanic literature between two centuries: generic mixed races and inter media dialogues, 427-440, Madrid, Maia ,2010 Europe and Argentine in the most recent Argentine novel (2000-2006), Argentine emigrant-immigrant phenomena, Compared Literature Report XXXIV, Mendoza, Argentine, Cuyo National University, Faculty of Philosophy and Letters, CLC, 2009, pp.270-278 Berlin-Buenos Aires in the German and Argentine Literature in Puertas Abiertas, n° 5, 2009. Fausto theme in the expressionism. From Böhme mystic to nuclear energy in: Acts German Argentine Association IV, 2009., 173-180 Hermann Broch and Virgilio, exile as a constant in the European literature. Concerning The death of Virgilio of Hermann Broch. In Cultural Dialogues, Lía Galán, Gloria Chicote (editors) La Plata, UNLP; 2009, 681-694, Literature and cine in the generic crossing. About a conflict between two cultures: Argentine and Spain and the immigrant issue (past-and present), in: Puertas Abiertas, año III, n° 4, Diciembre 2008, pp. 23-28, Presence of German thinking in the Faculty of Humanities and Education Sciences of La Plata at the beginning of the XX Century in Gloria CHICOTE; Barbara GÖBEL (editors.) Travelling ideas and their objects. The scientific interchange between Germany and South America, Berlin, Ibero/American, (2011) Presence of German thinking in the Faculty of Humanities and Education Sciences of La Plata at the beginning of the XX Century, German Argentine Year Book 2010: German emigration to Argentine : 1933-1945, 2010, VI. Editors: Régula Rohland de Langbehn; Miguel Vedda Berlin-Buenos Aires in der argentinischen und in der deutschen Literature in: Congress Acts IVG Varsovia 2010. (EN PRENSA) Hogar Patria Ruina en W.G.Sebald. German Argentine Book Year 2011: Acts of XVI German Language Literature Seminary VII(2011). Editores: Régula Rohland de Langbehn; Miguel Vedda, Graciela Wamba Gaviña -Frankreich, Italien und andere europäische Länder in der neuesten argentinischen Literatur, Kailuweit Rolf et al. Migration und Transkription, Frankreich ,Europa, Berlin: Berliner Wissenschafts Verlag,2010 Once upon a time in Paris when the vanguards crossed: concerning Robert Musil and the Latin American novel of vanguard in press in homage to Alfredo Bauer, German Argentine Year Book . 2011 Some Argentine Young Writers re migration and their insertion in the Hispanic Literary field . Cultural Identity Issue and the language press in Acts of II International Congress of Contemporary Spanish Culture and Literature, transatlantic dialogues .IdHICS, UNLP,2011 Migration and Cultural Identity in recent Argentine narrative, Puertas Abiertas, n° 6, 2010.

Friday, July 19, 2013

S3 EARLY MODERN CONSTRUCTIONS OF EUROPE

DISCOURSES AND PRACTICES: EARLY MODERN REPRESENTATIONS OF THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE

N. Berman

Ohio State University

Abstract: My talk will discuss the question of the early modern European imaginary through an analysis of representations of the Ottoman Empire. In response to the expansion of the Ottoman Empire into European territories, images of the invading imperial power circulated across Europe. This discourse, which dates back to the middle of the fifteenth century, was by no means homogenous; broadsheets and newspapers took a more factual approach to the events, while highbrow literature was distinguished by fictionalization and ultimately stereotyping of Ottoman characters and culture. While tensions between conflicting representations of the Ottomans were a phenomenon observable in various linguistic contexts, highbrow representations (particularly in operas and plays) were, some degree of variation notwithstanding, surprisingly similar in their approach to the Ottomans. The articulation of these images in various European languages, however, stood in contrast to the distinct practices of interaction between individual European states and the Ottoman Empire. While France, among others, became an ally of the Ottomans in the early sixteenth century, the Holy Roman Empire, for example, was engaged in military hostilities with the Ottomans for over two centuries. My talk will explore the similarities and differences that are observable in select European representations of the Ottoman Empire in light of social, political, and economic practices, and consider the consequences of this analysis for our understanding of culture. I will pursue the question of how we can conceive of "Europe" in light of these heterogeneous discursive and other practices. The discussion will center on the role of "discourse," especially with regard to methodological and theoretical questions.

Biography: Nina Berman is Professor of Comparative Studies at The Ohio State University, and specializes in intercultural hermeneutics, German orientalism and colonialism, globalization and culture, world literature, critical theory, travel literature, and translation studies in both her research and teaching. She recently published "German Literature on the Middle East: Discourses and Practices, 1000-1989" (University of Michigan Press, 2011).

CONSTRUCTIONS OF EUROPE IN ELIZABETHAN AND JACOBAN HISTORIOGRAPHY

F. Kläger

University of Münster

Abstract: Given the perpetually close involvement of England with the continent on the one hand, and its insular position on the other, the history of relations between the two provides a particularly fruitful instance of cultural exchange. In the early modern period, with the development of English national consciousness and the waning of influence on the continent, the relationship became problematic. Unsurprisingly, this deterioration left its traces on historiographic representations of relations in the past, as well. In my paper, I discuss a number of instances in which key parameters of English national identity, liberty and civility, are constructed in such a way as to bespeak a relationship to a "European other" that becomes foundational for the early modern notion of 'Englishness'. Texts studied include Holinshed's Chronicles and Camden's Britannia, as well as various shorter works. I discuss Tudor and Stuart negotiations of the "mixed" ethnic origins of the English; of "ancient constitutionalism" and of the split from Rome. All of these involve the early modern English historians in engaging with perceived differences with the continent that are less pronounced than they seem. The study thus considers the construction of difference in a formative period of national identity, and it does so by considering aspects that appear more relevant to early modernity than the present day, such as ethnicity and the conflict of secular and religious powers, as well as dimensions that are still highly relevant to the construction of European identity today, such as legal, political, and religious discourses.

Biography: Florian Klaeger studied English literature and history at Mainz, Galway (Ireland), Giessen, and Duesseldorf. He has published a monograph on early modern historiography, examining Elizabethan writings on Ireland for their impact on constructions of the English national past. He currently holds a postdoctoral position at the university of Muenster, teaching British and Irish literature and culture in the English Department. His research interests and publications address questions of individual and collective identity formation, genre theory (esp. the theory and poetics of the novel), Shakespeare Studies, and metaphorology. He is co-coordinator of the Marie Curie Initial Training Network "CoHaB - Diasporic Constructions of Home and Belonging" and, together with Prof. Klaus Stierstorfer, head of the DFG-funded research group, "Orbis Britannicus versus Orbis Europaeus? Negotiations of National and European Identities in British and Irish Literature".

"THE SHIP OF EUROPE" - THE FRONTISPIECE OF JOHN DEE'S GENERAL AND RARE MEMORIALS

E. Richter

University of Münster

Abstract: In 1577 John Dee, the Royal Astronomer and counsellor of Elizabeth I, published the General and Rare Memorials Pertayning to the Perfect Arte of Navigation in which he describes his vision of England becoming the leading naval and imperial power in Europe. The maritime context of this work highlights the importance that seafaring and naval power had with regard to the struggle for hegemony in 16th-century Europe: Maritime supremacy was equated with political power as control of the sea became central for trade and colonialism. Besides, the sea turned into a space where relationships between the European forces were settled, as contemporary royal proclamations elucidate.

The frontispiece represents "the sum of Dee's prophetic hopes" for England according to Margery Corbett and Ronald Lightbown as it shows Elizabeth I sitting enthroned on the 'ship of Europe' in the position of a helmsman, defiantly heading west with God symbolically backing her journey in the form of the Tetragrammaton. Consequently, the frontispiece not only relates to the general progress in naval matters but also to the contemporary religious conflict in Europe, highlighting the self-perception of the English as an 'Elect Nation' and drawing on the biblical connotation of the ship.

Apart from the 'ship of Europe'-metaphor used in this frontispiece, this paper will explore the significance of the religious, imperial, maritime, and royal representational elements of early modern English identity established under Elizabeth I. It will discuss the frontispiece in relation to George Gower's famous Armada Portrait (1588) of Elizabeth I, as the painting draws on the setting and scenery introduced in this woodcut.

Biography: Eliza Richter studied English and History at the University of Paderborn

(Germany) and the University of Sheffield (United Kingdom) with a focus on early modern history and English literature. In 2012, she completed her state examination in Paderborn and was accepted as a PhD student at the University of Münster (Germany). She is part of the 'Europa-Kolleg' which focuses on literary constructions of European and national identities. Currently, she is working on her PhD thesis: "The Sea as a Third Space in Early Modern English Literature – A Maritime Quest for Identity (1570-1642)."

S3 DEPLACEMENTS, NOUVEAUTE ET MEMOIRE

QUAND JEAN GIONO MIGRE VERS L'AMERIQUE

A. Chelly-Zemni

Faculté des Lettres et des Sciences Humaines

Abstract: Quand Giono migre vers l'Amérique Le concept général de « décentrement » est, dans la littérature comparée, de portée très large et très féconde. Il peut cependant être spécifié à partir des expériences de certains écrivains qui, au nom du pluralisme littéraire, ont fait éclater l'espace clos de leur littérature nationale et sont entrés dans une autre sphère linguistique et culturelle. Dans ce cadre d'idées, nous prendrons Giono comme exemple. Cet écrivain français, bon connaisseur de la langue anglaise, très ouvert aux littératures étrangères et à la littérature nord américaine en l'occurrence, a prêté une oreille personnelle à des voix lointaines qui ont suscité chez lui un intérêt admiratif. Traducteur de talent, il a pu sortir de lui-même afin de dialoguer avec d'autres écrivains et avec une autre écriture dont la découverte et conséquemment l'influence ont éclairé le champ de son imaginaire. Parallèles et parentés, mais aussi divergences peuvent être appréhendés à différents niveaux entre lui, Faulkner Hemingway, Steinbeck, Melville, Dos Passos et autres romanciers américains. À une époque où la littérature américaine gagnait du terrain en France, il a renoncé à tout un monde fermé qu'il a bâti depuis dix ans (entre 1930 et 1940) et qui l'avait figé dans le moule des écrivains chantres de la nature et de la vie rustique, pour se mettre à l'école des Nord-Américains dont les livres étaient éloignés des chemins battus de la culture reconnue en France. Par là même, il est sorti des labyrinthes fermés de la littérature française. Comme Hemingway, Steinbeck et Dos Passos, il a concentré toute son attention sur les dangers du modernisme, les insuffisances de la science et les tares de la civilisation industrielle. Le « sud imaginaire » de sa Provence natale s'apparente au « deep south » et au Jefferson imaginaire de Faulkner qui s'érige en un ancêtre dans ses « Chroniques romanesques ». Son enthousiasme pour Herman Melville se concrétise par la traduction de Moby Dick (1851), un travail qui s'achève par la rédaction de Pour saluer Melville (1941), version originale de ce chef d'œuvre américain. À Of Mice and men (1937) de Steinbeck, source essentielle de son roman Les Grands chemins (1951), il a donné à l'errance et au compagnonnage masculin un autre sens encore plus fécond. Le thème de la grande route se donne aussi à lire dans The Grapes of Wrath (1939), également de Steinbeck et dans des poèmes de Walt Whitman. Inutiles de multiplier les exemples, mais dans notre travail, nous nous attarderons sur les liens de convergences et de divergences entre Giono et certains écrivains américains. Nous étudierons ce qui a conduit cet homme à résister à l'ethnocentrisme culturel et à l'imposition d'un mode de pensée unique dont il était contemporain pour se reconstruire dans une autre altérité. Il pourrait s'agir dans sa condamnation du nationalisme littéraire d'exorciser sa haine des intellectuels français qui, dans la tourmente sociale et politique provoquée par la Deuxième Guerre, l'avaient à tort, relégué au banc des écrivains collaborateurs. Quoi qu'il en soit, ce « voyageur immobile », en dépassant sa patrie et ses frontières, s'est donné le plaisir de l'exotisme dans le silence de son bureau. Son écriture possède sa propre autonomie et ses propres lois de fonctionnement. Parce qu'elle est flexible, souple et d'un imaginaire intensif, elle refuse la fermeture et la constance et joue librement avec les emprunts tantôt explicites, tantôt implicites. Le fait qu'elle fusionne avec d'autres textes et d'autres auteurs témoigne d'un état d'esprit créateur, fait de curiosité et prêt au décentrement.

Biography: Alya Chelly-Zemni est maître-assistant à la Faculté des Lettres et des Sciences Humaines de Sousse (Université de Sousse, Tunisie) où elle enseigne la civilisation française et la littérature comparée. Elle est l'auteur d'une thèse de doctorat intitulée « La Question du salut dans l'œuvre de Jean Giono » et de nombreux articles notamment sur cet écrivain.

HISTOIRE DE LA LANGUE BERBERE DANS VASTE EST LA PRISON D'ASSIA DJEBAR

S. Yacoub Khlif

université de Monastir

Abstract: Exclue depuis des siècles des sphères du pouvoir de l'Etat central avec lequel les Berbères étaient en conflit quasi permanent, la langue berbère a commencé à obtenir droit de cité: enseignement universitaire, enseignement facultatif dans les collèges et lycées en Algérie, expérience d'intégration dans l'enseignement primaire au Maroc etc. Des écrivains militants tels que Kateb Yacine ont revendiqué avec force les origines amazighes de l'Afrique du nord et se sont insurgés contre le fait que seul le français ou l'arabe aient le droit d'exister, aient le monopole d'exprimer la pensée et les aspirations de l'homme moderne. Assia Djébar, romancière, historienne et cinéaste algérienne est très sensible à la question des langues, et de la quête identitaire. Dans son roman intitulé Vaste est la prison, elle cherche à reconstruire l'histoire en s'interrogeant sur la langue berbère, cette "écriture lybique", redécouverte "au XIXe siècle à partir d'une stèle bilingue, la stèle de Dougga", une des langues de l'Algérie et par conséquent une des langues de son histoire de femme algérienne. La deuxième partie du roman ayant pour titre "L'effacement sur la pierre", tourne autour de l'alphabet berbère dont les lettres, 'traînant à terre, tels les quadriges et les déesses ailées du monument démantelé de Dougga semblent elles-mêmes avoir pris la fuite". l'alphabet lybique est un des plus anciens alphabets de la terre, mais la langue qu'il transcrit est toujours vivante: "si cette écriture étrange s'animait, se chargeait d'une voix au présent, s'épelaît à voix haute, se chantait?" Voeu né du vif besoin de contredire la conviction que l'Algérie est un pays monolingue arabe. C'est ce double décentrement que nous tenterons d'analyser à travers le texte d'Assia Djebar, décentrement par rapport à l'arabe classique, langue du Coran et porteuse d'une tradition culturelle importante et ancienne, et décentrement par rapport à la langue française, langue du colonisateur, considérée par Kateb Yacine comme "le butin de guerre" des Algériens.

Biography: Ancienne élève de l'ENS de Tunis, ès docteur en littérature et civilisation françaises, auteure d'une thèse sur Pierre Michon, Souad yacoub Khlif est actuellement Maître Assistante à L'université de Monastir. Elle est spécialiste de la littérature française contemporaine et a publié un certain nombre d'articles dans des revues françaises et tunisiennes (Itinéraires, Champ des signes...)

ARTHUR RIMBAUD DANS LA LITTÉRATURE ARABE

A. Hetzel

Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes

Abstract: On a beaucoup écrit sur Arthur Rimbaud. Si son oeuvre, pourtant brève, eut une influence inouïe sur les poètes du monde entier, lui-même est devenu un sujet poétique comme si, ayant achevé d'écrire, les autres poètes poursuivaient son oeuvre, nourris par son écriture mais aussi par son destin particulier et, surtout, son silence. Je propose d'étudier la réception de l'oeuvre de Rimbaud chez des écrivains arabes (Chams Nadir, Leïla Sebbar, Abdellatif Laâbi, Salah Stétié, Mou'In Bsisso) et de montrer comment, "au-delà des nations", des "continents littéraires", les diversités culturelles entre poésie française et poésie arabe se lient harmonieusement autour du "mythe Rimbaud". Il s'agira aussi de s'interroger sur ce qui, chez Rimbaud, tend vers ces autres références, sur ce qui, dans son écriture, est déjà "décentré" et qui aboutira au départ vers l'Arabie. En étudiant la postérité de Rimbaud dans la littérature arabe, nous souhaitons proposer une nouvelle approche critique de son oeuvre.

Biography: Aurélie Hetzel Post-doctorante en sciences religieuses, EPHE, HISTARA Docteur en littérature comparée, Université Paris IV-Sorbonne, CRLC (2009). Auteur de La reine de Saba. Des Traditions au mythe littéraire, Classiques Garnier, coll. "Perspectives comparatistes", 2012.

D'UNE LANGUE A L'AUTRE : SUR QUELQUES AUTEURS LAUREATS DU PRIX CHAMISSO

T. Chaix-Bryan

Paris 3, EA 172

Abstract: Dans le cadre de cet atelier autour de la notion de décentrement, on se propose de s'intéresser à des auteurs qui vivent cette expérience d'un autre centre au plus profond d'eux mêmes, c'est-à-dire à partir de leur langue maternelle qu'ils "abandonnent" pour écrire dans une autre langue, pour s'en "approprier" une nouvelle et ainsi aller vers un autre centre. Le Prix Chamisso récompense chaque année des auteurs qui ont fait le choix, très souvent en continuant à écrire aussi dans leur langue maternelle, d'écrire en allemand. Les flux migratoires transforment le paysage littéraire allemand et germanophone et lancent ainsi, avec ces écrivains singuliers, un défi à la littérature nationale. La recherche s'intéresse depuis peu à ces auteurs (cf. la publication dans Allemagne d'aujourd'hui des contributions sur la littérature migrante en Allemagne, juin 2010) qui enrichissent la langue allemande, mais il nous semble intéressant de procéder à un travail de synthèse à partir de quelques auteurs pour étudier le phénomène de décentrement qui est à l'oeuvre. Décentrement que l'on définit ainsi comme un franchissement voire une transgression des frontières nationales qui conduit à une approche latérale, oblique, mettant à mal certaines certitudes.

Biography: Agrégé d'allemand, titulaire d'un master d'études interculturelles franco-allemandes, Docteur en littérature générale et comparée (Paris III - Sorbonne Nouvelle sur "l'expérience fragmentaire chez Kafka, Celan et Blanchot), Thibaut Chaix-Bryan s'intéresse aux transferts culturels franco-allemands et à l'écriture fragmentaire chez Kafka, Celan et Blanchot. Auteur de plusieurs recensions d'ouvrages, traducteur de poèmes de Theodor Kramer dans différentes revues, a participé à différents colloques notamment sur la Shoah et la littérature contemporaine européenne.

FOOD, EXILE AND DECENTERMENT: MEMORIES OF HOME AND SHIFTING TASTES IN THE WORKS OF AMA ATA AIDOO AND DINAW MENGESTU

S. camet¹, J.B. Highfield²

¹Faculté des Lettres, ²Rhode Island School of Design

Abstract: As Ralph Ellison poignantly points out in Invisible Man, food and foodways are among the most potent of cultural expressions: “I took a bite, finding it as sweet and hot as any I’d ever had, and was overcome with such a surge of homesickness that I turned away to keep my control. I walked along, munching the yam, just as suddenly overcome by an intense feeling of freedom.” The food people eat and the way it is prepared speaks volumes about their relationship to their culture, their place in society, and their interaction with the environment. As with all artistic expressions of culture, cooking can be eminently practical or wondrously elaborate. On a most basic level, though, food has the ability to remember home, to reconstruct cultural memory from the integration of ingredients, seasonings, and preparations. As John Egerton writes in the introduction to Cornbread Nation 1: “At the very least, the foods of our formative years linger in the mind more tenaciously — and favourably — than almost anything else.” The loss of those foods, or their prolonged absence, then brings about a cultural displacement that emphasises the distance from home. Foodways act a crucial tool of cultural self-definition, and the memories of those foodways serve as a connection between the lost identity of childhood and the inhabited adult identity. Food from home eaten while in exile has the ability to remake memories on the tongue. This paper examines the concept of decentering through an examination of food culture in exile, in novels by Ama Ata Aidoo and Dinaw Mengestu. The retention or rejection of foodways chart the psychological effect of the distance from Africa in these narratives.

Biography: Jonathan Highfield (Ph.D., University of Iowa, 1995) is professor of English at Rhode Island School of Design. His work on postcolonial ecocriticism has appeared as chapters in Environment at the Margins: Literary and Environmental Studies in Africa (2011), Postcolonial Green: Environmental Politics and World Narratives (2010), Trauma, Resistance, Reconstruction in Post-1994 South African Writing (2010), and Fact and Fiction (2008). He has published essays in Antipodes, Atlantic Studies, Canadian Journal of Irish Studies, The International Journal of Environmental, Cultural, Economic and Social Sustainability, The Jonestown Report, Kunapipi, Passages, and Rupkatha. He is also the co-editor (with Kwadwo Opoku-Agyemang and Dora Edu Buandoh) of The State of the Art(s): African Studies and American Studies in Comparative Perspective (2006).

S2: RELIGION AND THE NOVEL

MANZONI'S NARRATIVE OF REDEMPTION

D. Figueira

Abstract: Dorothy M. Figueira will examine the role of organized religion in Manzoni's I promessi sposi and the manner in which it clashes with ethical and broadly political concerns. She will also look at how Manzoni provides a narrative of redemption and a theology of providence. In particular, she examines how this thematic grew out of his Jansenist background and his involvement with the philosophy of Rosmini.

Biography: Dorothy Figueira
Honorary President, International Comparative Literature Association
Editor, Recherche littéraire/Literary Research
Professor, Comparative Literature
University of Georgia
121 Joseph Brown Hall
Athens, Georgia 30602-6204

VENGEANCE AND MERCY IN ANNA KARENINA

J.B. Foster
George Mason University

Abstract: Tolstoy's novel begins with a Biblical epigraph, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay," which in fact has been edited to suppress the speaker's name as identified in the Bible ("sayeth the Lord"). Deprived of this ascription to the Lord, the words allow for ambiguity in Tolstoy's characters, since the power to repay that should belong only to the Lord, thus enjoining merciful conduct on humans, might now be claimed by any first-person subject. Though in the Russian original the phrase is cited in Old Church Slavonic, which continues to show its origins in Scripture, even this stylistic coloring could be understood to justify pitiless self-righteousness rather than pious humility, as the concluding judgment on Anna Karenina by Vronsky's mother suggests. Within the time permitted, this paper will consider the main variations on the dialectic of vengeance and mercy that surface throughout Tolstoy's long novel. The focus will fall mainly on Anna and her husband Karenin, but the discussion will also refer to telling episodes involving Dolly Oblonsky (whom Gary Saul Morson has claimed to be the novel's real protagonist) and Konstantin Levin, the main character in the plot line that develops as an alternative to Anna's story. Among the major points to be explored in the treatment of specific scenes are the spontaneity of vengeful impulses; the struggle to practice merciful conduct; the role of scripture, consciously brought to mind as a motive, versus ingrained patterns of feeling that may or may not derive from that authority; and the conflict of letter and spirit in invoking the Bible.

Biography: John Burt Foster has a doctorate in comparative literature from Yale and is presently a University Professor at George Mason University. He has written several books and numerous articles on comparative topics, most notably on Nietzsche and modern fiction and on Nabokov's career up to Lolita as a lens on international modernism. This year he holds a research fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities to finish a book on "Transnational Tolstoy: Between the West and the World." After editing the annual journal of the International Comparative Literature Association for four years, he is now the ICLA's English-language secretary.

ETHICS, GOODNESS, GOD: READING DOSTOEVSKY AND VASILY GROSSMAN AFTER LEVINAS

S. Shankman
University of Oregon

Abstract: In the aftermath of the Shoah, Emmanuel Levinas declared that theodicy was no longer possible. Rejecting the traditional ontological understanding of God as a supreme "being" -- and acknowledging, with Nietzsche, "the death of a certain god inhabiting the world behind the scenes," as Levinas puts it at the end of "Otherwise than Being" -- Levinas sought to rethink God solely through the ethical relation. Two novelists who had a profound impact on Levinas's thought were Dostoevsky (particularly "The Brothers Karamazov") and Vasily Grossman ("Life and Fate"). My paper reads these two writers, and these two novels, in the context of Levinas's radical quest to think God solely through ethics, culminating in his last great work, "Otherwise than Being, or Beyond Essence."

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Steven Shankman UNESCO Chair in Transcultural Studies, Interreligious Dialogue, and Peace Distinguished Professor of English and Classics Participating Faculty Member, Comparative Literature Director, Center for Intercultural Dialogue

ATTITUDINAL AVATARS OF RELIGIOUS CONSCIOUSNESS IN MODERN EUROPEAN FICTION

G.E.P. Gillespie
Stanford University

Abstract: After setting the stage with tersely basic reminders of the Renaissance obsession with cultural history and the habit of juxtaposing cultural eras and belief systems which later generations continued (archaic/ancient/medieval/renaissance/enlightenment/romantic/modern and variants), I will address a variety of attitudes about atavism reflected in literary works or acts. I will start from extremes of the Revolutionary age and nineteenth century -- e.g., "hyperbolic substitution"; "respectful displacement"; "extreme egophany"; "Romantic reaffirmation"; "reverential awareness"; "religious atheism"; "Symbolist respiritualization"; "sacramental reenactments". The paper will close with an appraisal of the key accomplishments of modernist fiction in mobilizing the powerful Western anthropological drive in order to elaborate an archaeology of the soul. At least a dozen artists will be cited to illustrate how the perception of persistent religious consciousness became built into the "grand narrative" of modernity.

Biography: Professor Gerald E. P. Gillespie
Div. of Literatures, Cultures, Languages Stanford University

S5: COMPARATISME ET INTERMÉDIALITÉ

TARSILA DO AMARAL'S "PAU BRASIL" PAINTING: BETWEEN THE EXOTIC VISION OF BLAISE CENDRARS AND THE NATIONALIST POETICS OF OSWALD DE ANDRADE

E.L.A.D.O. Batista

Universidade de São Paulo (USP)

Abstract: Modernist Brazilian painter Tarsila do Amaral, in her "Pau Brasil" period, tried to reconcile in her work the nationalist approach advocated by his partner and husband, Brazilian poet Oswald de Andrade, with the urge for the exotic and picturesque professed by their friend and collaborator, French-Swiss writer Blaise Cendrars. In her production of the period, Tarsila do Amaral adopted in her paintings the cubist style she learned with Albert Gleizes and Fernand Léger, colored with the hues she found in Brazilian popular culture. Blaise Cendrars, by way of his travels to Brazil during the 1920's and of the impact of his poetic work on Brazilian writers, is seen by literary critics as a great influence on Brazilian early Modernism. Cendrars was regarded as directly responsible for the nationalist turn in Brazilian Modernism, and he was named the guide of Brazilians in search of their own national roots. This paper tries to deconstruct this idea, showing Cendrars not as a guide, but as a third (invited) element in the "Pau Brasil" movement – completed with Tarsila do Amaral and Oswald de Andrade, the three sustained by the powerful shadow of intellectual Paulo Prado. I propose to reverse the traditional idea of a unilateral influence, in which the Brazilians are situated as debtors of the European famous poet, to a relationship of reciprocal influences, suggesting a joint effort, which resulted in three works: the books of poems Feuilles de route, by Blaise Cendrars, launched in 1924, and Poesia Pau Brasil, by Oswald de Andrade, published in 1925, and the exhibition by Tarsila do Amaral held at Galerie Percier in Paris in 1926. In this paper, the collaboration on Pau Brasil movement by Cendrars is seen not as guidance, but as a strategy used by Oswald de Andrade to legitimize and propagandize the movement both in Brazil and Europe.

Biography: Eduardo Luis A. O Batista has a degree in Translation by Universidade Federal de Ouro Preto (UFOP), and he concluded his Masters degree in Comparative Literature, supervised by Prof. Else Pires Vieira in his dissertation "Questions of travel, questions of translation: Brazil in Elizabeth Bishop's literary work" (2003), at Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais (UFMG). Batista's PhD was completed at Universidade Estadual de Campinas (UNICAMP) with the thesis "The poetics of cultural representation: relations between travel and translation in Brazilian literature" (2010). In this research he approached the historical relations between travel literature and translation in Brazilian literary history. In 2009 he occupied the position of Visitant Researcher at University of London, Queen Mary College, working on the international project "Brazil and its translators". Currently he is doing a post-doctoral research at Universidade de São Paulo (USP) on the influence of European traveler-artists over Brazilian Art History of XIX century. He was approved to spend one year (2012-2013) at University of Amsterdam, Department of History, Archaeology, and Area Studies as Visiting Fellowship, sponsored by FAPESP. Some of his published articles are: 1) BATISTA, Eduardo L. A. Oliveira. Poética da representação cultural: relações teóricas entre a literatura de viagem e a tradução literária. (The poetics of cultural representation: theoretical relations between travel literature and literary translation). In: COUTINHO, Eduardo F. (Org.). Discontinuities and Displacements: Studies in Comparative Literature. 1 ed. Rio de Janeiro: Aeroplano, 2009, v. , p. 357-363. 2) _____. "Translations don't pay": a recepção da literatura brasileira no Reino Unido no século XIX. (The reception of Brazilian literature in Great Britain in the XIXth century). CROP, v. 15, p. 4, 2010. 3) _____. VIEIRA, Else Ribeiro. P. Richard Burton e Elizabeth Bishop: pioneiros na tradução da literatura brasileira em língua inglesa. (Richard Burton e Elizabeth Bishop: Pioneers in translating Brazilian literature into English language). Ipotesi (UFJF), v. 13, p. 13-25, 2009.

HYBRIDATION ET NOUVEAU CONCEPT DU POÉTIQUE DANS LA CONTEMPORANEITE

M.J. Lemos

Universidade do Estado do Rio de Janeiro

Abstract: Cette communication vise à entamer une réflexion sur la façon dont la notion de poésie - et de littérature - se réarticule dans les œuvres de deux poètes contemporains : celle du Brésilien Carlito Azevedo, l'un des plus représentatifs de sa génération, et celle du très connu poète français Pierre Alferi. Les deux artistes utilisent des stratégies à la croisée de plusieurs langages – littéraire, cinématographique, photographique, théâtral et publicitaire – pour désarticuler le concept de « poésie pure ». Interrogeant le caractère autonome et pour ainsi dire « éloigné de notre monde » de la poésie, ils cherchent à proposer un nouveau concept du poétique, dés-institutionnalisé et dé-cristallisé. C'est ainsi qu'ils introduisent dans leurs textes, par exemple, des images d'objets quotidiens, à la poursuite d'une possible littéralité, comme le fait Alferi avec le cube Maggi dans son livre Kub Or ou Azevedo avec les répliques entendues dans la rue ou extraites de journaux, pour ne citer que deux des procédés que nous exploiterons dans notre présentation.

Biography: Masé Lemos é doutora em Letras pela Universidade Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3 (2004) com tese sobre a obra de Raduan Nassar, Une poétique de l'intertextualité. Fez pós-doutorado na Universidade do Estado do Rio de Janeiro com bolsa da Faperj (2005/2006) sobre as relações entre ceticismo, cinismo e sátira na literatura brasileira. É Professora Visitante do Setor de Teoria Literária do Departamento de Letras da UERJ e pesquisadora do Centre de Recherche Sur les Pays Lusophones - CREPAL - da Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3. Faz parte do Grupo de Pesquisa do CNPq Estudos de Paisagem nas Literaturas de Língua Portuguesa. Pesquisa atualmente a poesia contemporânea brasileira e francesa e desenvolve estudos acerca das relações entre poesia e paisagem. É autora do livro de poesia "Redor"(2007). Faz parte do conselho editorial da Revista "Inimigo Rumor" e da Coleção "Ciranda da Poesia" (Eduerj). Coorganizou "Alguma Prosa: ensaios sobre a literatura brasileira contemporânea" (2007). Publicou em 2011 o livro "Marcos Siscar" pela Coleção Ciranda da Poesia - Eduerj.

STAGING CONTINGENCY INTERMEDIATELY IN SOPHIE CALLE'S DOUBLE GAME

S. Dimakopoulou

National and Kapodistrian University of Athens

Abstract: Sophie Calle's Double Game (1999) is her 'own particular mixture of reality and fiction,' in dialogue with Paul Auster. The product of a collaboration, Double Game is an intermedial body of work employing various mixed-media forms, involving a series of assemblages, installations, photographs, interventions in public spaces. A writer of fiction and an 'artist in the first person'—as the director of the French National Museum of Modern Art noted on the occasion of a retrospective of Calle's work in 2004—engage in a playful game of re-enactment where reality and fiction become interchangeable, with Calle re-enacting 'episodes' from her life that Paul Auster had used in Leviathan to 'create a fictive character named Maria.' Spanning her bedroom, pages of notebooks, hotel rooms in Venice, an instruction manual on 'How to Improve life in New York City,' Double Game is a work that not only complicates the boundary between the public and the private, carrying out the 'poetic principle of the Situationist derive,' as Yves Alain Bois has noted, but also a work premised on contingency and intimacy, revolving the uncertain boundary between design and chance. This paper proposes to examine how intimacy and contingency come to intersect in an intermedial experiment that paradoxically brings into play an affective mapping of private and public space through ironic distancing, narcissism, and bending of cultural narratives and contexts.

Biography: Stamatina Dimakopoulou is a Lecturer in American Literature at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. Publications include articles on John Ashbery, Max Ernst, Joseph Cornell, and American modernist little magazines. She has contributed chapters to Revue modernistes anglo-américaines: lieux d'échange, lieux d'exil; Revue modernistes, revues engagées, 1900-1939; and the forthcoming Oxford Critical and Cultural History of Modernist Magazines. She is co-editing a volume entitled The Letter of the Law: Literature, Justice and the Other (forthcoming with Peter Lang). She is co-editor of the e-journal Synthesis a new interdisciplinary journal of literature and culture (<http://www.enl.uoa.gr/synthesis/>).

CONCLUSION

S2: TRANSLINGUAL LITERATURE

MATERIALITY OF TRANSLINGUAL WRITING AND CRITICISM: TRANSATLANTIC KNOWLEDGE TRANSFER

A.F. Kola

Nicolaus Copernicus University

Abstract: The aim of the paper is to reinterpret the problem of East and Central European émigrés' writing and criticism, and migrants role in the development of humanities in the United States starting in WWII. I would like to focus from comparative perspective on the careers of certain theoreticians (especially Roman Jakobson, René Wellek, and Manfred Kridl) and as a supporting context writers/poets (especially Czeslaw Milosz). Knowledge transfer creates a new quality, whereas the cosmopolitan and multicultural background of presented actors allows them to adopt and adapt in a new venue. I would like to focus on literary theoreticians, but the position of writers in the American milieu was different from the initial, European one. Hence, this kind of marriage of art and academic world was an interesting effect of transatlantic knowledge transfer. Writer's reflexivity and creative uses of languages in such a translingual writings and bi-cultural literature is a kind of meta-commentary for this process, sometimes even more perspicacious than in literary theoreticians perspective. The main objective of the paper is focusing on materiality of migrants writing and criticism. I rely on archival sources and documents from Poland, Czech, Lithuania, the United States. However I work with them not only as a historian but also as a comparative critic (e.g. in the American context an exemplary realization is in Haun Saussy's critical edition of The Chinese Written Character as a Medium for Poetry by Ernest Fenollosa with excisions by Ezra Pound; see also the French school of "critique génétique"). The processual character of literary works in the new context is especially informative in the practice of universalizing language in migrant situations. The materiality (see e.g. Hans Ulrich Gumbrecht) of those documents and other sources, such as radio interviews, and palimpsest structure uncovers a struggle with language of bi- and translingual writing and criticism, which could be overlooked in classical studies of published texts.

Biography: Adam F. Kola, Ph.D., assistant professor, Deputy Director of the Institute of Slavonic Philology, Nicolaus Copernicus University, Torun, Poland. Fellowships in the Czech Republic, Slovenia, Croatia, China (Institute for World Literature inaugural session 2011; organizer Harvard University and Peking University) and the US (Columbia University; archives and libraries: Bakhmeteff Archive of Russian and East European History and Culture, Butler Library, Columbia University; the Houghton Library, Harvard University; and in the Roman Jakobson Archive, MIT). Numerous stipends from the Foundation for Polish Science. Books in Polish: "Europe in Polish, Czech, and Croatian Discourse. Critical Reconfiguration", 2010; "Czech and Russian Slavophilism in Comparison", 2004; 60 papers in Polish, Czech, Russian and English language.

A WRITER'S FORKED TONGUE: CODE-SWITCHING IN BECKETT'S BILINGUAL WORKS

M. Kager

Rutgers University

Abstract: A Writer's Forked Tongue: Code-Switching in Beckett's Bilingual Works This paper will investigate Samuel Beckett's bilingualism by comparing his recently published letters to his fictional writing. Beckett lived most of his adult life in Paris. Although his relation with the French language started out that of a diligent and determined student towards its subject, he eventually reached near-native fluency in the language, while also having a good command of Italian, Spanish and German. He wrote all his works twice, first in English, then in French, or the other way around. Although critics like to speculate about the why and how of Beckett's sudden language «switch» in truth it was by no means an abrupt nor a final move. He started out writing in English and changed to French only gradually, and never definitively. His first writings in French were reviews, followed by his first bilingual work, the volume of poetry «Trois Poèmes» which had the French on the left hand page and the English on the right. Next appeared his first translation into French of one of his own English works, the novel Murphy. It was not until 1947, when he was forty-one years old, that he started writing his first novel in French, Molloy, the first volume of what became his famous trilogy. Yet Beckett never renounced the English language; as soon as the volumes of the trilogy had appeared he started work on their translation into English, and he continued writing plays in English, such as Happy Days and All that Fall, while always translating everything he wrote in English instantly into French, and sometimes into German as well. The two volumes of Beckett's recently published letters (Volume I was published in 2009, Volume II in 2011) give a particular insight into Beckett's fluency in French. Where Beckett's French plays, novels and stories have been endlessly labored over, have gone through numerous versions and have been corrected by native French speaking friends, resulting in perfectly crafted pieces of French literature, the letters, conversely, constitute a much more spontaneous medium «the next best thing to hearing Beckett speak in French. As George Craig, the translator of the French letters, writes, «it is one thing to send a typescript to a publisher [«!], quite another to send an important and deeply felt letter in French to someone one knows and respects.» («French Translator's Preface», Letters 1941-1956, xxx) In these French letters, we find mistakes, idiosyncrasies and expressions that, if not exactly incorrect, are not entirely idiomatic either. Another interesting revelation of the published letters is that where in the English letters Beckett engages in a continuous moving back and forth between English and French, even within the same sentence (code-switching), he does not do this in the French letters at all. The French letters are free from multilingual interference. Recent research on bilingualism from socio- and neuro-linguistic point of view has shown that code-switching, long considered a sub-standard language use, a sign of linguistic incompetence, is in fact «a sensitive indicator of bilingual ability.» (Shana Poplack, 583) This paper will use the insights of socio- and neuro-linguistics to study Beckett's letters, and will compare the results to both the original and the English translation of Beckett's first novel in French, Molloy. I hope that an examination of the letters can illuminate the development of Beckett's fluency in French, leading to a better understanding of his bilingualism in English and French as it relates to his literary and dramatic works.

Biography: Maria Kager is a doctoral candidate in comparative literature at Rutgers University. Her thesis, directed by Professor Myra Jehlen, examines multilingualism in the works of James Joyce, Samuel Beckett and Vladimir Nabokov. She has published articles on Nabokov, Joyce, Franz Kafka and Thomas Mann.

LEE MIROK'S WESTERN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL WRITING, FOCUSING ON LEE MIROK'S GERMAN NOVELS THE YALU RIVER FLOWS, MUDEONYI, THE PAINTER NAKDONG AND EXODUS

S. Chin
chin sangbum

Abstract: The Korea-born writer Lee Mirok, famous in Germany, expressed the traditional Korean spirit in his German-language autobiographical novels The Yalu River flows, Mudeonyi, The Painter Nakdong, and Exodus. I intend to investigate how traditional thought such as Confucianism, Buddhism and Shamanism are represented within the Western autobiographical narrative structure in his above-mentioned works. Lee Mirok participated in independence movement in order to win liberation from Japanese colonial rule for Korea and thus became chased by Japanese Colonial Police so that he had no choice but to flee to Germany as a refugee. He had to suffer all kinds of hardships before he became a writer in Germany. After having studied German language, natural sciences, philosophy and literature during his student days, he worked not only as professor of Asian Studies at Munich University but was also active in the Intellectuals' protest against the Nazi regime. It will be investigated how Lee Mirok, based on the experiences of his childhood, harmonized Korean traditional thought such as Confucianism, Buddhism and Shamanism with a simple style within the frame of Germany's autobiographical novel type. The study will intensively research how Lee Mirok drew the narrative form of Bildungsroman from Keller's Der Gruene Heinrich and the autobiographical elements associated with the Korean atmosphere and recollections of his childhood in his home country from Kang Youngheul's The Grass Roof.

Biography: In March 1981 I started working as professor at the German Institute at Cheonbuk National University, Cheon-Ju, South Korea. In August 1983 I went on a month-long study trip through Germany. From March 1987 to Sep. 1987 I stayed as visiting professor at the University of Goettingen to research German literature. From October 1987 to September 1988 I had a scholarship from the Austrian Federal Ministry for Science and Research (BMWF), so I had the opportunity to do research not only on German and Austrian Literature, but also on the methodology of comparative literature at the University of Vienna. In December 1988 I published my Ph.D. thesis 'A Comparative Study on the Chinese reception of Goethe and Hesse' under Prof. Dr. Park Chanki at Korea University, Seoul, Korea. From March 1989 to date I have been working as Professor of Modern German Literature and Comparative Literature at Cheon-Buk National University. From March 1998 to Feb. 1999 I worked as research professor at the University of Vienna and - with the financial support of the Korea Research Foundation - accomplished a project titled 'Eastern Influences on Trends of Modern German Literature around the Turn of the Century'. At present I am active as former Chairman of The Association for the Comparative Study of World Literature in Korea and as board member of the Society for German Language and Literature and the Korean Hesse Academic Society'. In 2011 I was recognized by Chonbuk National University as Best Scholar, having published many valuable academic papers and books and having greatly contributed to the globalization of Korean culture. I was awarded two honorable prizes: the 2011 Korea Society Contribution Grand Prix and the 2011 Korea Innovative Leader Grand Prix. I have co-authored the books 'Eins und doppelt' (Peter Lang 2000), 'Transgressing Cultural and Ethnic Borders, Boundaries, Limits and Traditions' (Unisa 2004), 'Akten des XI. Internationalen Germanistenkongresses Paris 2005' (Peter Lang 2007), 'Beyond Binarisms, Crossing and Contaminations', Studies of the Germanistenkongress Warschau 2010 (Peter Lang 2012), and others. I have published among others 'The meeting of East Asia and German Literature', (Hanguk Academic Information Publishing Co. 2011),

Friday, July 19, 2013

'The Search of the East in Western Art', (Jibmundang 2011), 'A Comparative Study on Korean Literature & German Literature', (Parkijong 2012). My research focuses on the interrelationships of Far East and German Literature, East Asian influenced on trends in German literature at the turn of the century, and on European art trends.

S5 : FORCE ET VERTU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FACE A L'HISTOIRE IMMEDIATE

AU-DELA DE L'EVENEMENT ET DE LA POSTCOLONIE ... RECITS DU RETOUR, RETOUR A LA FABLE

Y. Parisot

université Rennes 2

Abstract: Parce qu'elle impliquait, si ce n'est de sortir du paradigme de la « lutte entre "père" et "fils" », du moins de lui associer celui de la « violence du frère à l'égard du frère » (Achille Mbembe, 2000), l'inflation événementielle, telle qu'elle se manifesta dans le non-occident, à partir des années 1990, posa à la fiction postcoloniale la question de sa légitimité, en termes politiques. En témoignèrent les nombreux romans qui, confrontés à l'urgence, empruntèrent des dispositifs caractéristiques des genres factuels (cf. le corpus constitué dans le cadre de l'opération « Fest' Africa. Écrire par devoir de mémoire ») ou se revendiquèrent de la politique-fiction (Aux Etats-Unis d'Afrique d'A. Waberi, par exemple). Plus récemment, comme si les potentialités de telles stratégies énonciatives avaient été épuisées, sont apparues d'autres formes de fiction, cherchant la voie d'un au-delà de l'événement. Chez Nuruddin Farah (Links, 2004 ; Knots, 2007) ou chez Kossi Efoui (Solo d'un revenant, 2008), le récit du retour dans un pays dévasté, et le regard réflexif qui l'accompagne, nimbe les faits d'une spectralité visant à éviter l'écueil du référentiel univoque auquel les littératures postcoloniales ont longtemps été assignées. Ce faisant, il rend effective la mise en mémoire de l'urgence et visibles, les traces du présent.

Dans un second temps, effet d'une « posture littéraire » (Jérôme Meizoz, 2007) ou d'une vision élargie de l'inflation événementielle susmentionnée, le réinvestissement de formes canoniques de la mémoire littéraire postcoloniale – le récit de voyage, l'allégorie héritée du discours de décolonisation ou des temps de dictature – tend paradoxalement vers un au-delà de la Postcolonie. De fait, le choix de la trilogie chez Nuruddin Farah – à Links et Knots s'ajoute Crossbones, en 2011 – ou la fictionnalisation de l'archive chez Kossi Efoui (L'Ombre des choses à venir, 2011) rejoignent l'entreprise d'écrivains caribéens, tels Neil Bissoondath (The Unyielding Clamour of the night, 2005) ou Dany Laferrière (L'Enigme du retour, 2009) : ces œuvres sont représentatives d'une « écriture sous époque » (Natalie Depraz, 1999) qui ne semble inscrire l'immédiat dans une épaisseur temporelle que pour mieux affirmer les pouvoirs de la fable tout court.

Biography: Agrégée de Lettres modernes, Yolaine Parisot est maîtresse de conférences en littératures francophones et comparées à l'Université Rennes 2 et membre du CELLAM – EA 3206. Auteure d'une thèse consacrée au roman haïtien contemporain (Paris 4, 2004), elle poursuit des recherches sur les littératures postcoloniales francophones et anglophones, en particulier caribéennes et indianocéaniques, dans la perspective d'une approche phénoménologique des discours et des représentations. Elle s'intéresse également aux rapports entre littérature et histoire immédiate et à l'épistémologie des littératures postcoloniales (théories postcoloniales, violences épistémiques, genres minorés, culture populaire). Outre plusieurs articles, elle a co-dirigé l'ouvrage collectif Caraïbe, océan Indien : questions d'histoire, paru chez L'Harmattan en 2009. Elle siège au conseil d'administration du Conseil International d'Etudes Francophones.

MÉLANCOLIE POSTCOLONIALE ET FIGURATIONS PROSPECTIVES DE L'HISTOIRE

M. García

LITPOST. UNIVERSITAT AUTONOMA DE BARCELONA

Abstract: Si les sociétés postcoloniales et les littératures de ces sociétés ont en commun une trajectoire historique marquée par l'expérience de la colonisation et par la relation de violence qu'elle instaure, le danger consistant à faire de la colonisation le marqueur déterminant de l'histoire de ces sociétés a été souligné par la critique (Appiah, 1994). Ce reproche ne semble pas avoir modifié substantiellement la vocation avant tout historiographique et mémorielle du roman postcolonial, avec indépendance de l'origine géographique de ses auteurs, de telle sorte que, sans déterminer entièrement leurs productions, la mémoire du passé colonial « demeure la clé de leur juste interprétation » (Sultan, 2011 : 28). Jean Bessière a signalé que le risque inhérent à cette démarche est la réduction des figurations littéraires du politique à une vision pathologique du social dans les pays postcoloniaux (Bessière, 2009, 7). Les fictions postcoloniales africaines que nous examinons ici s'écartent de cette tendance mémorielle pour se tourner vers le futur. Elles font partie d'une nébuleuse de pratiques génériques aux contours diffus qui connaît un vif succès à l'échelle mondiale (roman d'espionnage, thriller, roman d'anticipation, politique-fiction, roman géopolitique). Au-delà de la réflexion sur des aspects contemporains — inquiétude de l'individu face à la perte de pouvoir des structures étatiques et à la montée du terrorisme international, destruction de l'homme et de la planète — des romans comme Dakar transgress (Samba Lo Nyombo, 1995), Aux États-Unis d'Afrique (Abdourahman Waberi, 2006), Passage des larmes (Waberi, 2009), Wall Street re-berlingue l'Afrique (Félix Ulombe Kaputu, 2010) ou Cidade dos Espelhos (João Paulo Borges Coelho, 2011) proposent des re-figurations de l'Histoire qui vont à l'encontre d'une lecture politique progressiste des pays anciennement colonisés. Il ne s'agit plus, ou plus seulement, de dénoncer le poids d'un passé qui surplombe le présent, de dire le désenchantement après la période euphorique des indépendances ou de jeter le discrédit sur l'utopie politique. Ces textes, en redisant le passé non plus dans le présent mais dans le futur, proposent une réaction à la désespérance que la notion de mélancolie postcoloniale formulée par Paul Gilroy (2005) ne permet pas d'expliquer de manière satisfaisante. Comme le note Stéphane Mosès dans L'Ange de l'Histoire : « La fin de la croyance en un sens de l'histoire n'entraîne pas l'abolition de l'idée d'espérance. Au contraire, c'est précisément sur les décombres du paradigme de la Raison historique que l'espérance se constitue en catégorie historique » (1992 : 24). Aussi, l'Histoire comme catastrophe propre de ces récits dystopiques permet-elle paradoxalement de construire des passages fictionnels de l'Histoire à partir d'un « futuro que não deu em nada » (Borges Coelho). Ces passages, qui ne s'inscrivent plus dans la temporalité du progrès, restituent à la mélancolie la portée politique que Benjamin lui avait donnée.

Biography: Mar Garcia, LITPOST, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona

MIA COUTO : FORCE ET VERTU DE L'IMAGINATION

I. Cazalas

Université de Strasbourg. Institut de littérature comparée. UFR Lettres. EA 1337

Abstract: Mia Couto, l'un des plus grands écrivains africains contemporains de langue portugaise, a créé au fil de ses livres un univers résolument fictionnel qui envoûte par sa singularité, son onirisme poétique et son recours au fantastique. Mais alors même que son œuvre est très éloignée du modèle du roman historique et qu'elle refuse les conventions réalistes, elle a comme peu d'autres le pouvoir d'évoquer l'histoire récente du Mozambique, pays dévasté par deux longues guerres (guerre de décolonisation de 1960 à 1975, guerre civile de 1977 à 1994), puis marqué par un processus de réconciliation et de démocratisation. Nous aimerions interroger les modalités de ce savoir historique paradoxal, construit par des romans qui laissent libre cours à la puissance imaginative et exacerbent l'écart entre monde fictionnel et monde réel. En nous appuyant principalement sur Jesusalém (L'Accordeur de silences) tout en faisant aussi référence à d'autres titres, nous analyserons les formes littéraires qui fondent cette connaissance du contemporain : parabole contre-utopique qui remotive la démiurgie biblique pour symboliser l'amnésie nationale ; roman familial qui devient un prisme allégorique et critique pour saisir l'histoire collective. Dans cette « scénographie postcoloniale », la quête du narrateur, enfant à l'écoute des voix qui habitent le silence, figure la responsabilité de l'écrivain : celle d'inventer dans un pays en ruine des histoires et une langue entretenant – comme celle de Guimarães Rosa – néologismes et parler du Mozambique. L'imagination est alors cette puissance vertueuse associée à une forme de survie, parce qu'elle déconstruit les mythes identitaires et transmet de manière décalée la mémoire des violences historiques toutes proches. (Proposition pour le séminaire « Force et vertu de la littérature face à l'histoire immédiate » / Responsables : Yolaine Parisot, Emmanuel Bouju)

Biography: Docteur en littérature comparée, Université de Strasbourg

Thèse sous la direction de Pascal Dethurens: "Contre-épopées généalogiques. Fictions nationales et familiales dans les romans de Thomas Bernhard, Claude Simon, Juan Benet et Antonio Lobo Antunes".

EA 1337 - UFR des Lettres - Institut de Littérature Comparée - Université de Strasbourg - 14 rue Descartes - 67000 Strasbourg

S3: LITTÉRATURE (COMPARÉE) ENTRE MONDIALISATION ET GLOBALISATION

POUR UNE ANTHROPOLOGIE DU MOUVEMENT. SAVOIR LITTÉRAIRE ET FIGURES DE RELATION, PASSAGE ET FLUX

V. Borsò

Abstract: is missing

Biography: is missing

DE LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE COMME POLEMOLOGIE

A. Marie

Lycée Clos-Maire

Abstract: DE LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE COMME POLEMOLOGIE

Avant de chercher à penser la place, le sens de la littérature comparée dans un monde global (dans le « Tout-monde », pour reprendre l'heureuse expression de Glissant), il nous paraît nécessaire de nous prémunir contre deux écueils : le premier consisterait à dresser à grands traits un tableau simplificateur de la mondialisation, résumée en quelques définitions convenues, le second à asséner notre propre définition, fatalement partielle et partiale. Ces deux risques sont inhérents à une étude brève. Notre parti pris méthodologique sera donc le suivant : convoquer les points de vue et réflexions de deux écrivains et essayistes qui se sont attachés à prendre à bras le corps la question du global, en tant qu'il bouleverse, questionne, infléchit leur pratique littéraire. Il s'agira donc pour nous, à travers ces deux points de vue et dans une perspective comparatiste, de comprendre en quoi la mondialisation impose de repenser les rapports entre les domaines culturels et linguistiques.

Richard Millet et Patrick Chamoiseau sont deux auteurs français. En effet il ne s'agit pas seulement ici de proposer une comparaison entre les deux auteurs, mais de dégager un modèle théorique utile pour toute démarche comparatiste. Strictement contemporains (nés tous deux en 1953), ils entrent dans la mondialisation et la pensent de manières radicalement différentes, voire diamétralement opposées. Si Millet revendique sa francité, Chamoiseau explique qu'il se sent plus proche « de n'importe quel hispanophone ou anglophone de la Caraïbe que d'un écrivain français », avant d'ajouter : « j'écris en français mais je n'ai pas le sentiment que ma littérature soit de la littérature française... ». Chamoiseau, au sein même de son œuvre, semble donc s'attacher à gommer les différences entre les domaines linguistiques. Nous prendrons cependant bien soin de ne pas passer outre les subtilités, les paradoxes, chez deux écrivains qui bien qu'essayistes ne sont ni philosophes, ni militants ; nous nous tiendrons à distance de leurs incursions récentes, plus ou moins heureuses dans la vie publique. Il n'en reste pas moins qu'entre ces deux bornes que constituent leurs œuvres, aux antipodes l'une de l'autre, nous pensons tenir l'écart maximal (et donc un instrument de mesure) où peut se déployer le spectre de toutes les « mondialisations » ie de toutes les constructions littéraires de la mondialisation. Nous verrons que Millet, comme Chamoiseau ont, contre toute attente, recours aux mêmes outils : les notions d' « horizontalité » et de « verticalité » : horizontalité de l'espace global déterritorialisé, post-national et verticalité des territoires ou des espaces reterritorialisés. A mi-chemin entre concepts et métaphores, ces deux outils permettent de s'orienter dans l'espace global, de le faire entrer dans le champ de la représentation et obtenir ainsi un diagramme où le Tout-Monde devient pensable, si complexe soit-il. La littérature comparée tient ici le compas qui lui permet de mesurer son champ d'investigation : entre les identités culturelles et linguistiques bien délimitées d'une part, le chaos de l'uniforme ou de l'indifférencié d'autre part. Entre le comparable et l'incomparable.

Ces réflexions nous intéressent dans la mesure où, pour Millet et Chamoiseau, comme pour tout écrivain qui interroge son rapport au Tout-Monde, elles concernent d'abord la langue et la littérature, les mutations et devenir qu'elles ne manqueront pas de connaître, les voies nouvelles qui s'offrent à elles, les dangers qui les fragilisent et les menacent. La littérature comparée peut-elle encore prendre la mesure de ces changements ?

C'est seulement au terme de ce parcours que nous pourrions dégager le schème transversal qui, sans les réunir, place néanmoins Millet et Chamoiseau sur un même front : l'image de la guerre. Que l'on se risque, comme Chamoiseau à se plonger « dans le vivant du monde », dans le rhizome des langues « mises en relation », ou que l'on exhibe, avec Millet, la nostalgie de l'universalisme français, le « sentiment » aigu de la langue nationale, la guerre est l'incontournable point de rencontre avec le Tout-Monde. Guerre froide ou sanglante, latente ou déclarée, collective ou solitaire, elle permet de penser l'indispensable négativité – fût-elle minimale – qui rend possible l'écriture littéraire dans un monde global, c'est-à-dire dans un monde où plane la menace de l'uniformisation (uniformisation des mondes de vie, des discours, des opinions et donc le triomphe planétaire des valeurs dominantes). La Littérature, rappelons ce principe, étant incompatible avec le consentement ou l'adhésion béate à l'uniforme, à tous les nivellements normatifs.

Reste ainsi à poser que la littérature comparée (et il faut donc contester la proclamation de son décès par Spivak en 2003) ne peut survivre comme discipline qu'à la condition de s'affirmer comme polémologie. Si elle doit renoncer à certaines méthodes ou certains outils devenus obsolètes à l'heure de la globalisation, peut-elle se dissoudre dans le vaste champ des cultural studies, ethnic studies, gender studies au contact desquelles d'aucuns lui prédisent une nouvelle vie ? En crise permanente, la littérature doit rendre possible la compréhension critique de la crise, soit de la « guerre », joyeuse ou mélancolique que les écrivains mènent, rarement contre, mais plus souvent au sein même du Tout-Monde.

Biography:

Arnaud MARIE, né le 13/04/1977. Demeurant au 5 impasse Louis Gaitet, 21160 Marsannay-la-côte.
Arnaud.marie@bbox.fr

Formation :

Au lycée G. Cuvier, Montbéliard :
1995 : Bac littéraire, mention Bien

A l'université de Bourgogne :

1997 : équivalence du Deug lettres modernes en lettres supérieures au lycée Carnot à Dijon.
1998 : Licence de lettres modernes, mention Assez bien
1999 : Capes de lettres modernes.
2000 : Maîtrise de lettres modernes sous la direction de M. Philippe Monneret. « Deleuze : le langage et l'événement », mention Très bien. Mention complémentaire de la licence Français langue étrangère, mention Bien.

A l'université de Paris Ouest La Défense :

2003 : DEA (master) de littérature comparée, sous la direction de M. Camille Dumoulié : « L'art sacré de Pasolini », mention très bien.
2008 : Doctorat de littérature comparée sous la direction de M. Camille Dumoulié : « Théâtre de Federico Garcia Lorca, Jean Genet et Pier Paolo Pasolini : la cérémonie impossible. Marges et frontières de la représentation. »
-Jury : M. Camille Dumoulié, Mme Karen Haddad-Wotling, Mme Élisabeth Rallo-Ditche, Mme Claude Murcia, M. René Schérer. Mention très honorable, félicitations du jury.
2009 : qualification aux fonctions de maître de conférences.

Champs linguistiques :

Italien, Espagnol, Anglais et Allemand.

Parcours professionnel :

1999-2000 : Lycée Hippolyte Fontaine, Dijon, classe de seconde.
2001-2002 : Collège Sévigné, Mayenne, classes de cinquième et quatrième.
2002-2003 : Lycée Clos-Maire, Beaune, classes de seconde.
2003-2004 : Lycée Clos-Maire, Beaune et Lycée S. Liégard, Brochon, classes de seconde, première et BTS.
2004-2005 : Collège G. Brassens, Brazey-en-plaine et collège F. Tisserand, Nuits Saint-Georges, classes de sixième et quatrième.
2005-2006 : Lycée des Marcs d'or, Dijon et collège J. Ferry, Beaune, classes de première, BTS et cinquième.
2006-2007 : Lycée E. Marey, Beaune, classes de seconde BEP, terminale BEP, terminale BAC professionnel.
2007-2008 : Collège G. Brassens, Brazey-en-plaine, collège R. Dorgelès, Longvic, et collège La Champagne, Brochon, classes de quatrième et troisième.
2008-2009 : Lycée Le Castel, Dijon, classes de seconde, première, BTS.
Septembre et octobre 2009 : vacation à l'IUT de Bourgogne, section SRC, 2ème année.
2009-2010 : Collège F. Tisserand, Nuits Saint-Georges, classes de sixième et quatrième.
2010-2011 : Lycée Clos-Maire, Beaune et lycée Montchapet, Dijon, classes de seconde et première.
2011-2012 : Collège Monge, Beaune, classes de sixième et cinquième.

Activités de recherche et publications :

-« Le Balcon, la représentation pervertie » dans la revue en ligne Silène (centre de recherches, Université de Paris Ouest La Défense) : <http://www.revue-silene.com/f/index.php>

-« L'Identité, entre spectralité et sacralité », dans la revue en ligne Trickster (numéro 9) : http://trickster.lettere.unipd.it/doku.php?id=malessere_identita:arnaud_spectralite

-« La Disgrâce, comme constitution d'un sujet spectral » dans la revue en ligne Post-Scriptum (numéro 13) : <http://www.post-scriptum.org/alpha/index.htm>

« Le Suicide sacrificiel ou l'épreuve de la subjectivité dans le théâtre de Garcia Lorca, Genet et Pasolini » dans La fabrique du Sujet, Paris, Editions Desjonquères, 2011.

« Pasolini : La scène vivante » dans L'Autofiguration au théâtre, Florence Fix et Frédérique Toudoire-Surlapierre (éd.), Dijon, EUD , coll. Ecritures, 2011.

MONDIALISATION ET GLOBALISATION COMME NIVELLEMENT ET COMME PERTE?

W. Asholt
Universität Osnabrück

Abstract: Il y a 50 ans, Erich Auerbach publiait l'essai « La philologie der la littérature mondiale », où il prévoit la mondialisation comme accomplissement et destruction de l'idée de la « Weltliteratur » et où il désigne « la standardisation de la culture terrestre » comme « inévitable ». Je vais essayer de voir si la « solution très simple » même « trop simple » qu'il craint à la fin de sa « Mimesis » a fait les progrès prévus ou si la « richesse de la vie » de la littérature, dont il y parle aussi, n'empêche pas l'homogénéisation globale, tant et si bien que la littérature ne renonce pas à son savoir de/sur la vie.

Biography: Wolfgang Asholt

S2 BEYOND GEOPOLITICAL BOUNDARIES: KOREAN/ASIAN CINEMA IN PARALLAX VIEWS

LIFE ON TOUR: EXPUNGING THE MEMORY OF POVERTY IN FILM

S. Nam

Korea National University of Arts

Abstract: This paper discusses the way in which <My Barefoot Friend>(2011) represents poverty and time. Although it is not a typical travelogue, the film can be seen as a document of a temporal journey to the world in which there are still visible proofs of physicality in labor. It should be noted that the bared body in fact produces an intangible element which however is critical in modern times, i.e. speed (the main character Shalim is a rickshaw driver). Focusing on the notion of memory vanished in the process of development, I will trace the 12 years, for which the documentary is filmed, to analyze the contrasting relationship between change and stagnation, dream and reality, the gaze of a visitor and the body of the inhabitant, and finally compassion and contemporaneity. I will argue that the contrapuntal construction of the film, between heat and shower, walkers and vehicle, lightness and heaviness, etc., hints at the fact that the state of poverty should be presented as an isolated spectacle, from the logic of development and from the criterion of (non-)production, in order to preserve the hope of escape and solidarity.

Biography: Nam, Soo-Young is an assistant professor at the department of Cinema Studies, Korea National University of Arts. She received her Ph.D. in Comparative Literature at New York University, with a theoretical study of cinematic image as repetition and documentation. She published Historical Memory in the Age of Image-Processing: Documentary, Repetition for Subversion in 2009, and has written various articles on film theory and cultural studies.

A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF NATURAL DISASTER FILMS: HOW TO EXPRESS THE PRIMARY AND THE SECONDARY FEARS

Y. Kang

Kyung Hee Cyber University

Abstract: The tsunami disaster in Japan, which took place in March 2011, has shown that there are two different aspects of the fear experienced by people in the face of natural disaster: the primary fear about the disaster itself and the secondary fear about their impact and aftermath. In the case of latter, one can also define it as social fear which arises due to the lack of information and the exclusion from the social network. This paper examines three contemporary natural disaster films, namely <Haeundae> (ROK, 2009), <Nihon chinbostu> (JP, 2006) and <2012> (USA, 2009), and analyzes how the primary and the secondary fear are represented in these movies. It focuses on the analysis of the mode of representation at the level of primary fear and the narrative at the level of secondary fear. These films seem to suggest that the natural disaster would be no object of fear, but the occasion for the sublime self-sacrifice. In the disaster movies humanism and love play a important role as the last human dignity. What is interesting is that these three films show each nation's character. Through disaster films from ROK, Japan and USA, people can find out how each nation reacts natural disaster and represents the situation. For example, <Haeundae> and <2012> are all blockbuster films, but have different way of expression because of budget and other productional reasons.

Biography: Kang, Yunju is an assistant professor at the department of Arts and Cultural Management, Kyung Hee Cyber University. She received her Ph. D. in Sociology at Münster University in Germany, with an study of alternative film production. She worked as a programmer of environmental film festival in Korea (Green Film Festival) and has written various articles on environmental films and environmental film festivals.

LOVE AT LAST SIGHT: LIKE SOMEONE IN LOVE AND EUNGYO

S. Kim

Kyung Hee University

Friday, July 19, 2013

Abstract: Auteurism versus genre film, style versus story, exteriority versus interiority: these are but few points of distinct formal divergence that set apart Abbas Kiarostami's <Like Someone in Love> and Jung Ji-woo's <Eungyo>(English title <A Muse>), two 2012 films that depict against the shared backdrop of contemporary East Asia (Japan and Korea respectively) an unlikely romantic relationship between an aged man and a young girl. Eschewing, or effectively dislocating, the familiar thematic trappings trailing such intergenerational romance (alienation, incommunicability, libidinal fixation, etc. to which the audience is accustomed thanks to such milestone Western movies as <Lolita> and <Last Tango in Paris>), both films succeed in projecting onto the screen the possibility of a landscape and time-zone in which desire ventriloquizes the memory of culture as much singular as it is radically other. Yet if, as the truism goes, every success cannot but bespeak a certain sign of failure, that very remarkable depiction of singular romance invites us to reflect on the price that had to be paid for, which in this case turns out to be nothing other than a sense of history and its accumulated weight. And it is in this respect that comparison with the two films' thematic predecessors of Western origin attains critical importance. For while apparently resisting historicized reading/viewing, the two recent films nonetheless do not appear to have wholly renounced their negotiation with the universal. Which leads to the following reformulation of the question: which aspect of history is it that films like <Like Someone in Love> and <A Muse> desist in particular? And what does that say about the condition of possibility of filmmaking in East Asia?

Biography: Kim, Suk is an assistant professor at the School of English, Kyung Hee University in Seoul, Korea. He received his Ph.D. in English and American Literature at New York University with a theoretical focus on English modernist literature and its cultural influence.

LYRICAL TERRITORIALIZATION OF THE WAR: THE CUCKOO (2003) AND WELCOME TO DONGMAKGOL (2005)

H. Lee

Hankuk University of Foreign Studies

Abstract: This paper aims to make a multiple-faceted analysis on the lyrical territorialization of the war in two different films <The Cuckoo>(2003) and <Welcome to Dongmakgol>(2005). <The Cuckoo>, a Russian film by Aleksander Rogozhikin and <Welcome>, a Korean film by Kwanghyun Park present incredibly similar situation set against the war. The themes of both films, however, are not the war itself, I will argue, but lyrical humanism. For the impossibility of communication between enemy forces and natives which makes comic circumstances to incapacitate the urgency and crisis of the war, not to mention the central female characters mentally retarded pour ridicule on the war or on hostility, both films seem to embody lyrical territorialization of the war.

Biography: Lee, Heewon specializes in Russian cinema and culture. She is a professor of Institute of Foreign Literature Studies, at Hankuk University of Foreign Studies, Korea. She has written extensively on Russian cinema and film theory, with special focuses on themes like film aesthetics, kino-politics, indexical iconicity and filmic translation, to name only a few.

S3 DE L'ESPACE CULTUREL A L'ESPACE ESTHETIQUE / FROM CULTURAL SPACES TO AESTHETIC SPACES

DANDIES AND CRIOLLOS IN RIO DE DE LA PLATA XIX'S: FASHION AND LITERATURE

J.B. de Figueiredo
UFRGS

Abstract: During XIX century political ideas at whole world were not presented only in theoretic ways. The clothes were essential to show how identity could appear in its materiality. Besides the clothes itself, writings of fashion - as La Moda, in Buenos Aires 1850's - and literature were totally involved in creation of new identities in Rio de la Plata's space, in both States around: Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay. The dandy was one of these images, that provoked a sort of critiques, besides its participation in political ideas, literature and appearance in some writers and politics at the time, like Argentinians Sarmiento and Alberdi, Uruguayan Rod  s and Brazilian Lobo da Costa.

Biography: Joana Bosak de Figueiredo has a Master degree in History and a Doctorate degree in Comparative Literature and was temporary professor in both institutes at UFRGS. Nowadays is sponsored CNPq with a post-doctoral fellowship at UFRGS, where researches Identity in Fashion, History and Literature in XIX's Rio de la Plata.

WHAT COLORS ARAB SPRING MIGHT BRING READING ARAB SPRING DAYS IN THE LIGHT OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS

S.A. Elsis
University of Maryland

Abstract: The paper aims at examining the Arab uprisings/revolutions/civil wars, in the shadow of political mentality and theory in the Arabian Nights on one hand, and the current global political rhetoric on the other hand. While analyzing a fictional literary work from the early to pre-modern Islamic period through a political prism may seem bizarre to some, a closer historical reading of the Nights could spotlight and explain what so-called "Arab Spring". The tales may not have offered a practical solution to the sometimes harsh political realities of citizens living under various leaders; nevertheless it acted as a healthy outlet to vent. What remains is a compelling case that politics and the Nights are inextricably linked. Shahrazad, like many of the characters she creates, intends to lecture the king on the rights and responsibilities that come with his position, that the king has an obligation to govern with justice, tend to the weak in society, prevent robbery, and promote societal cohesion. While analyzing a fictional literary work from the early Islamic period through a political prism may seem bizarre to some, a closer historical reading of Alf Layla wa Layla indicates that, like most literary works, it is also a product of its times. In this way, 1001 Arabian Nights can be seen as a form of early political expression, a vehicle through which grievances and pent-up emotions could be aired. While the work was edited and reedited, translated and mistranslated, and bears the bruises and scars of a work that was changed and revisited many times, it can nevertheless shed light into the lives and experiences of people during the Islamic Golden Age (or what known in the western history as medieval age) OR maybe, can moreover shed light on the most recent political events taking place in the Arab world now, the so called "Arab Spring".

Biography: Assistant professor of Arabic Literature and Culture 8814 Lanier Dr. Apt 201
School of Languages, Literatures and Cultures, (SLLC) Silver Spring MD 20910
University of Maryland
Mobile: 857-277-8655
sayed@umd.edu

EDUCATION

Cairo University, Cairo, Egypt.

Ph.D with "First Honor Degree" in Modern Arabic Literature, Area of

Specialization: Modern Arabic Poetry, "The Arabic Prose Poem: A Study in the Poetics of Genre." August 2011

M.A. in Modern Arabic Literature, 2000 with honors

Thesis: "Significances of Absence in SA'DI YUSOF Poetry"

Cairo University, Cairo, Egypt. 1989-1993

B.A. in Arabic Language and Literature, June 1993.

AWARDS and HONORS

Abdel-Muhsen Taha Badr award for the best thesis of Arabic literature of the year, 2001 2000
Scholarship of Egyptian Culture Ministry to study Poetics of Arabic Prose Poems, 2003 2000

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

SPRING 2012, University of Maryland:

- The Arabian Nights and the art of story-telling (taught in English)
- Modernity and Chronology of Modern Egypt in Cinema

FALL 2011, University of Maryland:

- Women in Arabic Cinema – Finding Personal and National Identity
- Theocratic and Secular Discourses in the Arab Renaissance/Nahda

2010-2011, University of Maryland:

- Reading in Arabic literature. (taught in Arabic Fall 2010).
- Advanced Modern Standard Arabic.
- The Arabian Nights and the art of story-telling (taught in English)

2009-2010, Harvard University:

- Advanced Modern Standard Arabic. (2 classes).
- Advanced Spoken Modern Standard Arabic.

2008-2009, Harvard University:

- Advanced Modern Standard Arabic, (2 classes).

INTEGRATING PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND LITERATURE : A COMPARATIVE STUDY

A.N. Ghosh

ADITI MAHAVIDYALAYA

Abstract: This paper will explore the connection between literature and Physical education which has existed in India and other countries since time immemorial.

The importance of Physical Education has existed in the ancient literary texts such as legendary Indian Epics: Ramayana and Mahabharata. There are wonderful narratives which describe the traditional art of archery taught by the great gurus to their disciplines who became great warriors and well known heroes like Rama in Ramayan and Arjun, Karan in Mahabharat. Similarly, we find some traditions which have been kept alive on the lines of martial art leading to knighthood in almost all parts of India. Along with the description of martial art and its popularity there exists poetry and drama in the praise of archery ,Mallayudh, Mulkhumb, Kalaripayat, Kushti (Wrestling) etc.

The most significant aspect of Physical Education is found in the literary narratives which contain fascinating description of knighthood. The epic heroes who won the hands of beautiful bride by showing their physical strength behind their physical culture is well articulated in the treatise of literary discourse.

Another interesting aspect of this comparative study is found in a class room situation where recitation of interesting stories, poems along with physical exercises for the students develop a good relationship between literature and physical education.

Thus this paper will probably be first of its kind in the realm of comparative literature and other Arts, focussing on its relationship to Physical Education.

Biography: Dr Anita Ghosh

position: Associate Professor ;Dept. of Physical Education and interest in Comp. Literature

Official Address: Aditi Mahavidyalaya, University of Delhi, Bawana, Delhi- 110039, India

S1 COMPARER LES ESPACES / COMPARING SPACES

THE GEOMETRY OF PARIS IN THE NARRATIVES OF JEAN RHYS

C. Davis

Barry University

Abstract: The Caribbean writer, Jean Rhys (1890-1979), born and educated in Roseau, Dominica, spent her adult life in Paris and London. Through her transnational background and her relationships, Rhys moved in such varied milieu as theatre, music hall, journalism, art, espionage, diplomacy, leftist politics, and even the underworld of currency speculation and escroquerie (swindling). She depicts these experiences in five books of fiction published between the World Wars, beginning with "The Left Bank" (1927), a collection of stories set in Paris and Dominica, and ending with "Good Morning, Midnight" (1939). Although many critics conflate Rhys's personal life and literary oeuvre, portraying her, like the characters in her books, as a promiscuous alcoholic who drifted around Paris, Ford Madox Ford immediately discerned her mastery of technical form. For Rhys, the "shape" of the novel was paramount; and each of the Paris books has a different shape and takes place in a different area of the city, since Rhys maps the geography of Paris in order to underscore the interior life of the protagonist. This comparative analysis of literature and geography argues that the Paris walks of Rhys's protagonists are precisely calibrated to specific streets and to historical and cultural landmarks, that resonate for them in particular ways. Each of the Paris books follows a different map of the city, as the protagonists explore the persistence of memory. Situated in sites of conflict and retrospect, Rhys's characters achieve transformative experiences and transcend time through resonances of urban geography.

Biography:

Cynthia Davis, PhD is Professor of English and the Associate Dean in the School of Adult & Continuing Education at Barry University in Miami, FL. She is the author, with Verner D. Mitchell, of a trilogy on women writers of the Harlem Renaissance: Where the Wild Grape Grows: Selected Writings of Dorothy West (University of Massachusetts Press, 2005); Western Echoes of the Harlem Renaissance: The Life and Writings of Anita Scott Coleman (University of Oklahoma Press, 2008), and Literary Sisters: Dorothy West and Her Circle, A Biography of the Harlem Renaissance (Rutgers University Press, 2012). She has contributed articles on Caribbean and African-American literature to Landscape and Empire: 1770-2000 (ed. G. Hooper, Ashgate, 2005); Anthurium: A Caribbean Studies Journal; and the Journal of the College Language Association. She received a Master's in English from Georgetown University and her PhD from the University of Maryland, College Park.

SPACE AND LANDSCAPE: DEEP ECOLOGY IN RAJA RAO'S THE SERPENT AND THE ROPE AND GAO XINGJIAN'S SOUL MOUNTAIN

K. Barua

Indian Institute Of Technology Guwahati

Abstract: Deep Ecology is concerned with encouraging an egalitarian attitude on the part of humans not only toward all members of the ecosphere, but even toward all identifiable entities or forms in the ecosphere. Gao Xingjian.. Soul Mountain is about his wandering travels from the source of the Yangtze River in Southwest China down to the East Coast in quest of the elusive "Lingshan", the soul mountain. The paradigm shifts of the ecology-controlled ideas of religious Daoism found in Gao Xingjian's Soul Mountain(2000) interrogates the relationships between human cultures and the physical and constructed environment we are concerned here with Chinese aesthetics and Daoism as Deep Ecology which assumes that the world of phenomena manifests the Dao, the Way of nature. The Dao is not a separate reality but rather the patterned harmoniously interactive processes of the natural world, Raja Rao's The Serpent and the Rope is a quasi- autobiographical novel which offer a wonderful synthesis space, landscape and nonhuman life forms. through the mythic geographic and the biocentric world. The central theme is the quest of Ramaswamy's sojourn across Europe and London to ethnic locales of a south Indian village and Benares in India. The epigraph: "Waves are nothing but water/so is the sea" sets the tone on the dialogics of landscape. The attempt here is to present an interpretation of ecology from the ancient Vedic to the Daoist thought systems referred to in the two texts.

Biography: Dr Krishna Barua is Professor (English) in the Dept. of Humanities & Social Sciences in Indian Institute of Technology Guwahati. Her Ph.D on Patrick White (1986) was one of the pioneering works on Commonwealth Literature. She has published extensively on comparative literature both in India and abroad. Her area of study includes Comparative Literature, Cultural Studies and Translation.

EPISTEMOLOGY OF OBSERVATION AND THE CONSTRUCTION OF HUMAN AND PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHIES IN POST-INDEPENDENCE HONDURAS

J.I. Lara
Grand Valley State University

Abstract: Honduras during the 19th and 20th centuries was a space controlled by disparate and conflicting powers. Hondurans, Americans, British and others explored and inhabited different regions of this small Central American country, and created a series of textual representations of the Honduran natural and built environments and populations. During this period we see the production and circulation of works of fiction and non-fiction that utilized behavioral and physical characteristics -- skin color, hair, facial features -- as well as tropes of blood to define the cultural and racial composition of the Honduran people. The purpose of this presentation is to discuss the relationship between the geographical descriptions and demographic assessments that both foreign and national writers incorporated into their narratives and the theories pertaining to natural history and the science of race prevalent in the Americas and Europe. Through a set of examples, I argue that much of the literature created during this period played a role in the elaboration of what became the ideology of a Honduran national race and laid the foundation for the Honduran State's divergent corrective measures aimed at improving the racial and cultural composition of its Amerindian and Black populations. The State adopted a more environmentalist or neo-Lamarckian approach to the "Indian" problem, while it took a more innatist position when debating the possibility of civilizing its Black communities and conforming them to the homogenous national image it sought to construct. According to late 19th and early 20th century scientific theories and discoveries on the etiology of race and human improvement (eugenics), the European, white "race plasma" should not mix with that of these two groups because Blacks and Indians only diluted its "superior" composition. Honduran intellectuals endorsed those scientific theories and employed them to legitimate their rejection of Black populations, and in large part, their ideological representation of the Northeast region as being outside the territorial, cultural and racial bounds of the nation. Overall, this paper uses the particular case of Honduras to elaborate on the complexities of the concepts of biology, geography, epistemology and race, and the unquestionable relationship between literature and the life sciences.

Biography: Jose I. Lara is an Assistant Professor of Colonial and 19th century Latin American Literature and Culture at Grand Valley State University. He received his doctorate in Literature and Cultural Studies from Georgetown University. His research interests include proto-racial and racial classifications and representations in Central America and the Caribbean; philosophical and scientific racial discourses; and the relationship between literature, race and nation-building projects.

CAMUS ET SARAMAGO: CARTOGRAPHIE DE L'HOMME DANS UNE VILLE EN ETAT DE SIEGE

O. Jubilado
Université d'Évora

Abstract: Dans cette communication, nous nous proposons d'esquisser une réflexion comparative axée sur un «comparatisme de la différence», à partir de l'analyse de La Peste d'Albert Camus et d'Ensaio sobre a Cegueira de José Saramago. Notre hypothèse de lecture vise à analyser comment des fléaux différents (la peste et l'aveuglement soudain), qui ravagent la ville d'Oran et la ville «sans nom», contribuent à établir une cartographie de l'Homme dans deux villes différentes mais en état de siège.

Dans un premier volet, il s'agira de comparer et de dresser la cartographie des deux villes décrites, avant et après la découverte du fléau, et de réfléchir aux implications que l'effet épidémie produit sur l'Homme, en tant que membre d'une communauté, dans une ville malade et en état de siège. En fait, malgré leur différence, les deux romans sont axés sur un même procédé romanesque: l'énigme que représente, d'une part, la découverte d'un rat mort, et d'autre part, un homme aveugle, premiers signes incompris d'une maladie épidémique qui ravage deux villes, apparemment, différentes (Oran et la ville «sans nom»).

Dès lors, Camus et Saramago nous narrent l'histoire d'une épidémie qui met en état de siège la ville et les hommes: son apparition, son développement et sa disparition; mais aussi la lutte et les réactions des Oranais et des personnages sans nom contre deux fléaux différents. C'est dans ce scénario de combat contre l'épidémie et la tyrannie, de séparation, de non communication,

Biography: Brève Biographie - Odete Jubilado – Université d'Évora - Portugal

1/2

BREVE BIOGRAPHIE

NOM : Jubilado

PRÉNOM: ODETE

Nationalité: Portugaise

Institution: Université d'Évora - Portugal

FORMATION

ī· Doctorat en Littérature Comparée, Université d'Évora.

ī· Mestrado (équivalent à un DEA en France) en Littérature Comparée, Faculté de Lettres de l'Université de Lisbonne.

ī· Licenciatura (équivalent à une Maîtrise en France) en Littératures

Modernes variante Portugais/Français, Faculté de Lettres de l'Université de Lisbonne.

EXPERIENCE PROFESSIONNELLE:

ī· Professeur à l'Université d'Évora ayant enseigné la Littérature Comparée ; la Langue Française; la Culture Française et la Littérature Française.

DOMAINES DE RECHERCHE:

ī· Littérature Comparée

ī· Littérature Portugaise Contemporaine

ī· Littérature Française Contemporaine

ī· Littérature et Arts

LIVRES PUBLIES:

ī· Jubilado, Maria Odete Santos: 2000, Saramago e Sollers: Uma (Re)escrita Irónica? [Saramago et Sollers: Une (Ré)écriture Ironique?], Lisboa, Vega.

ī· Jubilado, Maria Odete Santos: 2010, Olhares Cruzados: a Problemática da Leitura em José Saramago e Philippe Sollers, [Regards Croisés: la Problématique de la Lecture chez José Saramago et Philippe Sollers], Lisboa, Nova Vega.

Brève Biographie - Odete Jubilado – Université d'Évora - Portugal

2/2

ARTICLES ET COMMUNICATIONS:

ī· J'ai publié plusieurs articles dans des revues nationales et internationales comme Ariane; Vértice; Espaço/Espaço; Pensardiverso etc...

ī· J'ai participé à plusieurs colloques et congrès nationaux et internationaux : Portugal; France; Espagne; Italie etc...

Autres Activités:

ī· Adjointe du Directeur du Département de Linguistique et Littératures

ī· Membre du Conseil du Département de Linguistique et Littératures

ī· Membre de l'Association Portugaise de Littérature Comparée

ī· Membre de l'Association Internationale de Littérature Comparée

ī· Membre du CEL – Centre d'Études en Lettres

LES ETUDES THEMATIQUES ET LA COMPARAISON / COMPARING THEMES, MOTIFS, IMAGES

"BLONDES : PLUS CHAUDES QUE LES BRUNES"; "BRUNES : PLUS CHAUDES QUE LES BLONDES"

K. Rondou
Ixelles

Abstract: Projection des fantasmes de Gautier et Balzac sur la chevelure de leurs héroïnes magdaléennes : analyse de La toison d'or, de Magdalena et de Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes Katherine Rondou Université Libre de Bruxelles HEPH – Condorcet L'approche comparatiste, souvent réservée à la confrontation de littératures nationales, ne doit cependant pas négliger les monographies. L'étude systématique d'un même thème, d'un même motif, à travers les publications d'un seul auteur, se révèle parfois très riche pour l'exégèse d'une œuvre, dont elle peut souligner les obsessions. Les représentations de sainte Madeleine dans les textes de Gautier et Balzac en fournissent un parfait exemple. Le thème magdaléen, même réduit à deux auteurs, reste cependant trop vaste pour l'espace d'un article. Aussi, je me limiterai à l'analyse systématique d'une composante essentielle du personnage : sa chevelure. La comparaison des différents extraits évoquant les longues mèches de la sainte me permettra de dégager des conclusions significatives quant aux obsessions personnelles qui guident la création des deux auteurs. Enfants d'une époque particulièrement captivée par la chevelure féminine, les auteurs du XIXe siècle ne peuvent manquer d'accorder toute leur attention à la longue chevelure de Marie-Madeleine, la sensuelle pécheresse convertie. Parmi ceux-ci, Gautier et Balzac occupent une place à part. Alors que leurs contemporains s'attachent essentiellement aux connotations associées aux Madeleines rousses, les auteurs de La toison d'or, Magdalena et Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes projettent sur la sainte des obsessions personnelles, relatives aux blondes et aux brunes. Après une brève synthèse des représentations de l'amie du Christ dans l'imaginaire occidental, nous rappellerons la fascination de la religion chrétienne, et de la société judéo-chrétienne en général, pour la chevelure féminine. Nous préciserons également les valeurs symboliques traditionnellement associées aux différentes couleurs de cheveux, afin de mieux dégager l'originalité de Gautier et Balzac. Alors que l'imagerie populaire associe blondeur et angélisme, Gautier dépeint, dans La toison d'or, une Madeleine corruptrice, et réserve à la Madeleine brune de Magdalena la spiritualité de la sainte. Esther, la mondaine repentie de Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes, bénéficie, quant à elle, d'une double couleur de cheveux. Noires dans certaines descriptions, blondes dans d'autres, les longues mèches de la jolie Juive retiennent depuis longtemps l'attention de la critique balzacienne. Une étude minutieuse du texte, dans ses versions successives, nous amène à y lire l'expression de deux fantasmes de l'auteur : l'aristocrate parisienne et la sensuelle orientale.

Biography: 1 Nom : RONDOU Prénom : Katherine Date de naissance : 18/02/1980 à Charleroi Adresse : Avenue Jeanne, 4 Bte 6 1050 IXELLES Belgique Téléphone : 00/32/(0)499/16.82.39 courriel : krondou@gmail.com Doctorat en Philosophie et Lettres, orientation langues et littératures romanes : -Le thème de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature d'expression française, en France et en Belgique, de 1814 à nos jours, sous la direction de Michel BASTIAENSEN et avec un jury composé de Valérie ANDRE, Barbara BAERT, Manuel COUVREUR et Jean-Marie SANSTERRE, Université Libre de Bruxelles, décembre 2006. Postes occupés Aspirant-chercheur du Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique Université Libre de Bruxelles 1er octobre 2003 - 16 septembre 2007 Maître-assistant de langue française Diverses Hautes Ecoles belges 17 septembre 2007 - Collaboratrice scientifique Université Libre de Bruxelles Novembre 2007 - Communications : 17 septembre 2005 « Le rapport aux évangiles d'auteurs de la fin du XXe et du début du XXIe siècle : analyse d'un cas particulier, l'interprétation de Luc 8, 2 –'Marie, appelée la Magdaléenne, de laquelle étaient sortis sept démons'- dans la littérature postérieure à 1969. » La Croix et la Bannière, pour une définition de l'écrivain catholique en francophonie, XVIIe-XXe siècle, Journée d'étude du 17 septembre 2005, Université Libre de Bruxelles, Centre Interdisciplinaire d'Etude des Religions et de la Laïcité. 29 septembre 2007 « Déculpabilisation magdaléenne dans la littérature contemporaine : redéfinition du péché et de l'expiation de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans les lettres de la seconde moitié du XXe siècle et du début du XXIe siècle » La culpabilité, journée d'étude de l'Association Française d'Histoire Religieuse Contemporaine, La Sorbonne. 27 décembre 2007; 11, 18 et 25 avril 2008; 9 mai 2008 « Le thème de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans le théâtre de langues romanes, du Moyen Age au début du XXIe siècle » Cycle de conférences donné dans le cadre du cours de Littératures Romanes Comparées du professeur Michel Bastiaensen, Université Libre de Bruxelles. 6 mai 2008 « Le thème de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature contemporaine, roman populaire et roman spirituel » Conférence de vulgarisation scientifique, Bibliothèque de Montigny-le-Tilleul. 7 mars 2011 « Regards belges sur Médée, quelques auteurs francophones s'emparent du mythe », en collaboration avec Catherine Gravet M comme Mère, M comme Monstre, colloque international du centre de recherches SAFES, ULB 4 et 5 juillet 2011 « La Madeleine de Christen Ostrowski : échos des mouvements révolutionnaires de 1830 » Art, Literature and Revolution, colloque international, Université Manouba de Tunis 20

septembre 2011 « Marie-Madeleine : polyphonie féminine. De la sainte putain à la sainte mère », Voix poétiques et Mythes féminins, Les femmes de la Bible, Université Blaise Pascal, Clermont-Ferrand Publications : -« Antigonnes francophones dans la littérature belge contemporaine », dans : Représentations de la féminité dans l'espace culturel francophone, colloque de l'Université de Galati, 15-16 octobre 2010, Communication interculturelle et littérature, 2010, V.12, fasc.4, p.31-p.42. -« Il rapporto di Maria di Magdala con il sangue della redenzione nelle rappresentazioni letterarie contemporanee della Passione », dans : Intersezioni, rivista delle idee, avril 2011, V.31, fasc.1, p.5-p.16. -« Des souvenirs dormant dans cette chevelure, étude de la chevelure de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature contemporaine », dans : Studi Francesi, mai-août 2010, V.161, fasc.2, p.232-p.243. -« Renouveau du personnage de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans le théâtre de Michel de Ghelderode », dans : Textyles, revue des Lettres belges de langue française, 2010, V.36-37, p.251-p.263. -« Exemple de création hagiographique dans le théâtre dannunzian : origines de sainte Alétis, 'personnage secondaire' de La Pisanella », dans : Communication interculturelle et littérature. 2010, V.9, p.266-p.270. 3 -« Le personnage de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature de l'après-guerre : acceptation et valorisation de la féminité », dans : CRIHANA Alina et al., Représentations de la féminité dans la culture européenne du XXe siècle, actes du colloque des 15-16 octobre 2009 de l'Université de Galati, Galati, Europlus, 2009, p.291-p.302. -« Panorama de la parabole de l'enfant prodigue dans la littérature belge des XXe et XXIe siècles », dans : CHEVREL Yves, JONGY Béatrice et LEONARD-ROQUES Véronique, Le Fils prodigue et les siens (XXe-XXIe siècles), Paris, Le Cerf, 2009, p.77-p.89. -« Quand Madeleine cesse de pleurer. Etude des larmes de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature contemporaine », dans : Les Lettres Romanes, 2007, V.61, fasc.1-2, p.89-p.102. -« Il tema di Maria Maddalena nella letteratura decadente : il teatro dannunziano », dans : Intersezioni, rivista delle idee, V.27, août 2007, fasc.2, p.169-p.192. -« Marie-Madeleine, Soi féminin complet dans le roman contemporain après 1950 », dans : Cahiers d'Histoire des Littératures Romanes, 2006, V.30, p.461-p.481. -« Echos de la Madeleine, figure évangélique, dans la littérature contemporaine », dans : Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, 2005, V.41, fasc.3, p.413-p.432. -« TARDIF (Guillaume). Les facéties de Poge, traduction du Liber facetiarum de Poggio Bracciolini, édition critique de Frédéric DUVAL et Sandrine HERICHE-PRADEAU. Genève, Droz, 2003. Compte-rendu », dans : Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 2004, V.82, fasc.3, p.801. -« Le figuier, quatrième emblème magdaléen », dans : Idioma, Mélanges offerts à Jacques Lemaire, 2002, p.157-p.170. Sous presse : -« Marie-Madeleine », dans : PARIZET Sylvie, Bible et littérature (titre provisoire), Paris, Le Cerf. -« Lectures du Noli me tangere dans la littérature contemporaine : richesse narrative des silences de l'évangile johannique », dans : BIERINGER Reimund et al., Mary Magdalene and the Noli me tangere in Interdisciplinary Context, actes du colloque des 17-19 décembre 2009, Katholieke Universiteit Leuven and Saint-Paul University, Ottawa, Canada Faculty of Theology and Faculty of Arts. -« Judas dans la littérature belge francophone », en collaboration avec Catherine GRAVET, dans : Figures de Judas dans la littérature francophone. -« Regards d'écrivains français contemporains sur la possession de Marie de Magdala », dans : Communication interculturelle et littérature. 4 En préparation : -Le thème de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature d'expression française, en France et en Belgique, de 1814 à nos jours, Paris, Honoré Champion. (Publication de la thèse de doctorat) -« Le personnage de sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature et les arts d'Europe », cycle de conférences de vulgarisation scientifique, Musée Curtius. -« Réécriture féministe de thèmes féminins dans l'oeuvre de Jacqueline Harpman » -« Jeanne d'Arc dans la littérature belge francophone » -« Impact de la théologie féministe sur les représentations littéraires de sainte Madeleine »

EUROPEAN INTERSECTIONS OF A MYTH: DON JUAN

G.S. Boruszko
Pepperdine University

Abstract: The myth of Don Juan have participate in the European construction not only of its literary corpus but also in the process of the evolution of the notion of being European and the expression of it. Each representation constitutes an intersection offering a unique opportunity to re-invent the myth transforming it into a 'living memory'. Each new re-articulation of the myth acts as a repetition working in parallel ways just as memory organizes events and recollections into the line of time. Don Juan generally fails to create his own individual memory in an individual play but it seems that he is saved from oblivion by the re-creation of the myth in each new variation of the play. Ultimately this character's salvation comes from the hands of its own creators. In the accumulation of variations of the myth, Don Juan obtains a 'larger memory pool' that brings him closer to a more diverse memory that could determine an individual. Literature and theater in particular open up a field of experimentation with memories that while being rooted in literary works or imaginary events serve as models of individual memorial processes. In the words of Pierre Nora: "Amid these complexities, it is memory that dictates while history writes; this is why both history books and historical events merit special attention." (Representations, 21) The Comparative Literature field serves as a mirror of reality's complexities: imagination and creativity dictates while theater represents. This is the challenge and privilege of the literary field.

Biography: Dr. Graciela Susana Boruszko is associate professor at the International Studies and Languages Division at Pepperdine University. Prior to joining the Pepperdine faculty, she served as Chair of the Modern Languages Department at Biola University as well as Director for the Studies Abroad Program. For much of her career, professor Boruszko focused on teaching and researching in the areas of Hispanic Philology, Comparative Literature and Linguistics, French Studies, French Philology, Hispanic Studies, Literatures and Cultures. Dr. Boruszko's multicultural background forged in her a passion for Cultural, Linguistic and Literary Studies in its multiple representations. Her research topics include: the transnational, identity, ethnicity, multiculturalism, migration, languages and its linguistic and literary spaces, Spanish Cultures, Latin American Cultures, linguistics, languages. As a result Dr. Boruszko counts with many publications, nationally and internationally. Dr. Boruszko currently directs an international research group on Comparative Literature and Identity Issues. She also directs student research projects related to the same topics. Dr. Boruszko participated in numerous international and national Conferences, Symposiums and Colloquiums as well as serving as a visiting professor in countless international forums in Europe, Latin America and North America. Dr. Boruszko earned a Licence de Lettres Modernes, Lettres et Langues, a Maîtrise de Lettres Modernes, Lettres et Langues, a DEA in Lettres and Langues from the Université de Bourgogne in Dijon, France, a DEA in French Philology and a PhD degree in French Philology from the UNED Madrid, Spain.

COMPARATISME, IMAGOLOGIE ET STEREOTYPIE: IMAGOTYPES CHEZ DIDIER VAN CAUWELAERT ET BRIGITTE PAULINO-NETO

M.J. Simões
Université de Coimbra

Abstract: Le choc entre différents groupes sociaux mérite aujourd'hui une attention redoublée surtout à partir du moment où les agents de la politique sociale reconnaissent l'importance d'étudier les problèmes engendrés par une société multiculturelle. L'Imagologie redevient alors un domaine de recherche privilégié au seuil des voies du comparatisme, comme le soulignent Manfred Beller et Joep Leerssen, une fois que l'étude des représentations et des images groupales et nationales se révèle fondamentale pour développer de nouvelles formes de connaissance et d'intente dans les communautés sociales. Cependant l'Imagologie ne pas pas subestimer les contributions que les recherches d'autres disciplines des sciences humaines ont apportées vis-à-vis l'étude des représentations — notamment la Psychologie Sociale et la Philosophie. L'Imagologie doit profiter des recherches sur des stéréotypes sociaux — comme on peut rencontré, par exemple, dans les travaux publiés par Craig McGarty, Vincent Yserbyt and Russells Spears — et de la recherche menée par des philosophes qui ont pensé le rapport à l'autre, comme E. Levinas ou G. Deleuze. L'irréductibilité de l'autre à l'autre est "envisagée comme altérité", défendue par E. Levinas, se déploie dans les textes littéraires, si l'on croit, avec G. Deleuze, que la littérature "est un processus, c'est-à-dire un passage de Vie qui traverse le vivable et le vécu. L'écriture est inséparable du devenir". Ce travail aura pour but, alors, non seulement d'identifier des imagotypes et des stéréotypes dans la fiction de Didier van Cauwelaert et Brigitte Paulino-Neto mais prétendra aussi souligner l'importance de l'imagologie au sein du comparatisme critique et comment cette approche comparatiste peut contribuer à cerner la valeur cognitiviste de la littérature pour la saisie de l'humain dans le monde contemporain.

Biography: Maria João Simões est Professeur (PhD) de Littérature et enseigne plusieurs disciplines du domaine des Études Littéraires à la Faculté de Lettres de Université de Coimbra, au Portugal, dès 1989. Devint Professeur Auxiliaire, en 2000, après la présentation de son Doctorat. Avec une formation initiale en Littérature Comparée, elle est membre de l'Association Internationale de Littérature Comparée dès 1989. Membre du Comité Exécutif du Centre de Recherche "Centro de Literatura Portuguesa", dirige actuellement un Projet de recherche sur l'Imagologie, dont les premiers résultats ont été publiés en 2011, dans le volume Imagotipos Literários: Processos de (Des)Configuração na Imagologia Literária, dont elle est l'Éditeur. Exemples d'articles publiés: "Nouvelles Voies de La Littérature Comparées: Imagologie et Stéréotypes en Le Clézio, Lídia Jorge et Fay Weldon" (Congrès de l'APLC 2010) et "Imagology and Relational Complexity: The Group Stereotype" (Congrès de l'AILC: in COUTINHO, Eduardo F. (Ed.) - Beyond Binarisms. Discontinuities and Displacements: Studies in Comparative Literature, Rio de Janeiro, Aeroplano Editora, 2009, pp. 81-90). Organization (avec publication de texte) des volumes O Grotresco (2005) e O Fantástico (2007). Les domaines de recherche privilégiés: Esthétique Littéraire, Théorie de la Littérature Comparée et Imagologie, Littérature Portugaise.

UNDERLINING THE DIFFERENCE THROUGH COMPARATIVE METHOD: HOW THE COMPARATIVE APPROACH HELPS TO DEFINE A NATIONAL LITERATURE

F. Chianese
Università di Napoli L'Orientale

Abstract: What are, in terms of critical investigation, the benefits of a comparative approach? What could be these benefits in our society and our time, I wonder, indeed, in our global, transnational culture, where any culture seems to look at the others in an unique, wide international context, where any literary and cultural phenomenon is immediately supranational. The answer is already in the question, I reckon. If any aspect of a culture defines itself only through the difference with another one from other culture – as years of post-structuralism guarantee – then, the comparative approach becomes fundamental to find and underline the very autonomous and original characteristics that make any national literature unique in its way: only the comparative studies can keep together the literature of all the countries in our epochal turning, making any literature confront with each other, so that, I dare say, studying a national literature makes a sense today only in comparisons with any other. Assuming the existence of this global, transnational literature as an uber-model for all the contemporary literature, the first step will be to analyse what the different literary experiences have in common, to extrapolate their common features, so that we can find and underline which are the features that make them different, following the instance that Edward Said gave us in Orientalism, a couple of years ago. Even, and moreover, in this case, it will be the otherness of a different point of view to look at a common matter from that let us understand what makes a national literature different from another one – and, once more, nothing more than Eastern culture can help to define – for opposition – Western culture. In my research for the PhD program, for instance, I analyse Western literature as a wide context, from USA to Eastern Europe, passing through Italy and central Europe, to depict phenomena spread throughout this area in their analogies and differences – or differànces, using the famous Derrida's expression: in my paper, I would like to analyze how considering such a large field helps me to set the borders between the different literary experiences I focus on in my work.

Friday, July 19, 2013

Biography: Francesco Chianese was born in Napoli, Italy, and studied Italian Modern and Contemporary Literature at Università degli Studi di Napoli Federico II (MA in Modern Literature in 2004, post-graduate degree in Theatre Critics and Literature in 2010; final dissertations about the theatre of Pier Paolo Pasolini). After a couple of years teaching in secondary school, he is in his first year of a PhD program in Comparative literature at Università degli Studi di Napoli l'Orientale: his research focuses on the analysis of the transformations in father figure in American, Italian and Eastern-European postmodern literature. In 2011 he attended the American Studies seminar in Roma, Italy, and in 2012 the OASIS - Orientale American Studies International School in Procida, Italy. In his period he is researching at Bristol University in Bristol, UK.

S2 LITTERATURES POSTCOLONIALES / POSTCOLONIAL LITERATURES

LA LANGUE (PORTUGAISE) AU-DELA DES NATIONS

L.G. Xavier

Escola Superior de Educação de Coimbra

Abstract: Après l'indépendance de l'Angola et du Mozambique, les relations culturelles et politiques entre ces pays africains et le Portugal ont changé. La langue portugaise, cependant, y est restée. D'autre part, la littérature connue est écrite en langue portugaise, une langue occidentale et impérialiste. La langue portugaise n'est pas, cependant, la même en Afrique qu'au Portugal: là elle est devenue africaine, elle a acquis une vitalité esthétique surtout au niveau du lexique et de la structure de la phrase qui lui a apporté une identité sui generis. Si dans un premier moment, la langue portugaise a servi d'arme idéologique, pour faire passer le discours esthétique du colonisateur, maintenant elle est une autre langue, mise au service de la construction d'une culture et d'une identité nationales. Cette transformation a été pacifique, aujourd'hui le portugais est la langue de la littérature africaine de langue portugaise. Le domaine esthétique privilégié de la langue est la littérature, un champs de confluence de frontières linguistiques: la confluence entre le portugais et les langues nationales. Le portugais sera historiquement la langue du colonisateur en Afrique de langue portugaise. Toutefois, cette langue européenne a changé à cause du contact avec les langues bantoues. Elle a acquis une nouvelle personnalité. La situation du portugais en Angola et au Mozambique n'est pas exactement la même. Au Mozambique, le portugais a plus de difficulté de s'imposer, déjà dépassé par l'anglais, dans certains milieux sociaux et des affaires. L'objectif principal de cette présentation est de comparer ces deux réalités africaines de langue portugaise (celle d'Angola et du Mozambique), montrant que malgré ces deux différents contextes sociaux et culturels, la littérature continue à préférer cette langue européenne qui est devenue une Autre langue, résultat de la coexistence avec plusieurs langues africaines. Le portugais sert, alors, non seulement de véhicule d'ascension sociale, comme forme d'accès à la mondialisation. Par la littérature, la langue a dépassé les frontières culturelles et géopolitiques. Pour faire preuve de ce qu'on vient de dire, on donnera des exemples des auteurs et les œuvres africains de langue portugaise.

Biography: Lola Gerales Xavier est professeur et chercheur à Coimbra. Son doctorat est en littérature comparée (de littératures de langue portugaise). Elle a publié des œuvres et des articles sur les littératures africaines de langue portugaise, la littérature brésilienne, la littérature portugaise et la littérature comparée.

READING POSTCOLONIAL WOMEN WRITING IN ENGLISH THROUGH POSTCOLONIAL EYES

G.D. Leighton

Universidad Nacional de San Martin

Abstract: English postcolonial literature has been studied from different points of view. One of these is the one this paper presents: postcolonial female authors in english language (English with a small "e" to show the difference with the central English language). This topic will be studied with two different approaches: gender and genre. Gender in postcolonial female literature is central, mainly since Spivak has coined her famous "subaltern of the subaltern", thus showing the stressing place women have in the postcolonial world. Genre is also a fundamental topic when studying postcolonial female authors, where resistance and difference is many times shown through manipulation of the canonical genres, and through the creation of new forms of writing literature. Poems, prose, letters, memoirs, are entangled to form a new way of, as Bill Ashcroft would say it, "writing back to the Empire". The corpus this paper presents tries to describe the postcolonial world in english, through women writers. The Anglo-Indian author Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things will be taken first, and here we will work with auto?-biography with trespassing boundaries including drama, novel and television; the Caribbean Grace Nichols' The Fat Black Woman Poems, which present autobiography and historical novel through poem writing, crossing again the frontiers of genre; and the Nigerian Ama Ata Aidoo's Our Sister Killjoy, studied last due to the complexity and richness of her breaking genres and surpassing rules. In all three texts, the theme of gender will be particularly analyzed, together with center and periphery, displacement, and language. The theoretical frame will be postcolonial theory and criticism, particularly Homi Bhabha, Gayatri Spivak, Bill Ashcroft, and Leela Gandhi; culture in a broad sense, mainly through Eagleton and Derrida; and comparative literature, which will provide the possibility of taking a wide view of women postcolonial world in three continents: Asia, Africa, and America.

Biography: Leighton, Gabriela. PhD. Director of the Centre for Languages Studies at the National University of San Martin, Argentina. Senior Lecturer of English Literature at the Universidad Nacional de San Martin and Universidad de Buenos Aires. Member of the Board of the School of Humanities at the University of San Martin. Expert at the National Research Commission in Argentina. Senior Researcher at the National Research University System and at the Science and Technology Research Agency in Argentina. Has published many articles, chapters and two books on English Language and Literature.

POSTCOLONIALISING COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

A. Gagiano

Stellenbosch University

Abstract: ICLA 2013: ABSTRACT of an Individual Proposal for Session 5: 'Nations and Beyond: Linguistic Areas, Literary Continents, Globalization?' Presenter: Annie Gagiano. Title of proposed paper: 'Postcolonising Comparative Literature' Abstract: The first phrase in the rubric for this session, "Nations and Beyond", brings to mind the violent and premature Caesarean birth of most contemporary African nations. I refer of course to the Berlin Conference of 1884-85 (also known by the German name Kongokonferenz). Almost all the European powers took part in this meeting, the main aim of which was to regularise among the Euro-states (but not stop!) the piratical raiding of territories, land occupations and power seizures mainly by these powers themselves in a process all too reminiscent of some recent events in that the reason cited as the main one was to end slavery by black and Muslim strongmen, 'freeing' African territories into the hold of the European powerlords. By the beginning of the twentieth century, 90% of African territory was held by European powers, who had divided up the continent into 'countries' that cut through linguistic-cultural and ethnic communities. Once 'independence' began to be granted to these countries, their relationship to the European centres (often referred to as 'mother countries') changed marginally and nominally, while the power relations changed little in fact if they did in appearance. I raise these political histories in order to suggest that what we call "globalization" and think of as a contemporary phenomenon began in the more overtly brutal form of colonization which had, as we know, the denigration; subjugation; alteration and even partial erasure of local intellectual and also cultural economies at its heart. So the "Linguistic Areas, Literary Continents, [and] Globalization" that feature in the subtitle to this session are not matters peculiar to the present. Power imbalances have not changed all that much since the previous two or two-and-a-half centuries and are perhaps visible even in the examples of what are called "categories" or "literary continents" in the session outline that follows the title, viz. "European literature"; "Western literature" and "World literature". The third of these categories is the most interesting because of its ambiguities of meaning or reference. The idea originated in Europe and suggested reaching out from Europe to literatures of other times and locations, and Comparative Literature itself usually involved the comparison of a European or Western 'classic' text with a non-European one. This has shifted, but only fairly recently, into pleas for the overcoming of binary thinking dichotomising the literatures of the "West" from those of the "Rest"; yet the phrase "World Literature" does continue to carry something of the flavour of having the "Western" or "European" literatures and academes as host [however gracious and generous] to the "other" literatures and studies of them, or as making, even allowing, space to their consideration. In manoeuvring my way through the rubric provided for this session, I consider the suggestion that "beyond continental borders", "linguistic areas" may be "more appropriate than geopolitical or cultural criteria in defining literary identities". Concerning "linguistic areas", Swahili literatures along with those termed Francophone, Lusophone and Anglophone come to mind, along with certain smaller cross-border literatures such as those in Wolof or Amharic, but the Europhone literatures are really the only ones that cross continental borders for African authors; and in this phenomenon the colonial histories again play a central, originating and lingering part. History is "over", but not easily "done with", and, even though it serves little purpose to harp on colonial cruelties and the both 'extending' and diminishing effects it had on local cultures and their oratures and literatures, the inter-accessibility that the implantation of Europhone languages brought to Africa carried (inevitably) both gain and loss. "World literature" as a category relies largely on the existence of Europhone writing from other areas as it does on translation into these languages. The point I am working towards is that a more recent consequence of 'language spread' among elites or the wealthier citizens of African and other areas that we refer to as postcolonial (whatever the ironies of the term) is that it creates within comparative literary practice the possibility of 'bypassing' Europe or the West – inevitably recalling Dipesh Chakravorty's provocative book title, Provincializing Europe (2000). In my own paper I would introduce and then build on the above arguments to make three further points: a) that intra-postcolonial comparative reading practices reveal an exciting vein for literary-comparative exploration, because in bypassing the 'Western' centres of influence such a de-centering shift in literary focus is much more likely to avoid the presently troubling hierarchizing binarisms that comparatists often struggle with; b) that reading postcolonial texts comparatively is more likely to succeed in avoiding homogenisation of different postcolonies and postcolonial cultures since differences [historical; stylistic; formal] necessarily come to light along with similarities; thus reducing the danger of homogenisation of postcolonial writing practices and cultures; c) that it is high time those denigrating postcolonial studies as stuck in a single oppressor/victim paradigm looked at more recent developments in the field (and I speak as a practitioner) that involve examining literary representations of the postcolonial present in which the colonial presence is in the past even if there are lingering traces of it: a present in which the achievements; failures; oppressive or developmental effects of local, contemporary, postcolonial governmentalities and social practices are assessed in texts written from within these cultures or by expatriate insiders – in both cases addressing an inside as well as an outside readership by means of language choice.

Friday, July 19, 2013

The illustrations from my own work from which I shall draw would be intended to indicate the interesting range of possible ways in which postcolonial comparative literary studies can work and its techniques be put to work. They include the following: 1) comparing the workings of humour (dark and less dark) in texts by Zimbabwean, Kenyan and Somali authors offering socio-political critique from experiential perspectives; 2) examining the valorisation of transgressive women in southern African texts ranging from traditional folktales to recent short stories; 3) comparing the way three southern African novelists – Bessie Head, Yvonne Vera and Unity Dow – enter the minds of male oppressors in daring and evocative literary explorations that seek to transcend denunciation and achieve analytical and imaginatively empathetic comprehension; 4) comparing depictions of young, aspiring female characters respectively contextualised by a late colonial Rhodesian and a postcolonial Botswana setting; 5) examining a chronological series of South African texts representing interactive tribalisms and modernities – ranging from traditional narratives to a Zakes Mda novel and a recent novelistic exposure of AmaXhosa male initiation practices (titled A Man who is not a Man); 6) the juxtapositional thematic reading of two folktales, one from the South African Khoikhoi culture and the other from the North-East Indian Khasi people of Meghalaya; 7) a comparison between what I termed “motherforce” in two brief novels respectively by the Indian writer Mahasweta Devi and a Northern Zambian author, Binwell Sinyangwe. At the most recent ICLA conference I compared representations of child narrators as witnesses to what I termed “the politics of cruelty” respectively during the Partition of Pakistan from India (in Bapsi Sidhwa’s Cracking India – alternatively titled Ice Candy-Man) and in Libya during the early years of Col. Qaddafi’s reign (in Hisham Matar’s In the Country of Men). My paper will (hence) comprise a historical-theoretical framework – in which I intend drawing on Achebe; Bakhtin; Dussel; Minh-ha and Lara – and an illustrative exemplificatory section in which I show how the ideas raised in the opening section can be put into practice, as is done in the texts and readings mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Biography: Annie Gagiano is Professor Emerita in the Department of English of the University of Stellenbosch, South Africa. She specializes in the study of African Anglophone fiction and more broadly in Postcolonial Studies from a comparatist perspective.

S4 LES RELATIONS ORIENT/OCCIDENT / EAST-WEST RELATIONSHIPS

WORDS AND NOVELS AFTER FUKUSHIMA

S. Kimura
Tsuda College

Abstract: After the enormous disaster known as the Great East Japan Earthquake on March 11th 2011, various literary writings such as novels, poems, haiku came out. I will take up those writings mainly published in Japan and France. Immediately after the Great East Japan Earthquake, tsunami, and ensuing meltdown at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear reactors, Kawakami Hiromi published a short story called God 2011. The work appeared in May 2011 within the monthly literary magazine Gunzo as the author's response to the events of March 11. It was likely the first novel published after March 11 to deal with the nuclear incident. As is often the case with artistic works, Kawakami's literary contribution seemed to presage Japan's current situation. Ryoko Sekiguchi published in France Ce n'est pas un hasard which contains the diary one day before March 11 to the end of April. Ryoichi Wago was sending real time short poem or his cry from Fukushima by twitter. On the other hand, writing Fukushima is also difficult matter. How can we describe Fukushima from outside? How can we speak on behalf of people in Fukushima? These questions might be issue for writings. One year after Fukushima, an anthology of short stories called March Was Made of Yarn: Reflections on the Japanese Earthquake, Tsunami, and Nuclear Meltdown was published. Japanese original version and English translated version (both UK version and US version) came out at a time. I will deal with those novels and poems and consider how writers confronted or struggled to the disaster or how they show the way to the future.

Biography: Tsuda College Associate Professor 2006-present Department of International and Cultural Studies International Research Center for Japanese Studies Visiting Associate Professor 2011-present
Works: A Brief History of Sexuality in Premodern Japan (Estonia, Tallinn University Press, 2010). Breasts for Whom?: Sexuality and Authority in Japanese Medieval Tales (Tokyo: Shinyosha, 2009). Homosexuality and Love Tales: Court Society and Authority (Tokyo: Seidosha, 2008).

LITERATURE AFTER FUKUSHIMA. A COMPARISON OF APPROACHES IN GERMAN AND JAPANESE LITERATURE

H. Heselhaus
Tsukuba University

Abstract: Individual Proposal for sub-theme 5): "Nations and Beyond: Linguistic Areas, Literary Continents, Globalization?" Herrad Heselhaus: Literature after Fukushima A Comparison of Approaches in German and Japanese Literature The world-wide reactions to the threefold catastrophe of earthquake, tsunami, and nuclear accident in Japan on March 11, 2011 were manifold. Countless debates started in the spheres of ecology and economics, science and literature, ethics and pragmatics. The paper wants to introduce and discuss outstanding approaches to this problematic theme in Austro-German and Japanese literature, because in these two realms writers and thinkers have expressed their concerns in response to the crisis in a very unique way. Contributions from German literature range from Elfriede Jelinek's quick responses in internet publications and theater plays (also stage productions in Germany and Japan) to Peter Sloterdijk's philosophical and political essays on the conditio humana in times of global warming and local disasters. One of the many links between German and Japanese literary and intellectual life is the Japanese Berlin-based writer Yoko Tawada. Her recent publications combine German and Japanese approaches to the nuclear disaster. On the Japanese side there are as famous authors as Kenzaburo Oe, who has taken a decidedly political and intellectual stance in public discussions, and Hiromi Kawakami with her unique way of turning the events of March 2011 into literature. The paper does not only want to compare the diverse literary reactions in Japan and Germany, but also wants to point out joint literary debates and reciprocal influences in both countries. At the core of the discussions in post-Fukushima literature there are not only the urging questions of how literature can and must response to the current global crises, but also of how literature is able to reflect in language the events and their short- and long-term consequences for human life on this planet.

Biography: 1992-1996 Munich University, Dept. of German Literature (Assisntent)
1996-2002 Tübingen University, Dept. of German and Comparative Literature (Assistent)
2002- Tsukuba Unversity, Dept. of Literature and Linguistics (Professor)

ANOTHER IMAGE OF MODERNITY: A HISTORIOGRAPHY OF ASIAN CINEMA

T. Lee

Kyung Hee University

Abstract: The aim of my presentation is to discuss the way in which Asian cinema constructs its own identity since 1990s. What my paper focuses on is the aspect of Asian cinema which internalizes the gaze of the West for its own aesthetic justification. Cinematography as such in Asia stands for the modernization and the non-traditional way of life. The identity of Asia today is the invention of the modern world, in particular, the post-war world system depending on American-centered geopolitics. An issue raised with the identity of an Asian cinema is not the problem of nationality -- East Asia has rapidly been transformed from the rural community to the industrial and urban society dominated by industrialization and urbanization after the Second World War and the liberation from the colonial occupation. Furthermore, the reality of globalization has imposed East Asian countries to face up the cultural conflictions between traditional values and Western values. The rampant transformation propelled modernization and globalization is tacitly interwoven with the logic of cultural forms such as cinema. In this way, my presentation analyzes another image of modernity through the formal logic of Asian cinema.

Biography: Alex Taek-Gwang Lee is a cultural critic and associate Professor in the School of English in Kyung Hee University. He obtained Ph.D. from The University of Sheffield, UK. He published books and articles on French and German philosophy, Korean cinema, popular culture, political issues and Fine Art, including This is What Cultural Criticism Means (2011), The Age of Impressionists (2011), The Fate of Theories after Althusserianism: Derrida, Zizek, Ranciere and Badiou (2010), The Rudeness of Good News: An Analysis of Korean Popular Culture (2009), On Futurism (2008), etc.

S1 INTERTEXTUALITES, RENCONTRES / INTERTEXTUALITY, ENCOUNTERS

A THEMATIC AND STYLISTIC COMPARISON OF EMILY BRONTE'S WUTHERING HEIGHTS AND ARUNDHATI ROY'S THE GOD OF SMALL THINGS

L.M. Varghese
Catholicate College

Abstract: A Thematic and Stylistic Comparison of Emily Bronte's Wuthering Heights and Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things (Dr. Lata Marina Varghese, Associate Professor, PG Department of English, Catholicate College, Pathanamthitta, Kerala, INDIA) Abstract Literatures of the world did not evolve in isolation from one another. Comparative Literature, as an interdisciplinary critical scholarship, deals not only with the literature of two or more different linguistic or cultural groups, but moves across time periods, genres, disciplines, regional or national boundaries, to explore the relationships among multiple literary traditions. This paper seeks to explore the fictional world created by two women writers separated by time, place and societies-Wuthering Heights(1847) by Emily Bronte, a Victorian British writer and The God of Small Things(1997) by Arundhati Roy, a Postmodern Indian writer. Texts are usually compared on the basis of related or contrasting themes. A further dimension can be added by comparing texts which are constructionally and formalistically related. Wuthering Heights and The God of Small Things bear striking similarities in their themes, structure and time scheme. Hence, a comparative study of the two novels has been made using Thematics and Stylistics as narrative techniques, even though they are essentially critical approaches used for interpretation and evaluation of literary texts. Keywords: Comparative Literature, Emily Bronte, Wuthering Heights, Arundhati Roy, The God of Small Things, Thematics, Stylistics, narrative techniques

Biography:

Dr. Lata Marina Varghese, Associate Professor, teaches English Literature in the Post Graduate Department of English, Catholicate College, Pathanamthitta, Kerala, INDIA. She has participated in more than 50 International/National and Regional Seminars/Conferences/ Workshops in India and has 32 publications in refereed journals/anthologies from reputed publishing firms and seminar proceedings. As Convener, she has organised one International Seminar and 4 National Seminars on various topics. She has edited 3 Seminar Proceedings, 3 College Research Journals and has authored 2 Books (under publication). She completed a UGC Sponsored Minor Research Project on "A Land of One's Own: Women and Land Rights in Literature and Society". Currently she is working on her second doctoral thesis (Women's Studies---"Women's Land and Property Rights-The Christians of Kerala"). Her area of interest include English Literature, Comparative Literature, Novel, Indian English Fiction, Women Studies, Postcolonial Literature, Film Studies and Eco-Criticism .

BLINDED BY AGENDA: INDIFFERENCE TO ATROCITY IN CONRAD'S HEART OF DARKNESS AND ITS RECEPTIONS

P. Bornedal
American U of Beirut

Abstract: Peter Bornedal Blinded by Agenda Indifference to Atrocity in Conrad's Heart of Darkness and its Receptions In the last few decades, we have experienced a sea-change in the reception of Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness. Whereas in earlier receptions, the novella was largely seen as a critical work with an anti-colonialist agenda; this has changed into almost its opposite in later receptions like those of C. Achebe, E. Said, J. Smith, and other feminist receptions. In the proposed talk, I will address some recurrent problems in Heart of Darkness and its receptions. As my point of departure, I understand the novella as being problematic, and even disturbing, like many of its recent critics, but for entirely different reasons, and indeed, I will see these receptions in themselves as problematic for ignoring and trivializing these reasons. What we notice in the novel itself, is its (at best) oblivion of, if not insensitivity to, or even apology for, the atrocities and genocidal exploitations committed against the native population of the Congo. The protagonist of the novel, Marlow, has admittedly a few pensive moments where he condemns the nature of the colonization of Congo, realizing as well the hypocrisy of its ideological justifications. Nonetheless, he is in the final analysis won over by the charisma and eloquence of the enigmatic antagonist Kurtz (the amoral colonialist figure guilty in genocidal exploitation of the natives in the inner Congo), who is redeemed partly because of his eloquence, and partly because of the unreserved and unapologetic brutality by which he has been implementing Belgian King Leopold's de facto profit-motives for staying in Congo. Kurtz has entered into the abyss of horror, he has seen eye to eye with nothingness, and has come out as a man transformed, personifying this horror himself. Now we read a text in which he is excused by his education, his charisma, and his eloquent 'voice' – that 'voice,' which in his death-throes utters the famous

'the horror,' as he gazes into the womb of being. Is this 'voice' expressing 'the horror' of his being as suppresser and colonizer? . . . Of his being as such? . . . Of existence as such? — We don't know, but we notice that this educated-charismatic-eloquent metaphysical voice subjects him to the text's (Marlow's) unreserved admiration, while it/he in this enthused state of mind entirely forgets the atrocities that so obviously have been committed in the name of a man in possession of an unbroken 'will' and an admirable 'voice' by which to express it. (We see this defense of intellectualized and purpose-rational brutality reiterated in Francis Ford Coppola's film adaptation, Apocalypse Now.) However, turning our attention to recent receptions, we notice that also critical readers are immune to these atrocities. These readers adopt certain well-rehearsed critical stances to the text, but they are blinded by their agendas, and show little interest in the banality of suffering. With great eloquence and clarity of mind, Achebe takes offense of (and rightly so) Conrad's ethnocentric and racist discourse; Edward Said of Conrad's Imperialist perspective, while feminist critics may have noticed the patriarchal ideology of the novel. As I shall argue, these are indeed small sins compared to the greater sin of apologizing for genocide.

Biography: American University of Beirut Prof. Peter Bornedal, Nicely Hall 200W AUB, Bliss Street, 1107-2020 Beirut, Lebanon USA Address: American U. of Beirut, NY Office, 3 Dag Hamm. Plaza, 8th Floor, New York, NY 10017-2303 Tel: +9611-350000, ext. 4025. Mobile: +9613-109045 E-mail: bornedal@hotmail.com & bornedal@aub.edu.lb Updated: Sunday, February 26, 2012 Curriculum Vitae Bio-note Academic Rank: Professor, American University of Beirut. Education: (a) Dr. Phil., Philosophy, The University of Copenhagen. (b) Ph. D., Comp. Lit., The University of Chicago. Main Specialization: Continental Philosophy/History of Ideas, 19th & 20th Century Nationality: Danish. Residency: Lebanon. Married to: Sarah Padillo Bornedal Publications: Six books (+ one forthcoming), several articles. Most recent book: The Surface and the Abyss: Nietzsche as Philosopher of Mind and Knowledge (Walter de Gruyter, 623 pp.). Book; Manuscript completed: Reading Derrida Reading: A Critical Examination of the Philosophy of Jacques Derrida. Book; Manuscript in preparation: Continental Philosophers of Cognition and Mind: Kant, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, & Freud. ----

----- Education Dr. Phil.: The University of Copenhagen (Faculty of the Humanities. Spring 1998) Ph. D.: The University of Chicago (Department of Comparative Literature. Fall 1994) MA: The University of Chicago (Department of Comparative Literature. Summer 1989) Mag. Art.: The University of Copenhagen, (Department of Comparative Literature. Spring 1984) [A] Other significant educational activities; no degrees: (i) Yale University (Research Student, Departments of Comp.Lit./Philosophy, Spring 1986; student of J. Derrida); (ii) Northwestern University ("The School of Criticism and Theory," 1985); (iii) Ecole Normale Supérieure, Sorbonne, etc. (Research Student, Paris, Fall 1984; student of J. Derrida. B) Early education: (i) Nørresundby Gymnasium (High-school/College); Science track: Mathematics, Physics, & Biology. (ii) Holsterbro Musik-Højskole (Music after-school); main tracks, Composition & Piano]. Brief Dissertation descriptions Dr. Phil. thesis. Faculty of the Humanities, University of Copenhagen: Speech and System, 470 pages. Danish Doctoral Degree equivalent to German Habilitation or French Doctorat d'Etat. Philosophical thesis rethinking fundamental Deconstructive concepts in the light of modern language philosophy. Deals with problems of meaning, speech, and systems. Philosophical background in Phenomenology, Hermeneutics, Language Philosophy, and Post-structuralism. Published by Museum Tusulanum Press, Copenhagen UP, 1997. [Advisors/opponents: Prof. Dr. Phil. & Dr. Theol. Peter Kemp (chair); Prof. Jørgen Dines-Johansen; Prof. Dr. Phil. Lars Henrik-Smith.] Ph.D. dissertation. Comp. Lit., The University of Chicago: The Interpretations of Art. 370 pages. Describes epistemological transformations of critical and aesthetic paradigms – the changes in the conception of art and the artist – from Neoclassicism to Romanticism. Deals with English, German, and French developments. Later re-written and published by Rowman & Littlefield/University Press of America, Lanham/New York, 1996. [Advisors/opponents: Prof. Dr. Françoise Meltzer (chair); Prof. Dr. Wayne C. Booth; Prof. Dr. Frantisek Svejksky.] Mag. Art. dissertation. Comp. Lit., University of Copenhagen: Skrift of Skribent – Undersøgelser i Grammatolgien [Writing and Writer – Investigations in Grammarology], 270 pages. Introduction to Derrida's Grammatology from La Voix et le Phénomène to La Carte Postale. Parallel introductions to texts constituting Derrida's textual object. Later published by Museum Tusulanum Press, Copenhagen UP, 1986. [Advisors: Prof. Jørgen Dines-Johansen; Docent Dr. Niels Egebak; Lecturer Mag.Art. Torben Kragh-Grodal.] Employment, and other relevant experience 2006 – : Professor at American University of Beirut, CS Program. 2000 – 06: Associate Professor at American University of Beirut, CS Program. 1993 – 00: Assistant Professor at American University of Beirut, CS Program. 1987 – 89: 'Kandidatstipendiat' (equivalent to post-graduate student) in department for Comparative Literature, University of Copenhagen. 1990ties: Free-lance employed by Danish Radio & TV, and other Danish film companies as accredited artistic advisor over international Danish film-makers 1980ties: Co-edited in the mid-eighties two Danish journals: Tid Skrift, and Semiotik; was as well on the editorial board of the small publishing firm, Basilisk. Languages Fluency in English and Danish; proficiency in Germanic and Nordic languages: German, Swedish, and Norwegian; reading knowledge of French. Institutional Affiliations 1: American Comparative Literature Association (ACLA). 2: American Philosophical Association (APA). 3: Australasian Society for Continental Philosophy (ASCP). 4: International Association for Philosophy and Literature (IAPL). 5: Modern Language Association (MLA). 6: North American Nietzsche Society (NANS). 7: Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy (SPEP). 8: Southern Comparative Literature Association (SCLA) Acknowledgments and honors From 1984 to 1993: Student-years in the USA were generously supported by several institutions and foundations, notably: Northwestern University; The University of Chicago; International House of Chicago Residence Fellowship; The Danish-American Foundation; The Danish Research Council of the Humanities; Carlsberg Foundation; Knud Højgaard's Foundation; Augustinus Foundation; Martin Levy's Stipends; and others. Summer 1995: AUB Faculty Development Grant. Summer 1996: AUB Mellon Research Grant. Summer 1998: AUB Faculty Development Grant. Summer 2000: AUB Faculty Development Grant. Teaching and Research Interests I) Research: Areas of Specialization/Competence: Qua Dr. Phil. (Humanities, Copenhagen): Specialization: Theories of language and interpretation, especially Hermeneutics, Structuralism, Speech Act Theory, and Deconstruction. Competence: Contemporary continental philosophy. Philosophy from Descartes to Derrida. Areas of Specialization/Competence: Qua Ph.D. (Comp. Lit., Chicago): Specialization: History of aesthetics and criticism from Neo-Classicism to Romanticism. Competence: Classical and Contemporary Literary Theory. Areas of Specialization/Competence: Qua Mag. Art. (Comp. Lit., Copenhagen): Specialization: The Deconstruction of Derrida, and theories related to his project: Linguistics, Psychoanalysis, & Phenomenology. Competence: Contemporary Philosophy and Literary Theory. Some Scandinavian philosophy, literature, and film. Areas of Research Interests after Dissertations: Most Prominent Names: Kant, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, Freud, Husserl, Habermas, Derrida. Most Prominent Fields: Continental 19th and 20th Century Philosophy: Kantianism/neo-Kantianism, Phenomenology, Language Theory, Psychoanalysis, Deconstruction. Most Prominent Intellectual Hobby Interests: Contemporary Cosmology; Evolutionary Biology; Cognitive Science; Chaos Theory. II) Teaching: Teaching at University of Copenhagen (1987-89): 1) Hermeneutics, Structuralism, and Deconstruction (teaching Gadamer; Ricoeur; Levi-Strauss; Barthes; & Derrida). 2) Søren Kierkegaard. (teaching Enten-Eller; Gjentagelsen; Om Begrebet Angst; and relevant journals). 3) Franz Kafka (teaching various short-stories; Der Prozess; Der Schloss; and relevant diaries and letters). 4) The Modern Breakthrough (teaching Georg Brandes; Henrik Pontoppidan; J. P. Jacobsen; Herman Bang; August Strindberg; and Henrik Ibsen) Teaching at the American University of Beirut (1993-2011): A.1) Core teaching; generic, undergraduate courses: General introductions to the history of philosophy and literature from Socrates to Foucault, Sophocles to Beckett. Regular teaching of the following four courses: CS 201: Ancient Near East and Classical Civilizations. CS 203: Enlightenment and Modernity/18th and 19th Century Thinking. CS 204: Contemporary/20th Century Thinking. CS 206: Enlightenment, Modern and Contemporary Thinking. A.2) Core teaching; General Lectures given (lectures given to all students in a segment (counting typically 200-250 students), introducing the readings of the week: 1) Aristotle Lecture: introduction to Aristotle's Metaphysics. 2) Freud Lecture: introduction to Freud's Civilization and its Discontents. 3) Goethe Lecture: introduction to Goethe's Faust. 4) Hawking Lecture: introduction to A Brief History of Time 5) Kant Epistemology Lecture I: introduction to Kant's Prolegomena I. 6) Kant Epistemology Lecture II: introduction to Kant's Prolegomena II. 7) Kant Ethics Lecture: introduction to Kant's Grounding for the Metaphysics of Morals 8) Mann Lecture: introduction to Thomas Mann's Death in Venice. 9) Nietzsche Lecture I: introduction to Nietzsche's Beyond Good and Evil I. 10) Nietzsche Lecture II: introduction to Nietzsche's Beyond Good and Evil II. 11) Salih Lecture: introduction to Tayeb Salih's Season of Migration to the North. 12) Voltaire Lecture: introduction to Voltaire's Candide. B) Elective course teaching; self-designed courses for senior students: 1) The Deconstruction of Derrida. (Introduction to Derrida's deconstruction through essays from Of Grammatology, Margins of Philosophy, Dissemination, The Postcard, and Truth in Painting). 2) Heidegger's 'Being and Time.' (Introduction to Heidegger's Being and Time). 3) Language, Imagination, and Poetry (Introduction to theories of language and poetry from Neo-Classicism to Romanticism, including Corneille, Dryden, Pope, Rousseau, Herder, Kant, Schiller, Goethe, Coleridge, Wordsworth). 4) Introduction to Psychoanalysis: Psychoanalysis and the arts. (Introduction to psychoanalytical writings on art and literature, including Freud, Jones, Rank, and Lacan). 5) Introduction to Psychoanalysis: Freud's metapsychology. (Introduction to Freud's metapsychology). 6) Introduction to Nietzsche: Nietzsche's epistemology (Introduction to Nietzsche's epistemology). 7) Nietzsche in context: Critiques of Religion, Morality, and Art. (Nietzsche's critiques in relation to Hegel, Feuerbach, Schopenhauer, Wagner, Le Bon, Freud). 8) Theories that Shaped the 20th Century: Marxism, Nihilism, Psychoanalysis, Structuralism. (Introduction to Marx, Feuerbach, Nietzsche, Freud, Kafka, Saussure, Levi-Strauss, Barthes, Foucault). 9) Schopenhauer and Nietzsche: World, Will, Art, and Life. Introduction to the four themes from Schopenhauer's The World as Will and Representation, and Nietzsche's responses and re-formulations. 10) Currents in 19th Century Thinking. (A survey of 19th Century thinking, from Kant, over Hegel, Feuerbach, Comte, Darwin, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, to Freud.) Administrative Service (Highlights) 1) (ca. 1995-99) Student advisor 2) (ca. 2000-1) Active in several CS re-structuring committees. 3) (2004-5) Active in several CS re-structuring committees. 4) (2009-11) Coordinator of 204core teaching in CS Program, AUB. 5) (2010) Member of advisory committee as advisor to the AUB Board of Deans (BOD) List of Publications & Conferences Books Current Projects 0) In Preparation: The Eye and the World: Continental Philosophers of Sensations, Experience and World (working title) 0) Book Manuscript: Reading Derrida Reading: A Critical Examination of the Philosophy of Jacques Derrida. (Manuscript completed; approx. 380 pages). Published 6) The Surface and the Abyss: Nietzsche as Philosopher of Mind and Knowledge. Berlin/New York (Walter de Gruyter), 2010. 620 pages. ISBN: 978-3-110-22341-5. 5) On the Beginnings of Theory: Deconstructing Broken Logic in Grice, Habermas, and Stuart Mill. Lanham/New York (Rowman and Littlefield on imprint UPA), 2006. 240 pages. ISBN: 0-7618-3390-0. 4) Speech and System. Copenhagen (Museum Tusulanum, Copenhagen UP), 1997. 400 pages. ISBN: 87-7289-352-4. 3) The Interpretations of Art. Lanham/New York (Rowman and Littlefield on imprint UPA), 1996. 370 pages. ISBN: 0-7618-0178-2. 2) Reconstructions [written in Danish]. Copenhagen (Museum Tusulanum, Copenhagen UP), 1990. 100 pages. ISBN: 87-7289-118-1. 1)

Writing and Writer: Investigations in Grammatology [written in Danish]. Copenhagen (Museum Tusulanum, Copenhagen UP), 1985. 160 pages. ISBN: 87-7289-009-1. Articles (In Progress or in Various Stages of the Publication-Process) 0) None Articles (Published or in press) 28) In Press: Chiasmatic Reasoning: Strategies of Self-Immunitization in Jürgen Habermas. To appear in Chiasmatic Encounters (Continuum, New York), p. 169-184. [Editor Prof. Kuisma Korhonen; Series editor: Prof. Hugh Silverman]. 27) Two lexicon-entries, Sklave & Mittelmäßigkeit. In Nietzsche-Lexikon. Wissenschaftlichen Buchgesellschaft (Darmstadt) 2009. Editor, Prof. Christian Niemeyer. ISBN:978-3-534-20844-9. 26) Eternal Recurrence in Inner-Mental-Life: The Eternal-Recurrence-Thought as Describing the Conditions of the Possibility for Knowledge and Pleasure. Nietzsche-Studien 35 (New York, Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 2006), p. 104-166. [Editors: Profs. Josef Simon, Günter Abel, & Werner Stegmaier]. 25) Different Kinds of Ecstasy: Review of Three Recent Works on 'Eternal Recurrence'. Nietzsche-Studien 35 (New York, Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 2006), p. 343-356. [Editors: Profs. Josef Simon, Günter Abel, & Werner Stegmaier]. 24) The Fragmented Nietzschean Subject and Literary Criticism: Conflicting Images of Woman in Jacobsen's 'Arabesque to a Drawing of Michelangelo'. The Comparatist (Southern Comparative Literature Association, 2006), p. 5-37. [Editor: Prof. MaryAnn Frese Witt]. 23) A Silent World: Nietzsche's Radical Realism; World, Sensation, Language. Nietzsche-Studien 34 (New York, Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 2005), p. 1-47. [Editors: Profs. Josef Simon, Günter Abel, & Werner Stegmaier]. 22) The Incredible Profundity of the Truly Superficial: Master and Slave as Mental Configurations. Nietzsche-Studien 33 (Berlin/New York: Walter de Gruyter, 2004), p. 129-155. [Editors: Profs. Josef Simon, Günter Abel, & Werner Stegmaier]. 21) The Law of the Name. Orbis Litarum, International Review of Literary Studies no. 51. (Odense: Odense University, 1997), p. 157-177 [Editor: Prof. Morten Nøjgaard]. 20) Kritik af Dekonstruktionen ['Critique of Deconstruction']. Kultur og Klasse no. 75, (Copenhagen: Copenhagen University, 1993), p. 86-99 [Editor: Prof. Jørgen Holmgaard]. 19) Thinking as Passion. Versus no. 57. p. 3-10 (Milano, 1991), [Editor: Prof. Umberto Eco]. 18) Dekonstruktion som en bestemt Læsekunst ['Deconstruction as a certain art of reading'], in Svane, M-L & Ørum, T. (eds.): Køn og Moderne Tider ['Sex and Modernity'; Anthology on feminism], p. 54-74 (Copenhagen 1991). 17) Dagligdagsprog og Kreativt Sprog ['Everyday Language and Creative Language'], in Madsen, Peter (ed.): Almen Litteraturteori ['General Theory of Literature'; Anthology on contemporary theory of literature]. (Copenhagen 1990). 16) Intentionalitet og Kreativ Skaben ['Intentionality and Creative Production'], in Kultur og Klasse no. 64, p. 35-53 (Copenhagen 1989.) 15) Tænkning som Omsorg for Eksistensen ['Thinking as concern with being'], in Slagmark no. 12, Aarhus 1989. 14) Den uendelige Fortolkelighed ['The Infinite Interpretability']. Den Blå Port no. 11, Copenhagen 1989. 13) Om Forståelse ['About Understanding']. NSU, no. 28, Reykjavik 1988. 12) Filosofien som sin egen Genstand ['Philosophy as its own Object']. Profil no. 3, Oslo 1987. 11) Selv-dekonstruktion ['Self-Deconstruction']. Tid Skrift, no.7, Copenhagen 1987. 10) Habermas mellem Moderne og Postmoderne Fornuft ['Habermas between Modern & Postmodern Reason]. Slagmark no. 6, Aarhus 1986. 9) Viljen til Spillet ['The Will to Play']. Semiotik no. 9, Copenhagen 1986. 8) Det indre Teater ['The Interior Theater']. Agrippa 7th vol., no. 4, Copenhagen 1986. 7) Undervejs gennem Sproget ['On the Way through Language']. Litteratur og Samfund no. 39, Copenhagen 1985. 6) Døden er en Kvinde ['Death is a Woman']. Litteratur og Samfund no. 36, Copenhagen 1983. 5) Sandhedens Figur ['The Figure of Truth']. Tid Skrift no. 2, Copenhagen 1983. 4) Anmeldelse af P. Lübcke's Filosofiens Historie [Review of P. Lübcke's 'Filosofiens Historie']. Semiotik, no. 5-6, Copenhagen 1983. 3) Kunsten: At forføre ['The art of/as Seduction']. Semiotik, no. 5-6, Copenhagen 1983. 2) Skema, Grammatik og Metafysik ['Scheme, Grammar, and Metaphysics']. Tid Skrift no. 1, Copenhagen 1983. 1) Brandts Talende Krop ['The Speaking Body of Brandt']. Litteratur og Samfund, no. 32, Copenhagen 1982. Other Miscellaneous Writings: 1) The Last Journey. Film Manuscript. Commissioned by film-director/producer Ole Bornedal. Feb. 2009. Translations (English & German into Danish): 3) Friedrich Nietzsche: Dionysos-Dithyramben/Dionysos Dityramber.. In: Efter Emancipationen, (Copenhagen: Basilisk Press, 1985). 2) Appignanesi/Zarate: Freud for Beginners/Freud for Begyndere. (Copenhagen: Basilisk Press, 1984). 1) Coward/Ellis: Language and Materialism/Sprog og Materialisme. (Copenhagen: Rhodos Press, 1981). Conferences, Lectures, and Seminars: 20) International Conference on Nietzsche's Genealogy of Morals. Invited as Plenary Speaker on "The Priest and the Slave: Nietzsche's 'Critique of Ideology'." (University of Brasilia, Brazil; third week of October, 2012. Organizer Professor André Garcia). 19) Seminar on Nietzsche. Invited to give seminar on Nietzsche on theme: "Nietzsche after Postmodernism"; (UFMG Belo Horizonte, Brazil; second week of October, 2012. Organizer, Professor Rogério Lopes). 18) International Workshop on Kant and Nietzsche on Religion. "Nietzsche's Deconstruction of the Christian-Kantian 'Good Will,' and its Political Implications" (UFMG Belo Horizonte, Brazil; 6-7 October, 2012. Organizer, Professor Rogério Lopes). 17) International Conference on Kant and Nietzsche. Invited as Plenary Speaker on, "The Interpreting Eye: The Development of Kant's 'for-us' into a Theory of Perception in Schopenhauer, Helmholtz, Lange, and Nietzsche." (UFMG Belo Horizonte, Brazil; 3-5 October, 2012. Organizer, Professor Rogério Lopes). 16) International Conference on Derrida: The Eternal Destruction of the Always Different: A Response to Nietzsche and Derrida (Derrida Today, University of Irvine, California, 11-13 July, 2012). 15) International Conference on Derrida: On Essentialistic and Formalistic Notions of Truth: On Deconstructing 'Truth' as Regulative Idea in Habermas and Kant. (Derrida Today, British Academy, London, July 2010). 14) International Conference: Perception, Conceptualization, and Interpretation: On the Logical Foundation for Interpretability. (IAPL: International Association of Philosophy and Literature. Nicosia, Cyprus. June 2007). 13) International Conference: Organized and chaired the Panel: "The Future of Deconstruction". Gave the paper: On Reading and Misreading Nietzsche in Deconstruction (ACLA: American Comparative Literature Association. Puebla, Mexico. April 2007.) 12) International Conference: The Subtle Art of Seduction – The Sexual Politics of the Metaphysicians; from Mozart to Kierkegaard, Nietzsche, and Freud. (IAPL: International Association of Philosophy and Literature. Freiburg – Strasbourg – Basel, Germany, June 2006). 11) International Conference: Will-to-Power and Reality Principle – Understanding Nietzsche’s Will-to-Power in the Context of Freud’s Neurological Writings. (ACLA: American Comparative Literature Association. Princeton University, USA. March 2006.) 10) International Conference: Chiasmatic Reasoning – Strategies of Self-Immunitization in Jürgen Habermas. (IAPL: The International Association for Philosophy and Literature. University of Helsinki, Finland, 2005). 9) International Conference: Eternalizing the Self. A Master-Formula for Auto-Affection: ‘Wie Man Wird Was Man Ist’. (ASCP: Australasian Society for Continental Philosophy. Macquarie University, December, 2004). 8) International Conference: On the Possibility of a Nietzschean Literary Criticism. (SCLA: Southern Comparative Literature Association. University of Texas, Austin, USA. September 2003.) 7) International Conference: A Silent World – On the Question of Reality in Nietzsche. (ACLA: American Comparative Literature Association. Cal State San Marcos, San Diego, USA. April 2003.) 6) International Conference: Three Objections to the Neo-Pragmatism of Stanley Fish. (ACLA: American Comparative Literature Association), Cal State San Marcos, San Diego, USA. April 2003.) 5) International Conference: The Pleasure of Resistance – On the Theory of Pleasure in Nietzsche. (Nietzsche Society & SPEP: Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy. Loyola University, Chicago, USA. October 2002.) 4) Local Lecture: Why the Death Drive? – On the Paradoxes and Ambiguities in Freud’s Arguments for a Death Drive. (CVSP-Program, American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon. April 2002.) 3) International Conference: ‘The Origin of Language’ in Analytic Philosophy. (MLA: Modern Language Association of America. New Orleans, USA. December 2001.) 2) International Conference: A Desire for Reason. (SPEP: Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy. Goucher College, Baltimore, USA. October 2001.) 1) International Conference: Living in the Mirror. (ACLA: American Comparative Literature Association. University of Colorado, Boulder, USA. March 2001.)

IN SEARCH OF THE LOST TIME: READING CHARLES BAUDELAIRE IN HAGIWARA SAKUTARO AND JEONG JIYONG

J. Han, J. Han
Gyeongsang National University

Abstract: Hagiwara Sakutarō (1886-1942) is probably the most influential of Japan’s modern poets since he was the first to have made an attempt to write Western-style modern poetry. He has been credited to have introduced French symbolist poetry, represented by Charles Baudelaire, and have founded “free-verse, colloquial poetry in Japanese.” Thanks to his Western-influenced gaze, Toshiko Ellis argues, Japan’s modern poets could have formed a sense of “modern subject” and also discovered “the modern landscape.” Appropriate to the reputation of “the Japanese Baudelaire,” thus, Sakutarō’s “modern” features are resonant with Baudelairean images such as pain, disease, putrefaction, slugs (“black gland on glistening gland”), wet tangled hair, and damp clay. Blue Cat (1923) represents a typically Baudelairean theme, dealing with “the encroaching sense of ennui in a more or less philosophical manner” (Ellis 63). Considering Ezra Pound’s early parts of The Cantos (1925), T.S. Eliot’s The Waste Land (1922) and Wallace Stevens’ Harmonium (1923), Sakutarō had clearly been beating his drum in Blue Cat to the Western tune of the modern period. Sakutarō’s influence, however, was not limited to Japanese poets. Korean poets in the colonial period such as Jeong Jiyong, Kim Sowol, Baek Seok, Yun Dongju who stayed in Japan for the study, were all aware of his new poetry and deeply influenced by his Western-style modernist experiments. Particularly, Jeong Jiyong (1902- c. 1950), the first Korean modernist poet, who majored in English literature at the Doshisha University, admired Baudelaire and Sakutarō publicly and endeavored to write his own Western-style modern poetry in the early phase of his poetic career. His representative poems such as “Café France,” “The Deck of a Ship,” “A Sad Train,” “Sea” poems, “A Sea-Gull,” and “My Hometown” resound with Baudelairean symbolist images and Sakutarōesque sensuous language. This paper, therefore, makes an attempt to trace the poetic trajectories of both Sakutarō and Jiyong who share the same poetic origin, Baudelaire. In doing so, this paper suggests an alternative reading of Sakutarō’s and Jiyong’s voice as an eternal wanderer. To be specific, based upon Henri Bergson’s conceptions of matter and memory, this paper will shed a new light on the intellectualism and the nihilistic retreat that have been so far viewed as the limitations or weaknesses of both poets and then indicate that those strategies have been both poets’ deliberate attempts to capture the decay of the traditional Beauty/Ideal. Ultimately, this paper tries to suggest that Sakutarō and Jiyong have embodied the most quintessential mode of existence as a modern man.

Biography: JIHEE HAN is Associate professor of English at Gyeongsang National University, the Republic of Korea. She has published many essays on Adrienne Rich, Walt Whitman, and Langston Hughes, World Literature, and Korean poetry and novels. Korean translation of Collected Poems of Adrienne Rich (Moonji 2011), “Ecology and Korean Ghangho Poetics” Ecology and Poetics, ed. by Franca Bellarsi (Peter Lang 2011), “On Korea” in Cultural History of Reading, ed. by Gabrielle Watling (Greenwood 2010), “Korean Novelists and Novels” in World Novels, ed. by Michael Sollars (Facts on File 2009), "Korean Poets and Poetry" in World Poetry, ed. by Victoria Arana (Facts on File 2008).

S3 LITTERATURE COMPAREE ET MONDIALISATION / COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND GLOBALIZATION

LUMBER AND LITERATURE: FORESTATION, NOVELIZATION, GLOBALIZATION

B. Martin

Williams College (université)

Abstract: The etymological roots of the French words bois (wood) and buche (log) are linked to those of the word bouquin (book). From lumber to paper and pages, from oral tales told around logging camp fires to novels on woodsmen and forestry, I want to examine an overlooked figure in French literary representation: the forestier or bucheron. In the French literary tradition, the woodsman is a heroic figure in medieval fabliaux, seventeenth-century fairy (La Fontaine, Perrault), and nineteenth-century novels (Balzac, Stendhal, Sand, Flaubert, Zola). At the heart of this lumber tradition is a celebration of the role that the forest plays in the French imagination. The wooded landscapes of Compiègne, Fontainebleau, the Ardennes, and Berry have for centuries served as royal hunting grounds, provided natural resources, and inspired folk legends and literature. From Europe to the New World, this French tradition of lumber literature continued in New France: in seventeenth-century travel narratives (Marquette, Joliet), nineteenth-century tales of Quebecois trappers and woodsmen, and in an entire genre of twentieth-century bucheron novels (Beaugrand, Hemon). As we struggle to make the transition from the coal economies created by nineteenth-century industrialization to the green economies envisioned by twenty-first century technologies, what might these works of lumber literature contribute to discourses on ecological modernity, environmental studies, and eco-criticism? During this conference on Comparative Literature as a Critical Approach and its thematic questions on Literature: Just Another Comparative Science? and on Nations and Beyond: Linguistic Areas, Literary Continents, Globalization?, what might this literary history of the forest reveal about the relationships between lumber literature and science, Francophone Europe and North America, the literary and ecological impact of (de)forestation, and the transition from paper to digital books?

Biography: Brian Martin is Associate Professor of French and Comparative Literature at Williams College (USA), where he teaches courses in nineteenth and twentieth century French and Comparative Literature. A Fulbright scholar at the University of Stockholm (1993-94) and a Ph.D. in French at Harvard University (2003), Martin taught American literature at the Ecole Normale Supérieure (Fontenay-aux-Roses, 1999-2000). He is the author of the book, Napoleonic Friendship: Military Fraternity, Intimacy, and Sexuality in Nineteenth-Century France (2011), which examines the history of intimate friendship among soldiers in the French military, from Napoleon to the First World War. Martin's work focuses broadly on gender and sexuality in France, and on Nordic masculinities from Scandinavia to Quebec.

LOOKING AT THE MARGINS IN INDIAN DRAMA IN ENGLISH: CROSS-CULTURAL ISSUES IN THE GLOBAL CONTEXT

M. Trikha

Director Centre for Canadian Studies

Abstract: Title: Looking at the Margins in Indian Drama in English: Cross-Cultural Issues in the Global Context.
Abstract: Search of any usable definition of culture which is cultivated over the centuries by a country is the sum of all that forms its arts and religions, traditions and rituals and emotions and thoughts and other related factors like language and particular knowledge structures which have led to the harmonious development of the faculty of man in the course of centuries. It enables man to have full possession of its powers and thus imbibes "the history of human spirit" to use the expression of Matthew Arnold from the Preface of his book Literature and Dogma. It was in the mid-seventies that a few things crystallized within the socio-cultural practices and the academic institutions and various disciplines – philosophy, architect, literary studies and other discoveries – which led to the revelation that "No culture can live if it attempts to be exclusive" as Mahatma Gandhi perceptively observed. It generated the contemporary culture which rejects the hierarchy and desires to express that authority of the common man with the changing relationship between the cultural and creative activity and establishing the significance of self reflection and self designation. However, the cross-cultural experiences especially of minorities are so subtle and difficult to define and appreciate. The sharp issues of concrete realities and vague ambitions, likes and dislikes, memories and desires weave the tapestries of different cross-cultural currents and the societies face the "lover's quarrel" of bitter certainties and imaginary uncertainties. It is truer in the case of minorities because they have made irreversible choices governed at a point of time by the priorities and questions that guided their own mode of self-understanding; consequently, they have to live with them though they keep listening to the ambivalent and even nostalgic socio-cultural voices of the world which they have left behind or their own present world gradually changing beyond recognition. The paper attempts to analyse on two plays – Asif Currimbhoy's This Alien... this Native

Land and Mahesh Datani's Final Solutions to focus on the complex problems of different minorities in India, a land of endless diversities and infinite solutions. Manorama Trikha

Biography: Search of any usable definition of culture which is cultivated over the centuries by a country is the sum of all that forms its arts and religions, traditions and rituals and emotions and thoughts and other related factors like language and particular knowledge structures which have led to the harmonious development of the faculty of man in the course of centuries. It enables man to have full possession of its powers and thus imbibes "the history of human spirit" to use the expression of Matthew Arnold from the Preface of his book Literature and Dogma. It was in the mid-seventies that a few things crystallized within the socio-cultural practices and the academic institutions and various disciplines – philosophy, architect, literary studies and other discoveries – which led to the revelation that "No culture can live if it attempts to be exclusive" as Mahatma Gandhi perceptively observed. It generated the contemporary culture which rejects the hierarchy and desires to express that authority of the common man with the changing relationship between the cultural and creative activity and establishing the significance of self reflection and self designation. However, the cross-cultural experiences especially of minorities are so subtle and difficult to define and appreciate. The sharp issues of concrete realities and vague ambitions, likes and dislikes, memories and desires weave the tapestries of different cross-cultural currents and the societies face the "lover's quarrel" of bitter certainties and imaginary uncertainties. It is truer in the case of minorities because they have made irreversible choices governed at a point of time by the priorities and questions that guided their own mode of self-understanding; consequently, they have to live with them though they keep listening to the ambivalent and even nostalgic socio-cultural voices of the world which they have left behind or their own present world gradually changing beyond recognition. The paper attempts to analyse on two plays – Asif Currimbhoy's This Alien... this Native Land and Mahesh Datani's Final Solutions to focus on the complex problems of different minorities in India, a land of endless diversities and infinite solutions.

THE LIFE OF GURU PADMASAMBHAVA: A COMPARATIVE STUDY

R. Chadha

University of Jammu

Abstract: Guru Padmasambhava was a sage guru who is said to have transmitted Buddhism to Bhutan, Tibet and the neighboring countries in the 8th century. Padmasambhava means The Lotus-Born, as according to tradition, he was incarnated as an eight-year-old child appearing in a lotus blossom floating in Lake Dhanakosha, in the kingdom of Oddiyāna, traditionally identified with the Swat Valley of South Asia in present-day Pakistan. In those lands he is better known as Guru Rinpoche ("Precious Guru") or Lopen Rinpoche, or, simply, Padum in Tibet, where people regard him as the second Buddha. He is further considered an emanation of Buddha Amitabha and traditionally even venerated as "a second Buddha". As early as the twelfth century, scores of biographies have been created, considerably expanding the stories of Padmasambhava's life. There exist in the Tibetan language, as part of Tibetan literature, quite a number of biographies of Padmasambhava. The oldest of them all appeared in the 13th century. These biographies are very interesting indeed and contain a great deal of very valuable material link. There are also available many accounts of Guru Rinpoche's life, written by great scholars such as A.M. Blondeau, Jacob Dalton, Ngawang Zangpo and others, in the English language. Further, there are available in the Tibetan manuscripts discovered near Dunhuang, two passages relating to the early development of the legends surrounding this famous Buddhist master. The present paper proposes to make a comparative study of the various biographies of Guru Padmasambhava, produced not only in Tibet and India but also in the West (in English as well as Tibetan), along with other source material from Tibetan manuscripts (available in translation) so as to show how the legendary saint has been viewed across cultures and times. This analysis reveals mutability in the early biographies of Padmasambhava. The present inquiry is of significant importance in that it allows Western historians to see Guru Padmasambhava's relevance to contemporary life by uncovering the historical and human side of this great teacher. Such a study, in its own way, sheds light on the inner meaning and the inner significance of life.

Biography: Mr. Rajat Chadha is a freelance journalist writing for different dailies of Jammu and Kashmir, India. He has a special interest in ancient folklore, mythology and culture studies.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE AND THE EMERGING POETICS OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE WITHIN AN INDIAN CONTEXT

P. Parikh

Whistling Woods Film Institute

Abstract: In my paper, Rabindranath Tagore and the Emerging Poetics of Comparative Literature within an Indian Context, I will argue that creative and critical discourse of Rabindranath Tagore offers a possibility of a poetics of non-resentment as well as a significant articulation of emergence of newly formed images of being human-in-the-world. I will do this with informed re-readings of various literary practices of Tagore, situating them within and around the frameworks of historical, epistemological as well as existential contexts, while keeping alive the nuances of open spaces scattered and suggested that surrounds all his activities, in the personal as well as public spheres. I will emphasize reception of Tagore in different Indian languages as a story, both of the articulation of identities, negotiations, creative strategies as well as an energetic and fruitful recovery of fresh literary practices within the languages of different regions. My presentation will conclude with a suggestion that engagement with Tagore's writings provides us with a number of openings which is at the heart of the discourse of Comparative Literature in the Indian Context

Biography: Prabodh Parikh is a poet/fiction writer who mostly ends up writing letters to friends in Gujarati/English. He studied philosophy in the US in seventies and retired as a teacher of Philosophy in 2005. At present he is Faculty In-charge of International Art Literature and Culture, Whistling Woods International, a film school in Mumbai. He is also the Director of Katha Centre for Film Studies, which is involved in project related to Film Curatorial Practice. His lifelong love for Jazz (Village Vanguard, New York), Beer (pubs everywhere) and Sada Dosa (Tiffin services in the streets of Thiruvananthapuram), takes him to different cities of the world, where he also lectures on contemporary Indian Literature, Arts and Cinema. Gandhi and Tagore continue to engage him, as much as, Buddhist monasteries. He last showed his drawings and paintings in San Francisco, 1973.

S2 QUESTIONS DE POETIQUE COMPAREE / QUESTIONS OF COMPARATIVE POETICS

ON THE BIBLIOGRAPHIC HABITATS AND BOOKISH LIVES OF THE SPRING FRAGRANCES

N.Z. Da

University of Michigan--Ann Arbor

Abstract: Sui Sin Far's 1910 "Spring Fragrance" stories measure out cross-cultural communication in bibliographic terms. The world of the Spring Fragrance stories is so bibliographically small you cannot take a turn in it without running into books or some form of materialized literature. If a poem is read, someone hears it. If someone hears it, a neighbor will be able to explain it. If a poem enters into someone's mind it will be repeated and written down. If something interesting happens it has to be written down. If it is written down it has to be shared. If a book exists it has to be seen, touched, broached in conversation. Saturated with books—books on shelves, books being written, books read out loud, books shipped from abroad—and materialized literature— literature recited, overhead, shared, telegrammed, given as advice—these two stories present the clash of cultures as the literary mediations. Books and materialized literature do triple duty as the catalyst, medium and message of net change in the opinion or prejudices about the other and thus provide the means by which cross-cultural communication can be differentiated by type and degree. This essay reads the Spring Fragrance stories as a meta-reflection on the conjunction of book theory and cross-cultural studies. Are books actually closer together (in geographical and mental space alike) or do stories simply simulate what is actually a methodological necessity in the discipline of cross-cultural literary analysis? In the study of Sino-American exchanges before the twentieth century where archives are small and materials scarce, scholars depend on the re-presentation of historical space as a bibliographic space in which people traverse and negotiate differences via texts. For example, we say: Mark Twain and Liang Qichao visited Hawai'i around the same time—therefore they must have worked on each other's imaginaries. The publication of the English translation of the Chinese classic Hong Long Meng (Dream of the Red Chambers) in 1896 had to have influenced the target audience of that publishing house. Because original reactions and voices are such rare commodities in transnational studies, it has become standard practice to gauge transnational and crosscultural exchanges by tracing reception and textual traces. Sociolinguistics applied to literary criticism has enabled critics to defer to literary contact as the means by which communication occurs between parties who are otherwise not likely to communicate with one another, from whence we get the scholarly practice of tracking literature that "travels" to foreign locales, or vice-versa, paying out as it goes the transversal politics and aesthetics that the sedentary physical bodies of the authors could not. Literary contact, now no longer restricted to genealogies of influence or scenes of exhaustive reading, has, in a sense, displaced cultural contact in literary studies. Sui Sin Far's stories explore the fiction that books are not only nearer in cross-national spaces, but also more mediatory. They examine the fantasy that the books of others and the books of otherness are constantly being read, with the effect of that reading producing the change we can believe in. By animating "bookish" lives in bibliographic habitats, they also help us assess the extent to which methodologies in cross-cultural/transnational studies depend on, only to hide by transposing on to representation, such simulated literary contacts.

Biography: Nan Z. Da is a PhD Candidate in the Department of English Language and Literature at the University of Michigan-Ann Arbor specializing in long nineteenth-century American literature and letters. She is currently working on a dissertation that uses Sino-American literary exchanges from 1800 to 1910 to ask what difference, if any, proximity to the literature of others makes and to assess the possibilities and perils of envisioning transnational space as bibliographic space.

TOWARDS A COMPARATIVE POETICS: "UNIFIED FIELD THEORY" PERSPECTIVES

A. Merilai

UNIVERSITY OF TARTU

Abstract: The theory and practice of today's humanities are shaped by a postmodern methodological pluralism, and teaching proceeds from an unprecedented openness to innovation. There are theoretical clusters that focus on the form and structure of a work, combined with stylistic, author-centered or reader-centered approaches, socio-semantic interpretations and intertextual relations. Contemporary literary research has to integrate an overwhelmingly rich multitude of different productive methods and critical deconstructions: literary historical, bio-bibliographical and reception studies, close reading, structuralist, semiotic, linguistic, narratological, psychoanalytical, socio-psychological (gender and memory studies, postcolonialism, new historicism), intercultural studies, post-structuralist discursive, hermeneutical-phenomenological, mytho-theoretical, analytical philosophical, ecocritical, statistical, digital and other constructive approaches. Such scholarly versatility is necessary as different authors, texts and phenomena can actualize separate points of view and methodologies. Thus, the in-depth study of literatures should take place within a comprehensive unified meta-multi-theoretical field that integrates diverse paradigms and polylogical perspectives central to current literary research. Although the comparative meta-theory or comparative poetics do not aim to erase inevitable incoherencies and exclusive disparities, a synchronization of meta-languages can often be achieved at the appropriate levels of description. No scholar is expected to have full command of all relevant discourses, hence the need for shared synergies.

Biography: Arne Merilai

Chair Professor of Estonian Literature

Institute of Culture Studies and Arts
Faculty of Philosophy
University of Tartu
Estonia

LE NOIR AFRICAIN ET L'IDENTITÉ NATIONALE BRÉSILIENNE: LE ROMANTISME ET LA VISION FRANÇAISE (DÉSACRALISANTE)

M.T. Cavalcante
ULBRA

Abstract: TRANSCONTINENTALES/TRANSCONTINENTAL STUDIES: Les Relations Littéraires entre la France et le Brésil Prof^a Dr^a Moema Cavalcante Les relations littéraires, philosophiques et théoriques entre la France et le Brésil sont anciennes et remontent aux premiers siècles des Découvertes maritimes; elles se poursuivent toujours, soit par le biais d'idées et de concepts assimilés, soit à travers des études littéraires entreprises par des écrivains français ayant séjourné au Brésil ou par des professeurs qui se sont investis dans l'étude des concepts et de la méthodologie littéraire. Nous allons présenter, discuter et analyser ce phénomène de façon sommaire et en fournir des exemples, tout en signalant les trois grandes étapes, pour nous arrêter brièvement sur l'un des cas ponctuels des relations littéraires entre les deux pays et mettre en relief des données plus marquantes. Tout au long du premier siècle d'existence de la littérature brésilienne, on trouve des textes de voyageurs étrangers, parmi lesquels des Français, qui décrivent la nouvelle littérature et ses relations avec le Portugal et la France. La littérature de voyage débute juste après 1500, alors que seule la thématique littéraire peut être considérée comme brésilienne. Les auteurs, le langage et les styles sont bel et bien européens, étrangers à la Période Coloniale. Ces écrits évoquent des aspects de la nouvelle terre, ses habitants sauvages, ses beautés naturelles, les singularités de son peuple. 1^o Moment: On peut considérer que la question de l'identité nationale brésilienne est déjà posée avec les formes littéraire primitives et les premières analyses textuelles. Sous l'intitulé « Littérature Portugaise », mais tout en cherchant des différences entre les nationalités, on a retranscrit des textes dont les sens étaient différents de ceux des textes écrits en Europe en général. Le sentiment de l'exaltation nationale a été décrit par des Européens donc, et dans le cas qui nous intéresse, l'identité surgit d'un mélange avec d'autres sentiments chez des écrivains venus de France et/ou européens. Deux auteurs ont écrit en français: SISMOND DE SISMONDI dans De La Littérature Du Midi de l'Europe publié en 1813, où l'auteur fait l'analyse de textes et de caractéristiques d'écrivains, et examine leurs ressemblances et leurs différences avec des écrivains du Portugal, tout en les considérant comme des écrivains portugais ce qu'indique le titre et où un chapitre est dédié à la littérature du Brésil. C'est également le cas de FERDINAND DENIS dans Résumé de l'Histoire Littéraire, où il souligne le caractère désormais brésilien de cette littérature, du fait de l'originalité des textes qui annoncent la rupture avec l'ambiance européenne, et du fait de ses traits et du sens de l'identité qui caractérisent les textes nouveaux. 2^o Moment: LE NOIR AFRICAIN ET L'IDENTITE NATIONALE BRÉSILIENNE: LE ROMANTISME ET LA VISION FRANÇAISE (DESACRALISANTE) Pendant la période romantique, essentiellement, les relations entre la France et le Brésil se sont exprimées grâce à des influences culturelles et/ou littéraires, dans le domaine de la philosophie et dans les arts en général. Pour ceux qui étudient la Littérature Brésilienne, il n'est pas difficile de repérer l'influence française dans l'expression des idées, des concepts et des textes littéraires, dans la philosophie, la vision du monde et la notion de Patrie. A la Littérature Brésilienne, le Romantisme a apporté l'exaltation des indigènes comme point important dans la formation identitaire, et les grands auteurs romantiques ont célébré l'Indien en tant que symbole de la Patrie. Cependant, beaucoup d'entre eux oublient une voix qui commençait à parler pour la Patrie et lui apportait le sang métis qui allait donner naissance à la Nation Brésilienne: celle du NOIR. La philosophie et la Littérature, ainsi que les autres arts, ont quasiment exclu le Noir du panorama littéraire brésilien, ce qui était également le cas dans d'autres pays européens et donc en France. L'homme africain subissait la discrimination de l'homme blanc et était traité comme un animal, entassé au fond d'une cale. Mais le Romantisme brésilien a fait surgir une nouvelle identité nationale avec le personnage noir chez JOSE DE ALENCAR, O Tronco do Ipê. (Rio: Ática, 1977). Certains auteurs rappellent qu'il existe des courants croisés entre fiction et culture¹ et mentionnent des références où l'on évoque des concepts comparables à ceux d'oeuvres brésiliennes du Romantisme, comme on peut le constater chez AFRANIO COUTINHO² dont on parlera ici. Le thème pourrait servir de support à une analyse du roman français, avec des caractéristiques comparables à celles d'un roman brésilien ou se déroulant en France. Ce qui nous amène donc à analyser O Tronco do Ipê en tant que roman qui exprime des sens nés dans les deux pays (ou plus), comme le Brésil (ici) et la France (là-bas). Expliquons-nous. Si, d'un côté, la structure narrative, les idées principales et les thèmes abordés contiennent tous les ingrédients d'un roman français, tels une histoire d'amour, de beaux personnages, du suspense et du mystère, de l'amour et du sang, ou un paysage effroyable servant de décor au roman, d'un autre côté le personnage noir est dépeint comme un sorcier, créateur de tamtams, sinistre et malheureux, mais paradoxalement ami des jeunes gens qui meurent et sont enterrés au pied d'un ipê (arbre brésilien) centenaire, dans un syncrétisme mythique et religieux, dont les rituels se prêtent à la communication avec les Morts - explication et consolation devant l'effroyable mort. Mêlés à ces données de la culture africaine, surgissent des fées, des lutins et des saints catholiques... Pour conclure, on pourrait aussi réfléchir sur un 3^e Moment, c'est-à-dire le Modernisme, avec l'inclusion/exclusion de MARIO DE ANDRADE dans l'Anthropophagisme afin d'évoquer des idées et des sens ultérieurs, ce que nous ferons à une autre occasion...

ALENCAR, JOSÉ de. O Tronco do Ipê. Rio: Ática, 1977. L'Avocat, Françoise et Duprat. Fiction et Culture. Paris: Éditions Lucie, 2010. COUTINHO, Eduardo. Identities in Process : Studies in Comparative Literature. Beyond Binarisms ... Rio de Janeiro : Aeroplano, 2009.

Biography: CAVALCANTE, Moema Terezinha Pinto est professeure de littérature générale et comparée. Elle a le Diplôme de DOCTEUR - Littérature Comparée à la Université de Limoges, France, où elle a présentée et réusit la Thèse sur le thème: identité nationale brésilienne. M^{me}. Moema Cavalcante a travaillé dans la recherche à la Université Luthérienne du Brésil, ULBRA, à Canoas, Rio Grande do Sul, Brésil, où elle a dirigé une équipe de recherches depuis une dizaine d'années. Elle est auteur de plusieurs livres sur Littérature Brésilienne et éducation.

CURTIUS ET ORTEGA — SUR LA RÉCEPTION DE SPENGLER

M. Tsuda
Osaka University

Abstract: Curtius et Ortega - sur la réception de Spengler Masayuki Tsuda (Université d'Osaka) Ernst Robert Curtius est bien connu comme l'auteur de Europäische Literatur und lateinisches Mittelalter (La littérature européenne et le Moyen Age latin, 1948). Ce travail montre clairement son identité d'Européen. Toutefois, la construction de cette identité d'européen fut bien compliquée. Après la Guerre franco-allemande de 1870, il est né Allemand en Alsace. Or, on ne peut expliquer son action de rassembler l'idée d'Europe avec son identité alsacienne. Dans cette communication, j'aimerais comparer Curtius et José Ortega y Gasset en ce qui concerne la réception de Spengler dans le but d'analyser la relation de Curtius avec son époque. Curtius et Ortega étaient attachés par des liens d'amitié. Le philologue allemand et le philosophe espagnol se sont écrit de 1923 à 1954. Les deux étaient critiques journalistiques. Ils partageaient une curiosité pour la philosophie de la vie, la littérature contemporaine et l'Empire romain. Cependant, la réception de Der Untergang des Abendlandes (Le Déclin de l'Occident, 1918-1922) de Spengler était très différente pour les deux. Tandis que Ortega reconnaît que la première Guerre mondiale a été un acte suicidaire pour l'Europe, Curtius ne nie jamais la supériorité européenne sur le monde entier. Toutefois, la pensée de Spengler constituait une menace pour Curtius et elle l'a conduit à concevoir l'idée d'Europe.

Biography: Masayuki TSUDA est né à Nagasaki (Japon) en 1980. Il obtient un diplôme de 2^e cycle universitaire (M.A.) en littérature française de l'Université de Kyoto. Dans le mémoire de maîtrise, il affirme que "le temps perdu" et "le temps retrouvé" chez Proust correspondent à "Paradise Lost" et "Paradise Regained" chez John Milton. À présent, il prépare la thèse de doctorat sur les critiques de Ernst Robert Curtius.

S1 SEXUALITE, GENRE, IDENTITE (LITTERATURE ET CINEMA) / SEXUALITY, GENRE, IDENTITY (LITERATURE AND CINEMA)

ARCHITECTURE AND GENDER IN W.G. SEBALD AND YOKO TAWADA

C.D. Rupprecht

Queens College, City University of New York

Abstract: If architectural criticism has conventionally drawn on psychoanalytic narratives (as in the cliché of womblike domestic interiors versus phallic skyscrapers), literary representations of architecture, as related to the story of the human subject, have the potential to subvert such narratives. When it comes to representations of historical trauma, is architecture a structure of containment, or of substitution? Is affect produced or deflected by these fictitious architectural structures? Does architecture in literature function like Lacan's armor of an alienating identity; or as the Freudian topography of the Oedipal family romance? - From a psychoanalytic point of view, I address these theoretical questions regarding architecture and emotions in literature in terms of gender and kinship, specifically in conjunction with maternally coded figures and spaces. My paper analyzes and compares two postmodern novels: W.G. Sebald's Austerlitz (2001) tells the story of a Holocaust survivor orphaned by the Kindertransport. His expertise in 19th-century architectural history - including train stations and fortifications - reveals itself to be a defensive structure that leads, however, to what Freud called screen memories (Deckerinnerungen) about his biological mother. As the narrative turns from disaffected descriptions of buildings to the emotional melodrama of mourning the lost maternal figure, the two-dimensional image of the mother displaces three-dimensional structures the protagonist has come to mentally inhabit. As a result, the protagonist's lonely, dislocated and altogether rootless existence is set into sharp relief, undoing the initial function of architecture to provide a different illusion of comfort. At the same time, Austerlitz's relationship to the narrator, who tells this story about the orphan as a stranger, remains distant without emotional closure or catharsis. Whereas Sebald's narrative follows a traditional Freudian trajectory in terms of the emphasis on the Oedipus complex (searching for the maternal by undoing the paternal, i.e., architecture), the second book I discuss, Japanese-German author Yoko Tawada's Das nackte Auge (2004), suggests that architecture itself may have a maternal dimension beyond domestic interiors. The cave-like spaces her initially homeless narrator-protagonist comes to inhabit function as a kind of exterior womb; that, in turn, seems to transcend the loss of parents and country. An illegal Vietnamese refugee, who was abducted by a German man, finds herself in a basement in Paris, then discovers, by extension, the dark cavernous spaces of the movie theaters, where she falls in love with film star Catherine Deneuve. The resulting uncanny, intimate relationship between the narrator-protagonist and Deneuve's two-dimensional screen image contrasts with Sebald's juxtaposition between architecture and the human figure. Tawada's suggestion of erotic desire through use of the Japanese pronoun, anata, culminates in the reader's recognition that the subject has disappeared into Deneuve's movie plots; and that the darkness has swallowed her to reveal that she is nothing but a spirit. Hence Tawada conjures up a space beyond architecture, akin to ancient caves or mythological underground realms, where the dead are said to dwell. Unlike Sebald, who does not foreground the male-male relationship between narrator and protagonist (as he focuses on the heterosexual mother-son relationship), Tawada breaks out of conventional Freudian and architectural narratives. And, whereas Sebald maintains the difference between essence and facade, Tawada's anti-essentialist queer narrative shows that there is an 'other' space: the foundation (basement) that is not part of design and, therefore, outside of history. Or, as Benjamin has described this space: 'the foundations [where] things were interred and sacrificed [the] horrible cabinet of curiosities [that] lies there below.' Both authors write in the aftermath of historical trauma - World War II and Hiroshima - where the question of buildings as ruins and/or sheltering spaces structures the representation of individual subjects and their stories. However, whereas history shapes the subject in Sebald insofar as its ruins signify the trajectory of his past (from a nostalgic perspective: the kinder, gentler 19th century), Tawada's text extends architecture into the realm of affect, where sentiment is not simply transferred away from or onto buildings; but rather itself turns out to be an amorphous, unknown space beyond pre-existing (historical) narratives.

Biography: EDUCATION Ph.D. Comparative Literature, Graduate Center, City University of New York, 1999 B.A. summa cum laude, Comparative Literature, City College, CUNY, 1991 M.A. Coursework in German Literature & Theater, Goethe University, Germany, 1986-88 AWARDS AND HONORS SCMLA/Texas A & M Women's Studies Prize for Best Paper in Gender Studies, 2003 Carolyn G. Heilbrun Prize for Best Dissertation in Women's Studies, 1999 Graduate Center University Fellowship and Tuition Scholarship, 1991-97 BOOKS Womb Fantasies: Subjective Architectures in Postmodern Literature, Film, and Art, under contract at Northwestern University Press. Forthcoming 2013. Subject to Delusions: Narcissism, Modernism, Gender. Evanston: Northwestern University Press, 2006. Dark Spring, novella by Unica Zürn. Translation and Introduction. Cambridge: Exact Change, 2000. PEER-REVIEWED ARTICLES "'I could still see her in my mind's eye': Blurred Boundaries in Uwe Johnson's Anniversaries" Studies in 20th & 21st Century Literature

vol. 34, no. 1 (2010). 103-126. "Post-war Iconographies: Wandering Women in Brecht, Duras, Kluge" South Central Review vol. 23, no. 2 (2006). 36-57. "The Violence of Merging: Unica Zürn's Writing (on) the Body" Studies in 20th Century Literature vol. 27, no. 2 (2003). 335-356. "A 'Body' of Writing: The Voice of Henriette Hardenberg" Women in German Yearbook 17 (2001). 165-179. COMMISSIONED ARTICLES "Co pani robi w Niemczech? - Emine Özdamar and Yoko Tawada" Tygiel Kultury no. 7-9 (2005), Lodz, Poland - special issue on Germany. 124-128. "Zwischen Geburt und Tod: Das Bild der Anderen in Barnes' Nachtgewächs" Die Magie der Unterbrechung, ed. C. Hilmes and D. Mathy. Bielefeld: Aisthesis, 1999. 146-157. CREATIVE WRITING "The Walk" Room of One's Own: A Space for Women's Writing vol. 17, no. 3 (1994), Vancouver, Canada. 54-61. BOOK REVIEWS Eva Kormann, Anke Gilleir and Angelika Schlimmer, eds. Textmaschinenkörper (Amsterdam: Rodopi, 2006), German Quarterly 80:2 (2007). 262-263. Andreas Mayer and Lydia Marinelli, Dreaming by the Book (New York: Other Press, 2003), German Studies Review 28:3 (2005). 643-644. TRANSLATIONS Jörn Etzold, "Quick, Baz Get Woven: The Words are on 'Generalstreik'" Preface to J. Löffelholz's Art Book, The vex Chumps quickly In. Frankfurt am Main, 2011. 15-18. Jonathan Petropoulos, "The Primacy of Kulturpolitik" Emigrants and Exiles: A Lost Generation of Austrian Artists in America, 1920-1950, ed. John Czaplicka. Chicago, 1996. 101-131. INVITED LECTURES "From the Dark Spring of Language: The Poetry and Prose of Unica Zürn" Reading from Dark Spring with Commentary, Poets House/The Drawing Center, New York, 2009. "Fantasmes Coloniaux chez Marguerite Duras" Séminaire de littératures post-coloniales, École Normale Supérieure, Paris; and Université de Lyon II, 2005. "Bodily Inscriptions: The Text of Unica Zürn" Hewdig Leser Lecture, Department of Germanic Studies, Indiana University, Bloomington, 2002. "Writing Vision: Sigmund Freud and Unica Zürn" Department of Languages and Literatures, University of Utah, Salt Lake City, 1999. CONFERENCE PAPERS "Yoko Tawada's Basements" American Comparative Literature Association, Brown University, 2012. "Figures of Uncertainty: Children in Alexander Kluge's Films and Short Stories" German Studies Association, Washington, D.C., 2009. "Whither Historicity? Trauma in Duras's Hiroshima mon amour and Johnson's Jahrestage" Cultural Studies Association (U.S.) Annual Meeting, New York University, 2008. "(In)fertile Grounds: Mourning and Procreation in Uwe Johnson and Jean-Luc Godard" The Louisville Conference on Literature and Culture since 1900, Kentucky, 2007. "Hidden in the Cut? Alexander Kluge's Montage of German History" American Comparative Literature Association, University Park, Pennsylvania, 2005. "A Family of Stone and Hearts Transformed into Deserts: Marguerite Duras and Etel Adnan" South Central Modern Language Association, Hot Springs, Arkansas, 2003. "Castration Anxiety Revisited: Germany as 'Mother' in Kutlug. Ataman's film Lola & Bilidikid" German Studies Association, New Orleans, Louisiana, 2003. "The 'I' that Floods the World: Poetry between Psychoanalysis and Maritime Existence" American Comparative Literature Association, San Juan, Puerto Rico, 2002. "(W)ri(gh)ting 'the Third Sex': Nightwood and 19th Century German Sexual Science" American Comparative Literature Association, Boulder, Colorado, 2001. "Expressionism and Narcissism: Henriette Hardenberg and Sigmund Freud" German Studies Association, Atlanta, Georgia, 1999. "Performing Representation: Unica Zürn's Mechanical Subject" Modern Language Association, Toronto, Canada, 1997. "Mother Tongue, Other Tongue: Özdamar, Wodin, Scheinhardt, Moniková" presented w/ Anja Grothe, American Comparative Literature Association, Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, 1997. "Tief im Garten ihrer Kindheit: Unica Zürn's Construction of Artistic Identity" German Studies Graduate Student Conference, Duke University, Durham, 1996. GRANTS PSC-CUNY Travel Award for Research at Uwe Johnson Archive, Frankfurt, Germany 2008 PSC-CUNY Research Award "Lessing, Brecht, and the Theater of Psychoanalysis" 2003-2004 PSC-CUNY Research Award "Subject to Delusions: Narcissism, Modernism, Gender" 2002-2003

AU BERCEAU DE LA PHILOSOPHIE : LE PIQUE-NIQUE SUR L'ACROPOLE, OU DE L'AMOUR AU FÉMININ

I. Grosu

Université de Limoges

Abstract: Dans son "Pique-nique sur l'Acropole", Louky Bersianik parodie "Le Banquet" de Platon et procède à une révision des mythes fondateurs de la culture occidentale. A l'opposé du "genre moral" grec l'auteure québécoise formule, à travers sa « fiction », des interrogations postmodernistes sur le corps féminin et des réflexions métacritiques sur l'écriture. Louky Bersianik aborde la problématique de la création d'une nouvelle épistémologie féminine qui valorise le travail créateur des femmes, notamment le travail "maternel" qui ne sera plus "sanctifié" ou "mythifié". Le caractère documentaire du Pique-nique le rapproche de l'essai et contribue à la construction d'une théorie. L'auteure passe en revue les discours existants sur les femmes –philosophique, psychanalytique, religieux, mythologique – mais le fait à travers la fiction, et même la « théorie-fiction » où la critique se mêle à la création. S'inscrivant dans les courants postmoderniste et postcolonialiste, le roman est subversif à tous les niveaux, à commencer par le titre. Son « banquet anthropophage » interroge les discours masculins platoniciens et réfléchit à l'expérience vécue par les femmes, à leurs corps et leurs désirs. La philosophie de l'amour n'est plus une théorie désincarnée et andro-centrée mais regroupe des réflexions sur l'amour comme moteur qui met en marche le cœur, symbole des relations humaines.

Biography: Doctorante en Littérature Comparée EHIC, Université de Limoges

POST-PORN, QUEERNESS AND DISSIDENT SEXUALITY IN THE FILMS OF MONIKA TREUT

A.R. Rubino

IdIHCS-Instituto de Investigaciones en Humanidades y Ciencias Sociales-CeLyC-Centro de Estudios de Literatura Comparada

Abstract: At the intersection between film and gender activism exists in the german-language area a paradigmatic example about the projection of the tensions and confrontations in the feminist movement. I refer to the case of german filmmaker Monika Treut. The emergence of categories such as sexual dissidence, queerness, post pornography, among others, produced a discussion in the heart of the feminist movement of the early eighties, both theoretical and political level, these are issues that we can see clearly in Treut's films of the eighties and early nineties: Verführung: grausame die Frau (1984, codirected in collaboration with Elfi Mikesch) Jungfrauenmaschine Die (1988) and My father is coming (1991). The emergence and debate on these categories and the beginning of the queer movement or what more recently has been theorized as "post pornography" are themed issues and fictionalized in the works of Treut mentioned above. This paper analyzes, first, the projection of the debate over pornography in Treut's films (which was known in the eighties in the U.S. feminist movement as "Sex Wars") and, secondly how the dual nature of gender and sexual identity are confronted from dissident sexuality and cinematic representation.

Biography: Profesor en letras por la Facultad de Humanidades y Ciencias de la Educación, Universidad Nacional de La Plata, Argentina. Profesor adscripto de Literatura Alemana. Especialidades: cine y literatura alemana, estudios queer.

S4 COGNITION ET EMOTION: DE NOUVELLES VOIES POUR LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE? / COGNITION AND EMOTION: NEW VISTAS FOR COMPARATIVE LITERATURE?

THE SIN HIDDEN: ENVY AND MIMETIC DESIRE IN IAN MCEWAN'S AMSTERDAM

H.I.E. Mäkelä

University of Helsinki

Abstract: “Envy is the hardest sin to acknowledge”, writes René Girard in his book A Theatre of Envy: William Shakespeare (1991). Mervyn Nicholson, in his 1999 study, Male Envy: The Logic of Malice in Literature and Culture, quotes Girard and elaborates that, “[...] it is practically meritorious to admit to other sins. One may admit to lust in one’s heart, but hardly to envy in one’s heart”. Whether we regard envy as a sin in the theological sense, or as an emotion in the psychological sense, the fact remains: envy is taboo. For Girard, envy also has an anthropological dimension, in that it is a key factor in stirring up conflict in society, with invidious competition spreading from one rival to another until it has infected the whole community. Archaic cultures sought to control rivalry by channeling it to religious rituals of sacrifice, but, according to Girard, Christianity brought about the disintegration of this scapegoat mechanism by exposing the innocence of Christ crucified – and through him, all subsequent surrogate victims. Christianity revealed the “things hidden since the foundation of the world”, namely the traces of sacrificial violence covered up by archaic mythology of justified sacrifice. The unmasking of the mechanism that strived to keep envy in check has not quite managed to do the same for envy itself, as contemporary Post-Christian subjects still hide their envy from others, as well as themselves, in the name of all-consuming individualism that refuses to acknowledge any perceived sense of inferiority in the face of the envied Other. According to both Girard and Nicholson, literary fiction has proved a privileged medium for dealing with envy and unmasking its cultural taboo. My paper will analyze the theme of envy and its demystification in one contemporary English novel, Ian McEwan’s Amsterdam (1998). McEwan’s novel unearths the psychological laws that govern the interaction of two friends turned enemies and reaches almost apocalyptic heights in its plot twist that follows the (self-) destructive logic of a moral meltdown.

Biography: Hanna Mäkelä is a PhD student at the University of Helsinki in Finland, from where she received her M.A. degree in 2006, and at the Justus-Liebig-University Giessen in Germany. She currently works as a researcher and teacher at the University of Helsinki while writing a doctoral dissertation in Comparative Literature. Her main research interests include contemporary fiction in English, the mimetic theory of René Girard, and questions concerning identity, morality and spirituality in narrative and culture at large. She has published an article “Imitators and Observers: Mimetic and Elegiac Character Relationships in Donna Tartt’s The Secret History and Siri Hustvedt’s What I Loved” in the anthology Genre and Interpretation (Pirjo Lyytikäinen, Tintti Klapuri and Minna Maijala eds., Helsinki: Department of Finnish, Finno-Ugrian and Scandinavian Studies & The Finnish Graduate School of Literary Studies, 2010).

FEELING FICTION: COGNITIVE UNDERPINNINGS OF THE EMOTIONAL RESPONSE TO IMAGINED STORIES

A.M. Abrantes

Catholic University of Portugal

Abstract: It is by far not an uncommon experience that one should cry when reading of a tragic mishap in a novel, or smile at a clever remark by one character, or bite one’s nails at an approaching turning point in a story. These reactions, observable to others, are the actual expressions of real inner feelings, which are prompted by imagined scenarios triggered by words on a page. How we can be visibly moved by what we know to be unreal, inexistent, is a question that has intrigued philosophers, psychologists and more recently cognitive scientists, and it is known as “the paradox of fiction” (Radford 1975): the paradox consists of the contradiction between real emotional response and the fictional nature of the object that triggers it. One may however revisit the underlying presupposition of this paradox: that only things believed to be true are likely to trigger authentic emotional response, which implies that for one to feel with fiction, one needs to believe that the characters, situations it describes have existed or exist. Experientially, we know this is most often not the case. This explains that while we experience real fear responses, we don’t leave the movie theater in the middle of a horror film (Mellman, 2002, Oakley 2002). Believing and imagining are thus two different modes or mental states, which are made possible by the same cognitive apparatus. Engaging in the mental elaboration of an imagined scenario (a hypothesis, a counterfactual, a dream, a phantasy, a work of fiction or a single conditional sentence) does not imply the suspension of emotional mechanisms, which are as much part of cognition as our rational thought.

Human reality encompasses more than physical reality: it is mental reality also, as well as shared social reality and interpersonal interactional reality (Brandt & Brandt 2005). The next question to ask is why we engage with fiction. One possibility to address this is that fiction provides a room for simulation (Mar & Oatley 2008), with ultimate pragmatic advantage, such as improved behavior or a sort of emotional literacy. One should go one step further to ask why we enjoy fiction. To address it, we need to relate to the experience of the story as such, the experience of being told a story, i.e., that story as mediated by a mind which we assume likely to work in much the same ways as our own. Even if our attention to this other mind by default remains silent as we engage in the story, it is to this intentional mind that we turn to when we experience frustration at the story, when it does not end as it should (Dancygier 2012, Oakley 2008). In this presentation we propose to revisit the paradox of real emotional reaction to literary fiction, by addressing the following issues: the difference between the mental states of belief and imagination, mental reality as human reality, mental simulation in fiction and emotional literacy, and the role of shared attention and conceptual mediation in the emotional engagement with fiction.

Biography: Brandt Line and Per Aage Brandt (2005). Cognitive Poetics and Imagery. European Journal of English Studies 9(2): 117-130. Dancygier, Barbara (2012). The Language of Stories. A Cognitive Approach. Cambridge University press. Mellmann, Katja (2002). "E-Motion: Being Moved by Fiction and Media? Notes on Fictional Worlds, Virtual Contacts and the Reality of Emotions". PSYART: A Hyperlink Journal for the Psychological Study of the Arts. Available http://www.psyartjournal.com/article/show/mellmann-e_motion_being_moved_by_fiction_and_medi. Mar, Raymond A. and Keith Oatley (2008). The Function of Fiction is Abstraction and Simulation of social Experience. Perspectives on Psychological Science 3(3), 173-192. Oakley, Todd (2009). From Attention to Meaning. Explorations in Semiotics, Linguistics and Rhetoric. Bern: Peter Lang [European Semiotics, vol. 8]. Oatley, Keith (2002). Emotions and the story worlds of fiction. In: M.C. Green, J.J. Strange & T.C. Brock (Eds.), Narrative impact. Social and cognitive foundations. Mahwah, NJ: Erlbaum, 39-69. Radford, C. (1975) "How Can We Be Moved by the Fate of Anna Karenina?" Proceedings of the Aristotelian Society, Supplemental Vol. 49, pp. 67-80.

SUSPENDED FAILURES: THE INTERMEDIAL EXPERIENCE OF HORROR

J. Toikkanen
University of Tampere

Abstract: What does it mean to experience horror, what is its social relevance, and how are the phenomena reflected in literary materials? With examples from Romantic authors to their Modernist peers, I intend to show horror needs to be rethought both as aesthetic experience and an emotive literary form. In doing this, I venture beyond usual genre and psychoanalytical definitions, and show that horror is something that cannot be accounted for by today's clichés and conventions, by the routine identifying of "horrifying" elements based on any fixed set of rules, or the standard rhetoric of a subcultural phenomenon. My objective, however, is not to establish an elitist concept of horror against a popular one – literary horror is a kind of language and language as such is something we all inherently share. From this premise, my study aims at showing how contemporary cultural practices tend to misconstrue and remain at odds with the social nature of horror in literary expression. Specifically, my presentation explores what it is like to read works of literature whose horror effect hinges on a particular kind of aesthetic experience. In texts from Kleist to Hoffmann, Frost and Yeats, an incongruent correspondence of words and images generates the affective sensation and gives rise to an unexpected experience of horror. The source of this incongruence can be located in a type of intermedial break between the participant media which often, in genre or psychoanalytical views of the phenomenon, gets overlooked as mere fantasy or fiction which we can simply do away with as the movie, book or therapy session ends. In my analysis, the work of horror suspends all escape from its influence and promotes new knowledge in doing so: brought to a halt, the reader remains compelled by its power. For methodology, I will employ two closely related devices from the rhetorical tradition: ekphrasis and hypotyposis. Whereas ekphrasis denotes, as it has appeared in recent use, the verbal representation of a visual representation, hypotyposis presents the vivid description of a visual image. With this distinction, the latter differs from ekphrasis in the way it stresses, in classical terms, the enargeia (the sensate appearance or "shine") of the work at hand instead of its energeia (the kinetic motion or "energy" of the text as it makes use of multiple media). As a result, I will argue that whereas both devices are essential components of any reading process – where one provides the aesthetic experience with form and the other sets it in motion – one wonders if ekphrasis and hypotyposis belong to the same level of presentation, supporting each other, or whether their interplay, to a disturbing effect, is actually driven by words failing to represent images. My presentation is based on an eponymous monograph I plan to finish by the end of 2012. The book explores how the emotive phenomenon of horror can be understood in the changing scenes of art and culture. By traversing a specific period in the history of Western thinking, it highlights the importance of certain recurring motifs and issues from Romanticism to Modernism and our present day in both literature and literary theory. It also recognises language as the medium of this endeavour which is never finished as long as it keeps generating new uncertainties and disruptions to enrich our experience.

Biography: Jarkko Toikkanen holds a PhD from University of Tampere, Finland, where he works as university lecturer. In 2011, he was appointed as Visiting Research Fellow at the University of Westminster in the United Kingdom. Dr. Toikkanen is in the process of completing a monograph on the intermedial experience of horror in literature. His areas of expertise include deconstruction and Paul de Man, word and image theory, affect theory, and the poetics of Romanticism and Modernism.

INSIDE THE FRAME: THEORIZING SPACE AND EMOTION IN SARTRE, MROZEK, AND HIRANO KEIICHIRO

I.A. Orlich

Arizona State University

Abstract: I am interested in the Literature and Human Sciences general topic, and specifically in the AFFECTIVE SPACES. THEORIZING SPACE AND EMOTION IN LITERATURE. Both the second and third panels of this seminar, "Literary Interiors" and "Spaces of Anxiety" provide an interesting frame for a comparative examination of the claustrophobic interiors in Sartre's "Huis Clos" (No Exit), Slawomir Mrozek's play "Tango" and the Japanese writer Hirano KeiichirÅ's acclaimed novel "L'Eclipse." With critics agreeing that each of the three works steps into significant prominence when viewed in an international context, I wish to focus on the modality in which all these spaces claw the characters out of their intimate emotions and lives while displaying a set of relations delineated within confined sites. My discussion could thus also be adjusted to fit into the first seminar, "Theorizing Affective Spaces," as it pays particular attention to various ways of theorizing space in literature before moving on to examine the affective spaces of these three works - a drawing room decorated in Second Empire style, a crowded apartment in Communist Poland, and the circumscribed space of the cave and an unnamed village in medieval France featured in "L'Eclipse" - as Foucault's "autre spaces," in which the characters' lives and time in history form a network that "connects points and intersects with its own skein."

Specifically, these spatial configurations convey an ideal conduit for the communication of existential (Sartre), political (Mrozek), and theological and sexual (Hirano) anxieties, intersecting time and space to expose what Foucault calls "an ensemble of relations." In this context, it is necessary to notice that the space which today appears to form the horizon of our concerns, our theory and our systems, is not an innovative concept; space itself has a history in Western experience. By way of retracting this history of space, I examine a hierarchic ensemble of places in the real life, juxtaposed as sacred and profane, protected and open/exposed, or urban and rural places in dichotomies that represent configurations of what could roughly be called the space of emplacement or localization. I then turn to the point in time starting with Galileo and the seventeenth century, when cosmologically a place was no longer anything but a point in its movement, and when extension was substituted for the space of emplacement or localization. My analysis tackles the understanding of the site which today has been substituted for extension, which itself had replaced emplacement, to examine the notion of site as drawing in spaces that move indefinitely in literature - ideologically, politically, and affectively - in short, I approach the notion of literary space as that which, in Foucault's formulation, "takes for us the form of relations among sites." To be sure, I am not including in this evaluation of framed spaces works like Henry James's "Portrait of a Lady," where the literary text, in spite of the confines of a place like Osmond's villa in Florence, cannot contain the rustling sense of darker sagas unfolding backstage or in the wings, prompted sometimes, I admit, by the sexual reticence of the author and the period alike. I focus instead on the type of closed space similar to that which one encounters in Strindberg's plays, a world without a way out for those kept captive inside.

What are then some of the defining elements of such framed spaces and what is the specificity of emotions their captors experience in the three texts I have chosen for this discussion?

An immediate characteristic of these tightly framed literary spaces is that they are still nurtured by the notion of the sacred, in spite of the unorthodox lives of those within. Even a place like Sartre's hell, or an absurd world where ideology has replaced Christianity as in Mrozek's "Tango," or the solitary, remote abode of an alchemist is still not a space entirely desanctified. As the full range of the characters' questions and doubts concerning their inability to live life differently, of their earnestness to disregard commandments in the fever of sexual and political liberation, or of the alchemist's blasphemous (from a Christian perspective) ambition are thrown into sharp relief, such efforts can only underlie the protagonists' ultimate attempt to attain a state of divinity or salvation and a secret yearning for the sacred.

Further, enclosed spaces can be particularly engaged with the characters' most intense emotions. Behind the doubts thrusting themselves repeatedly into the protagonists' consciousness, lies the conundrum that occupies their minds: the question of whether evil exists as a force separate from good or is, as in Christian theology since Augustine, simply the absence of good, as darkness is the absence of light. Tension arises as hell is other people (Sartre), the death of the innocent shows the failure of political violence to bring about meaningful change (Mrozek) and the horrid murder of the hermaphrodite, which marks the occasion for an ecstatic vision in which the flesh and the spirit are unified (Hirano), is punctuated by the infernal mechanism of history.

The final characteristic of these framed spaces is that by interrelating emotion and space they have a function in relation to all the spaces outside their confines. In this context, they offer a space of illusion that reinforces the real, not necessarily more desirable space: the perfectly regulated hell vs. our terrestrial, messy world; the cluttered apartment in “Tango,” corresponding to ill constructed ideologies and politics that have outrun their course and whose role is to counterpoint the meticulous tidiness of social normativity; or the fascination of the hermaphrodite, whose silent appeal for harmonious unity suggested in the eclipse that brings together the sun and the moon, Christian and alchemic thought, tragically insinuates instead the highly regulated communities (the Dominicans of Hirano’s “L’Eclipse or the Jesuits of Paraguay come to mind), in which human “perfection” is effectively and rigorously achieved.

Friday, July 19, 2013

The literary spaces discussed here represent sites of intellectual expansion that allow for the greatest reserve of imagination, which in turn opens up the “exploration of the relation between spatial depictions and emotion.” Without them, the space of our dreams would dry up, empty of feelings and emotions.

Biography: Ileana Alexandra Orlich
Professor of Romanian, English and Comparative Literature
ASU President’s Professor
2011 ASU Professor of the Year
2001 ASU Centennial Professor
Director, Romanian and Central European Cultural Collaborative
Head of German, Romanian and Slavic Faculty
School of International Letters and Cultures
College of Liberal Arts and Sciences
Arizona State University
Honorary Consul General of Romania in Arizona
<http://www.public.asu.edu/~orlich>

Saturday, July 20, 2013

S3 SCIENCES, RECITS ET FICTIONS (THEORIE DE LA FICTION)

LES EFFETS NARRATIFS DE LA SCIENCE DANS LA LITTÉRATURE

T. Klinkert

Universität Freiburg

Abstract: On peut constater que la réception de modèles de pensée scientifiques dans des romans ne laisse pas d'avoir une influence sur les procédés narratifs, que ce soit sur le plan du vocabulaire employé ou bien sur le plan du commentaire et de la description. Dans quelques cas-limites, la réception de discours scientifiques est à la base d'une transformation radicale de la forme romanesque. Cette intervention se propose d'étudier d'un point de vue comparatiste deux écrivains du XIXe siècle: Gustave Flaubert et Adalbert Stifter. Les œuvres de ces auteurs se caractérisent par une ouverture vers le domaine de la science et par la présence de structures 'anti-romanesques'. Il s'agira d'élucider le rapport qui existe entre ces deux phénomènes.

Biography: Thomas Klinkert, Docteur ès lettres, Professeur des universités, Romanisches Seminar, Albert-Ludwigs-Universität, D-79085 Freiburg; Directeur du Frankreich-Zentrum, Universität Freiburg; depuis 9/2007: Chaire de littératures romanes, Universität Freiburg; 4/2003-8/2007: Chaire de littératures romanes, Universität Mannheim; 4/2002-3/2003: Remplaçant de chaires de littératures romanes: Universität Eichstätt, Universität Graz; 6/2001-3/2002: Maître-assistant, Universität Regensburg; 7/1995-5/2001: Assistant universitaire, Universität Regensburg; 10/1994-6/1995: Assistant universitaire, Universität Mannheim; 1/1992-7/1994: Doctorant, Universität München

LES RELATIONS ENTRE LA PHYSIQUE MODERNE ET LE ROMAN CONTEMPORAIN

B. Dilmac

Universität Freiburg

Abstract: Une des tendances les plus caractéristiques du roman depuis les années 1980, selon la critique littéraire, est le retour au récit. En outre, il y a accord sur le fait que ce tournant ne correspond pas à un simple renouement avec la tradition réaliste ou naturaliste. Les romanciers post-avantgardistes, bien qu'ils nient quelquefois toute parenté avec leurs prédécesseurs néo-avantgardistes, se situent quand même dans un rapport de continuité avec les « nouveaux romanciers » – du moins en ce qui concerne une certaine méfiance générale quant à la possibilité de représenter la réalité dans un texte littéraire. Dans ce contexte, cette intervention se concentre sur le rôle de la physique moderne (p.ex. la théorie des quanta, la thermodynamique, etc.) à laquelle recourent certains romanciers contemporains comme Michel Houellebecq, Michel Rio, Patrick Deville, Jean-Philippe Toussaint, Daniele Del Giudice ou Jorge Volpi. Dans leurs romans, le recours aux savoirs des sciences naturelles ne sert pas seulement à revaloriser la littérature en tant qu'instrument épistémologique, mais aussi à fournir des modèles de pensée au moyen desquels les romans reflètent leur propre structure et leur rapport problématique avec la réalité.

Biography: Formation

1998:
Baccalauréat, Mönchsee-Gymnasium Heilbronn, Allemagne

2007:
Maîtrise en lettres modernes (avec distinction), Université de Mannheim, Allemagne

2011:
thèse de doctorat (avec mention très honorable), Université de Fribourg, Allemagne

Titre de la thèse: Literatur und moderne Physik. Literarisierungen der Physik im französischen, italienischen und lateinamerikanischen Roman (Michel Rio, Michel Houellebecq, Jean-Philippe Toussaint, Patrick Deville, Daniele Del Giudice, Jorge Volpi)

Prix et bourses

nov. 2008 - sep. 2011:
Bourse de la fondation Konrad-Adenauer

nov. 2011:
Prix de la fondation Jürgen et Irmgard Ulderup (prix pour la thèse de doctorat)

Expériences professionnelles

sep. 2007 - sep. 2008:
Teaching assistant à l'université de Fribourg (Allemagne)

depuis oct. 2011:
Assistante à la chaire de Prof. Dr. Thomas Klinkert, université de Fribourg

SCIENCES DE LA VIE, ÉCOCRITIQUE, FICTIONS ENVIRONNEMENTALES

A. Hermetet
Université d'Angers

Abstract: Il s'agit d'interroger le croisement entre discours scientifique, discours critique et pratiques littéraires, en prenant comme exemple les questions environnementales, telles qu'elles apparaissent dans les fictions de la fin du XXe siècle et du XXIe.

Biography: Anne-Rachel Hermetet :
Professeuse à l'Université d'Angers depuis 2006.

Domaines de recherche :

- Etudes de réception
- Revues littéraires européennes (XIXe-XXe siècles)
- Histoire des traductions en France et méthodologie de la lecture des œuvres traduites
- Roman et littérature d'idées dans la première moitié du XXe siècle
- Domaines français, anglo-saxon, italien, hongrois
- Transmission des savoirs scientifiques dans la fiction (XXe-XXIe siècles)

Publications :

- Les Revues italiennes face à la littérature française contemporaine. Etude de réception (1919-1943), Paris, Champion, 2003.
- Pour sortir du chaos. Trois revues européennes des années 20, Rennes, PUR, 2009.

S2 FEMINIST-QUEER

QUEERING AENEAS: A COMPARATIVE APPROACH TO THE POSTCOLONIAL FEMINIST AENEID

T. Zimmerman

University of Alberta

Abstract: In light of this year's ICLA Congress and its overall topic of "Comparative Literature as a Critical Approach" in this presentation I focus on an important literary trend in contemporary historical fiction that has been overlooked by scholars: the postcolonial feminist Aeneid. I compare two innovative, yet unstudied, historical novels from this category: Judith Gleason's Agotime (1970) and Nancy Cato and Vivienne Ellis' Queen Trucanini (1976). Both novels for the first time in the literary tradition challenge or queer Virgil's beloved Latin epic the Aeneid from a postcolonial feminist perspective. As a comparatist I am interested in understanding how postcolonial feminists are writing back to, and decentering, our discipline's western classics, such as the Aeneid. Justifying the potential of such a project is the work of anti-colonialist feminists Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak and Rey Chow. Spivak asserts that Comparative Literature must cross borders and displace the "hierarchical functioning of current Comparative Literature which measures in terms of a standard at whose heart is Western European nationalisms" (National Imagination 30). Chow believes that "instead of reconsolidating the boundaries of nations through the study of national languages and literatures, comparative literature should remain the place where theory is used to put the very concept of the nation in crisis, and with that, the concept of the nation as the origin of a particular literature [or genre]" (In the Name of Comparative Literature 112). Gleason's and Cato and Ellis' feminist novels put the nation/empire into question and suggest that seriously taking into consideration the feminist postcolonial approach is imperative within Comparative Literature today and must be a central strategy moving forward. Related to charges against Comparative Literature as a Euro-centric and elitist discipline, is the issue of an exclusive male canon of European masterpieces, which includes writers like Virgil. Sarah Webster Goodwin argues that because Comparative Literature has traditionally defined its "concerns around an exclusively male canon, it has resisted the inroads of feminist criticism" (Cross Fire and Collaboration 249). This presentation on the postcolonial feminist Aeneid attempts to remedy this unfortunate trend by emphasizing the invaluable contributions of postcolonial feminist writers to the field, like Cato and Ellis and Gleason, who take an unconventional approach by "queering" Aeneas. Aeneas, a former prince of Troy and later famed founder and ancestor of Rome, has of course his mythic-literary roots in Homer's Greek epic the Iliad. In Virgil's hands he becomes a central protagonist; he is a demi-god (son of Venus and Anchises) and after the defeat of the Trojans by the Greeks in the Trojan War, is ordained by Jupiter to exile, but also survival in Italy. Aeneas' founding of what will become Rome is the impetus for Virgil's tale, as it suggests continuity with Troy, and justifies and glorifies the greatness of the Roman Empire and Roman citizen. Like the Ancient Romans, European nationalists in the Middle Ages (Britons, Franks, Venetians), as well as the Ottoman Turks, also began constructing a continuity with the Trojans by tracing an ancestral line to Aeneas. This strategy legitimized claims to the superiority of their foundations and cultures. Postcolonial feminist authors Cato and Ellis, and Gleason critically draw from this founding myth of imperial destiny in the western tradition by recuperating the lives of two relatively unknown historical figures: the last of the Indigenous Tasmanians, Trucanini (c.1812–8 May 1876) and Agotime (reign 1789-97), a West African Queen of Dahomey (now the Republic of Benin), who is sold into slavery and exiled to Brazil. The time frames and settings of the novels, nineteenth century Tasmania, Dahomey and Brazil respectively, narrate the experiences of the protagonists as women of colour under a renewed regime of "Aeneasism," in which British and Portuguese patriarchal nationalism, imperialism, colonialism, and empire are well under-way. This socio-political, and historical, framework makes for a strong case in reading these postcolonial feminist works today comparatively in relation to, and as counter-texts, to the original Aeneid, the protagonist Aeneas, and no less the western literary tradition.

Biography: TEGAN ZIMMERMAN is a PhD Candidate and Contract Instructor in the Program of Comparative Literature at the University of Alberta. The recipient of the Andrew Stewart Memorial Graduate Award and the Queen Elizabeth II Scholarship (2012), she is currently writing her dissertation on the role of the maternal in transnational feminism and the contemporary woman's historical novel (forthcoming as a monograph from LIT-Verlag, 2013).

LANDSCAPES OF LOSS AND DESIRE: THINKING TRAUMA AND DIFFERENCE

R.T. Schmidt

UNIVERSIDADE FEDERAL DO RIO GRANDE DO SUL

Abstract: Comparative literature is about crossing boundaries – of texts, languages, cultures and nations - to make connections in the in-between, a space for productive tensions and negotiations between specificities and relations that highlights literature's dialogical expressive power cross-culturally and the singularity of its ways of knowing and unknowing. Along these lines, it would be legitimate to argue that the ethos of comparative literature as an undiscipline, defined as “the most phantom-like of humanities discipline” (Saussi, 2006), is embedded in otherness. I conceive this otherness as a doorway to foreground a complementary articulation of comparative literature with trauma studies. If trauma, according to Cathy Caruth (1995) may provide the very links between cultures by establishing bridges between disparate historical experiences that would be otherwise regarded as isolated phenomena, comparative literature, by its turn, provides a critical mode of inquiry into the semantics and genealogies of cultures across a broad spectrum of symbolic productions and values by gravitating towards one’s another’s expression, language, history, and geography. Trauma has become a recurrent textual inscription in contemporary literary narratives that render the continuum of cultures as a dramatic stage for the unspeakable horrors of the modern world with a meaning-making function that evokes the gothic narrative mode, regarded in itself a narrative of trauma (Bruhm, 2006). I propose to examine a set of works by Toni Morrison, Jamaica Kincaid and Edwidge Danticat as exemplary cases of literary narratives that afford a unique perspective into the effects of history through the fictional treatment of a traumatic memory which erupts under the conditions of vulnerability engendered by losses suffered by the female protagonists in early infancy and who end up being caught up in extreme events of larger stories of collective trauma and cultural dispossession. Deploying multiple narrative strategies, among which disjunctive time sequences to dramatize the belatedness of traumatic experience and the layers of the protagonists’ discontinuous memory, Morrison, Kincaid and Danticat re-create history as a reenactment of sexual abuse, insidious racial discrimination and ethnic cleansing, a structural violence by which the patriarchal slavery system, processes of colonization and fundamentalist nationalism foreclose identities and brand them as less worthy and less human than others. This means that trauma is carefully embedded within identifiable cultural, historical and political specificities. As I elaborate on the convergences of referential specificities, I propose the tropes of loss and desire as a frame to understand the operations of the protagonists’ traumatic memory, particularly in terms of the spectralization of the mother that emerges as an alluring otherness in dreams, hallucinations, nightmares or memory-traces. The mother is neither present nor absent, dead or alive, material or immaterial and remains the manifest void, a presence/absence at the center of the narratives, haunting and posing a challenge to representation. Precisely because there is a threat of dissolution of life/meaning, desire emerges as a point of resistance on two distinct levels: on the level of the representation of an erotic urge that eludes the heterosexual symbolic and the gender binaries that naturalize femininity into reproduction, and on the level of a deliberate rhetorical staging of the narrating selves in their need to tell and reinvent themselves. If narrative is viewed as a performance, the protagonists-narrators can be defined as cross-borders as they mediate between personal history and cultural history, the past and the present, silence and language, lost genealogies and the ethical imperative of the transmissibility of that loss. The paper addresses the strengths of a transnational comparative approach as a field of practice in the humanities that instead of involving a politics of identity is oriented towards otherness and/in difference, occasions for that Gayatri Spivak defines in her Death of a discipline (2003) as “the uncoercive rearrangement of desire”, which I take as a catachresis for the (im)possibility of a culture of recognition and responsibility. Key words: fictional narratives – trauma – otherness – desire - performance

Biography: PhD in literature at the University of Pittsburgh, Professor of literature at the Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, and research fellow of the Brazilian Council of Research (CNPq) since 1980’s. Publications include well over 100 articles and book chapters published in Brazil and abroad, edition of books covering topics such as literary geographies, comparative literature and feminist criticism, including a collection of critical articles on the Brazilian writer Clarice Lispector and several reeditions of women writers from the XIX century. Former vice-president of the Brazilian Association of Comparative Literature and also of the Brazilian Association of American Studies. Research interests range feminist theories and feminist narratology, migrations and transculturations of the European novelist genre to XIX century Latin America, literature and recognition, narrative and ethics, humanities and discourses of sustainability.

WHERE "RACE" AND GENDER MEET : SEX WITH THE "OTHER" IN QUEBEC FICTION BY MEN

L. Saint-Martin
Université du Québec à Montréal

Abstract: WHERE « RACE » AND GENDER MEET : SEX WITH THE « OTHER » IN QUEBEC FICTION BY MEN
Heterosexual sex with the racial « other » is a double encounter with difference and, potentially, with domination, violence, stereotypes or, in the best of cases, reconceptualizations of identity. The proposed paper will look at contemporary Quebec fiction by Jacques Godbout (white male Québécois, African woman), Louis Hamelin (white male Québécois and « aboriginal » woman) and Dany Laferrière (black Haitian/Québécois male and white Québécoise women). Various inflexions of desire, power and domination emerge, providing a fascinating window onto approaches to difference and « otherness », as well onto various constructions of masculinity depending on the « race » of the protagonist (dominant or not), economic and social power, age, etc. P.S. I would like to give this paper in the language that will receive the widest audience (English or French are equally fine with me).

Biography: Lori Saint-Martin is a professor at Université du Québec à Montréal, where she teaches feminist theory, literary translation and Québec literature. She has written about 15 books on Québec women's writing, including Le nom de la mère, Mères, filles et écriture dans la littérature québécoise au féminin and La voyageuse et la prisonnière. Gabrielle Roy et la question des femmes. More recently, she has published Au-delà du nom. La question du père dans la littérature québécoise actuelle and Postures viriles, ce que dit la presse masculine. With Paul Gagné, she has translated more than sixty English-Canadian novels and works of non-fiction into French and twice won the Governor General's Award.

QUEER CONFEDERACIES: MATERIAL FEMINISM AND COMPARATIVE ECOCRITICISM

C.E. Rigby
Monash University (Clayton)

Abstract: This paper takes its title from a felicitous phrase in Donna Haraway's contribution to Stacy Alaimo's and Susan Hekman's important volume, Material Feminisms (2008). "Queer confederacies" names that unstable multiplicity of dynamically interacting microbes, animals, plants, metals, chemicals, words, cultural practices etc. that co-constitute the material human self: a self that, on closer inspection, has "never been (exclusively) human." Haraway's is one of a number of "new materialisms" that are currently reconfiguring the field of ecocritical theory (see e.g. Serenella Iovino's and Serpil Oppermann's forthcoming volume, Material Ecocriticism). Located within and across an array of disciplines, these varied new materialisms share a concern to regain and deepen our understanding of the agentic and communicative dimension of nonhuman entities and to thereby resituate human agency and communication within the "vibrant matter" (Jane Bennett) of the more-than-human world. In this paper, I propose to outline the contribution of material feminism to the development of current ecocritical theory and practice in comparative literary studies. I will then consider how this might inform a reading of the interrelationship of gender, sexuality and non-human agency in two seemingly unlikely textual companions: Goethe's Faust. Part Two (1832) and Mary Shelley's The Last Man (1826). What links these works, I will argue, beyond their critical engagement with the thought and literature of Romanticism from which they both emerge and depart, is the way that they challenge anthropocentric, androcentric, heterosexist models of sovereign human selfhood.

Biography: Kate Rigby is Associate Professor in Comparative Literature in the School of English, Communications and Performance Studies at Monash University. She is a Fellow of the Australian Academy of the Humanities and of the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation. Her research ranges across German Studies and Comparative Literature, European philosophy, literature and religion, and culture and ecology. Among her many publications in these areas are Topographies of the Sacred (2004), an ecocritical study of European Romantic-era philosophies and aesthetics of nature and place, and (with Axel Goodbody) Ecocritical Theory: New European Approaches (2011). She is a founding co-editor of the ecological humanities journal, Philosophy Activism Nature, and was the founding President of the Australia-New Zealand Association for the Study of Literature, Environment and Culture (<http://www.aslec-anz.asn.au/>), a founding member of the Australian Ecological Humanities research network (<http://www.ecologicalhumanities.org/>), and a member of the Gender Studies committee of ICLA.

S2: COMPARATIVE EARLY MODERNITIES

REPRESENTING THE EARLY MODERN

R. Handler-Spitz
Middlebury College

Abstract: Representing the Early Modern Rivi Handler-Spitz Middlebury College The term “early modern” implies a rupture between antiquity and modernity and casts the period 1500-1800 as containing the seeds of what would subsequently blossom into modernity. This periodization stresses continuities between the early modern period and the present. Just as importantly, it emphasizes similarities between developments in diverse geographical regions within the early modern world. While comparative historians and economists have recently begun exploring the latter subject, less scholarship has been devoted to investigating parallel or interconnected developments in the artistic, cultural, and philosophical sectors of early modern cultures worldwide. Expanding our view and examining these global interconnections allows us to recognize that intellectual issues long viewed as paradigmatic of the European Renaissance in fact resonate far beyond their putatively “home” cultures. Epistemological questions regarding the status and validity of diverse forms of knowledge, the relationship of language to the world, and the shifting nature of truth are as central to the work of the Chinese authors Li Zhi, Yuan Zongdao, and Jiang Yingke as they are to works by Shakespeare, Cervantes, and Montaigne. In China, as in Europe, these concerns pervaded both artistic theory and practice at the turn of the seventeenth century and stemmed in large part from increased exposure to foreign cultures and greater interaction among conflicting ideologies at home. This paper examines debates over representation – or, more precisely, misrepresentation – in China and Europe at the turn of the seventeenth century. Although Chinese and European theories of representation grow out of vastly different philosophical backgrounds – with European texts rooted in a mimetic model and Chinese texts favoring more lyric expressivism – discussions of the dangers of verbal representation intensified in both regions in this period. Naturally, the specific terms in which these discussions took place differed, as did the range of responses they spawned. Yet the widespread concern over the instability of representation marks this issue as central to the experience of early modernity. Studying culturally disparate responses to a shared phenomenon provides a perspective beneficial to both sides of the comparison: it allows us to break free of the parochial notion that anxieties over the mismatch between appearance and reality were a uniquely European phenomenon, and it enables us to recognize that many of these concerns were not only stimulated by increased interactions between Europe and the Far East but also mirrored in contemporary Chinese literature and literary criticism. More importantly, comparative studies of this kind permit us to situate both cultures as equal players and co-participants in a global early modern network of intellectual exchange.

Biography: Rivi Handler-Spitz is assistant professor of Chinese and Comparative Literature at Middlebury College. She received her PhD in Chinese and French comparative literature from the University of Chicago in 2009, and held a post-doctoral fellowship in Classics at Brown University from 2009-2010. Her work focuses on the essay form in the sixteenth and twentieth centuries. She is currently working on two projects, a monograph entitled Provocative Texts: Li Zhi in the Global Sixteenth Century and a book of translations of Li Zhi’s prose.

THE REPRESENTATION OF INTERIORITY IN CAO XUEQIN’S STORY OF THE STONE

S. Volpp
UC Berkeley

Abstract: COMPARATIVE EARLY MODERNITIES
Workshop: Affronter L’ancien/Facing the Old
The Representation of Interiority in Cao Xueqin’s Story of the Stone
Sophie Volpp
University of California at Berkeley

This paper proposes to consider the representation of interiority in seventeenth and eighteenth-century Chinese fiction in comparative context. As the scholar of eighteenth century French fiction Nicholas Paige has remarked, interiority is a less important concern in early modern French fiction than contemporary scholars, trained by their reading of modern European fiction to view the representation of psychological complexity as a destination towards which the novel develops, might think. Perhaps because of the strong influence of nineteenth and early twentieth-century European fiction, however, critics of seventeenth and eighteenth Chinese fiction tend to privilege the representation of interiority, and to expect psychological development from their protagonists. In fact, the representation of thought is a relatively late development, an area of avant-garde experimentation in China even in the mid eighteenth-century. The advantages of the comparative approach in considering the representation of interiority in the Chinese novel are many, not least that we become more aware of our conditioning as critics to read the Chinese novel as though it were a French or British novel of a later date.

One potential pitfall of such an approach, however, is that we allow scholars of European fiction to provide the paradigms by which we analyze Chinese fiction; were we to write a global history of free indirect discourse, we might begin with Cao Xueqin, who precedes Austen by half a century, but we might also call it something other than free indirect discourse, and might read Austen and Goethe differently as a result. The very notion of commensurability is naturally affected by the direction of comparison, whether West to East or East to West.

In this paper, I consider one of the major novels of the early modern period, Cao Xueqin's Story of the Stone (Honglou meng), examining the techniques that Cao uses to represent interiority and to provide the illusion of the communication of thought among characters. Story of the Stone itself provides a paradigm for thinking about the notion of commensurability in its inquiry as to the potential for communication among "other minds." I place the examination of its techniques for representing thought in the context of Buddhist notions of mind, ultimately asking how Buddhist notions of mind may underlie the replication of like minds in pairings of minor and major characters. Ultimately, I show, the novel is not interested so much in representing communication between implied persons so much as in claiming that there is no implied person behind the literary character, a claim that generations of readers have accepted only with regard to the minor characters, refusing to acknowledge the most basic claim of the novel, that its protagonist is also a stone.

Biography: Sophie Volpp is Associate Professor of Chinese and Comparative Literature at the University of California, Berkeley. She is the author of Worldly Stage: Theatricality in Seventeenth-century China (Harvard East Asia Center, 2011) and is currently writing a book entitled Substantive Fictions: Literary Objects in Late-imperial China.

THE CHINESE POTPOURRI: DETECTING THE "MODERN" SCENT IN THE NOVEL DREAM OF THE RED CHAMBER

P. Xu
University of Chicago

Abstract: Sensory perception is aesthetically constructed; and the aesthetics of the senses assume new cultural meanings when placed against the backdrop of historically diverse national and literary contexts. This paper adopts historical and comparative approaches for a reading of the representation of scent in the eighteenth-century Chinese novel, Dream of the Red Chamber (Honglou meng), situating the work alongside William Chambers' thesis (1772) on contemporary Chinese aesthetic life. The novel, renowned for its diurnal realism and lavish detail, displays a sharpened sense of olfactory perception curiously lacking in its sixteenth-century predecessor Plums in the Golden Vase (Jin Ping Mei cihua). In a similar manner, Chambers' thesis reveals a keen interest in the aromas and scents of the Chinese garden not found in his 1752 publication on the same subject. How might one make sense of the seemingly abrupt increase in represented scents and smells in the two cases? How might these historically contemporaneous discourses illuminate one another when approached from a comparative perspective? Drawing upon art historical discussions of minor arts (e.g., fragrance boxes), I suggest that the literary representation of scent in Chinese everyday life is closely associated with the import of European aromatic ideas and products during the second half of the eighteenth century. More specifically, what is presented and imagined in both texts is a rich, lively, and sensuous flow of mixed aromas, or what I call the "Chinese potpourri." A novelty in the Zeitgeist of eighteenth-century China, this aromatic hybrid stands in stark contrast to the more traditional, scholar-favored, "pure" type of scent. In this sense, the "Chinese potpourri" was essentially an early modern production emerging at the interstices of European and Chinese sensory histories.

Biography: XU Peng is a Ph. D candidate at the Department of East Asian Languages and Civilizations at the University of Chicago. A Kunqu and Peking opera singer trained in the connoisseur circle in Beijing, she is now completing her dissertation which unpacks the aesthetic experiences and sonic characteristics of operatic singing in late sixteenth- and early seventeenth-century China. This current paper, which offers a slice of history of olfactory perception, grew out of her research on sensory experience of sound in pre-modern China.

A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF FOREIGN COUNTRY REPRESENTATION IN EARLY MODERN JAPANESE AND KOREAN LITERATURE

H. Kim
University of Tsukuba

Abstract: People in the early modern period in East Asia had some access to foreign knowledge through encyclopedias and atlas such as Wakansansaizue, Kaiitsushoko in Japan, Jibonyuseol, Seonghosaseol in Korea. East Asian people were quite curious about foreign cultures, and that is part of the reason why imaginary travel stories, including Wasobyoe, Huryusidokenden, Chinsetsuyumiharizuki in Japan, and Hongildongjeon, Guunmong, Kumosinhwa in Korea, were enormously popular.

Images of foreign countries in the early modern period in Japan and Korea show an innocent curiosity for the strange and marvelous, offered as wonderful and amusing shows. Images of the strange and marvelous can be effective tools to rule the other. Even the strangest can be made into something manageable, comprehensible and somewhat familiar --- something that can be contained inside of the borderline dividing Japan or Korea and the foreign.

For example, Ryukyu was important for the Edo policies of Sakoku or national isolation. Increasingly in the 19th century, it had come to be understood as a borderland between the West and Japan, because a variety of Westerners visited it, sometimes in an effort to persuade Japan to open its doors to foreign trade.

In this regard, Kyokutei Bakin's representation of Ryukyu as Tametomo's land can be understood as expressing his fear and anxiety about Western global expansion encroaching upon Ryukyu. By use of the quasi-history of Tametomo, he tried to strengthen the borderline between the West and Japan, by identifying Ryukyu with Japan.

In this conference, I would like to examine some of the extraordinary, and sometimes, bizarre images of foreign lands in these writings. I argue that these writings are partly extravagant wonder stories, partly reflections of Japanese and Korean people's desire for knowledge of neighboring countries in the early modern period, and partly reflections of their anxiety concerning the West's expansion into Asia.

Biography: 23 May 1975, Born in Cheong-Ju city, KOREA

Education:

February 2001: B.A. in Japanese Language and Literature

Korea University, Seoul, KOREA

February 2003: M.A. in Japanese Literature

Korea University, Seoul, KOREA

February 2005: Complete Doctoral Course in Japanese Literature

Korea University, Seoul, KOREA

March 2007: B.A. in Japanese Literature

University of Tsukuba, Tsukuba, JAPAN

Present: Ph.D. Candidate in Japanese Literature

University of Tsukuba, Tsukuba, JAPAN

Advisor: Dr. Etsuko AOYAGI

Experiences:

April 1999-March 2000: Exchange Student, Chuo University, Tokyo, JAPAN

March 2003-February 2004: Lecturer, Seoil College, Seoul, KOREA

September 2003-February 2004: Lecturer, Myongji College, Seoul, KOREA

April 2004-March 2005: Exchange Student, Meiji University, Tokyo, JAPAN

April 2009-March 2011: Research Fellow of the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science, JAPAN

April 2011-September 2011: Lecturer, Ibaraki University, Mito, JAPAN

April 2011-Present: Lecturer, Maebashi Kyoai Gakuen College, Mabashi, JAPAN

Membership:

The Society of Japanese Early Modern Literature

The Association of Japanese Literature

Korea Association Japanology Corporation

The Japanese Language and Literature Association of Korea

S2: RACONTER LA THÉORIE

SE SOUVENIR ET INVENTER : UNE NARRATOLOGIE DE LA MÉMOIRE TRANSCULTURELLE DANS LES RÉCITS DE ZAFER ŞENOCAK

M. Geiser

CIELAM Université Aix-Marseille

Abstract: Les romans dits 'postmodernes' de l'écrivain germano-turc Zafer Āzenocak comportent une dimension subversive, car ils déconstruisent le processus narratif en y introduisant un discours critique sur les procédés de la narration. Le narrateur-écrivain expose sa méthode d'écriture dans le récit même qui se compose par étapes, accompagnées d'un métadiscours sur la position de l'auteur et sa mainmise sur l'histoire (dans les deux sens du terme). Les réflexions narratologiques sont thème du récit au même titre que les événements racontés. Les observations du réel ne servent pourtant pas de simple prétexte à la mise en place d'une théorie, mais en constituent une partie intégrante : Le narrateur à la première personne, alter ego de l'écrivain, fait participer le lecteur à sa quête de l'histoire, mais aussi à sa recherche esthétique et à l'élaboration du récit au niveau de l'intrigue et de la structure formelle. Pour le narrateur-personnage, la perspective autoréférentielle est le principe même, le point de départ de toute narration: « Quand je lis, j'ai toujours deux cahiers à côté de moi. L'un d'eux porte l'étiquette 'Inventions' ; j'y inscris mes réflexions et mes trouvailles [...]. Dans l'autre cahier que j'ai intitulé 'Souvenirs', j'écris des citations glanées au fil de mes lectures. [...] Quand il m'arrive de confondre les cahiers, les souvenirs se glissent en douce dans les inventions ou vice versa. Je n'en fais pas un drame. Je ne suis pas un scientifique » (Gefährliche Verwandtschaft). A la recherche d'un mode possible de narration, d'un « mythe d'écriture » personnel (Welcher Mythos schreibt mich ?), le narrateur instaure le dialogue avec le lecteur qu'il implique ainsi dans l'avancement de la réflexion poétologique. Outre les romans et les recueils de poésie, Zafer Āzenocak a publié de nombreux essais aux interrogations critiques, esthétiques et philosophiques. Ces différents types d'écriture se complètent, se reflètent réciproquement. Dans un petit essai en vers intitulé Poetologische Skizze, l'auteur explique ses stratégies narratives : « Mes textes reposent sur trois pieds : Se souvenir – Inventer – Jouer ». A travers le jeu, le lecteur devient personnage et spectateur de la réflexion du narrateur. Se pose alors également la question des références culturelles et de la mémoire qui ne sont pas d'emblée communes. Dans les romans, la dimension transculturelle, liée à la notion d'origine et au choix de la langue, apparaît sous forme de jeu intellectuel contribuant à la fonction poétique du texte. Nous proposons d'étudier les récits de la tétralogie berlinoise Der Mann im Unterhemd, Die Prärie, Gefährliche Verwandtschaft et Der Erottomane, publiés entre 1995 et 1999, dans lesquels les multiples perspectives de différentes mémoires collectives et du souvenir individuel sont explorées comme matériau d'un projet de poésie autofictionnelle.

Biography: Myriam Geiser est germaniste et comparatiste, enseignante au département d'études germaniques à l'université Stendhal (Grenoble 3), et membre associé au groupe de recherche EA 4235 - Centre Interdisciplinaire d'Etude des Littératures d'Aix-Marseille (CIELAM). Sa thèse en cotutelle avec les universités Mayence-Germersheim et Aix-Marseille I, soutenue en août 2010, porte sur « Le discours sur la littérature interculturelle en Allemagne et en France ». Elle a publié de nombreux articles sur l'esthétique et la réception des littératures germanophones et francophones de la migration. Ses principaux axes de recherche sont les transformations des systèmes littéraires contemporains, les concepts d'identité en littérature et les poétiques du plurilinguisme. Co-édition d'ouvrages : Grenzen der Zentralität – Zur Dynamik von Zentren und Peripherien. Limites de la centralité – La dynamique des centres et des périphéries, sous la direction de Myriam Geiser, Dominique Rademacher, Lucie Taïeb, Berlin : Logos Verlag (Collection Schriften zur Kultur- und Geistesgeschichte), 2011. 256 p. Identité en métamorphose dans l'écriture contemporaine (Actes du Symposium international à l'Université d'Aix-Marseille, 7-10 avril 2005), sous la direction de Fridrun Rinner, Myriam Geiser, Jeanne Glesener, Joanna Peiron et Annika Runte, Aix-en-Provence : PUP (Publications de l'Université de Provence, Collection Textuelles – littérature), 2006. 316 p. Monographie: Der Ort transkultureller Literatur in Deutschland und in Frankreich. Deutsch-türkische und frankomaghrebinische Literatur der Postmigration. Würzburg : Königshausen & Neumann, à paraître en 2012.

THEORY IN A DEAD LANGUAGE

D. Figueira

University of Georgia

Abstract: In this paper, i will discuss Lee Siegel's novel Love in a Dead Language. Siegel is a Sanskritist, translator and fiction writer. In this book, he combines the genre of the murder mystery with a translation of the Kama Sutra and subjects it to the constraints of Sanskrit literary criticism in the form of a commentary of the Sanskrit original and his translation of it that becomes the topic of his student's dissertation, who seeks to subject the translation to traditional Sanskrit literary analysis. The novel parodies high Sanskrit scholarship, translation theory and the policier genre. I begin by elucidating the various forms of Sanskrit commentaries, glosses and canonical sources that Siegel makes up to parallel actual Sanskrit material. I then show how the protagonist's translation butchers the Sanskrit original and breaks the tenets of Sanskrit translation theory. Finally, I investigate the issue (one dear to us all and all too common to poststructuralist theory) of how the critic him/herself becomes the text, as in the free-translation of the Kama Sutra becoming the personal narrative of the sordid pedophile adventure of the Sanskrit professor translator

Biography: Dorothy Figueira is Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Georgia. Trained in Comparative Literature and the History of Religion she is author of Translating the Orient; The Exotic: A Decadent Quest; Aryans, Jews Brahmins, Otherwise Occupied. She has edited Cybernetic Ghosts and co-edited with Marc Maufort Theories in the Round. She has served as editor of The Comparatist and is currently editor of Literary Research and a Honorary President of the ICLA

LA LITTÉRATURE AFRICAINE MODERNE ET LE PASSAGE DE L'ORAL À L'ÉCRIT

R.N. Kabuya
Université de Lorraine

Abstract: Il y a quelques années, les spécialistes de la littérature africaine se divisaient entre euro et afro-centristes. Les premiers stipulaient que le roman d'Afrique était un avatar du roman européen alors que les seconds voyaient dans les productions écrites modernes la transformation (continuation) de la littérature traditionnelle orale. Cette deuxième tendance a donné lieu à diverses théories qui, dans une perspective comparatiste, insistent sur le passage de l'ère orale à l'ère écrite, sur les mécanismes déployés par l'écrivain pour faire correspondre sa narration à celle du conteur des temps anciens. Soutenue par une grande partie des critiques africanistes, la théorie de l'oralité en tant que modèle de référence et « sperme vivificateur » des littératures africaines a été portée dans Giambatista Viko ou le viol du discours africain, premier roman de Georges Ngala. Outre le processus de création romanesque, ce livre raconte la confrontation brutale des deux points de vue sur le roman africain en mettant en scène un intellectuel formé à l'école occidentale et romancier « soucieux » d'exploiter les procédés de la culture orale dans ces romans. Dans cette étude, je propose donc de partir de ce roman qui décrit une « aventure ambiguë » et qui expérimente la théorie de l'engendrement du roman par le conte. Ce texte constitue en même temps une poétique et une exemplification de ce que pourrait être une narration qui s'inspire de l'oralité et des cultures traditionnelles. Cela suppose de révéler, à tous les niveaux de la construction du roman, les éléments que le narrateur énonce et que la narration met en œuvre. Cette analyse me conduira également à interroger l'ambivalence de ce type de roman dont les auteurs sont également critiques littéraires.

Biography: En troisième année de thèse Littérature Générale et Comparée. Effectue une thèse en cotutelle entre l'université de Lubumbashi (RD Congo) et l'Université de Lorraine (Metz) sous la direction de Dominique Ranaivosoa et Huit Mulongo. S'intéresse à l'histoire littéraire de l'Afrique et notamment au processus de renouvellement. Sa thèse porte sur "les nouvelles écritures de violence. Les enjeux d'une mutation dans la littérature africaine depuis 1980. Membre du Centre Ecritures et du Celtram (Centre d'Etudes Littéraire pour le Traitement des Manuscrits).

(IN)VISIBLE THEORY. PAUL AUSTER AND THE WRITER AS CULTURAL CRITIC

I.M. Capelo Gil
Catholic University of Portugal

Abstract: As Jacques Derrida wrote in 'Devant la loi', literature has the ability of forfeiting order whilst simultaneously creating a law that the text is both destined to break and uphold both in its negotiation of the inner literary boundaries of genre and in the articulation of the world outside. This contentious condition which prompts the literary text to become its own law, comes clearly across in Paul Auster's writing. By engaging with the conditions of contemporary America and reflecting on contemporary American writing in his fiction, Auster engages in a dialogue with literary theory on a representational and on a conceptual level, engagingly articulating the text's outside with its interiority. The paper will discuss Paul Auster's fiction as a mode of engaging critical discourse and itself as a critical discourse of sorts, by looking specifically at Invisible and Sunset Park. It will further discuss Auster's critical engagement with the visual turn and the way in which his texts fulfill a revisionist mandate to read in the structural invisibility of literature the hyper-visibility that marks contemporary culture.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Isabel Capeloa Gil is Associate Professor of German and Comparative Literature at the Catholic University of Portugal. Her main research areas include intermedia studies, gender studies as well as representations of war and conflict. Her work has appeared in Colloquia Germanica, Orbis Litterarum and Daedalus, amongst other journals. She is the author of Mythographies. Figurations of Antigone, Cassandra and Medea in German 20th Century Drama (2007), and co-editor of Landscapes of Memory. Envisaging the Past/Remembering the Future (2004); The Colour of Difference: On German Contemporary Culture (2005), as well as The Poetics of Navigation (2007) and Fleeting, Floating, Flowing: Water Writing and Modernity (2008). She is also the editor of the international peer-reviewed journal Comunicação e Cultura (Communication and Culture). She has lectured at the University of Wales (Lampeter), at the National University of Ireland (Galway), at the Universities of Hamburg and Munich in Germany, as well as at the University of Pennsylvania, Western Michigan University (USA), at Northwestern University and at the University of Venice, Ca' Foscari (Italy). She is currently the Dean of the School of Humanities at the UCP. In 2010 she became Honorary Fellow at the School of Advanced Study, U. London.

S3: ETHNOLITERATURE AND ETHNOPOETICS

JUSTIFICATION DU FOLKLORE – FOLKLORE DE LA JUSTIFICATION: LES POUILLES ET BASILICATE COMME OBJETS ET SUJETS DE LA PHILOSOPHIE DE L'HISTOIRE, DE L'ETHNOLOGIE ET DE LA LITTÉRATURE ENTRE 1930 ET 1960

U. von Loyen
Universität Siegen

Abstract: Peu après la Seconde Guerre mondiale le Sud de l'Italie a été soumis à une série d'opérations épistémologiques, bureaucratiques, administratives, déterminées par la dialectique qui consiste à conserver comme héritage culturel une façon de vivre souvent considérée archaïque et, d'autre part, à l'affranchir de son isolement en la prenant comme pierre de touche pour la modernisation. Ils s'ensuivent non seulement en Italie mais en tout l'Europe des discussions relatives au rôle du Sud et – dans des cercles marxistes – au rôle de la paysannerie face à la «classe ouvrière» dans la perspective de la philosophie d'histoire. Ernesto de Martino, historien de la religion, se rend dans le talon de la botte italienne avec toute une équipe interdisciplinaire afin de vérifier sa théorie d'un compromis magico-religieux étant au fond de toute civilisation, et en vertu duquel le Soi individuel et collectif arrive à échapper à la menace d'une perte d'auto-présence. Dans des proverbes, des contes et récits ainsi que dans le »Re-Enactement«, il met en relief une »déhistorisation du négatif« (destorificazione del negativo) par laquelle seule la transition du l'inhistorique en histoire deviendrait possible, une pratique dont De Martino cherche à montrer la présence aussi dans les sociétés industrielles contemporaines. Le Sud de l'Italie acquiert ainsi le statut d'une universalité particulière – c'est ce qu'il s'agit d'examiner de près pour De Martino lui-même, ainsi que pour l'ethnologie italienne qui est fondée sur lui, à l'aide des documents assemblés. Les stratégies, les collaborations, l'échange réciproque de prétentions entre les chercheurs et ceux qui sont l'objet de la recherche, aboutissant en fin de compte dans un corpus d'images, de sons et de textes qui revendique une validité mondiale, seront au centre de notre conférence.

Biography: Ulrich van Loyen, born in Dresden, studied Philosophy and Italian and Germanic Philology in Munich and Rome, earned his PhD from the Dept. of German Literature at LMU Munich with a dissertation on the Prague poet and Oxford anthropologist Franz Baermann Steiner, and is currently employed as Research Assistant/ Assistant Professor at the University of Siegen.

LITERATURE AND INTERETHNIC COHABITATION IN THE BALKANS

T. Aleksic
UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

Abstract: In my presentation I will discuss the well-known Balkan legend of the immurement of a live female body into an architectural edifice that cannot stand without a human sacrifice. The sacrificed body becomes a metaphor for torture, rape, mutilation and other acts of violence in the course of many ethno-religious conflicts in the 20th century Balkans. Drawing on ancient Serbian and Greek ballads, The Building of Skadar and The Bridge of Arta, I introduce the Balkan legend of immurement as a narrative of original violence committed on the threshold of community foundation. The immured woman is sacrificed to appease communal conflict and disorder in the ranks of men and any pre-existing communal tensions should be resolved over her dead body. The impulse for the construction of the edifice-community, the supernatural voice that commands this visionary project, is variously interpreted as a deity, the (patriarchal) Law, national/religious essence, or collective spirit. Community is viewed as a fictional concept whose material substance lies in the blood of the sacrificial victim. Her death becomes the guarantor of the social pact but, at the same time, this original violence incorporated into the foundations of the edifice is also the source of future conflicts. Further I will introduce the literary "bridge texts" by the Yugoslav author Ivo Andrić (Nobel Prize, 1961), the Albanian Ismail Kadare (Booker 2006), and the always controversial Greek writer Nikos Kazantzakis. These texts famously rewrite the immurement legend in order to explore the historical problem of national identity in the Balkans. In their ironic versions of the immurement legend, the bridge emerges not only as the symbol to which the Balkans are historically compared, but also as a metaphor interiorized by the population of the region. The chapter records the disappearance of the female body as a productive metaphor of community building, while men and conflicts among men come to the forefront, as communal crisis increasingly becomes embedded in the language of defense or invasion. All the three narratives are situated against ethnic conflicts, World Wars, Communism, and dictatorships that marked recent Balkan history, but also nationalist uprisings and populist movements. However, these texts show little sympathy for the romantic ideals behind these nationalist projects. Instead, they offer an increasingly critical view of community's sacrificial imperative, which grows louder with the succession of historic events, and culminates with a hybrid of the Communist totalitarian state and lethal capitalism. The full power of these texts lies in their social critique of as much the contemporary Balkan societies as of the propensity of human communities in general to sabotage the "construction" of peaceful interethnic coexistence. In dialogue with the Congress theme of ethno-literature, my presentation will invite a discussion of both the sacrificial economy behind the legend of immurement, but also of whether such nation(alist)-informed literature, as the three novels mentioned above, could be thought of as "ethno-literature" proper.

Biography: EMPLOYMENT September 2007-Tenure-track Assistant Professor of South Slavic and Comparative Literature University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Joint appointment between Slavic Languages and Literatures Department and Comparative Literature Department. EDUCATION May 2007 Ph.D. Comparative Literature Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ Dissertation: Mythistory in a Nationalist Age: Comparative Analysis of Serbian and Greek Postmodern Fiction. February 2004 Masters in Comparative Literature, Distinction (did not take Degree) Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ. March 2002 Masters in English Literature and Theory, Magna cum laude. University of Nis, Serbia. 1993 Bachelor of Arts in English Language and Literature, High Honors. University of Nis, Serbia. PUBLICATIONS COMPLETED MONOGRAPH Sacrificed Body: Balkan Community Building and the Limits of Freedom. Currently under press review. EDITED VOLUME Mythistory and Narratives of the Nation in the Balkans, Tatjana Aleksic, ed. Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing, Ltd., UK, 2007. REFEREED JOURNALS "National Definition through Postmodern Fragmentation: Milorad Pavic's Dictionary of the Khazars." Slavic and East European Journal (SEEJ) 53:1 (Spring 2009): 86-104. "The Emerging Subject of Rhea Galanaki's Ismail Ferik Pasha." Journal of Modern Greek Studies 27:1 (May 2009): 31-54. "Extricating the Self from History: Bait by David Albahari." MMLA Journal 39:2 (Fall 2006): 54-70. BOOK CHAPTERS "Making Patriarchal History Women's Own: Eugenia Fakinou's The Seventh Garment." Myth and Violence in Contemporary Female Text: New Cassandras, Sanja Bahun-Radunovic, Julie Rajan, eds. Surrey, UK: Ashgate, 2011, 143-160. "Grief Can only Be Written in One's Mother Tongue." Literature of Exile, Agnieszka Gutty, ed. New York, Berlin: Peter Lang Publishing, 2009, 155-175. "Disintegrating Narratives and Nostalgia in Post-Yugoslav Postmodern Fiction." Balkan Literatures in the Era of Nationalism, Murat Belge, Jale Parla, eds. Istanbul, Turkey: Bilgi University Press, 2009, 3-14. "Mythistorical Genres of the Nation," Mythistory and Narratives of the Nation in the Balkans, Tatjana Aleksic, ed. Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing, Ltd., UK, 2007, 1-11. "The Balkan Immurement Legend: Between Myth and a Nationalist Project," Mythistory and Narratives of the Nation in the Balkans, Tatjana Aleksic, ed. Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing, Ltd., UK, 2007, 87-106.

ETHNOGRAPHICAL SITUATIONS IN CHRISTOPH RANSMAYR AND JOSEPH WINKLER

A. Honold
Universität Basel

Abstract: is missing

Biography: is missing

REALISTIC ETHNOLITERATURE – IS THERE SUCH A THING?

K. Stüssel
Universität Bonn

Abstract: The paper aims at a critical investigation of the ethnopoetic dimensions in realistic literature in 19th century Germany. Although realism is deeply involved in ethnographic research and debates, a dominant opinion attributes a movement of 'closure' to realistic texts. Thus one tends to neglect attempts to reach out beyond the confines of the literary. The paper, however, wants to demonstrate how the integration of pragmatic and ethnographic modes of narrating serves as a starting point for ethno-literature in realism.

Biography: Kerstin Stuessel is professor of German Literature at Rheinische Friedrich-Wilhelms-University since 2010. Assistant professor, 'Habilitation', Lecturer at TU Dresden. Education at the universities of Goettingen, Bielefeld (M.A.), London (university College), and Cologne (Ph.D).

S3: ARAB SPRING AND THE PERSPECTIVES OF ARAB COMPARATIVE SCHOLARSHIP

CONSIDÉRATIONS COMPARATIVES SUR LE "PRINTEMPS ARABE" À PARTIR DE L'ANALYSE DES ÉCRITS DES ORIENTALISTES ITALIENS SUR LA RÉVOLUTION ARABE DE 1916

A. Pellitteri
Université de Palerme

Abstract: L'histoire du monde arabe contemporain est aussi l'histoire de mouvements décisifs, dits révolutionnaires, qui ont caractérisé les développements récents. Ici on aborde le sujet à partir de la lecture et des positions exprimées par les orientalistes italiens, parmi lesquels Ettore Rossi, à propos de la "révolution arabe" de 1916 contre l'Empire ottoman. On fera ressortir, de manière comparative, l'utilisation de la terminologie (telle que zulm et ifsad / adl et islah en particulier) dans le cadre de la recomposition des sociétés arabes musulmanes et aussi des liaisons entre arabes et puissances coloniales et néo-coloniales.

Biography: PELLITTERI, Antonino (Université de Palerme, Italie)

AL-AZHAR FACE À LA CAMPAGNE NAPOLÉONNIENNE: QUAND LA RÉSISTANCE PROFITE DE LA DISPARITÉ

M.M. Khedr
Université du Caire

Abstract: Les relations bilatérales franco-égyptiennes sont d'une richesse remarquable. Elles sont séculaires et assez particulières, par leur nature, leur jaillissement et leur fluctuations. Parmi les stations importantes qui ont marqué ce parcours, il y a eu celle de la campagne napoléonienne en Egypte (1798-1801), cet événement grandiose qui a façonné un début de relations culturelles dépassant les limites du militaire, de la défaite, et des rapports de force trop polémiques par leur complexité : la réalité est que cet affrontement a permis de créer, pendant 150 ans au moins, en Egypte, une sorte de francophonie, bien représentante de son temps.

Al-Azhar, fondé au XVe siècle, est la plus grande institution islamique et l'une des plus anciennes universités du monde. La campagne française en Egypte est la première tentative de colonisation qui s'est dirigée vers l'Orient à l'aube du XIXe siècle. La confrontation des deux éléments représente deux mondes distincts : la tradition face à la modernité ? Telle est l'hypothèse qui émane de la première lecture de l'événement.

Pourtant l'analyse peut aller au-delà de cette simple interprétation. Campagne ou expédition ? Suggérant l'agression militaire ou l'accomplissement culturel des Français en Egypte, il est vrai que l'événement a été marqué par la violence et le sang. Mais paradoxalement à ce heurt, les conséquences en seront positives et déboucheront ultérieurement en une sorte d'inspiration et de complémentarité culturelles des plus riches entre l'Orient et l'Occident.

On pourrait évidemment susciter les rapports ambigus entre l'institution islamique d'Al Azhar : le pouvoir spirituel, le symbole national, d'un côté, et les Français : envahisseurs, « civilisés » de l'autre côté. Nous sommes à la fin du XVIIIe siècle, un siècle qui a été marqué, en France, par la philosophie, les idées, l'appel au cosmopolitisme, au nom de la civilisation supérieure de soi, des Français, représentants de la civilisation occidentale, vis-à-vis du pays arabe, des Mamlouks, l'Egypte, qui aurait constitué le noyau de l'empire occidental sollicité en Orient.

Malgré la tentation, les préjugés et les soupçons, l'opposition et les plans, un dialogue a pu s'instaurer entre les deux adversaires. La complexité de la situation n'a pas exclu une tentative d'avant-garde qui assimilerait l'Autre et s'exprimerait -vingt ans après- dans une renaissance resplendissante où l'élément français serait omniprésent. Après la pluie, le beau temps : après le choc, la communication et la tolérance. Pas de rejet de l'Autre, pas de phobie ou d'incommunicabilité. Le fanatisme n'est-il pas le premier ennemi de la civilisation ?

Biography: KHEDR, Manal (Université du Caire, Egypte)

DU DIALOGUE DES CULTURES.... L'EXEMPLE DE LOUIS MASSIGNON

N. Abd El Meguid
Université du Caire

Abstract: Au cours de cet exposé, nous tenterons d'apporter quelques éléments de réponse à une question qui excède le cadre académique proprement dit. Il s'agira de découvrir dans quelle mesure l'œuvre de Louis Massignon s'inscrit dans ce mouvement, né au cours du XXe siècle, qui préconise, de façon générale, une communication de type dialogique entre l'Occident et les autres régions du globe et qui, particulièrement, recherche un dialogue entre l'Europe et le monde arabe ou entre chrétiens et musulmans dans le quel les intervenants sont placés sur un pied d'égalité. Nous entendons par « approche dialogique », la volonté explicite d'un groupe ou d'un individu d'entrer en communication avec d'autres groupes ou individus, de les écouter, et de chercher à les comprendre. Le désir d'établir un dialogue possible, constructif et prometteur doit évidemment animer chacun des interlocuteurs. Un tel dialogue ne semble absolument pas voué à l'échec.

En effet, l'islamophilie de Louis Massignon fait figure d'exception, étant donné qu'il accorde un intérêt soutenu pour un islam spirituel, religieux et mystique- lequel intérêt se présente de fait comme une protestation contre une conception politisée de l'islam très répandue en Occident, islam envers qui, par ailleurs, l'opinion publique nourrit fréquemment un sentiment de mépris, parfois d'animosité.

L'originalité de la personne de Massignon ainsi que celle de son œuvre voire de son engagement fiévreux continuent à interroger tant chrétiens que musulmans et à témoigner de sa foi au deux partis. Cet homme à l'identité si insaisissable répond à une vocation qui l'appelle à un dialogue avec les chrétiens comme avec les musulmans et cela sans jamais les dresser les uns contre les autres. En choisissant d'étudier la démarche du « prophète du dialogue », notre contribution semble vouloir répondre à de nombreuses demandes des deux côtés, tant est actuel le message du Professeur Massignon, message qu'il convient d'encourager la diffusion.

Mais qui est cet « homme de foi, d'action et d'idéal » qui consacre sa vie à l'exploration des voies d'un dialogue ouvert à toutes les spiritualités ? En quoi consiste essentiellement la dimension de l'humanité de cet « esprit de charité » pour comprendre l'Autre ? Quels sont les fondements de l'« approche dialogique » chez ce « passionné de Hallâg » ? Est-ce l'Amour saint ? Le profond Respect ? La merveilleuse Amitié ? La Rencontre fraternelle ? L'extrême Charité ? La générosité de l'Accueil ? Comment peut-on reconsidérer voire revivifier la valeur de la Substitution, laquelle constitue l'épine dorsale, l'essence même de toute pratique de la foi ? Comment faut-il concevoir, dans cette médiation, le rôle de « l'Hôte » et celui de l'étranger comme « invité » ?

En répondant à ces questions, nous estimons qu'il serait important aujourd'hui de réfléchir sur notre façon d'enseigner, d'écrire, plus globalement de transmettre, afin que nous devenions capables d'ouvrir des chemins à l'intérieur et au-delà de nos diverses cultures et de nous effacer progressivement, de manière aussi inattendue et avec autant de générosité que Louis Massignon, l'inspirateur incomparable du dialogue islamo-chrétien.

Biography: ABD EL MEGUID, Noha (Université du Caire, Egypte)

DISCUSSIONS

S4 COMICS, GENRE AND POLITICS

WHEN UNIVERSES COLLIDE: THE NEVER ENDING BATTLE BETWEEN DC COMICS AND MARVEL COMICS AND THE ANXIETY OF INFLUENCE

S. Buchenberger
Kanagawa University

Abstract: Title of Symposium: Comparative and Narrative Approaches in Comic Studies

Title of Presentation: When Universes Collide: The Never Ending Battle between DC Comics and Marvel Comics and the Anxiety of Influence.

Presenter: Stefan Buchenberger PhD. Kanagawa University, Yokohama, Japan

Since the 1960s the mainstream comic book world has basically been divided into two universes, those populated by the characters of DC Comics and Marvel Comics. Before that time, until Marvel Comics broke onto the scene with Fantastic Four # 1 in 1961 and Amazing Fantasy #15, which introduced Spider-Man in 1962, DC Comics set the standard for superhero comics and still considers itself “the original universe”. So how was it possible for Marvel to overcome the dominance of its mighty predecessor and establish itself as the other major player on the comic book scene, and for long periods of time even to surpass DC in the volume of comics sold?

Using Harold Bloom’s theory of purposefully misinterpreting one’s literary predecessors in order to supplant them, this paper will seek to show how Marvel successfully misread DC in order to create its own original comic book universe and how this process of reciprocal misinterpretation is still ongoing.

This seemingly eternal mechanism that operates within the sphere of superhero comic books also makes the conception of really new ideas, trends or characters very difficult, as the lack of convincing new characters since early 90s shows. It would further explain the constant restarts and rewritings of both universes that we see, as both DC and Marvel try to reinvent the wheel by misreading their own and their competitor’s iconic characters.

Biography: Bloom, Harold: The Anxiety of Influence: A Theory of Poetry, New York: Oxford University Press, 2nd ed. 1997

100 BULLETS AND THE HARD-BOILED TRADITION

H. Backe
Ruhr University Bochum

Abstract: As American and as literary as few genres, hard-boiled has frequently and easily transcended cultural and medial borders. What Raymond Chandler called “realistic mystery fiction” has been appropriated by French novelists in their own serie noir and has been turned by Hollywood into film noir. From its beginnings in 1923, when Black Mask Magazine published the first formative stories of Carroll John Daly and Dashiell Hammett, to the late 20th century and the novels of Sara Paretsky and James Ellroy, hard-boiled has evolved and – in its own way – matured. At the same time, its motifs, characters, and narrative conventions have dissipated so widely outside the genre as to be ubiquitous. Brian Azzarello and Eduardo Risso’s acclaimed 100 Bullets (New York, Vertigo 1999-2009) is a comic series which consciously and overtly borrows from hard-boiled traditions. Running to 100 issues, the series initially appears to be a sequence of loosely connected revenge stories set in contemporary urban America, yet evolves into an increasingly complex conspiracy plot in which a confederacy of crime-lords secretly governs the USA. Within this big picture, only one story-arc could be unreservedly classified as noir: in The Counterfifth Detective, private eye Milo Garrett is the protagonist and narrator of his final case involving a stolen painting, missing persons and several ‘dames.’ Just as the painting he is trying to retrieve is only a red herring in his own story, yet proves to be a vital plot point within the scope of the whole series, Milo's story and the way it is told might seem arbitrary at first, yet are indicative of the way Azzarello and Risso handle generic traditions. This paper argues that the series skillfully deconstructs hard-boiled conventions only to reconstruct them as something else, using the genre and its development as an aesthetic mirror-image of the disorder-as-order of its story.

Biography: Hans-Joachim Backe is post-doctoral researcher at the Department of General and Comparative Literature at Ruhr-University Bochum, Germany. He is the author of Strukturen und Funktionen des Erzählens im Computerspiel (2008), winner of the Anna Balakian Memorial Award of 2010, and co-editor of From Ritual to Romance and Beyond. Comparative Literature and Comparative Religious Studies (2011). In 2010, he has been elected chairperson of the Research Committee on Comparative Literature in the Digital Age. His research interests include literary theory, transmedia narratology, games studies, comic studies, and literature of the 19th to 21st century.

FROM V FOR VENDETTA TO THE ARAB SPRING – METAMORPHOSIS OF THE GUY FAWKES MASK

A. Mahmutovic
Stockholm University

Abstract: Alan Moore's V for Vendetta appropriated the image of Guy Fawkes, not only playing with the historical meaning and significance of this figure but also creating a whole other signifier and signified, which showed traces of a revolutionary spirit in modern popular culture. It could, in many ways, be used to support the theory of hegemony in the sense that it has produced a negotiated set of meanings that can be both commercial and oppositional. With the release of the filmatization of Moore's novel, the further transformation of the mask, as a popular culture commodity, the uses of the mask embolden competing interests and values as well as they show an on-going process of re-shaping those values. Following the release of the film current developments in the sphere of politics concerning anti-piracy legislation such as ACTA, SOPA, and the global Occupy movement have led to the Guy Fawkes mask generating more widespread exposure. As a political symbol, the Guy Fawkes mask is distinct from other political symbols before its time such as the Che Guevara image or the peace sign. It is dissimilar from earlier symbols of political protest in the way it does not articulate a very specific revolutionary politics the way the other political symbols did. It has been utilized both in support of and against different politics all over the world from the Arab Spring to the Church of Scientology. At the same time, the mask has also been re-articulated in several cultural and subcultural spheres. All these factors place the mask in a unique relation to the powers of incorporation, much more than many other political symbols.

Biography: Adnan Mahmutovic is a Bosnian/Swedish Lecturer in English Literature and Creative Writing at Stockholm University. His work has appeared in many international journals, and his book Ways of Being Free is published by Rodopi. His fiction books include Thinner than a Hair, Refugee, and How to Fare Well and Stay Fair.

S4 MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE

CROSSING THE LINES: PASSPORTS AND BORDERS AS MOTIFS IN CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE OF MIGRATION

J. Gulddal

University of Newcastle

Abstract: This paper investigates the use of passports and borders as motifs in contemporary literature of migration. Obtaining appropriate travel papers and having them scrutinised by the police at the border is often a pivotal movement in individual migration narratives, deciding between granted or denied access, recognition or rejection and, ultimately, a life of adversity or opportunity. Further, passports and borders have a certain metaphorical import within the migrant experience in as much as they embody the hybridity of migrant identity as well as the transnationality of migrant literature. For these reasons, the passport and the anxiety-ridden border crossing have become standard elements in contemporary migrant literature. My discussion proceeds comparatively and draws out three prominent examples originating, not so much in three different national settings, but rather in three different border regions, which are subjected to detailed narrative inquiry: the Iron Curtain in Herta Müller's Der Mensch ist ein großer Fasan auf der Welt (1986), the US-Mexican border in T. Coraghessan Boyle's The Tortilla Curtain (1995) and the Strait of Gibraltar in Tahar Ben Jelloun's Partir (2006). Analysing these works in terms of their use of passports and borders as motifs, I posit two key hypotheses: Firstly, I argue that passports and borders are evoked in these novels as textual interfaces bringing together a specific historical situation and a specific literary mode of enunciation. Thus, the often highly detailed accounts of contemporary movement control practices serve, on the one hand, to anchor the plot historically; on the other hand, they are used constructively as a means of articulating the spatial, narrative and thematic dimensions of the individual work. The paper demonstrates how this dual structure enables the analysed novels to undertake a multifaceted investigation of migration, territoriality and freedom under the condition of universal movement control. Secondly, the paper hypothesises that the motifs of passports and borders offer a privileged opportunity to explore and reinterpret the constituent transnationality of migrant literature: these institutions of movement control are themselves interfaces separating nations yet also overseeing the traffic between them, and as such they provide powerful focal points for a literature situated in the borderlands rather than within a single national context. In pursuing these hypotheses, the paper calls attention to the seemingly humdrum practicalities and obstacles of migration while at the same time exploring their wider significance both in terms of how they are deployed productively as literary strategies and in terms of their heuristic potential for an exploration of migrancy and transnationality in contemporary literature.

Biography: Dr. Jesper Gulddal is a senior lecturer in literary studies at the University of Newcastle, Australia. He holds a PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Copenhagen, and completed his post-doctoral work at Clare Hall, Cambridge University. He has published widely on the literary history of European anti-Americanism from Romanticism to the present day, most recently the monograph Anti-Americanism in European Literature (New York: Palgrave-Macmillan, 2011). Having previously completed a study of the passport as a motif in European literature of the nineteenth century (in Danish: Litterære pasregimer (Copenhagen: Museum Tusulanum Press, 2008)), he is currently working on a general investigation of the impact of movement control practices on the European novel.

ANDRÉE CHEDID : RACINES ET LIBERTÉ DANS LE ROMAN LES QUATRE MORTS DE JEAN DE DIEU ET DANS L'OEUVRE INTÉGRALE DE L'AUTEUR

S.P. Pérez

E.O.I. Moratalaz

Abstract: Les quatre morts de Jean de Dieu, le roman ultime d'Andrée Chedid publié aux éditions Flammarion (2010), dessine le portrait d'un enfant du XXème siècle au nom sanctificateur: Jean de Dieu, personnage auquel elle donne une dimension emblématique jalonnée des bouleversements du siècle précédent.

De la poésie à la prose, elle nous livre une fresque où rien n'est oublié: l'Histoire, l'amour, la famille, la maladie, la mort. La fiction saisit l'histoire et emprunte à l'art ses métaphores, à la musique, à la peinture, à la littérature pour livrer la charpente intérieure du vécu d'un individu et la manière littéraire de le traduire. La fiction a le privilège de s'élever à un autre genre de vérité que celui livré par les faits historiques positivement attestés. Les silences de l'histoire sont comblés par les ressentis personnels qui appartiennent, toutefois, à un certain collectif et peuvent être transmués à plusieurs collectifs de nombreuses périodes historiques. Ses événements sont inscrits autrement dans notre idée de nous-mêmes et c'est ce qui fait de nous un individu à part entière dans le paradoxe de nos contradictions qui n'en conforment pas moins notre personnalité multiple. La pénétration de l'histoire dans la vie collective et celles des destins individuels est l'axe d'où part la connaissance de l'homme et de la société, confrontant la mémoire historique et scientifique à l'autre, existentielle et artistique.

Les problèmes de la société ne s'arrêtent pas aux frontières des Etats mais s'inscrivent dans le champ de la globalité. Andrée Chedid est bien placée pour nous le dire puisqu'elle est née en Égypte, originaire du Liban et qu'elle a vécu à Paris depuis 1946. Au croisement d'identités et de religions diverses de par son origine familiale, elle a toujours créé des passerelles entre l'Orient et l'Occident à travers son parcours littéraire. Enfant du siècle elle-même, donc (1920-2011). Ce dernier roman est, sans nul doute, la sublimation de l'oeuvre intégrale d'Andrée Chedid. Il s'inscrit dans l'universalité tellement elle a su par la maîtrise de sa langue adapter des faits concrets et prendre de l'envol au-delà d'une histoire particulière pour rejoindre la pensée universelle.

Mais Chedid ne s'en tient pas qu'à cet aspect. Elle va bien au-delà. Elle s'interroge sur les interactions où se jouent le destin d'un homme et la convergence de ses interrogations et de son positionnement. Elle privilégie l'influence de la religion pour aller vers l'athéisme ; des mythes universels dont le roman est truffé pour mieux se les approprier ; des convictions politiques comme le communisme à une époque, déconstruit par la chute du mur de Berlin ; de l'influence de la parole écrite et littéraire ou orale, des proverbes, pour mieux les détourner dans un complexe de métaphores et de paraboles ; des peintures qui deviennent des leit-motifs de l'existence ; des dissertations philosophiques ; des références culturelles universelles multiples surtout au croisement entre la culture espagnole et la française mais au-delà encore. S'en mêlent des personnages égyptiens pour combler cette présence méditerranéenne commune aux traits migrants.

Migration qui a lieu dans plusieurs dimensions spatiales symboliques par leur interculturalité et leur transculturalité : Paris, terre d'exil, territoire aux visages multiples, qui représente pour l'auteure comme elle le lit dans toute son oeuvre, la liberté, et qui prend dans ce roman précis l'allure de l'affranchissement du milieu et des croyances inculquées par la famille ou la politique d'un pays avant d'acquérir une autonomie personnelle. Et cela va plus loin encore. La langue française aussi et surtout, comme véhicule international et littéraire de l'expression de cette liberté. À celui-ci, vient s'ajouter Cerbère, à la frontière espagnole mais toujours en France. Endroit qui prend tout son sens symbolique dans le mythe grec et dans le roman des Quatre morts de Jean de Dieu, comme lieu inévitable de passage entre la vie et la mort, comme territoire qui embrasse la Méditerranée, espace géostratégique partagé entre l'Espagne et la France, reliant aussi bien Marseille et l'Égypte, autres présences géographiques du roman.

Ponctué de réflexions en tout genre : médicales, scientifiques, économiques, sociologiques, mathématiques, astronomiques... le roman d'Andrée Chedid ne fait que recréer au sommet de sa création, avec une mise en scène tout autre que celle que nous lui connaissions, l'essence de sa pensée et de ses questionnements bien armés dans un livre plein de sagesse mais non dépourvu d'humour, de beauté, de poésie, de la fragilité de l'homme et de son passage sur terre, sur une part de terre, fragile, d'argile, jusqu'à redevenir poussière.

Le lecteur semble plonger dans la tragédie dès la première page, celle de la mort. Car c'est la vie qui le veut, dira l'auteure. Mais envisagée à l'opposé de la haine et de la violence, dans la sublimation de l'amour, de l'art, de la philosophie, de la science, du corps...

Un corps qui veut être présence et qui est mis en scène dans l'espace et dans le temps, entretenant ces espaces et ces temps ; les temps et les espaces de Jean de Dieu redonnant vie à la phrase introductrice de Chrétien de Troyes : « Li cors s'en va, il cuers séjorne » (Le corps s'en va, le coeur séjourne).

Ce roman, selon les critiques, représente la quintessence de son oeuvre, oeuvre achevée, puisque Andrée Chedid est décédée en 2011, parfaite, par conséquent. Ainsi est-elle !

Biography: Professeur de français pour adultes dans une École Officielle de Langues (Escuela Oficial de Idiomas) de Madrid en Espagne et responsable du département de français, je suis spécialiste en Andrée Chedid sur qui j'ai écrit plusieurs communications dans divers symposiums à Grenade, Cordoue... et à l'Université à distance de Madrid dans le cadre de la formation pour les professeurs sur la « littérature française et francophone contemporaine ». J'ai également collaboré avec l'Université à distance dans diverses communications sur plusieurs auteurs différents à l'Institut Français de Madrid dans le sein de séminaires de la littérature.

J'ai été collaboratrice littéraire pour des maisons d'édition en Espagne comme SM, SGEL qui diffusent les méthodes d'Hachette en Espagne et suis co-auteure d'une méthode française pour les collèges-lycées chez Oxford University Press.

BETWEEN REPRESENTING A STORY OF MIGRATION AND RE-IMAGINING A TALE OF EXOTICISM IN ABDELKADER BENALI'S DE LANGVERWACHTE

N. Baba

Leiden University

Abstract: Abstract In this paper I will analyse Abdelkader Benali's novel De Langverwachte (2002) which narrates a story of migration from a small village in Morocco to the metropolitan city of Rotterdam. I will discuss particularly how the novel redeploys exoticism as a particular practice of "cultural translation", of seeing, speaking and thinking onto migrant people as exotic others. The novel represents migrant characters through exotic cultural codes, among which mystery, strangeness and romance in a wild landscape. The text's particular mode of narration testifies to both a fascination with and a fear from the culturally different migrants. This narration attempts to translate migrants as subjects of desire in a way that makes them as familiar and at the same time strange to the home (Dutch) culture. The narrator's representation of their cultural and mental world both in their homeland and the host society maintains the idea of the other's absolute difference. In my close-reading, I will argue how migrants are subjects of translation, (re)imagined as exotic others, romanticized and mysterious. My paper will display thereby the text's exoticist representation of migrants' touching story which apparently caters for the Western reader and reinforces Orientalist perception of exotic otherness.

Biography: Nouzha Baba is a PhD candidate at the Institute for Cultural Disciplines (LUICD) of Leiden University. She received a BA in English Literature (2006) from Abdelmalek Essaâdi University of Tetouan and an MA in Cross-Cultural and Literary Studies (2008) from Sidi Mohamed Ben Abdellah University of Fez. Her current dissertation is a comparative study of contemporary French and Dutch literature of Moroccan migration, in which she focuses on the interrelated issues of globalization, migration, interculturality and identity. Her research is interdisciplinary which brings together literature of migration, (post)postcolonial theory, cultural studies and analysis. She aims thereby to display the intercultural dynamics in the construction of identity in times of globalization and (post)migration.

S3: PRESIDENTIAL PANEL — COMPARATIVE LITERATURE/WORLD LITERATURE : RECONSIDERED / LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE/LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE : NOUVEAUX EXAMENS

WORLD LITERATURE ET LITTÉRATURES MINEURES

M. Symington

université de la rochelle

Abstract: Comment les littératures dites mineures peuvent se composer dans le paysage de la « World Literature » ? Bien des modes de composition sont concevables. On a dit la hiérarchie des tailles des littératures, le centre et la périphérie, les réseaux. Ces littératures mineures peuvent être aussi des moyens d'analyser les données de la « World Literature » et de dire les limites internes que porte cette « World Literature »

Biography: Micéala Symington, Professeur, Université de La Rochelle (France)

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE/"WORLD LITERATURE": THE INDIAN PERSPECTIVE

I. Chanda

Jadavpur University

Abstract: Comparative Literature provides a method of studying literary texts. 'World Literature' is an object of study that can be addressed with the tools of Comparative Literature. From within Comparative Literature, we are able to map flows and formations in various language-cultures out of which are born texts that may be located within specific language-literary systems and studied with the tools of reception provided by our discipline. Comparative Literature in the west was committed, from the time Goethe formulated the ideal of weltliteratur, to transcend national boundaries for language and literature: indeed, Goethe's proposal may be seen as a challenge to the contemporary cultural imperialism, and an alternative way of conceptualising the world in terms of cultural contact and exchange. However, this did not mean that World Literature would be translated into a single homogeneity, or that the 'world' should be defined along the ideology and proclivity of a single perspective in the interests of an abstract 'universal' humanity without local habitation and name. World literature proponents in the west have tended to pose World Literature as an opposition to National Literature or as an aggregative whole composed of adding all so-called National Literatures. This assumed a homogenous 'nation', with a single language and uniform literature. The ideology that marks the construction of the category World Literature today reveals the problems and obsessions of those constructing the category. The relation of Comparative Literature to World Literature was specified for the multilingual and pluricultural Indian context by Rabindranath, who titled a lecture on Comparative Literature as Viswasahitya, World Literature. Tagore conceptualised world literature as representing the 'entirety of the literary act'. Comparative Literature aims to study this 'entirety' by placing the individual 'literary act' in the context of its production, thus requiring the reader of world literature to understand literary activity and its process of coming into being not from the 'outside', but from within the temporal, spatial and linguistic location of its production. This paper attempts to re-figure the relation between World Literature and Comparative Literature from the multilingual, plural Indian perspective, where such a located 'reading' is not only a pedagogical or a scholarly activity, but a way of negotiating daily lived reality.

Biography: Professor of Comparative Literature and Coordinator of the University Grants Commission Centre of Advanced Study Programme in Comparative Literature at Jadavpur University. Books: Tracing the Charit as a Genre (2003), Reception of the Receievd: European Romanticism, Rabindranath and Suryakant Tripathi Nirala (2007); edited volumes: Literary Historiography (2004) in the series Literary Studies in India, Locating Cultural Change: Theory, Method Process (2011); translations: Bitter Soil (1996), The Glory of Sri Sri Ganesh (2003), DhoraiCharit Manas (forthcoming)

LE RELATIVISME BIEN TEMPERE OU COMMENT COMPARER L'INCOMPARABLE

M. Spiridon
Université de Bucarest

Abstract: Nos propos portent sur la mission de la littérature comparée de tempérer les excès relativistes de la nouvelle world littérature/littérature monde afin de délimiter un espace littéraire où le véritable dialogue interculturel soit toujours possible. On y suggère aussi qu'afin de gérer un tel espace la littérature comparée actuelle devrait se forger des concepts-clef et découvrir des méthodes appropriées.

Biography: Monica Spiridon, Professeur, Université de Bucarest

S2: LES RAPPORTS LITTÉRAIRES ENTRE LA FRANCE ET LE BRÉSIL

GRANDE SERTÃO: VEREDAS (DIADORIM). DEUX TRADUCTIONS, DEUX MOMENTS DE LA RÉCEPTION DE LA LITTÉRATURE BRÉSILIENNE EN FRANCE

M.V.M.D. Aguiar
USP

Abstract: Les deux traductions françaises de Grande sertão: veredas (Diadorim, en français), l'une réalisée dans les années 1960 par Jean-Jacques Villard, l'autre dans les années 1990 par Maryvonne Lapouge-Pettorelli, marquent deux moments différents de la réception de João Guimarães Rosa en France. Dans les années 1960, l'écrivain est presque inconnu dans ce pays, et la lecture de son premier livre traduit en français, Buriti, suscite l'étonnement et l'admiration des critiques, qui essaient de trouver des repères pour situer ses histoires et son écriture. Les années 1990 accueillent, à l'inverse, un auteur déjà consacré, qui provoque chez ses critiques une admiration plus informée et en même temps plus "convenue". Ce sont ces deux réceptions que nous présenterons et analyserons dans cet exposé, en nous appuyant sur les critiques parues dans la presse à l'occasion du lancement de chacune des traductions de Guimarães Rosa.

Biography: Márcia Valéria Martinez de Aguiar a fait sa formation en Philosophie à l'Université de São Paulo. Passionnée de la traduction, elle a suivi, ensuite, un Cours de Spécialisation en Traduction à la Faculté de Lettres de la même Université. Son Master 2 porte sur la définition du concept d'oralité dans un ensemble de contes de tradition orale choisis et racontés – par écrit – par Henri Gougaud, conteur d'histoires à la radio et au théâtre. Son doctorat a donné suite à son intérêt sur le concept d'oralité, cette fois-ci à partir de l'analyse des deux traductions françaises d'un roman "oral", Grande sertão: veredas, de João Guimarães Rosa. Elle est responsable pour la traduction en portugais des Fragments d'un discours amoureux, de Roland Barthes, des Lettres anglaises et Zadig, de Voltaire, et de Temps et récit, de Paul Ricoeur, entre autres.

TRADUCTION ET PARATEXTE: L'IMAGE DU BRÉSIL A L'ÉTRANGER

M.C. Rodrigues-Alves
IBILCE - UNESP

Abstract: L'étude du paratexte éditorial de livres brésiliens traduits à l'étranger révèle les partis pris lors de sa conception et publication. Nous pouvons, dès le choix de chaque couverture, remarquer des éléments qui nous indiquent de plus en plus un projet éditorial précis qui cible des lecteurs particuliers: les lecteurs de littérature brésilienne traduite. Le marché éditorial, comme tout industrie, suit des règles envisageant la rentabilité. Il ne serait pas étonnant, donc, d'y trouver des couvertures très séduisantes et exotiques. L'analyse des couvertures, catégorisée en tant que paratexte éditorial par Gérard Genette, est un des moyens par lesquels nous pouvons comprendre l'évolution de la réception de la littérature brésilienne en France, l'image du Brésil auprès des éditeurs et des lecteurs français. Y a-t-il toujours un lien entre les graphismes de couverture d'un livre et le contenu de son récit? Comment les maisons d'édition françaises ont-elles conçu cette image du Brésil en France au fil des années? Nous nous proposons d'entreprendre ici l'observation et l'analyse d'un panorama consacré à cette évolution.

Biography: Maria Cláudia Rodrigues Alves a obtenu sa Licence en Animation Culturelle et Sociale à l'Institut de Formation des Comédiens–Animateurs de la Faculté d'Aix–en–Provence. À l'Université de São Paulo (USP), elle a réussi son Master 2 sur la présence de Victor Hugo chez le poète brésilien Álvares de Azevedo (Le poète–lecteur: une étude des épigraphes hugoliennes chez Álvares de Azevedo). Elle y a également soutenu sa thèse de Doctorat sur la réception de littérature brésilienne en France, à partir des oeuvres de l'auteur brésilien Rubem Fonseca traduites en français (Rubem Fonseca en France). En tant que professeur universitaire, elle a enseigné pendant quatorze ans à l'Université Presbytérienne Mackenzie de São Paulo (1995–2009). Depuis 2009, Maria Cláudia Rodrigues Alves est Professeur–Assistante–Docteur en Langue et Littérature Françaises à l'Instituto de Biociências, Letras e Ciências Exatas (IBILCE) de l'Universidade Estadual Paulista "Júlio de Mesquita Filho" (UNESP-SP) à São José do Rio Preto–São Paulo, au Brésil.

L'ORALITE INTRADUISIBLE

A. Mouzat
Universidade de São Paulo

Abstract: Dans son article “Recepção e crítica de Macunaíma na França”, Pierre Rivas brosse un tableau précis des glissements auxquels on peut s’attendre dans la publication d’une oeuvre brésilienne en France: malentendus, autant que préventions de la part des critiques, décalages temporels et culturels, etc. Mais c’est le commentaire d’Antoine Berman, cité par Rivas, au sujet de la traduction, qui nous fournit l’essentiel de notre interrogation: la difficulté de la traduction serait le fruit non pas d’une lacune mais d’une limitation propre au système français de capter “la dynamogénie de quelque chose d’aussi foncièrement lié à l’oralité que la littérature latino-américaine... Ce niveau où le mythique, l’oral et le ludique sont unis”. Evoquer les limitations du système français, c’est au prix d’ignorer le travail d’écriture de Mario de Andrade, aussi nous interrogerons, d’une part sur l’élaboration réfléchie de l’écriture chez Mario de Andrade, avant d’examiner en quoi “le système français” serait inapproprié – à partir des analyses bermaniennes - à retrouver la dimension de “l’oralité” .

Biography: Alain Mouzat est professeur du Département de Lettres Modernes de l’Université de São Paulo, où il enseigne la langue française et la traduction. Ses recherches portent sur l’oralité et sur l’introduction de la langue parlée dans le roman du début du XXème siècle.

S3: BOOK – MATERIAL – TEXT

THE INFLUENCE OF DIGITALIZATION ON LITERARY COMMUNICATION AND THE BOOK MARKET

C. Bläsi

Johannes-Gutenberg-Universität Mainz

Abstract: Subtitle: New (and old ...) forms of literature and their technological conditionality The significance of the materiality of the medium in the age of the ebook is often discussed wrt the differences in the perception of linear book texts from printed double-spreads as opposed to from various types of screens. It is, however, an at least likewise important development in the realm of book materiality (or its absence, respectively) that constraints that had formed literary production for centuries are no longer in effect – potentially, “book” storytelling is unleashed, as it were. So called enhanced ebooks are an – up to now: rather marginal – reality, discussed mainly wrt technologies, distribution channels, technological-distributional “ecosystems”, saleability, etc. This paper will make observations, in how far one could say that the forms of literature as we know them were determined by the options (and the refused options !) of the materiality of the traditional printed book – and what that might mean for what we have to expect in literature in the near future. The paper will make reference to what had been said about the “storytelling” (they did not use this term then, though) for the multimedia CD-ROMs of the 1990s, when the window for text-based (rich) multimedia was open for a few years, before the small-band web arrived with its limitations to text and small images. To develop an educated perspective on possible new forms of literature, various storytelling approaches will be combined with broad evidence from the current enhanced ebook market (fiction and non-fiction) and also with views like the one that novel-like storytelling can now best be found in “epic” US TV series.

Biography: Christoph Bläsi (born 1960): professor for book studies at Johannes Gutenberg University of Mainz, Germany (since 2009; main research areas: digital publishing, book economy / management); 2004-2009: professor for the study of the book at University of Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany; 1992-2004: senior positions in digital publishing and strategic information management of various major German publishing houses; 1989-1992: assistant professor / researcher (in computational linguistics) at the universities of Heidelberg and Bielefeld, Germany; 1982-1989: student (mathematics, German language and literature, linguistics) at the universities of Freiburg, Germany and Sussex (Brighton, U.K.).

DIFFERENT READING DEVICES, DIFFERENT MODES OF READING?

S. Füssel, M. Schlewsky, F. Kretschmar, D. Pleimling

University of Mainz

Abstract: A book or a screen - which of these two offers more reading comfort? E-books and e-readers are playing an increasingly important role on the worldwide book market. However, readers in Germany are particularly skeptical when it comes to e-books and electronic reading devices. In the world's first reading study of its kind undertaken by the Research Unit Media Convergence of Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz (JGU) the researchers investigated whether there are reasons for this skepticism. The study analyzed the differences in reading from various kinds of media (e-book, tablet PC, paper) in two sample groups, young and elderly adults. Each participant read various texts with different levels of complexity on an e-book reader (Kindle 3), on a tablet PC (iPad), and on paper. The reading behavior and the participants' corresponding neural processes were assessed by means of concurrent measures of eye movements (eye tracking) and electrophysiological brain activity (EEG). The criteria that were taken into account and analyzed were changes in the theta frequency band power, reading behavior, text comprehension, and information recall as well as the participants' preferences for the respective medium. The study showed, that there are no disadvantages to reading from electronic reading devices compared with reading printed texts. However, the result of the study stands in stark contrast with the participants' subjective reaction. Almost all of the participants stated that they liked reading a printed book best. This was the dominant subjective response, but it does not match the data obtained from the study. In fact, tablet PCs actually provide an advantage over e-ink readers and the printed page that is not consciously perceivable: the information is processed more easily when a tablet PC is employed. Furthermore, while there were no differences between the three media employed in terms of rates of reading by the younger participants, the older participants exhibited faster reading times when using the tablet PC. Similarly, the participants' subjective perceptions did not match the results of a comparison of e-ink readers and printed paper texts. Almost all participants stated that reading from paper was more comfortable than from an e-ink reader despite the fact that the study actually showed that there was no difference in terms of reading performance between reading from paper and from an e-ink reader. This demonstrates that the subjective preference for the printed book is not an indicator of how fast and how well the information is processed.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Dominique Pleimling (*01-21-1981) - since 2011 research associate / Institute for Book Studies at the Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz - 2009-2011 Public Relations / Social Media Editor at Eichborn Publishing House (Frankfurt/Main) - 2008 Master's degree in German Studies, Book Studies and Political Science at the Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz

S2: LITERATURE AND MEDICINE

MADNESS IN MEDICINE AND LITERATURE IN EARLY MODERN EUROPE

E. Genc Arvas

Michigan State University

Abstract: This paper will investigate the notion of madness in medieval world within the framework of medieval literary representations and medical discourses. Following and at the same time challenging the Foucauldian genealogy regarding the institutionalization of madness in Europe of the post-Enlightenment, I will be asking questions such as: Can we talk about psychology and psychiatry in the Middle Ages? What is the state of healthy mind in the medieval world? Who are considered as mad? Is madness a field of science or religion? Does one's sexuality, ethnicity, love relations or eating habits make him or her a potential mad? In order to elaborate on these questions, I will be looking at the medieval interpretations of the classical conceptualization of madness and science in the western and the eastern regions. How do Muslim scholars like Avicenna and Averroes work with these notions? Are their understandings of madness compatible with their western counterparts? What was, if there was any, the global notion of madness and sanity in the larger medieval scientific, medical, and literary discourses? This paper, I believe, will contribute the ongoing discussions in literature-medicine studies as well as medieval studies by bringing in a comparative approach to numerous intersections in medicine and literature such as the East and West, Islam and Christianity, Religion and Science.

Biography: Esra Genc Arvas is a graduate student in the English Department at Michigan State University. Her research interests are literature and medicine intersection, madness in medieval literature and culture, and Old Norse literature.

SEX AND THE MARRIED GIRL: TWELFTH-CENTURY ISLAMIC AND EUROPEAN MEDICAL AND MAGICAL PRACTICE IN LITERARY CONTEXT

J.W. Hellwarth

Allegheny College

Abstract: In the Medicine of the Prophet there is a description of a hadith, a saying attributed to the Prophet and collected by later authors, that addresses together the medical, the magical, the religious, and the sexual:

A group of people have denied this even, saying it could not possibly have happened to the Prophet and considered it as a sign of weakness and imperfection...: the Messenger of God was bewitched, so that he was made to imagine that he had had intercourse with his wives yet he had not done so. That is the strongest possible sort of magic.

Said the Qādī 'Iyād: Bewitchment is an illness, a condition of sickness which could come upon him, like the various kinds of illnesses that befell him which cannot be denied nor do they impair his status as a prophet... The point here is to relate his guidance concerning the treatment of this illness...

I quote this passage because it highlights a number of different elements that illustrate a resonance between medieval Islamic and European practices that I am interested in investigating in this paper—from the medical, magical, and social discourses it evokes, to the details of its underlying narrative. This passage from the Medicine of the Prophet presents a narrative resemblance to (what I consider to be) a central narrative moment in Chrétien de Troyes' twelfth-century romance Cligés, in which Cligés' uncle, Alis, is given a potion (one of several potions and medicinal salves concocted) by Thessala, the nurse to his new bride, Fenice. This magic potion makes Alis believe he is having sex with his wife when in fact he just dreams of doing so.

The work of Thessala as a female healer is also set up in counterpoint to the visiting doctors from Salerno who come to diagnose Fenice upon her (as it turns out faked) death. The doctors from Salerno, however, are not represented in Cligés in a respectful manner. Rather, they are demonized and ultimately executed by a group of angry women as a result of their treatment of Fenice and her body after her "death." These narrative and historical details—from Cligés, the Medicine of the Prophet, and documentary evidence of Arabic medical texts translated into Latin at the school of Salerno by authors such as Constantine of Africa—are a touchstone for understanding significant medical, magical, and social practices and theories which, through the image of the medical doctor and the female healer in imaginative literature, help to inform our understanding of the interplay between Arabic and European cultures.

In this paper I suggest that the medical theory that emerges from Arabic tradition carries with it principles of religious and sexual morality that allowed for ideas about marriage, sex, and love to permeate into Western tradition—thus contributing to a dialogue between these two cultures that emerges, at least in part, in Cligés as well as other romances. These texts, taken together, contribute to our understanding of the tension that exists between notions of “courtly love” and Christian notions of love, as well as the medical principles behind lovesickness, that often get “treated” in these texts.

Biography: Jennifer Wynne Hellwarth
Allegheny College

THE CHANGING FACE OF QUACK DOCTORS: MOUNTEBANKS AND LATIN QUACK DOCTORS IN SEVENTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY ENGLAND

G. Ngg
SIM University

Abstract: In seventeenth-century England, the medical practitioners ranged from travelling peddlers of folk remedies, mountebanks and ‘chemics’ who set up shops and advertised their wares, to licensed apothecaries, barber-surgeons and finally, physicians from the College of Physicians, the ones with the full authority to “practice physic”. The social status of each group was assumed, within an implicit hierarchy, from the ‘low’ street theatre of public healing to the ‘high’ private practice of doctors. However, the economic and moral authority of each group was not always so clearly distinguished from each other when they adopted similar rhetoric and advertising tactics, and dispensed comparable common medicines. Medical training and skills were not always discriminating: perceived quack doctors or ‘chemics’ could likewise display similar knowledge and skills in a period when the professionalism of physicians was not codified, and under Charles II, some also received physician’s royal licenses to practise medicine. This paper looks at the intersection between literary and medical discourses in the cultural history of seventeenth-century medicine practices by focusing on the changing satirized representations of quack doctors in broadsides, engraved prints of image and verse, performances and theatres. The itinerant mountebank performances of sixteenth- and seventeenth-century Europe created a readily identifiable character in the foreign mountebank. As a satirized figure, it embodies the ‘low’ street culture of medicine shows; the fantastic rhetoric of miraculous cures strips away the mountebank’s healing authority. The literary mountebanks of this period, however, can reveal a contradictory complexity that belies the simplistic denouncement of medicine quackery in popular discourses. I am interested in analyzing how the mountebank’s rhetoric can be used in literary works as a kind of politicized trope of disguise and deception that goes beyond satirizing the charlatan doctor and the gullible mob. The figure of the noble mountebank will be examined here: the ‘noble’ mountebank in Ben Jonson’s Volpone (1607) and the Earl of Rochester’s “Alexander Bendo’s Bill” (1675/6). Both depict foreign mountebanks, with noble actors donning on the persona and language of the mountebank, in a performance within a performance. Volpone is a magnifico who disguises himself as Scoto of Mantua in Jonson’s play, and the Earl of Rochester, in exile from Charles II’s court, was reputed to take on the role of an Italian mountebank in London, as accounted by Rochester’s clerk, Thomas Alcock, in The Famous Pathologist, or The Noble Mountebank. In both texts, the ‘low’ culture of street performance has been adopted in the formal culture of theatre (Volpone) and the courtly coterie of manuscript culture (“Alexander Bendo’s Bill”) to expose deceptions and trickery of the rich and elite. By examining literary mountebanks in the context of the cultural history of medicine practices, the paper aims to demonstrate that medicine hawking, with its transparent sales tactics and entertainment value, was not deemed to be socially threatening and dangerous by the seventeenth century. The focus of the satire is on performance, personality and humour, rather than condemnation of a social ill. In contrast, the satirized quack doctors of eighteenth-century discourses reveal a sinister aspect. The loud, performing doctor of the public sphere was replaced by the pedantic, self-important doctor of the drawing room. Medical satires of the period severely undermined the authority and credibility of medical practitioners, whose venal and callous doctoring called for social vilification. In Jonathan Swift’s lampoon “A consultation of four Physicians upon a Lord that was dying” (1746), the quack doctors, like the mountebanks, adopt a particular language and performance to project an authoritative, socially defined identity. Swift’s pedantic frauds, however, spout nonsensical Latin, and expose a condemnable heartless corruption, more so because they are in partnership with one another. In this skit, Swift is not lampooning notorious personalities, but satirizing the entire profession of physicians. Such satirical attacks were found in cartoons, essays and novels of eighteenth-century England, in a transitional period where the burgeoning occupational development of medical professions witnessed competitive self-declared distinctions of the different groups of medical practitioners, from apothecaries, physicians and surgeons. Examining medical and literary discourses in the cultural history of medicine in seventeenth and eighteenth-century England will shed light on the changing satires of doctors, where the satires serve as a social barometer of a different kind of entertainment, a new kind of cultural anxiety.

Biography: Genice Ngg is the dean of the School of Arts and Social Sciences at SIM University, Singapore. Her research interests includes seventeenth- and eighteenth-century English literature.

ADAM, FAUST, AND THE BRAIN

J. McCarthy
Vanderbilt University

Abstract: This paper examines Michelangelo's "Creation of Adam," Faust, and neuroscience through an investigation of the role of anatomy studies for Michelangelo in the composition of his iconic work. The paper will emphasize the fingers that do not touch and the synapses in the neuronetwork and explore the key role they play in the rise of consciousness through the figure of Faust, a new Adam.

Biography: Stephanie M. Hilger
Associate Professor of Comparative and World Literature, German, and Gender and Women's Studies University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
2090 Foreign Languages Building, MC-178
707 South Mathews Avenue
Urbana, IL 61801
USA

S3: TRANSLINGUAL LITERATURE

"THE YIDDISH I CAN'T SPEAK IS MORE NATURAL TO MY BEING THAN ENGLISH": ON RELATIONS BETWEEN FORM, CONTENT AND LANGUAGE IN YIDDISH WRITING

C.A. Knoop

Freie Universität Berlin

Abstract: Research on bi- or multilingual writers, scarce as it is, often focuses on individuals: exiled and emigrated authors; authors who were raised speaking several languages; authors forced to adopt a new language or having freely chosen a new one; and authors who go back and forth between languages, who choose to write in a foreign tongue right away, or who swap languages at some point in their careers. The underlying expectation, in these cases, seems to be that a member of one cultural and linguistic entity mediates cultural experience to others who are not part of it, be it directly or indirectly. In fact, even if the text does not seem to suggest such a mediation, the author's linguistic and cultural provenance has a way of entering interpretations. However, there are whole groups of authors whose literary experience, culturally as well as linguistically, is, from the outset, a bilingual one. This includes authors from countries under imperial rule, who, as J.M. Coetzee has pointed out, always lead a literary "dual life", but also, for instance, all writers of Yiddish literature. Their experience of linguistic and cultural dualism is not an individual one, in which the author 'translates' his linguistically inaccessible thinking into a semiotic system accessible to his audience, but one in which the author can indeed assume a shared comparative experience with his readers. At the same time, a great many speakers of Yiddish write in the everyday language of the countries they live in rather than in their mother tongue. The ambiguity of this linguistic experience, however, is not necessarily as clearly a cultural and geopolitical (and certainly not a national) one, as it is in many other cases of L2 writing. Leonard Michaels, an American writer from a Jewish background who only spoke Yiddish until the age of six, claims that the particularity of Yiddish lies in its unmistakable link between form and content, language and semantics, shape and sense. He further concludes that the particularity of Yiddish feeds into any other language Yiddish speakers might adopt, even though the large variety of linguistic modifiers prominent in the Yiddish language (examples include terms like nu, epes and tokeh), that are translatable individually but not within the syntactic context, cannot be used in other languages. To him, speakers of Yiddish, due to their language, are forever chained to the understanding that the shape of literary expression is also its sense (which to him is the source of Yiddish humour). In this talk, I will discuss Michaels's claims in the light of the literary examples he offers in his own essays, focussing on the question of what formal traces or undercurrents of the Yiddish language could influence and shape a text written in another tongue. This discussion will take place before the backdrop of the collective history of dual linguistic experiences inherent to Yiddish literature.

Biography: Christine A. Knoop, born in Munich, is an assistant professor at the Peter Szondi Institute of Comparative Literature and the Research Cluster "Languages of Emotion" at Freie Universität Berlin, Germany. Before her appointment to Freie Universität, she studied at Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität in Munich, at the Sorbonne in Paris, and at University College London, where she also received her PhD. Her first monograph, Kundera and the Ambiguity of Authorship, has appeared in 2011. Her further publications include work on non-mother tongue writing; 20th and 21st century German and French literature; travel and exile; and interdisciplinary literary studies.

WHAT LANGUAGE(S) WILL WORLD LITERATURE(S) SPEAK?

L. Razumova

Independent scholar

Abstract: Authors, who chose to write in an acquired language or in both their L1 and L2, have problematized and shaped models of national and transnational affiliation in language. The paper will examine how writing bilingually, especially in major, supra-national languages (English, Russian, French) relates to such notions as world literature and littérature –monde en français. I will start by critically examining the conflicting claims stated in the manifesto "Pour une littérature –monde en français" published in Le Monde in March 2007. The manifesto calls for a Copernican revolution: liberating the French language from its exclusive pact with a nation, recognizing the de facto de-centeredness of writing in French, and shifting literary focus from obsessive self-referentiality to the increased consciousness of the world around. Although its claims are restricted to literary production in French, the manifesto seeks to address the global literary scene. Does littérature-monde emphasize multiple attachments, eliminate the notion of national literature altogether, or does it make a case for a model more clearly situated in a language than World Literature? The paper will focus on the cases of Andrei Makine and Nancy Huston, francophones by choice, who often return to their home countries thematically, but otherwise pursue very different trajectories. For instance, Huston started self-translating nearly all her work, while Makine relies on other translators. Through selected readings of Makine's and Huston's fictional texts and analysis of reception of their work, I would like to investigate how they have gradually established and articulated a particular relation to their nations of origin and to the literary space of their choice.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Lyudmila Razumova holds a PhD in Comparative Literature (Stony Brook University). She has taught a variety of language, translation and literature courses at Yekaterinburg Institute of International Relations (Russia) and SUNY, Stony Brook. She has also worked as an interpreter and co-authored The Interpreters Companion, Russian Edition (with Holly Mikkelson). Her research interests are bilingual/translingual writing, translation studies (self-translation in particular), twentieth-century Russian and French literature, and film studies. She currently resides in London.

TRANSLINGUAL LITERATURE AS POLITICAL AGENCY AGAINST MISOGYNY, TYRANNY, AND WAR: ARAB WOMEN'S WRITINGS IN ENGLISH

A. Malak

Grant MacEwan University

Abstract: Writing in an adopted language or in, what an author once called, one's "step-mother tongue," is a complex dynamic fraught with conflicting currents and emotions, especially when the language involved, English, is associated with colonial prejudice and domination. On the other hand, as I have argued elsewhere, any language is "a sophisticated currency of credible circulation and communication" open to whoever is capable of appropriating and skilfully utilizing it for whatever cause deemed worthy of the writerly enterprise. Within such a context, the English language accords access to a global audience that may not be aware of the intricate, at times messy, perspectives of persecuted peoples engaged in unequal battles against formidable foes and forces. The argument here is illustrated with references to works produced by three women writers: the Moroccan Fatima Mernissi, the Iraqi Nuha al-Radi, and the Egyptian Ahdaf Soueif. The discourse shall deal with such vital issues as Arab-Muslim feminism invoked in Mernissi's books; the Gulf War of 1991 and the devastating bombardment of Baghdad detailed by the prominent Iraqi artist Al-Radi in her book, Baghdad Diaries: A Woman's Chronicle of War and Exile; and the so-called Arab Spring as chronicled by novelist Soueif's 2012 book, Cairo: My City, Our Revolution.

Biography: Dr. Amin Malak
Department of English
Grant MacEwan University
Edmonton, Alberta, Canada

S3: THE UPS AND DOWNS THAT WESTERN LITERARY CONCEPTS HAVE EXPERIENCED ON THEIR WAY TO THE EAST

TRANSLATIONS AND TRANSMISSION OF THE CONCEPT OF "MELODRAMA" IN MODERN CHINESE THEATER

S. Lo

Université Sorbonne Nouvelle Paris III

Abstract: This paper examines the translations of the term “melodrama” as a dramatic genre and their transmission as an esthetic concept in modern Chinese theater. Often connected to the idea of the “melodramatic”, the term “melodrama” is loosely defined in Chinese language. Since the publication of James Smith’s Melodrama (1973) in Chinese in 1992, qingjieju (“drama of plot”) has become a widely accepted translation, although the plot is an essential element in almost every dramatic genre. Another widely used translation of melodrama is tongsuju, literally signifying “a theater reachable for ordinary people”. While qingjieju focuses on the writing skill of melodrama, tongsuju suggests the public reception of this genre. Neither qingjieju nor tongsuju points out the musical element in melodrama, which is implied by its prefix “melo”. In the early 20th century, when the concept of tragedy was taking shape (Jiang Guanyun, Zhongguo zhi yanjujie, 1904; Wang Guowei, Hongloumeng pingzhuàn, 1904) and has been known to Chinese speakers as beiju, the melodrama has also begun to enter into Chinese theater’s vocabulary. In “Our School’s Ideas about New Theater” (Wuxiao xinju guan, 1916), for example, the melodrama is conceived by Zhou Enlai as a “drama of sensation” (ganjueju) and is assigned to the category of opera. In Hu Shi’s critics on Shakespeare (1920), the melodrama is translated as “drama of excitement” (cijiju) and its musical element is still ignored. Ouyang Yuqian has adapted La Tosca of Victorien Sardou, and in his souvenirs (1929) he calls it a “boisterous” play (naoju). Ouyang also indicates how the theater company Chunliushu has inspired from the western melodrama. In the latter case, however, Ouyang quotes the English term “melodrama” without giving any Chinese translation. According to the French edition of La Tosca (1887), this play is a “drama” instead of a “melodrama”, although the “melo” elements must be observed in the opera version entitled Tosca (1900). In fact, among modern Chinese literary publications, the complete translation of western melodrama can hardly be found. But in the 1930s and the 1940s, the term “melodrama” continues to be used in playwrights’ creation: Li Jianwu’s Shisan nian (“Thirteen Years”, 1937-1939) and Zhang Junxiang’s Biancheng gushi (“Story in a Town on the Frontiers”, 1941) are only two examples. In both cases, the plays titles are followed by the term “melodrama” in its English form – even though Li is a highly appreciated translator due to his abundant translation of Molière’s plays. The (non-)translation(s) of the “melodrama” can be resulted from the lack of a corresponding wasei kango – western vocabulary translated/invented by the Japanese speakers, written in Chinese characters (kanji) and finally absorbed into Chinese language. For example, the Chinese translations of beiju (tragedy) and xiju (comedy) are in fact the borrowings from wasei kango. As far as the melodrama is concerned, there is no wasei kango which can be directly adopted by the Chinese speakers. The melodrama is transcribed by katakana (Japanese alphabet) as me-lo-do-ra-ma according to its pronunciation. Therefore, the Chinese language in the early twentieth century had no wasei kango to express the “melodrama” in ideograms. Regardless the lack the corresponding wasei kango and the intermediation of Japanese language, the different translations of melodrama allow us, nevertheless, to observe the nuances among Chinese writers’ interpretations towards this genre. Compared to the tragedy and the comedy, the melodrama and its reception in modern China were less studied. In fact, the translation(s) of “melodrama” interferes with the melodramatic elements which can be often observed in modern Chinese theater. Through a (re-)examination of the use of the term “melodrama” in different social and literary contexts, this paper tries to clarify the neglected clues and tries to better understand the development of esthetic notions in modern Chinese theater.

Biography: Shih-Lung Lo holds a PhD in Theater Studies from University Sorbonne Nouvelle Paris III. His PhD dissertation is entitled China in the 19th century French Theater (2012). He was assistant of several Taiwanese research projects on European performing arts. In 2010, he translated and adapted Michel Vinaver’s La Demande d’emploi for the Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts. Since 2012, he has been participating in the Réseau Asie-Pacifique (France) audiovisual project. He is interested in the Chinese performers’ activities in 19th- and 20th- century France and Europe, and vice versa, the reception of French theater in Asia.

CHINESE RESPONSES TO THE WESTERN DISCOURSE ON TRAGEDY

E. Ding

Lingnan University, Hong Kong

Abstract: “Tragedy” (sorrowful drama) as a formal term for categorizing literary texts was first introduced into the Chinese language at the turn of the 19th and 20th century when Western ideas made their way into China in massive quantities.

This did not lead to a wholesale acceptance of all the foreign theories that are related to the concept; rather, it started a long and controversial process of sifting through diverse articulations about literary presentation of human suffering, culminating in a socio-historical criticism which has dominated the latter half of the 20th century in the country. This paper purports to trace the historical trajectory of the Chinese reception of the Western discourse on tragedy through such major intellectual figures as Wang Guowei, Zhu Guangqian, and Lu Xun who each appropriated a particular theoretic counterpart for their own philosophical, aesthetic and political purposes.

Biography: DING Ersu
Professor of English
Lingnan University, Hong Kong

"CLASSICAL POETRY IS MY OPIUM" OR HOW LIU YAZI (1887-1958) LEARNED TO STOP WORRYING AND LOVE VERNACULAR LITERATURE

Z. Yang
Goethe-Universität Frankfurt am Main

Abstract: Challenged by the rapid arrival of Western modernity, classical Chinese poetry, which had maintained its prestige and stability over two millennia, was subjected to brisk transformation and marginalization in the short interval of a few decades. The changes in its form and function were results of its close interactions with the new culture, politics, and media that emerged in the first half of the 20th century. Yet these changes have so far received little academic attention. Through the case study of Liu Yazhi, this paper aims to examine how the ideological supremacy of vernacular literature, based upon imported notions and comparative history, resulted in the changing form and function of Chinese classical poetry. Liu was the founder and leader of the Southern Society, a nationalist and revolutionary classical poetry society whose members were often part of the media elite. Despite his early resistance to the vernacular movement, Liu eventually accepted the argument that vernacular literature was needed to rejuvenate the national spirit, an argument that drew historical analogy from the European Renaissance. Consequently, the distinction between classical and modern Chinese was compared to that between vernacular and gramatica-a hazardous comparison that was nevertheless broadly accepted. Liu's continuous writing of classical poetry was therefore justified as a private addiction, like that of opium. Yet on the other hand, Liu Yazhi did attempt to modernize classical poetry to suit contemporary needs and to serve public functions, be it political, social, or cultural. His practice in effect challenged the narrative that the triumph of vernacular poetry, or the demise of the classical, was inevitable.

Biography: Zhiyi Yang is a Junior Professor in the Department of Sinology, Goethe University Frankfurt am Main. She received her PhD from Princeton University in 2012. Her main research interest is classical Chinese poetry and comparative aesthetics.

S2: AESTHETICS AND POLITICS IN TURKEY

THE HAZARDS OF SOME AESTHETIC ENCOUNTERS

F.J. Parla
Istanbul Bilgi University

Abstract: The Hazards of Some Aesthetic Encounters:

The Turkish novelistic canon displays a marked preference for works of socio-cultural engagement at the expense of those with aesthetic interest. Therefore, one can safely claim that novels with aesthetic leanings rather than moral and ideological articulations risk being overlooked and often dismissed until they are recognized by a minority of readers and critics. This paper will look into an early encounter of the Turkish novel with an aesthetic school, namely, the French decadence of the second half of the nineteenth century, to talk about the perils that have waylaid the canonization of the aesthetic in the Turkish novelistic tradition.

Biography: Jale Parla is Professor of English and Comparative Literature at İstanbul Bilgi University. She holds a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature (Harvard, 1978) and is the author of books and articles in Turkish and in English.

POLITICS OF WRITING THE OFF STAGE: AZIZ NESIN AND THE ALLURE OF THE "IRRATIONAL"

M. Ahıska
Bogaziçi University

Abstract: Aziz Nesin, a prolific Turkish writer (1916-1995), has written hundreds of stories and novels that are mostly satires of Turkish society. The humor in these texts is usually produced through the very clash between the intimate and most often "irrational" ways of acting, and the public rules and regulations, or in other words, between the pretension of the performance and its "off stage". Nesin thus gives an account of how contemporary social networks function through a set of codes very different from those that are claimed in official rhetoric of "modern" Turkey. However, these texts do not only register the failures of a so-called rational and democratic society and consequently reveal deception and corruption; more than that, they demonstrate how the intimate and official spheres are interdependently constructed by constantly evoking and justifying what is seemingly "irrational". I would argue that by looking at Aziz Nesin's work, especially focusing on Surname (1976) -a novella of black humor- which plays with a particular form of writing established in the Ottoman times, we would be able to critically grasp this particular "logic of power" and its complex relationships with the Ottoman past and the so-called West, that bears on most crucial social and political problems in contemporary Turkey.

Biography: Meltem Ahıska, is professor of Sociology at Bogaziçi University. She is the author of many books the most recent being Occidentalism in Turkey: Questions of Modernity and National Identity in Turkish Radio Broadcasting (I.B.Tauris, 2010). She has contributed to Waiting for the Barbarians: A Tribute to Edward Said (Verso, 2008) with a chapter entitled 'Orientalism/Occidentalism: The Impasse of Modernity.' Her articles and essays in the fields of Occidentalism, social memory, national identity, and gender have appeared in various edited books and journals including Defer, Toplum ve Bilim, New Perspectives on Turkey and The South Atlantic Quarterly. She is currently in the editorial board of Red Thread e-journal. She has published a book of poems, and co-curated exhibitions, the most recent being "The Person You Have Called Cannot Be Reached at the Moment: Representations of Life-styles in Turkey, 1980-2005".

S1 LECTURES DES MONDES

RE-MAPPING CULTURAL MEMORY IN CONTEMPORARY LUSOPHONE LITERATURE AND ART

S.L. Allen

State University of New York

Abstract: Post-modern Lusophone novels by writers ranging from Osman Lins to António Lobo Antunes, Lídia Jorge and Eduardo Agualusa re-map cultural memory through the (re)visionary interpolation of plural perspectives, past and present. They engage in a kind of textual cartography that revises both literal and literary terrain as cultural territory. Their central concern is not the recovery of an elusive or erased past, but rediscovery of a present past. These are new navigators, negotiating treacherous terrain. At first glance, the terrain in 'A Rainha dos Carceres da Grecia' [The Queen of the Prisons of Greece], 'As Naus' [Return of the Caravels], 'A Costa dos Murmúrios' [The Murmuring Coast] and 'O Vale da Paixão' [The Painter of Birds], and 'O Vendedor de Passados' [The Book of Chameleons] looks like a known Recife, Lisbon, Luanda or Portuguese, Brazilian, Mozambican, Angolan, or Lusophone domain, but the surface is ripped open as in Adriana Varejão's map after Lopo Homem, similarly bleeding through sutures, a living map to be re-read like the many scarred bodies and intertexts in these fictions. These fictions do register repressed voices; they discover scars on bodies, disregarded borders, discarded bounty. They map place through sound and silence, sight and blindness, misunderstanding and misperception, colliding discourses, crossed trajectories, contradictory readings of texts and contexts. They reach towards margins, decentering or deterritorializing cultural discourse through geo-cultural relocations, gendered recasting, and generic crossings. But these writers are post-modern, post-colonial cartographers, whose works not only critically reorient, redraw, redefine navigational markers in cultural memory, but also reflexively interrogate their own chronotopic conventions, framed by pathological cultural consciousnesses, reinventing pasts and consciously complicit in the cartographic records they subject to critique. They reflexively turn into textual ruptures and back towards the frame. This paper compares the reconfiguration of literal and literary chronotopic domains and dynamics in these Lusophone novels to the revisionary remappings of cultural memory in paintings by Maria Helena Vieira da Silva, Anna Bella Geiger and Adriana Varejão. These artists offer us refracted, revisionary landscapes that transform and transpose Portuguese and French, but also classical and other colonial and contemporary artistic and cartographic conventions. Varejão's paintings of maps and tiles (azulejos) transfigure cultural memory through generic, gendered and geo-cultural revision (see <http://www.adrianavarejao.net>). They posit an even more 'transcreative' 'baroque' than that imagined by Oswald de Andrade in his anthropographical manifesto. This paper considers how that eccentric baroque map is present also in Antunes's and Jorge's ex-centric Portugal, how it circumscribes the globe in Agualusa's eccentric work, where cultural memory is concentrated in body, consciousness, and text marked by infinite lines of flight. In Lins's narrator's words, these fictions and paintings recover the 'mythical vision of space' of 'ancient cartographers', on whose maps 'familiar boundaries dissolved in dreams. Their maps weren't a mere projection of known oceans and lands; they enlarged the world, they didn't limit themselves to what travelers might encounter; in addition to guiding, they led astray; while informing, they were also a record of fears.' But these reflexive works also interrogate themselves as dream and delusion, indistinct from reality.

Biography: Sharon Lubkemann Allen Associate Professor of Comparative Literature State University of New York-Brockport 207C Hartwell Hall · 350 Campus Drive · Brockport, NY 14420 585.395.5828 · cell 585.331.7124 · slallen@brockport.edu

Professional Positions · Associate Professor of Comparative Literature, SUNY-Brockport, 2005–present. Surveys & Seminars taught: Comparative Literature; Modern French Literature; Slavic Literature: Wit & Witness; Writing in Exile; Underground Consciousness in Slavic, European, & Latin American Literature; Modern World Literature: Urban Contexts & Urbane Consciousness; Postmodernism in World Literature: Theory of the Novel & the Novel's Play with Theory; Contemporary Women Writers & Cosmopolitanism; Women & Memoir: Re-membering (his)story; International Film: Re-imag(in)ing Cinema; Critical Approaches; Contemporary European Literature: Re-mapping Cultural Memory; Idiots, Fools, & Madmen: Dialogues with Dostoevsky; Tolstoy & Dostoevsky: Ethics & Aesthetics · Fulbright Fellow, Programa em Teoria da Literatura & Departamento de Estudos Anglisticos, Faculdade de Letras, Universidade de Lisboa, Portugal, 2009-2010. Seminars taught: Idiots, Fools, & Madmen: Dialogues with Dostoevsky in World Literature & Theory; Writing in Exile: Transgression, Transculturation, Translation, Translingualism & the Tasks of Literature · Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow, Humanities Forum, University of Pennsylvania, 2004–2005. Seminar: Dream & Nightmare in Modern Fiction & Film · Lecturer/AI, Departments of Comparative Literature, Humanities, Romance Languages and Literature, Slavic Languages & Literature, Visual Arts, & Princeton Writing Program, Princeton University, 1999-2004. Courses taught: Modern European Writers, AI, 1999; Graduate Seminar on Teaching Literature, Co-Instructor, 2001, 2003; Madness & Modern Fiction, Lecturer, Princeton Writing Program, 2002–2003; Dirty Words: Satire, Slander, and Society, AI, 2003; Leo Tolstoy, War and Peace, AI, 2004; Cinema from WWII to the Present, AI, 2004. · Lecturer, Department of Classical and Modern Languages and Literatures, Rutgers University, Newark. Seminar: Modern Brazilian Literature: City, Carnival, and Consciousness, Instructor, fall 2003. Education · Princeton University, Ph.D. in Comparative Literature, May 2004. · École Normale Supérieure and Université de Paris IV-Sorbonne, France, 2000–2001. · Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon, Portugal, research funded by Princeton University grants, summers 1999, 2001. · Petersburg State University, International Dostoevsky Museum, and Institute of Russian Literature–Pushkinskii Dom, independent research, graduate seminar, and internship, Russia, summer 1998. · University of Dallas. M.A. in English and Comparative Literature and Theory, 1996. · Millersville University, advanced graduate work in sculpture, 1992–1993. · Research and work in fine arts, funded by a Yale University fellowship, Ukraine and Russia, 1991–1992. · Yale University, B.A. in Soviet and East European Studies, 1991. · Bryn Mawr College/American Council of Teachers of Russian, Moscow, Russia, summer 1989. · Preparatory education in Lisbon, Portugal, 1975–1987. Fellowships, Grants, and Honors · Provost Post-tenure Research Fellowship, 2012-2013. · Fulbright Scholars Fellowship, University of Lisbon, 2009-2010. · Dr. Nuala McGann Drescher Leave, NY/United University Professions & SUNY-Brockport, spring 2010. · Scholarly Incentive Grants, Individual Development Grants, & Sponsored Program Incentive Awards in support of research and conference presentations, SUNY-Brockport & UUP, 2005-2011. · Discretionary salary increases for exceptional scholarship, SUNY-Brockport, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2010. · Mellon Post-Doctoral Fellowship, University of Pennsylvania, 2004–2005. · Princeton University Fellowship, Department of Comparative Literature, 1997–2002. · Dean's Fund for Scholarly Travel, 1998-2004. · Princeton Graduate School Summer Stipends for Dissertation Research, Paris and Lisbon, 2000, 2001. · Council on Regional Studies Grants & Mary Cross Fellowship, St. Petersburg & Lisbon, summers 1998, 1999. · University of Dallas Fellowship for Graduate Studies, 1994–1996. · Millersville University Fellowship, 1992. · H. H. Rice Fellowship, Yale University, research and work in the fine arts, Ukraine & Russia, 1991–1992. Publications, Presentations, & Projects Book Projects · Eccentricities: Writing in the Margins of Modernism, St. Petersburg to Rio. Manchester University Press (2012/13). · Paris Palimpsest: Reading between Lines of Astonished Memory, Urban/e Traces in Modern French Literature (in progress) · Re-mapping Cultural Memory: Relocations and Resonances in Contemporary Slavic and European Fiction, Film & Theory. Peer-reviewed articles · “Recasting the Republic Past/Present: Liudmila Ulitskaia & Lídia Jorge,” forthcoming in Iberoslavica, 2012; Portuguese version forthcoming in Letras com Vida 4, 2012. · “Dissent, Despair, & the Limits of Dialogue & Dialogism in Dos Passos’ Urban/e U.S.A.,” forthcoming from the Centro Cultural John Dos Passos, 2012. · “Postmodern Portuguese and Russian Re-Mappings of Cultural Memory: Intertextual, Transhistorical, Transcultural Dialogue,” Cumplicidades Comparatistas: Origens, Influências, Resistências/VI Congresso Nacional da Associação Portuguesa de Literatura Comparada, December 2009. · “Chantal Akerman’s Cinematic Transgressions: Transhistorical and Transcultural Transpositions, Translingualism, and the Transgendering of the Cinematic Gaze.” Situating the Feminist Gaze and Spectatorship in Post World War II Cinema. Ed. Marcelline Block. Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2008. · “Navigating Past/Present: Modes of Mapping Cultural Memory in Contemporary Russian and Luso-Brazilian Literature”, American Contributions to the 14th International Congress of Slavists, Ohrid, 2008. Vol. 2: Literature. Ed. David Bethea. Bloomington: Slavica, 2008. 1-24. · “Unorthodox Confession, Orthodox Conscience: Aesthetic Authority in the Underground,” Studies in East European Thought: Dostoevsky’s Significance for Philosophy and Theology, ed. Ed. R. Bird, 59: 1-2 (June 2007) 65-85. · “Makine’s Testament: Transnationalism, Translation, and the Transformation of the Novel,” Review of Literatures of the European Union, Traduzione Tradizione? Paths in the European Polysystem, 4 (July 2006) 167-186. · “From the Grotesque to the Sublime: Logos and the Purgatorial Landscape of Mertvie dushi and Master i Margarita,” Slavic and East European Journal, 47: 1 (Spring 2003) 45-76. · “Reflection/Refraction of the Dying Light: Narrative Vision in Nineteenth-century Russian and French Fiction,” Comparative Literature, 54: 1 (winter 2002) 2-22. · “Dispossessed Sons and Displaced Meaning in Faulkner’s Modern Cosmos,” Mississippi Quarterly, 50: 3 (Summer 1997) 427-443. reviews · Lotman’s World, dir. Adne Nelk, review essay forthcoming in Film and History, 2012. · Val Vinokur’s The Trace of Judaism: Dostoevsky, Babel, Mandelstam, Levinas, Canadian Slavonic Papers/Revue Canadienne des Slavistes, 52: 3-4 (Sept.-Dec. 2010). · Sarah J. Young’s Dostoevsky’s The Idiot and the Ethical Foundations of Narrative: Reading, Narrating, Scripting. Slavic and East European Journal, 51: 1 (2007) 151-153. · Julian Graffy’s Gogol’s “The Overcoat,” Slavic and East European Journal, 46: 2 (Summer 2002) 392-394. · Françoise Genevray’s George Sand et ses contemporains russes, Revue Canadienne de Littérature, 30 (2003). · Michel Aucouturier’s Le Réalisme socialiste, Slavic and East European Journal, 44 : 1 (Spring 2000) 140-142. translations · Natalie Ferrand, “Toward a Database of Novelistic Topoi,” The Novel: Volume 2: Forms and Themes, ed. Franco Moretti, Princeton University Press, 2006. 324-45. · Luiz Costa Lima, “The Novel and the Control of the Imagination,” The Novel: Volume 1. 37-68. · José Luiz Passos, “Macunaíma,” in The Novel: Volume 2. 896-905. · Roberto Schwarz, “Machado’s Turnabout: Posthumous Memoirs of Brás Cubas,” in The Novel: Volume 1. 816-40. · Sylvie Thorel Cailleteau, “La poésie de la médiocrité” and “Vénus décomposée, lecture de Nana,” in The Novel: Volume 2. 64-94, 541-47. Peer-reviewed Conference Papers & Sessions · Seminar organizer, “Slavic and European Women’s Writing on the Edge: Reconfigurations of Cultural Memory,” North East Modern Language Association, Rochester, March 2012. · Invited discussant, “(Wo)manning the Can(n)on: Creation, Procreation, and Destruction,” Association for the Study of Slavic, East European and Eurasian Studies, Washington, DC, November 2011. · “Re-casting Russian Writers: Geographical Relocations, Generic Reconfigurations: Tarkovsky, Khrzhanovsky,” American Assoc. of Teachers of Slavic & East European Languages (AATSEEL), Los Angeles, January 2011. · “Tightropes: Transcultural Renegotiations of Portuguese Cultural Identity in Contemporary Literature,” 7th International Conference of the American Portuguese Studies

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Association (APSA): Trans-Atlantic Exchanges, Brown University, October 2010. · “Recasting the Republic Past/Present: Liudmila Ulitskaia & Lídia Jorge,” CompaRes: 4th Intnt’l Conference of Iberian & Slavonic Cultures in Contact & Comparison: ResPublica(s), Univ. of Lisbon, May 2010. · “Estar é Ser: Pessoa, Place, & Plural Authorship.” Invited response to Richard Zenith. Whose Words: Alternate Theories of Authorship in Portuguese and American Poetry in the 20th Century. Colloquium & Poetry Reading, Univ. of Lisbon, May 2010. · “Transnational Reconfigurations of Cultural Memory in Contemporary American Literature,” Encontros do Instituto de Cultura Americana, Univ. of Lisbon, March 2010. · “Dissent, Despair, & the Limits of Dialogue & Dialogism in Dos Passos’ Urban/e U.S.A.,” III Symposium John Dos Passos: Modernity and Intercultural Dialogues, Madeira, January 2010. · “Transnational Cinema: Relocation, Re-casting, Reimag(in)ing of Cultural Memory,” seminar organizer & chair, American Comparative Literature Association (ACLA), Harvard Univ., Cambridge, March 2009. · “Post-exilic Returns & Post-modern Revisions of E. Europe: Kieslowski, Akerman, Kogut,” ACLA, 2009. · “Postmodern Portuguese and Russian Re-mappings of Cultural Memory,” VI International Conference of the Portuguese Comparative Literature Association (APLC), Univ. do Minho, Portugal, November 2008. · “Navigating Past/Present: Modes of Mapping Cultural Memory in Contemporary Russian and Luso-Brazilian Literature,” International Slavist’s Association, Ohrid, Macedonia, 2008. · “Petrushevskiaia and Ulitskaia: The Refusal of Nostalgia and Rewriting of History in Contemporary Russian Women’s Writing,” Modern Language Association (MLA), Chicago, December 2007. · “Eccentricities: Writing in the Margins of Modernism. St. Petersburg’s and Rio de Janeiro’s Scribblers,” International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA), Rio de Janeiro, July 2007. · “The Deterritorialization of Underground Discourse.” International Dostoevsky Soc., Budapest, Aug. 2007. · “The Wandering Portico: Classical Structures in Transnational Russian Fiction & Film—Brodsky, Tarkovsky, Makine, Ulitskaya,” AATSEEL, Dec. 2006. · “Hero, History, and Story.” Panel Chair, AATSEEL, December 2006. · “Lisbon Story: Redefining an Urban/e Cinema,” Film and History Conference: The Documentary Tradition, Dallas, TX, November 8-12, 2006. · “Metamorphosis across Cultural Margins: Translation, Transculturation, and the Transformation of Critical Discourse and Literary Form,” seminar organizer & chair, ACLA, Princeton University, March 2006. · “Pathological Consciousness, Parasitic Prose, and the Metamorphosis of Narrative Fiction: From Gogol, Dostoevsky, and Machado de Assis to Lispector, Verrissimo, & Pelevin,” ACLA, 2006. · “Mapping Petersburg, 1900–1920: Literary Publications: SIRIN and the Symbolist Press.” AATSEEL, Washington, DC, December 2005. · “Laughter in Dostoevsky’s Early Fictions.” MLA, Washington, DC, December 2005. · “Four Short Takes: Brodsky, Tarkovsky, Pelevin, and Sokurov on Translation, Transposition, and Cultural Memory.” Conference of the American Association of Slavic Studies (AAASS), Salt Lake City, November 2005. · “Hallucinated Cities on the Margins of European Modernism: from Bely’s Petersburg to Mário de Andrade’s São Paulo.” ACLA, Penn State, March 2005. · “Eccentric Consciousness in Exile: Tarkovsky’s Nostalgia,” AATSEEL, Philadelphia, Dec. 2004. · “Writing in the Margins: Lispector and Petrushevskiaia, Lins and Pelevin,” Slavic Colloquium, University of Pennsylvania, November 2004. · “Writing in the Madhouse of Brazilian and Russian Literature: Lins and Pelevin,” APSA, Univ. of Maryland, October 2004. · “Underground Pessoa: Dialogues with Dostoevsky in Modern Luso-Brazilian Literature,” XIIth International Dostoevsky Society Symposium, Geneva, Switzerland, September 2004. · “Eccentricities: Disease, Dissent, and Dialogue in the ‘Petersburg Text,” SEEJ panel, “Disease in Slavic Literatures,” MLA, San Diego, December 2003. · Organizer and Chair of a Special Session: “Memory and Madness in the Eccentric Citytext: The Poetics of Petersburg, Rio and Prague,” MLA, New York, December 2002. · “The Urban(e) Structure of Narrative Consciousness: Petersburg and Rio as Schizophrenic Subtexts in Fictions by Gogol and Machado de Assis,” MLA, New York, December 2002. · “Petrushevskiaia’s Vremia Noch’: Moscow Underground,” AATSEEL, New York, December 2002. · “Schizophrenia and the Petersburg Text,” AATSEEL, December 2001. · “Andrei Makine’s Testament: Re-remembering the Novel,” annual conference of the Southern Comparative Literature Association (SCLA), Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, NC, September 2001. · “The Refractive Gaze Facing Death: Fantastical Visions in Russian and French Realist Fiction,” Conference on Slavic Literature, Yale University, New Haven, CT, February 2000. · “Verbal Regeneration in Gogol’s Mertvie dushi & Bulgakov’s Master i Margarita,” Mid-Atl. AAASS, 2000. · “Liminal Laughter in Tolstoy’s Fictions,” AATSEEL, Chicago, December 1999. · “The Poetics of Infernal Circling in Blok’s Vozmezdíe, Echoes of Flaubert’s L’Éducation sentimentale,” AATSEEL, San Francisco, December 1998. · “Generic Digressions in Gogol’s Revisor,” Princeton University, May 1998. · “The Play of Light and Shadow in Tatiana Tolstaia’s Milaia Shura,” Princeton University, Dec. 1997. Invited Teaching Presentations · “Mainstream & Margin in Contemporary American Literature: Digressions on the Wandering Jew” ULICES: 2nd Lisbon Forum on English & American Studies: New Horizons, Univ. of Lisbon, May 2010. · “Re-framing Literary Inquiry in Comparative Literature Courses: Transculturation, Translation, & Theory,” SUNY-Fredonia, 27 April 2009. · “Transcultural Reading,” English Faculty Teaching Workshop “Traduttore, Tradittore: Issues in Teaching Literature in Translation,” English Faculty Teaching & Learning Workshop, SUNY–Brockport, March 2009. · “Displacement, Defamiliarization, and Other Advantages of International Film: Tarkovsky in Dialogue with Modern Fiction.” EFTL: “Reading an Image: Film & Literature,” SUNY-Brockport, March 2007.

Academic International Association of Slavists (IAS), member of the Commission for Iberian-Slavonic Service Comparative Research, 2010-present. Centro de Literaturas e Culturas Lusófonas e Europeias (CLEPUL), Faculdade de Letras, Universidade de Lisboa, research affiliate & advisory board member, 2010-present. Womens and Gender Studies Advisory Board, SUNY-Brockport, 2008-present. English Department Curriculum Committee, SUNY-Brockport, 2006–2009, 2010-2011. English Department Search Committees in World Literature, Modernist British Literature, & Film Studies, SUNY-Brockport, 2005–2006, 2006-2007, 2008-2009, 2011-2012. Graduate Fellow, Rockefeller College,

Princeton University, 2003–2004. Graduate Liaison Committee, Comparative Literature Department, Princeton University, 1997–2000, 2001–2003. Active member of the following scholarly associations: Modern Language Association (MLA) Modernist Studies Association (MSA) American Comparative Literature Association (ACLA) International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA) Portuguese Comparative Literature Association (APLC) American Portuguese Studies Association (APSA) International Association of Slavists (IAS) American Association for Teachers of Slavic Languages and Literatures (AATSEEL) Association for Slavic, East European and Eurasian Studies (ASEEES) International Dostoevsky Society (IDS) Centro de Literaturas e Culturas Lusófonas e Europeias (CLEPUL), Research Group 5: Iberian & Slavic Literatures and Cultures, Universidade de Lisboa CompaRes: Society for Iberian Slavonic Studies Instituto de Cultura Americana, Faculdade de Letras, Universidade de Lisboa College Art Association (CAA) Languages Native Portuguese and English Professional fluency in Russian and French Reading proficiency in Spanish Arts Exhibitions of drawings, sculpture, black-and-white photography

UNE GÉOCRITIQUE DE L'AU-DELÀ DANS LA LITTÉRATURE

B.K.P. Diandué
Université de Cocody

Abstract: L'au-delà, espace idéal ou idéal, est aussi un espace réel ou fictionnel. Inspiré de la littérature spirituelle et des croyances religieuses, il intègre la littérature générale mue par la création. C'est un espace ambivalence et dialectique qui éprouve la géocritique dans son paramétrage triadique. A l'aune de cette étude paramétrique, l'au-delà semble échapper à la spatio-temporalité, à la référentialité et à la transgressivité. C'est probablement cette anhistoricité qui en fonde paradoxalement l'essence géocritique. Dans la littérature, l'au-delà devient un espace comme tout autre dans la mesure où il est une représentation. Partant de cette lecture, il est un monde possible impulsant sa saisie possible par la figuration. La polyfocalité permettrait alors de dégager le sens qui préside à sa représentation. Tout mon propos visera donc la figuration de l'au-delà comme monde possible dans l'écart différentiel analytique que propose la géocritique. Entre réel et fiction l'au-delà nourrit le fantasme du possible réel et du réel possible. Un procédé argumentatif binaire me permettra d'abord de dégager le(s) modèle(s) de représentation de l'au-delà qui entraîne une modélisation diffractée ou une figuration unifiante de cet espace. Ensuite, je montrerai que l'anhistoricité est la constance de figuration de l'au-delà et en est finalement la raison géocritique.

Biography: DIANDUE Bi Kacou Parfait a publié une trentaine d'article et appartient à plusieurs groupes de recherches. Il a également publié les livres suivants. Rupture et continuité (2004), Topolectes I (2005), Historiographie du féminin : formes et représentations, Afrique et Diaspora (2008), Une Géocritique de l'Afrique : Mutations et stabilité de la spatialité et de la temporalité dans le locus africain (2009), Topolectes 2 (2010).

READING WITH THE PLANET: GEOCRITICISM AND MONDIALISM

C. Moraru
University of North Carolina, Greensboro

Abstract: The worldwide overhaul of the dynamic of location and discourse has been one of the most consequential developments of the post-Cold War era. Bearing witness to the weakening of the nation-state and its economic, political, and cultural authority, this adjustment has led to the disjoining, followed by the unorthodox recoupling, of place and culture and is taking us all beyond the postmodern, into a new paradigm, "planetarity." Planetarity, however, is not just a modality of culture but also a mode interpretation. As I argue, reading "with" the planet can and perhaps should be understood as an epistemological development obtaining at the crossroads of global or, even better, geocritical studies (geocriticism), on the one hand, and comparatism, on the other. I will exemplify by discussing recent fiction by authors such as Don DeLillo and Michel Houellebecq among others.

Biography: Professor of English at University of North Carolina, Greensboro, Christian Moraru specializes in critical theory, contemporary American literature, as well as comparative literature with emphasis on history of ideas, postmodernism, and the relations between globalism and culture. His latest books include Rewriting: Postmodern Narrative and Cultural Critique in the Age of Cloning (2001), Memorious Discourse: Reprise and Representation in Postmodernism (2005), Cosmodernism: American Narrative, Late Globalization, and the New Cultural Imaginary (University of Michigan Press, 2011), and the edited collection Postcommunism, Postmodernism, and the Global Imagination (Columbia University Press, 2009).

S3: SCRIPTURAL REASONING AND COMPARATIVE LITERATURE

A RELATIONAL (NON-BINARY) SEMIOTICS FOR SCRIPTURAL REASONING

P. Ochs
Univ. of Virginia

Abstract: Is scriptural reasoning (SR) a discipline of reasoning, per se, or an effort to substitute the play of religious-text-readings for the dominant Western disciplines of reasoning? While one may choose to practice SR either way, SR best serves the academy as discipline of reasoning. Reasoning is disciplined, in part, by logic, and the best logic of SR, to date, is a relational (or non-binary) semiotics. Resources for this semiotics may be found in Augustine's Stoic-and-trinitarian logic of scripture, Reid's logic of common sense, Charles Peirce's logic of pragmatism, Barthes' semiologies of text-reading, Qur'anic studies of the signs of God (ayat), rabbinic studies of interpretation (midrash) and in recent Chinese theories of comparative literature and comparative religion.

Biography: Peter Ochs is Edgar Bronfman Professor of Modern Judaic Studies at the University of Virginia, where he also directs Religious Studies graduate programs in "Scripture, Interpretation, and Practice" – an interdisciplinary approach to the Abrahamic traditions and more. He is co-founder of the Society for Scriptural Reasoning, Inc. and the (Jewish) Society for Textual Reasoning. His last book was Another Reformation: Postliberal Christian Theology and the Jews.

WHAT MAKES A TEXT INDIGENOUS? A HETEROGENEOUS WORK FROM ANCIENT JAPAN AND ITS EARLY MODERN INTERPRETATION

M. Tokumori
University of Notre Dame

Biography: TOKUMORI Makoto is lecturer in Comparative Literature and Culture at University of Tokyo, Japan. He received his B.A. and M.A. from University of Tokyo. His primary research interest is analysis of the ancient Japanese texts and their interpretations within a trans-regional East Asian sphere of classical Chinese culture. His research includes comparative studies of eighteenth century enlightenment thoughts.

CANON AND ALLEGORY: SCRIPTURAL REASONING IN BIBLICAL AND CONFUCIAN COMMENTARIES

L. Zhang
City University of Hong Kong

Abstract: Texts of canonical status often need to be understood allegorically to display their importance and expected communal values. Using the Song of Songs in the Old Testament and the Confucian Book of Poetry as basis, I shall try to show how canonicity needs protection through an allegorical interpretation, and how scriptural reasoning is applied both in the exegesis and in the establishment of the very concept of canonicity. Although Biblical exegesis and Confucian commentaries are quite different in nature, the interpretative strategies used and scriptural reasoning applied in both cases make it possible for us to engage in a comparative study and arrive at some significant insights.

Biography: ZHANG Longxi holds an MA in English from Peking University and a Ph. D. in Comparative Literature from Harvard University. He had taught at Peking, Harvard, and the University of California, Riverside, before moving to Hong Kong in 1998, and he is currently Chair Professor of Comparative Literature and Translation at the City University of Hong Kong. He is an elected foreign member of the Royal Swedish Academy of Letters, History and Antiquities, a member of the Executive Council of the International Comparative Literature Association (ICLA), and an Advisory Editor of New Literary History (USA). He has published widely in both English and Chinese, and his major book publications include «[A Critical Introduction to Twentieth-Century Theories of Literature] (Joint Publishing Co., 1986, in Chinese); The Tao and the Logos: Literary Hermeneutics, East and West (Duke University Press, 1992); Mighty Opposites: From Dichotomies to Differences in the Comparative Study of China (Stanford University Press, 1998); [Out of the Cultural Ghetto] (Commercial Press, 2000; 2nd ed. Joint Publishing Co., 2004, in Chinese); Allegoresis: Reading Canonical Literature East and West (Cornell University Press, 2005); «[Ten Essays in Chinese-Western Cross-Cultural Studies] (Fudan University Press, 2005, 2010, in Chinese); Unexpected Affinities: Reading across Cultures (University of Toronto Press, 2007);

⟨[An Introduction to Comparative Literature] (Fudan University Press, 2009, in Chinese); and most recently an edited volume, The Concept of Humanity in an Age of Globalization (V&R unipress, 2012).

SCRIPTURE OR FOLKSONG: CROSS-CULTURAL SHIJING INTERPRETATION AND ITS HERMENEUTICAL CONSEQUENCES

H. Zhang
Peking University

Abstract: The Ancient Chinese basically considered Shijing (Book of Songs) as one of the most important Confucian scriptures or classics. This standpoint, however, has been endangered in modern time when influenced by western thought of aesthetics and literary theory. Many modern Chinese scholars start to take Shijing mainly as a collection of folksongs of early China. Much to our surprise, in contrast to their Chinese counterparts, some of the western translators of Shijing such as James Legge, Clement F.R. Allen, and Arthur Waley, even those of them with Christian background, went almost to the opposite direction. They tried to do their best to follow the Confucian tradition of hermeneutics, using as many as possible of ancient Chinese exegesis and commentaries. This paper in the context of cross-cultural dialogues wants to focus on those different interpretations of certain texts of Shijing in order to rethink the problems of scripture reasoning.

HOW CAN SCRIPTURAL REASONING ENTER INTO THE CHINESE CONTEXT, AND IS SCRIPTURAL REASONING POSSIBLE BETWEEN CHINA AND THE WEST?

Y. Geng
Renmin University of China

Abstract: Over the past few years, the term Scriptural Reasoning (SR) has appeared frequently in Chinese academic conferences, journals and activities. What, in fact, is SR? This seems an easy question to answer but actually hard to state clearly. It first appeared in some Jewish scholars' works and arguments, and later entered into the research area of other scholars from different religious background, and scholars with no religious backgrounds. It is a way of reading, thinking and interpretation; a kind of inter-religious dialogue and comparative study; an ethical activity and a social/political practice. What is interesting is that, apart from the theological basis and dimension, the features of SR are all related to the Chinese traditional interpretive activities of 'Jingxue', or the study of the Confucian Classics, initiated by Confucius and carried on by generations of later Confucian scholars. However, the difference between SR and 'Jingxue' elicits the question: Can Chinese classics, especially the Confucian classics, be counted as Scripture and qualified or justified as the object of SR between China and the West? What was Prof. Yang Huilin's approach in introducing and applying SR in the Chinese context? What is the validity or effectiveness of this approach? In particular, does his promotion of 'SR between China and the West' have any theoretical basis or practical possibilities? This paper tries to address to these basic and fundamental questions in the process of developing SR in Chinese context.

Biography: GENG Youzhuang, Professor and Deputy Dean in the School of Liberal Arts of Renmin University of China. Main research fields include: Western Literary Theories; Art History and Cultural Studies, Interdisciplinary Studies on Literature, Arts and Philosophy. Representative works include The Sacred Imprint: Christianity and Western Art, Mythology of Writing: Literature in Western Culture, Fragmented Traces: Rereading the History of Western Art.

S2 REVISITER LA RELATION ORIENTALE EUROPEENNE

RELIRE LES VOYAGEURS FRANÇAIS EN ORIENT AU XIXE SIÈCLE À L'AUNE DES ÉTUDES POSTCOLONIALES : LES APPORTS DE LA NOTION DE RÉSISTANCE

S. Moussa
CNRS

Abstract: Hantés par la peur de commettre le péché d'anachronisme, les historiens de la littérature qui travaillent sur la période d'expansion coloniale de la France, de la fin du XVIIIe au début du XXe siècle, oscillent entre deux attitudes qui témoignent l'une et l'autre d'une gêne face à la question de la colonisation : soit ils considèrent celle-ci comme un phénomène historiquement très circonscrit, qui ne débiterait véritablement (malgré la conquête de l'Algérie !) qu'à la fin du XIXe siècle, soit ils admettent l'idée que la colonisation commencerait plus tôt dans le siècle (on peut remonter jusqu'à l'expédition d'Égypte), mais alors se disent persuadés qu'il n'était guère concevable, pour les écrivains contemporains, d'échapper au discours eurocentrique dominant. Dans l'un et l'autre cas, ce qui risque de passer inaperçu est la complexité des représentations issues des déplacements, à la fois géographiques et intellectuels. La littérature des voyages en Orient est à cet égard un corpus extrêmement intéressant, propre à faire voir les ambivalences et les tensions qui pouvaient se manifester, d'un voyageur à l'autre, et parfois à l'intérieur d'un même récit de voyage. De Denon (Voyage dans la Basse et la Haute Égypte, 1802) à Loti (La Mort de Philae, 1908), en passant par Nerval, Flaubert, Gautier, Fromentin et quelques autres, on voudrait s'interroger sur la notion de résistance pour montrer qu'une réflexion critique sur la légitimité de la conquête au nom de la supériorité occidentale était possible au XIXe siècle. Introduite dans Culture et impérialisme en 1993, cette notion a permis à Edward Saïd d'atténuer la portée fortement déterministe de ce qu'il avait appelé en 1978, dans L'Orientalisme, le « discours orientaliste », tout en maintenant la validité générale de celui-ci comme cadre conceptuel dans le contexte d'expansion des empires français et anglais. Si Saïd insistait sur le fait que l'Orient lui-même avait apporté une forme de résistance à des modes de domination occidentale et à des grilles d'interprétation ethnocentriques, je voudrais montrer, pour ma part, que certains voyageurs en Orient au XIXe siècle ont adopté eux-mêmes, consciemment, une série de positions allant de l'expression du doute à l'affirmation anti-coloniale. Que ces positions aient été minoritaires ne doit pas nous empêcher de les entendre et de les mettre en évidence : c'est parfois dans les marges, voire simplement au détour d'une phrase, que les rapports entre Occident et Orient ont pu se construire, se déplacer et se reformuler, dans un jeu dialogique de constantes réinterprétations auquel un

Biography: Sarga MOUSSA directeur de recherche au CNRS, membre de l'unité mixte de recherche LIRE (CNRS-Université Lyon 2), dont il dirige l'axe « Altérités culturelles », est spécialiste de l'orientalisme littéraire et du récit de voyage au XIXe siècle. Il a enseigné dans différentes universités, en France et à l'étranger. Il anime depuis 2008, avec trois autres collègues, un séminaire de recherche mensuel, « orientalismes », à l'ENS-Ulm. Il codirige avec Daniel Lançon la collection « Vers l'Orient » des ELLUG (Grenoble). Il a réédité Contantinople (La Boîte à Documents, 1990) de Théophile Gautier et le Voyage en Orient de Lamartine (Champion, 2000) et publié l'anthologie Le Voyage en Égypte (Laffont, « Bouquins », 2004). Il a également dirigé le volume collectif Littérature et esclavage, XVIIIe-XIXe siècles (Desjonquères, 2010). Dernière publication en date: Frank Estelmann, Sarga Moussa et Friedrich Wolfzettel (dir.), Voyageuses européennes au XIXe siècle. Identités, genres, codes, Presses Universitaires de Paris-Sorbonne, « Imago Mundi », 2012.

EDWARD W. SAID ET LA CRITIQUE FRANÇAISE

D. Combe
ENS Paris

Abstract: Considéré comme le fondateur des études postcoloniales, Saïd a d'abord été lu en France comme l'auteur de L'Orientalisme et, dans une moindre mesure de Culture et impérialisme. L'oeuvre critique – la thèse sur Joseph Conrad, Beginnings, The World, the Text and the Critic, On Late Style... -, dans laquelle Orientalism s'inscrit en 1978, est restée largement méconnue des chercheurs français. D'où une lecture partielle et souvent mal informée d'un essai délibérément provocateur, qui a nourri malentendus et incompréhension entre la critique française et la critique nord-américaine, au détriment des « études postcoloniales », auxquelles l'oeuvre de Saïd a été abusivement réduite. A travers les polémiques récentes suscitées par les études postcoloniales, il s'agit de relire l'auteur de L'Orientalisme en le situant dans son horizon propre, qui est d'abord celui d'un comparatiste formé à l'école de la philologie romane héritée de Vico, de Renan, mais aussi d'Auerbach.

Biography: Ancien élève de l'ENS, agrégé de Lettres modernes, Docteur 3e cycle, Docteur d'Etat en littérature française

Professeur à l'Ecole normale supérieure, Théorie de la littérature (depuis 2010), après avoir été successivement Professeur à l'Université d'Avignon (1989-1993), à l'Université de Fribourg, Suisse (1993-1997), à l'Université Sorbonne Nouvelle-Paris 3 (1997-2010) et Professeur invité à l'Université d'Oxford (2007-2010).

Ouvrages publiés :

- Les Littératures francophones. Questions, débats, polémiques, Paris, P.U.F, "Licence", 2010 - Les Planches courbes d'Yves Bonnefoy (Dominique Combe commente), Paris, Gallimard, « Foliothèque », 2005 - Poésies. Une saison en enfer. Illuminations d'Arthur Rimbaud (Dominique Combe commente), Paris, Gallimard, « Foliothèque », 2004
- Poétiques francophones, Paris, Hachette, « Contours littéraires », 1995
- Aimé Césaire, Cahier d'un retour au pays natal, Paris, P.U.F., « Etudes littéraires », 1993 - Les Genres littéraires, Paris, Hachette, « Contours littéraires », 1993 - La Pensée et le style, Paris, Editions Universitaires, 1991 - Poésie et récit. Une rhétorique des genres, Paris, José Corti, 1989

LITTÉRATURES D'ORIENT ET PRESSE FRANCOPHONE D'EGYPTE 1880-1970

D. Lançon université de Grenoble 3

Abstract: is missing

Biography: Biography is missing

DE LA POLITIQUE DE LA DIFFÉRENCE À LA "DIFFÉRENCE INTÉRIEURE" : ESTHÉTIQUES DE LA TRANSLATION

L. Zecchini
CNRS

Abstract: Abstract is missing

Biography: is missing

S5: THE ART OF NOT THINKING

CAGES OF NO THOUGHT: CHALLENGES TO CONTEMPORARY ZEN LITERATURE

I. Csicsery-Ronay
DePauw University

Abstract: “Cages of No Thought: Challenges to Contemporary Zen Literature.” Zen Buddhism has a rich tradition of literary expression based on the paradox that the recognition of the emptiness/interdependence (sunyata) of all things and the radical thusness (tathata) of true reality can be conveyed in language. Meditation and enlightenment are predicated on the rejection of conceptualization; yet poetry and koan are treated as means to evoke this state of non-thinking. Contemporary Zen writers in Japan and the US have revered the Chinese and Japanese Zen poets and their use of nature as a model for aesthetic creation. Yet they have faced challenges of postmodernity that their predecessors did not. Two of the most prominent of these are the movement to deconstruct Zen by the Kyoto School by critiquing the privileged place of nature, and the critique of Zen’s ahistoricism by writers wishing to connect Zen with social movements and ecological critique. This paper will examine the changing role of Zen as a model in contemporary Japanese writing and the work of the US writers Gary Snyder and Kim Stanley Robinson.

Biography: Istvan Csicsery-Ronay is University Professor of English at DePauw University (USA). He is managing editor of Humanimalia: a journal of human/animal interface studies and co-editor of Science Fiction Studies. He is the author of The Seven Beauties of Science Fiction (2008), and co-editor of Robot Ghosts and Wired Dreams: Japanese Science Fiction from Origins to Anime (2007), The Wesleyan Anthology of Science Fiction (2010), and On Philip K. Dick: 40 Articles from Science Fiction Studies(1992).

MEMORY, THE UNCONSCIOUS AND THE ART OF NOT-THINKING

S.S. Park
oxford

Abstract: Memory, the Unconscious and the Art of Not-Thinking

‘Not-thinking’, in so far as it refers to the processes of the mind that are not conscious, has always been a central concept in the arts. In science, however, ‘not-thinking’ only found brief legitimacy in models of the unconscious/subconscious developed by Freud and William James before being relegated to the margins by the ascendancy of positivist models of knowledge. Behaviorism dismissed ideas about the unconscious because they could not be empirically verified; logical positivist orthodoxy rendered what is not testable and falsifiable as ‘meaningless’. In this vein, Karl Popper famously claimed that psychoanalysis was a pseudo-science. However, new and ongoing discoveries in brain biology during the last twenty years demonstrate that very little of what goes on in the brain is actually conscious, making it possible not only to re-examine earlier models of the unconscious but to witness the role of the unconscious in the human mind as the new frontier in the hard sciences. This paper will discuss the role of the unconscious in literature with reference to recent neurobiological studies, with a special focus on unconscious memory and how it bears on writing and on the interpretation of literature.

Biography: Dr Sowon S Park is Lecturer in English at Corpus Christi College, University of Oxford where she teaches Victorian literature, Modern British literature and Literary theory; previously she was Alice Tong Sze Research fellow in English at University of Cambridge and lecturer in English at Ewha University, Seoul. Her publications include articles on science and literature; Virginia Woolf; modernism; world literature; British suffrage literature; politics and aesthetics, and she has jointly edited Women’s Suffrage Literature vol 1-6. Currently she is working on modernism and the mind. Her 2012 publications in this area are “The ‘Feeling of Knowing’ in Mrs Dalloway: Neuroscience and Woolf”, ‘Science and Literature: Reflections on Interdisciplinarity and Modes of Knowledge’ and “One Experiential Affect in the Mind: the Hard Problem from a Literary Perspective.’ She is a member of the ICLA Literary Theory Committee.

THE BODY THINKS, BUT DOES IT READ LITERATURE?

Y. Howell

University of Richmond

Abstract: The dominant Western paradigm that posits a Mind-Body dualism is being challenged in a range of fields, from neuroscience to psychology to education, alternative medicine, and pockets of the humanities. The new paradigm conceptualizes the physical body and the “thinking” mind as an indivisible continuum; in fact, we “think” with our somatic system (e.g., lungs, guts, hormones, skin) as a whole, not just with an abstracted brain. The obvious question for literary studies is the following: how have writers and poets depicted (if at all) the somatic (“non-thinking”) dimension of thinking, and in what cultural or artistic contexts? Have the various modern literatures (in a comparative view) and their critics reflected a strict Cartesian dualism or undermined it in ways that are only now becoming relevant to scientific culture? This paper will examine the relationship between recent neurophysiological studies on “non-thinking” and a predominantly East European corpus of literature to suggest some preliminary avenues of future investigation.

Biography: Yvonne Howell is a Professor of Russian and Chair of the Department of Literatures and Cultures at the University of Richmond.

S3: ÉCRIVAINS-TRADUCTEURS

LE PARADIGME DE L'AUTO-TRADUCTION

J.E. Wilhelm

Université Sorbonne nouvelle - Paris 3

Abstract: Le titre de ma proposition se réfère, comme on l'aura compris, au "paradigme de la traduction" de Paul Ricoeur, mais en infléchissant la question vers l'auto-traduction. L'auto-traduction est un sujet passionnant pour la théorie littéraire et la littérature comparée, la traductologie ou la philosophie herméneutique, dans la mesure où cette pratique remet en question les concepts traditionnels d'oeuvre originale et de traduction, d'identité ou d'altérité, ainsi que ceux d'auteur et de texte en rapport avec la question du sens. Comme Vladimir Nabokov et Julien Green, Nancy Huston et Samule Beckett figurent parmi les écrivains célèbres qui se sont auto-traduits. En réalité, la pratique de l'auto-traduction est beaucoup plus répandue que l'on pourrait croire, et elle représente un cas limite pour toute réflexion sur la traduction. Si la lecture représente la première étape de toute traduction, il s'avère difficile, dans le cas de l'auto-traduction, de se lire comme si on lisait un autre. Paul Ricoeur a développé une théorie de l'"appropriation" du texte littéraire comme dépossession de soi que nous examinerons en particulier en relation avec la pratique de l'auto-traduction de Nancy Huston. D'autres thèmes seront également abordés ici, notamment la question du rapport à la langue maternelle et la fidélité-trahison en traduction. Le thème de l'exil dans la langue en auto-traduction, lié à la question de l'identité singulière ou collective pour Nancy Huston, s'ouvre sur les thèmes du masque et des identités multiples, illustrés à ses yeux par la figure de Romain Gary, un écrivain qui, lui aussi, a pratiqué l'auto-traduction. Écrivains ou traducteurs, ne seraient-ils pas tous, d'une manière ou d'une autre, en auto-traduction?

Biography: Jane Elisabeth Wilhelm est Marie Curie Fellow rattachée à l'Université Sorbonne nouvelle - Paris 3. Elle est lauréate d'une bourse Marie Curie pour chercheur avancé et son projet de recherches porte sur la question du genre (gender) en traduction. De nationalités suisse, canadienne et américaine, elle a un doctorat de l'Université de Montréal en littérature comparée et a enseigné la traduction, la littérature, la langue, la culture et la civilisation françaises dans plusieurs universités au Canada et en Suisse.

LA VISION D'AVIGDOR OU LE MARCHAND DE VENISE CORRIGÉ, D'ALAIN FLEISCHER, 2008 : RETRADUIRE POUR S'INVENTER

F. Godeau

Université Jean Moulin-Lyon 3

Abstract: La Vision d'Avigdor est le 4e opus d'une tétralogie teratologique et ludique, née de la plume d'un artiste-écrivain-photographe-essayiste polyvalent, polyglotte et prolifique. Résolument "postmoderne", au sens où elle jongle avec les références culturelles sans les soumettre à quelque hiérarchie que ce soit, l'oeuvre de Fleischer recèle pourtant, par-delà sa virtuosité de surface, des interrogations récurrentes, qui, pour n'être pas "sérieusement" formulées, n'en demeurent pas moins cruciales. Le dédoublement systématique et la scissiparité, qu'ils soient linguistiques, sexuels, culturels, existentiels, sont au coeur de la démarche de l'artiste, né en France d'un père d'origine hongroise, et qui dit avoir l'impression d'être un écrivain traduit: "Je ne sais pas de quelle langue, de quel monde, je suis traduit d'un autre monde par rapport à la situation française. Je ne me reconnais ni dans la littérature française ni dans le cinéma français." Auteur de L'accent, une langue-fantôme (2005), Fleischer a souvent évoqué la question de la traduction et d'un plurilinguisme hanté par l'accent d'une langue oubliée ou perdue. Dans La vision d'Avigdor, nous étudierons par conséquent le processus de la retraduction du Merchant of Venice, et, d'autre part, son insertion/absorption dans un texte qui se fait l'instrument d'une relecture/reécriture de Shakespeare, tout en utilisant Shakespeare pour lire/écrire "en Fleischer"...

Biography: Florence GODEAU est Professeur de Littérature comparée à l'Université Jean Moulin, et membre du CERCC (ENS Lyon, directeur: Eric Dayre, Pr. de Littérature comparée). <http://www.vox-poetica.com/sflgc/dyn/GODEAU-Florence-CV-disponible.html>

"IMITER UNE VOIX, C'EST SIMPLEMENT L'ÉMETTRE" : TRADUIRE OU ÉCRIRE SELON PIERRE ALFÉRI

C. Andriot-Saillant

Cérédi, Université de Rouen

Abstract: Cette communication se propose d'étudier les oeuvres traduites par Pierre Alféri comme écriture en traduction, c'est-à-dire comme part intégrale de son oeuvre poétique. Les principes généraux de sa poétique quant au rapport à soi, à l'auctoritas, revêtent une ambiguïté : ils pointent conjointement vers l'invention radicale et vers le mimétisme. Pierre Alféri écrit ainsi dans Chercher une phrase (1991) : « La littérature n'a pas pour tâche d'imiter quoi que ce soit – pas même de se « représenter » (la mise en abyme est le dernier refuge de l'imitation : une impasse.) La seule tâche de la littérature est d'inventer de nouvelles formes syntaxiques, de nouvelles mises en rythme : d'étendre le langage ». L'écriture de la traduction ouvre résolument cette voie d'extension du langage à la faveur d'une mise à l'épreuve par l'autre langue. Mais on lit aussi, à la dernière page du même ouvrage, au sujet de « la tâche lyrique de la littérature », qu'écrire, c'est "imiter une voix", mais une voix "anonyme, inaudible", qu'il s'agit simplement d' "émettre". La traduction serait l'une des modalités de cette émission paradoxale, où se joue l'invention d'une voix propre, mais "détimbrée" dans le "tressage" des formes de l'autre. On connaît quelle attention Pierre Alféri porte aux écrivains anglophones du XXème siècle, quel rôle de passeur même il peut jouer en France. En témoignent les traductions réciproques avec Cole Swensen, ou son intérêt pour les L=a=n=g=u=a=g=e poets. Nous souhaiterions nous pencher sur le cas particulier de son travail de traduction du poète britannique Tom Raworth (né en 1938), qui peut faire figure de grand ascendant, lui-même passeur de la poésie américaine en Grande-Bretagne, et figure de proue du British revival. A Vide (1994) résulte d'un travail à Royaumont et Jazz (1996) est une traduction solitaire. Le texte est à la fois répétitif, contraint et déployé en improvisation libre. La voix se forme dans un cadre rythmique qu'on retrouve, serré, dans Kub Or (1993) de Pierre Alféri (presqu'à l'imitation de Jude Stéfán) et plus ample dans Sentimentale journée, composé en 1996. L'étude croisée de ces recueils visera l'élaboration d'une approche "auto-comparatiste".

Biography: Caroline Andriot-Saillant est née en 1972. Elle enseigne la littérature française et comparée en classes préparatoires à Rouen. Elle mène des recherches sur la poésie française et européenne moderne et contemporaine, en particulier sur les travaux de traduction des poètes (Pierre Jean Jouve, Jude Stéfán, Yves Bonnefoy). Elle est l'auteur d'un essai intitulé Yves Bonnefoy et Ted Hughes, la fable de l'être (2006) et d'un dossier sur la poésie française des trente dernières années de la revue universitaire allemande Lendemain (2009).

A PROPOS DE TRADUCTION ET D'ÉCRITURE. ETUDE DE TEXTES AU CARREFOUR DES ÉTUDES DE TRADUCTION ET DES SCIENCES LITTÉRAIRES : LE CAS DES ÉCRIVAINS-TRADUCTEURS

S. Vanasten

Université catholique de Louvain

Abstract: La présente proposition prend appui sur cette considération selon laquelle les sciences de la traduction peuvent constituer un apport non négligeable à l'analyse du texte littéraire. Durant ce bref exposé, il s'agira de démontrer que certaines considérations issues des études de traduction peuvent s'avérer éclairantes pour l'interprétation, la description historique, la transmission et réception matérielle de textes littéraires dits originaux (c'est-à-dire non traduits ou du moins présumés non traduits). Pour le champ littéraire néerlandophone, où la traduction constitue une part considérable de la production littéraire, une telle perspective interdisciplinaire et croisée est susceptible de livrer des enjeux intéressants. Le cas sur lequel je propose de m'arrêter est celui des écrivains-traducteurs, plus précisément d'écrivains néerlandophones établis (selon l'histoire littéraire) qui, à côté de leur oeuvre créatrice, ont également traduit, de manière officieuse ou officielle, des textes littéraires; d'un point de vue institutionnel et systémique, ceux-ci ne peuvent être détachés de leur trajectif créatif, parce légitimés par une seule et même signature. Citons en guise d'exemple Jan Greshoff, Frank Kellendonk, Leopold, Theun de Vries, Hugo Claus, Paul Claes, Gerrit Komrij, Leonard Nolens, Anneke Brassinga, Paul Rodenko ou encore Cees Nooteboom... Traduire a une incidence sur mon style, avoua un jour l'écrivain néerlandais Frans Kellendonk. "Oui, telle est pour moi la véritable raison pour laquelle je traduis. Je le fais comme un pianiste jouerait des gammes"^[1] Chez le poète flamand Leonard Nolens, traduire et écrire co-existent également de la manière la plus intime dans l'atelier du poète, la traduction s'inscrivant ici dans un rapport d'antériorité, palimpsestique, à la création.^[2] Hugo Claus quant à lui considérait le traduire, selon ses propres dires, comme des exercices de doigté, de vélocité, pour se préparer à la véritable prestation artistique. Comme si traduire de la littérature et faire de la littérature (dichten) étaient pour ces auteurs finalement deux versants de la même médaille: écrire. Alors que les traducteurs sont, ces dernières décennies, de plus en plus considérés comme des co-auteurs, les traductions littéraires de ces écrivains invitent à être ré-examinées sous un nouvel angle. Si, comme diverses signes l'indiquent, l'écriture de ces auteurs a manifestement été influencée par leur pratique de traduction, l'oeuvre littéraire originelle de ces écrivains-traducteurs en appelle à une nouvelle approche interdisciplinaire, plurielle et comparée, qui rendrait compte de cette interpénétration réciproque dans la production littéraire et de cette vie embryonnaire double – traductrice, créatrice, hybride – entre les langues. Quels apports théoriques et possibles interprétatifs les recherches en traductologie – qui ont pris ces dernières décennies un envol considérable à l'échelon international (le 'translational turn' dont parle notamment D. Bachmann-Medick pour les cultural studies) – offrent-elles pour la compréhension des textes littéraires en propre? Peu de recherches ont été initiées à ce sujet pour la production littéraire néerlandophone moderne. Le cadre théorique de la communication prendra principalement appui sur les travaux de Mathilde Vischer (La traduction, du style vers la poétique. Philippe Kaccottet et Fabio Pusterla en dialogue, 2009), Efrain Kristel (Invisible Work. Borges and Translation, 2002), Federici Federico (Translation as stylistic Evolution: Italo Calvino Creative Translator of Raymond Queneau, 2009) ainsi que sur divers travaux en cours en France (Louise Ladouceur et Sathya Rao, 2010) et en Estonie (Tartu, 2011). La présente proposition s'emploiera à explorer quelques-unes de ces pistes et à tester leur valeur opératoire à l'épreuve d'un corpus de textes-traductions néerlandophones en provenance du domaine francophone. (Comment par exemple une poétique d'écrivain peut-elle être reconstruite via l'étude des variantes – de la traduction au texte 'original' –? Comment par le travail de traduction et de lecture l'émergence et la composition d'une bibliothèque d'écrivain peut-elle être éclairée, etc.)

[1] Charlotte de Cloet, Tilly Hermans en Aad Meinderts, 'Oprecht veinzen.' Over Frans Kellendonk.. Meulenhoff / Letterkundig Museum, Amsterdam / Den Haag, 1998 (Schrijversprentenboek 43), p. 127. [2] Anneleen De Coux, 'Mijn leven in 't net', dans: De Tijd, 08-10-2005.

Biography: Stéphanie Vanasten est docteur en philosophie et lettres (littératures germaniques et comparées) de l'Université catholique de Louvain (Louvain-la-Neuve, Belgique). Elle est chargée de cours en littérature néerlandaise à l'UCL depuis 2011. Aspirante puis chargée de recherches du Fonds de la Recherche Scientifique-FNRS, elle fut également, de 2005 à 2011, chargée de cours invitée à temps partiel à l'Université catholique de Louvain et aux Facultés universitaires St-Louis. Sa thèse de doctorat, consacrée à la question du grotesque chez Günter Grass et Hugo Claus, traduit la portée comparatiste de ses travaux orientés vers la période contemporaine et son intérêt pour des questions de théorie littéraire et de création artistique au carrefour de diverses traditions esthétiques, philosophiques et linguistiques. Poursuivant dans cette voie, elle s'est ensuite spécialisée dans l'étude comparée de l'œuvre de l'écrivain belge néerlandophone Hugo Claus. Au départ d'une interrogation sur le rapport qu'entretient l'œuvre clausienne avec la francophonie, elle a développé ces dernières années une série d'analyses croisées sur l'impact du traduire dans l'œuvre littéraire et l'écriture créatrice de Claus. Ses recherches touchent à l'articulation épistémologique et anthropologique d'une réflexion concrète sur les textes et l'hybridation de leurs langages au champ des transferts culturels et de l'interculturalité, en particulier pour la néerlandistique.

S1 HEURISTIQUE DE L'ANALOGIE

LE RAISONNEMENT PAR ANALOGIE DANS LES ECRITS BIOLOGIQUES D'ARISTOTE : UNE THEORIE DU COMPARATISME ?

C. Michel

Université de Picardie-Jules Verne

Abstract: Si comparer, c'est mettre en relation des objets hétérogènes, alors l'analogie telle que la conçoit Aristote est un mode de régulation de cette relation : elle précise les catégories d'objets qui peuvent être mis en relation, les conditions sous lesquelles cette relation est possible et les modalités de procédure, qui distingue trois temps, logiques et chronologiques : proportion, analyse des ressemblances et des dissemblances, invention. Selon Aristote, « bien faire des métaphores, c'est percevoir le semblable [to homoïon theôrein] ». Il convient d'ajouter, avec lui, que bien faire des analogies, c'est faire signifier le différent. Si le raisonnement par analogie tel qu'Aristote le mobilise, notamment dans les écrits biologiques qui sont fondateurs de l'anatomie comparée (Des Parties des animaux, Histoire des animaux, Du Mouvement des animaux, etc.), permet de fixer les conditions de possibilité d'une rencontre fructueuse et signifiante entre objets différents, il définit aussi a contrario ce qui est incomparable, sauf à sortir du champ de ce que l'analogie peut embrasser, et verser alors dans le mythe, le délire ou la mystique.

Biography: Christian MICHEL est maître de conférences en littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Picardie-Jules Verne (Amiens). Il s'intéresse aux résurgences romanesques de l'analogie entendue comme figure de pensée et principe de composition poétique, aux conditions de possibilité de l'interprétation des œuvres d'art (littérature, peinture, cinéma) par la psychanalyse, et aux fictions de l'interprétation de la Renaissance au XXe siècle. Il a dirigé le volume d'études Naissance du roman moderne (Récit, Morale, Philosophie), Presses des Universités de Rouen et du Havre, 2007. Il fera paraître en 2013 Poétique de l'analogie (H.-H. Jahn, W. Faulkner, C. Simon), Garniers classiques, « Perspectives comparatistes » et Or, Méduse médite (en collaboration avec Michèle Bompard-Porte et Daniel Bennequin), L'Harmattan, « Espaces théoriques ».

LE PARADIGME COMME FIGURE ANALOGIQUE EN LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE

A. Duprat

université de Picardie-Jules Verne

Abstract: La constitution d'un phénomène réel – le Panepistemon, l'homo sacer, l'état d'exception, etc. – en paradigme destiné à « rendre intelligible un contexte historico-problématique plus large » (Agamben) est bien explicité par nombre de discours d'ordre épistémologique, de Kuhn à Foucault ou Ginzburg. En revanche, ce qui fait que l'on désigne une figure romanesque ou poétique, ou même une situation fictionnelle comme exemplaire d'un phénomène littéraire (Le theatrum mundi, l'anamorphose ou La vie est un songe, par exemple, pour la période baroque), a sans doute été moins souvent analysé, tant il semble naturel dans le domaine des arts de « penser par cas », et d'employer notamment en littérature comparée l'analogie, qui gouverne le régime de l'exemple. Elle y pose cependant le même problème, celui des conséquences d'un passage du particulier au particulier, aussi problématique dans la construction d'un savoir critique que dans celle du discours historiographique ou philosophique. C'est donc sur l'emploi en littérature comparée de cette figure analogique qu'est le paradigme littéraire que je propose de revenir ici.

Biography: Anne DUPRAT est professeur de littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Picardie-Jules Verne (Amiens) et traductrice. Elle est spécialiste des théories de la fiction, ainsi que des littératures européennes de la Renaissance et du Baroque, et notamment des motifs orientaux. Elle a publié, en 2009, Vraisemblances. Poétiques et théorie de la fiction, du Cinquecento à Jean Chapelain (1500-1670), Paris, Honoré Champion, « Bibliothèque de Littérature générale et comparée ». Elle a dirigé avec Françoise Lavocat le volume d'études Fiction et cultures, SFLGC, « Poétiques comparatistes », 2010 ; avec Hédia Khadar, Orient baroque, Orient classique - Variations du motif oriental dans les littératures d'Europe (XVIe-XVIIe siècle), Bouchène, 2010 ; avec Frédérique Aït-Touati, Histoires et Savoirs (Anecdotes scientifiques et sérendipité aux XVIe-XVIIe siècles), Peter Lang, 2012.

LE RETOUR DE L'ANALOGIE DU ROMANTISME AU SURREALISME. UNE POETIQUE DE LA FOLIE ?

O. Kachler

université de Picardie-Jules Verne

Abstract: La place centrale que Baudelaire accorde à l'analogie dans sa poétique est l'indice d'un problème. Le retour de cette notion, longtemps tenue à l'écart par l'âge classique ne se sépare pas d'une nouvelle conception de la littérature qui prend place dans le passage du romantisme au symbolisme.

Si la notion dont les symbolistes héritent semble plus diffuse chez eux, elle est pourtant centrale, prise dans un faisceau de notions connexes, telles que le symbole, l'inconnu, l'indicible. L'analogie représente alors un enjeu critique majeur dans la pensée du langage et de la littérature. En bouleversant les catégories formelles et génériques, aboutissant par exemple à proposer la notion de « poème critique » chez Mallarmé, elle conduit les symbolistes à envisager une poétique, plus qu'une rhétorique de l'analogie. Ce qui implique alors aussi une poétique analogique de la pensée, dont la littérature constitue le centre et qui vise à mettre au jour l'impensé du rationalisme des lumières. L'analogie forme donc aussi l'enjeu d'un travail critique sur la connaissance.

De ce point de vue, elle est liée au problème du rapport entre la littérature et la folie.

Conçue comme parole errante ou divagante (voir les « Divagations » de Mallarmé), l'analogie représente au regard de la pensée rationnelle une déviance, qui forme un scandale : une signification instable, remettant en cause les normes sociales. C'est sans doute sur ce point qu'on peut observer son passage et sa transformation historique dans les poétiques surréalistes. Et c'est peut-être aussi ce qui fait d'elle encore un modèle heuristique, mais au sens où il engage une critique de la culture.

Biography: Olivier KACHLER est maître de conférences en littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Picardie-Jules Verne (Amiens). Ses recherches actuelles portent d'une part sur les rapports entre poétique, éthique et politique aux XIXe et XXe siècles et d'autre part sur la traduction, dans l'interaction entre la pratique et la théorie. Il a dirigé le volume d'études Voix épiques – Akhmatova, Césaire, Hikmet, Neruda, Presses des Universités de Rouen et du Havre, « Littérature comparée/Cours ». Il a réuni et traduit les textes théoriques des symbolistes russes dans La force active du symbole, L'Âge d'Homme (à paraître). Il fera paraître également en 2013 Poétique de l'Inconnaissable (symbolistes russes et français), Garnier classiques, « Perspectives comparatistes ».

S1 - LES RECHERCHES MUSICO-LITTÉRAIRES : BILAN ET PERSPECTIVES

THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR WORD AND MUSIC STUDIES : SON HISTOIRE, SON IMPLANTATION INTERNATIONALE, SA TRAJECTOIRE INTELLECTUELLE

P. Dayan

University of Edinburgh

Abstract: La WMA (Word and Music Association) fut fondée en Autriche, en 1997. Depuis cette date, elle a tenu un grand colloque international tous les deux ans. Tous ces colloques ont eu lieu dans des pays anglophones (Etats-Unis, Royaume-Uni, Australie) ou germanophones (Autriche, Allemagne) ; la grande majorité des intervenants lors des colloques ont toujours été de même anglophones ou germanophones, ou encore scandinaves. Récemment, la section de l'association réservée aux jeunes chercheurs (notamment aux étudiants en doctorat) a fait preuve d'une remarquable énergie ; ici encore, ce sont les germanophones, les anglophones, et les Scandinaves qui prédominent. Et cependant, depuis le début, malgré la relative absence de chercheurs français, la littérature et la musique françaises restent au cœur des débats. Quelles sont les orientations intellectuelles fondamentales (et les tensions internes) de l'Association ? Peut-on reconnaître des liens entre ces orientations (et ces tensions) d'une part, et les origines géographiques des intervenants d'autre part ? Quelles sont les relations entre la « vieille garde », qui chapeaute l'association depuis 1997, et les jeunes chercheurs ? Et pourrait-on envisager à l'avenir une participation plus importante des pays de langue romane ?

The WMA (Word and Music Association) was founded in Austria in 1997. Since then, it has held a major international conference every two years. All these conferences have been either in English-speaking countries (USA, UK, or Australia) or in German-speaking countries (Germany or Austria); the great majority of papers have always been similarly given by academics from English-speaking or German-speaking countries – or from Scandinavia. Recently, the section of the Association dedicated to postgraduates and early career researchers has shown remarkable vitality; here, too, the lead has come from English-speaking countries, German-speaking countries, and Scandinavia. Yet, although the number of participating academics from France has always been small, French literature and music have always been at the heart of the WMA's intellectual debate. What are the Association's intellectual underpinnings (and internal tensions)? Can one discern any links between those underpinnings (and tensions) and the geographical origins of its active members? What is the relationship between the "old guard", which has run the Association since 1997, and the younger researchers? And is it possible to envisage greater participation, in the future, from Romance-language speakers?

Biography: Peter Dayan (Edimbourg)

DISCUSSION

VERS UN DIALOGUE DES ANCIENS ET DES MODERNES

F. Claudon

Université Paris-Est Créteil

Abstract: La littérature comparée ne compare pas seulement des littératures, pas plus que Cuvier ne comparait que des fossiles ou des ossements, pas plus que Buffon ne rangeait seulement les espèces végétales les unes par rapport aux autres. On dirait même que, parfois, peut-être, tout est prétexte à comparaison, comme s'en effrayait Etienne. Vers la fin de la Première Guerre mondiale Oskar Walzel – ami de Wölfflin – a lancé le fameux programme de Wechselseitige Erhellung der Künste (1917). Belle ambition, belle formule que les Fauriel, Ampère, Posnett (Comparative Literature, 1886) étaient fort éloignés d'imaginer. Pourtant il faut attendre 1948 et le livre de Calvin Brown (Music and Literature) pour que les études interdisciplinaires entrent dans une phase concrète et investissent le champ de la légitimité comparatiste. Il faut attendre encore plus tard – 1979 – et le neuvième congrès de l'AILC (Innsbruck) pour que deux néo-Américains (U. Weisstein et S. P. Scher) l'imposent parmi les thèmes officiels du congrès mondial.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Certaines associations nationales ont suivi un chemin parallèle : la Modern Language Association organise régulièrement des sessions sur « Literature and the Other Arts » ; le Prof. Haun Saussy, préparant le congrès de Paris 2013 a prévu un colloque (Chicago, 5-7 septembre 2012) sur « Intersections, Interferences, Interdisciplines : Literature with Other Arts » . De même, en France, la SFLGC a tenu congrès à Aix (1986) puis à Valenciennes (2005) sur le sujet. T. Picard, E. Reibel et M. Berthomier ont organisé en 2009 et 2011 des rencontres « La recherche musico-littéraire : bilans et perspectives ». On en trouve les résultats sur le site de fabula.org. Néanmoins il ne semble pas que toutes les sociétés comparatistes se sentent concernées par cette direction. Les Chinois, à qui la RLC vient de consacrer un numéro spécial, ne se lancent pas dans la bataille. Les Russes non plus, mais les Allemands, les Anglais procèdent autrement.

Ce sont ces diversités d'intérêt que l'on évoquera à Paris en 2013. Mais l'enjeu réel, à l'arrière-plan, est surtout intellectuel : on voudrait signaler l'évolution des méthodes, des objets, des enjeux. Car il y a loin du comparatisme interartistique de Brown à celui de Weisstein, loin de celui de J-L. Backès (Musique et littérature, 1994) à celui de T. Picard (Wagner, une question européenne, 2006), d'E.Reibel (L'écriture de la critique musicale au temps de Berlioz, 2006) ou d'E. Rallo-Ditche (La Recherche en littérature générale et comparée en France en 2007, éd. A. Tomiche & K. Zieger, 2007), pour se limiter capricieusement à quelques noms.

La question qui se pose actuellement est la suivante: le comparatisme inter-artistique vise-t-il à mieux faire connaître la littérature ? Ou au contraire la musique ? L'objet est-il de valoriser certains genres (le lied, le « song ») ? certaines œuvres (Le travail du peintre d'Eluard/Poulenc) ? certains compositeurs (Rameau ou Schumann ou Liszt) ? certains romanciers (Echenoz, Quignard, P.Härtling) ou certaines méthodes (sémiotique, linguistique, historique, psychanalytique – cf. Barthes, « Le grain de la voix ») ?

D'autre part, du fait de son indispensable technicité, le comparatisme interartistique n'est-il pas en train de devenir une manie des classes d'esthétique des Conservatoires au détriment des cursus universitaires et des littératures plus classiques. C'est cette prolifération qu'on évoquera à grands traits en essayant de fixer une méthode ou un style qui semblent propres à chaque approche et chaque formation. Car s'il y a eu une jadis une honorable unanime ambition de légitimer l'interdisciplinarité, il y maintenant des écoles quasiment nationales et des méthodes très diverses de l'illustrer.

Towards a dialogue between Ancients and Moderns

Comparative literature does not compare only literatures any more than Cuvier compared only fossils and bones and Buffon classified only various kinds of vegetal species. It may even seem, at times, as if anything lent itself to comparison, as Étienne feared.

Towards the end of the First World War, Oskar Walzel – a friend of Wöfflin – published his famous program of Wechselseitige Erhellung der Künste (1917). Fauriel, Ampère, Posnett (Comparative Literature, 1886) were very far from entertaining such ambitions or coming up with such a phrase. Yet, one had to wait until 1948 and Calvin Brown's book (Music and Literature) for interdisciplinary studies to enter a concrete phase and become a legitimate comparative field. One had to wait even longer – 1979 – for the 9th congress of AILC (Innsbruck), when two Americans (U. Weisstein and S.P. Scher) to get it accepted among the official topics of the international congress.

Several national organizations have followed a similar path: the Modern Language Association regularly holds sessions on "Literature and the Other Arts"; with a view to the Paris Congress, Professor Haun Saussy is planning a conference (Chicago, 5-7 September 2012) on "Intersections, Interferences, Interdisciplines:Literature with Other Arts." Similarly, in France, the SFLGC has organized congresses in Aix (1986) and Valenciennes (2005) on this topic. Nevertheless it seems that not all comparative organizations share a similar interest in this issue. The Chinese, to whom RLC recently devoted a special number, do not appear to be joining the fray. Nor do the Russians; the Germans, the British, on the other hand, have a different attitude.

These divergences of interest will be examined in Paris in 2013. But behind that, the actual issue is above all an intellectual one: the purpose if to examine the evolution of methods, fields of study, and objectives. Indeed, the inter-artistical comparativism of Brown is highly different from that of Weisstein, and that of J.L.Backès (Musique et littérature, 1994) from those of T.Picard (Wagner, une question européenne, 2006), E.Reibel (L'écriture de la critique musicale au temps de Berlioz,2006), and E.Rallo-Ditche (La Recherche en littérature générale et comparée en France en 2007, éd. A.Tomiche & K.Zieger, 2007), to name only a few randomly selected names.

The question now before us is the following: is the aim of inter-artistical comparative studies a better understanding of literature? Or, conversely, of music? Is their purpose to highlight particular genres (the lied or the song)? Or particular works (Le travail du peintre by Eluard and Poulenc)? Particular composers (Rameau, Schumann, or Liszt)? Particular novelists (Echenoz, Quignard, P.Härtling) or particular methods (semiotics, linguistics, history, psychoanalysis – see Barthes's "Le grain de la voix")?

On the other hand, given its necessary technical aspects, are inter-artistical comparative studies in the process of becoming the province of aesthetics courses in music conservatories, as opposed to more traditional courses and literature on academic campuses? Their proliferation will also be the subject of a broad survey, with a view to identifying the method or style that seem appropriate for each approach and type of course. Indeed, while there used to be a laudably unanimous desire for interdisciplinary studies to be legitimized, they now thrive in highly different traditions and methods from country to country.

Biography: Francis Claudon (Paris Est Créteil)

DISCUSSION

S2 MULTILINGUAL TEXTS AND MULTILINGUAL SPACES

THOSE AWFUL AND HUMOROUS MESSES: CULTURAL AND LINGUISTIC CLASHES IN ITALIAN MIGRANT FICTION

L. Boldrini

Goldsmiths, University of London

Abstract: The setting of the block of flats has often been used in novels that seek to represent a particular social context, from the disenfranchised poor of Camilo José Cela's La Colmena, to the complex social and political layering of a modern postcolonial society in Alaa Al Aswany's The Yacoubian Building. The self-contained setting peopled by a multiplicity of characters, each with his or her own life, relationships and motivations, often unknown to the others, has also proven ideal as setting for detective-like fiction, as in Carlo Emilio Gadda's Quer pasticciaccio brutto de via Merulana. The latter novel is also notable for its use of a variety of dialects and registers (for which Gadda has been compared to Joyce). It is this novel that the Algerian-born, Rome-based Amara Lakhous, who writes both in Arabic and in Italian, has taken as his inspiration in his Scontro di civiltà per un ascensore a Piazza Vittorio (Clash of Civilizations over an Elevator in Piazza Vittorio), an intricate fiction where the voices of various characters coming from different parts of Italy and different countries are staged to bring to the surface, through the detective plot and the setting of the apartment block, a world in which national and international immigration, cultural and linguistic clashes give rise to all forms of misunderstandings, diffidence, but also examples of wonderful humanity. The device of the block of flats is also used by the Indian-born writer Laila Wadia, as a stage for the cultural and linguistic clashes, encounters, barriers, prejudices, errors and humanity presented in her humorous novel set in her adoptive and historically multicultural city of Trieste. In my paper, I will consider how these novels of Italian immigrant fiction use the block of flat as a miniature global world to expose the linguistic, economic and cultural challenges encountered not just by the migrant, but also, and sometimes especially, by the native, casting doubt over the very notion of the "native".

Biography: Lucia Boldrini is Senior Lecturer in the Department of English and Comparative Literature at Goldsmiths, University of London. Her publications include Biografie fittizie e personaggi storici: (Auto)biografia, soggettività, teoria nel romanzo inglese contemporaneo (1998); Joyce, Dante, and the Poetics of Literary Relations (2001), Medieval Joyce (2002, as editor), and Autobiographies of Others: Historical Subjects and Literary Fiction (2012).

DIALOGIC MULTI-LINGUALISM IN TWENTIETH CENTURY YORUBA-ENGLISH NIGERIAN PRINT CULTURE

R. Jones

University of Birmingham

Abstract: In Nigerian literary studies, Yoruba and English literatures – novels in particular – have often been viewed as distinct literary traditions: Nigerian English literature as either popular and urban or elite and global, and Nigerian Yoruba literature as local and under pressure from both English and the dwindling of a Yoruba-reading public. But if we look beyond the novel to the many other para-literary genres that make up twentieth century southwestern Nigerian print culture, we see that there has long been a dialogic multi-lingualism of English and Yoruba, both between and within texts. This paper takes the examples of town history writing and newspaper travelogues to show that there was a constant interweaving of English and Yoruba in these texts. This is present not only through quoting of those languages within texts, but also in that these genres themselves developed through the dialogue (a constant to-ing and fro-ing, rather than a one-way imitation) between English and Yoruba texts in the early twentieth century. Where do the points of comparison lie if we read Nigerian English- and Yoruba-language literatures together in this way? And moreover, is there any way of reading these texts except through the methodology of comparison of English and Yoruba, while simultaneously conceptualising them as part of the same literary tradition?

Biography: Rebecca Jones is an AHRC-funded doctoral candidate at the Centre of West African Studies, University of Birmingham, where she is researching Yoruba and English travel writing in Nigeria from the early twentieth century to the present day. She has a BA in English from the University of Cambridge and an MA in African Studies from SOAS, and in 2011 was a Visiting Researcher at Obafemi Awolowo University, Nigeria. She is also a Research Fellow working on the ERC-funded project 'Knowing Each Other: everyday religious encounters, social identities and tolerance in southwest

Nigeria' at the University of Birmingham.

MOHAMMED DIB: A LIMINAL YET MULTILINGUAL "REFERENCE SYSTEM" (SYSTÈME DE RÉFÉRENCES) WITHIN THE FRAMEWORK OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

M.L. Campbell
University of Glasgow

Abstract: In L'Infante Maure, a solitary Lyyli Belle talks about her world, her Nordic mother, her Maghrebi father, the trees, the light and the snows of her Northern landscape. She wills herself to the desert where she comes upon a Sheik who greets her with 'Le salut soit sur vous', a hybrid reference to the traditional Arabic greeting As-salamu 'alaykum, generally translated as 'Peace be upon you' or in French 'La paix soit sur vous'. The French Salut (hello) is an informal secular greeting, while the subjunctive phrase soit sur vous picks up the formalism of the Islamic greeting and its plural address. By combining the two expressions, the author is secularizing but acknowledging the little girl's heritage through the multilingual resonance of these words. Algerian-born Mohammed Dib activated symbols and mythologies common to the Judeo-Christian and Islamic traditions (such as light, angels, the desert) in a bid to communicate across cultures. Their treatment, however, tended towards the syncretic, hence from a religious perspective, heretic or unorthodox. I propose in this paper to contextualize some lexical, syntactic and intertextual elements of Dib's œuvre with reference to three Oriental schemas and examine how they serve to develop a liminal yet multilingual système de références (as proposed by Dib) within the framework of the French language. These are: the pre-Islamic Mu'allaqāt, twelfth-century 'Attār Neyshābouri's Conference of the birds, and selected elements of Sufi symbolism. I will rely on critical translations from Persian and Arabic, as guided by Dib's implicit or explicit intertextual allusions.

Biography: A Canadian bilingual who lived in France for many years, I hold an MSc in Developmental Linguistics from the University of Edinburgh and an MA from the University of St Andrews. Following a career in electronic publishing and translation, I am now pursuing a PhD in poetry in the School of Critical Studies at Glasgow University. My creative interests include surrealism, ekphrastic and found poetry and francophone literature. My current project involves a critical appraisal and translation of selected prose and poetry by Algerian-born author Mohammed Dib (1920-2003). I have also translated Ouaafa Lamrani, Nadia Guendouz, Henri Kréa, Mohamed Serghini and Mohammed Sebbagh for a forthcoming anthology of North African poetry to be published by California University Press (Eds. Pierre Joris and Habib Tengour).

S2 COMPARER LES ESPACES / COMPARING SPACES

DE L'ATOPIE AU BIG CRUNCH : SPATIALISATION DE LA CRISE DANS THE BELL JAR DE SYLVIA PLATH

J. Weeber
Sorbonne

Abstract: Version française Proposition de communication : « De l'atopie au Big Crunch, spatialité de la crise dans The Bell Jar de Sylvia Plath » En 1963, l'unique roman de la poétesse américaine Sylvia Plath est publié à titre posthume. Il relate la dépression d'une jeune femme dans les années cinquante. Après de brillantes études, Esther Greenwood est invitée à participer à un stage à New York au siège d'un journal féminin. Elle est frappée par la superficialité de ce monde et retourne rapidement dans son Connecticut d'origine. Là, elle apprend qu'elle n'est pas retenue pour un atelier d'écriture et envisage avec angoisse son futur. Souffrant d'insomnie, elle est poussée par sa mère à consulter un psychiatre qui lui prescrit des séances d'électrochocs. Elle fait alors une tentative de suicide et est internée. Le récit, constitué d'une multitude de flash-back, s'achève sur l'entretien médical qui décidera ou non de sa sortie de l'hôpital. La spatialisation de la peur opère dans le roman dans sa totalité, dessinant les territoires[1] d'une Carte de Tendre de l'anxiété. Le thème de l'espace est polymorphe. Les instituts psychiatriques et leurs différents pavillons sont autant de cercles infernaux. Dès le début du roman, la ville de New York apparaît glacée, figée, stéréotypée comme dans les reproductions miniatures contenues dans les boules de verre enneigée vendues aux touristes. Le foyer est le lieu de la régression où se déploie la tapisserie des mille attentes maternelles. Gaston Bachelard associe la maison à la mère et en décrit l'espace en terme de verticalité[2]. C'est au point le plus bas, dans la cave, lieu de l'inconscient, du caché, du secret, qu'Esther se cache pour tenter de mettre fin à ses jours. Le motif orphique de la descente aux enfers entre en collision avec l'imagerie carrollienne d'Alice au fond du trou, développée par de nombreuses femmes écrivains anglophones. D'autres espaces intéressent l'analyse comme un sanatorium, une plage ou des cimetières[3]. Ces espaces, asiles, cimetières, sont des hétérotopies, des contre-emplacements au sens où l'entendait Michel Foucault[4] où sont « représentés, contestés, inversés » tous les autres emplacements de la société. Ce sont les lieux de repli, d'exclusion des inadaptés à un système. Cette folie qu'est l'anxiété pousse Esther dans ces hors-lieux où elle n'est pas soumise aux exigences sociales, au diktat du désir de la Mère ou aux pressions de sa propre ambition. Au centre de tous, un lieu unique, un point focal qui donne son nom au roman, the bell jar, la cloche de verre. La cloche de verre Une bell jar est un équipement scientifique utilisée pour créer du vide, appelé « cloche à vide » en français. La première occurrence de l'isotopie dans le récit advient lorsqu'Esther découvre, dans le laboratoire de la faculté de médecine de son petit-ami, des bocaux contenant des fœtus dans du formol. Quelques temps auparavant, elle a assisté à la dissection d'un homme mort. Dans cet espace scientifique, le corps humain est réifié. Plus tôt, il était fait mention d'un bocal de pickles. Ici, ce sont des bébés conservés comme dans un cabinet de curiosité à l'instar du fou « au jardin des espèces » de Foucault[5]. Le verre établit une frontière entre des humains-sujets et des humains-objets, sorte de natures mortes exposés sur des étagères. La géométrie du cercle inclut/exclut. Bientôt, Esther se sent à son tour prisonnière d'une cloche de verre, révélant ainsi sa propre monstruosité. De sujet du regard, elle devient objet. La cloche de verre brouille les perceptions. Les distorsions optiques culminent dans des aberrations visuelles où Esther est tour à tour regardant ou regardée. A travers les parois de verre, le monde apparaît déformé. Son propre reflet n'est plus qu'un point d'interrogation. La cloche de verre est un gigantesque globe oculaire observant avidement un monde hostile. Un monde étrange artificiellement divisé en deux blocs, Est et Ouest, en ces temps de Guerre Froide. Un monde absurde qui condamne par l'électricité les Rosenberg et une jeune femme dépressive. Face à ces dangers, la cloche rassure, protège. Comme dans un œuf ou le sein maternel, Esther y trouve la sécurité du « dedans ». Mais progressivement, la cloche l'enserme et rétrécit. Scellée hermétiquement, elle étouffe, asphyxie. L'étymologie du mot « angoisse » vient du latin angustia, « serrement, étroitesse ». Médicalement, l'anxiété a pour symptôme physique le resserrement de l'épigastre. Le vide créé dans la cloche l'empêche de respirer. Il fait écho au vide en elle dans un jeu de parallélisme métonymique où les contenant et contenus sont enchâssés comme des poupées gigognes. De même, le concave (concave, retour de la cave comme caverne platonicienne) et le convexe sont réversibles à loisir rendant caduque une dialectique dedans/dehors trop nette. Le concave est le creuset d'une vie potentielle, la fertilité, mais aussi ce trou où repose le corps du père d'Esther. Le concave est le récipient, the jar. Le récipient des récipients, le Verre, est le Graal. Mais ici le bocal est retourné, en cloche, the bell. Convexe est the bell jar, un anti-Graal qui loin d'offrir l'éternité (temps infini), enferme dans une atopie (lieu néant). Point ici de quête mais plutôt un « dévoyage », « manière de voyager caractérisée par la perte de la maîtrise des lieux et la dépossession de soi. »[6] Cette topique de la sphère, Foucault nous en révèle la fécondité dans Histoire de la folie à l'Age classique. Il rappelle que cette sphère est un motif médiéval essentiel. Le globe qui apparaît lorsque les volets du triptyque de Jérôme Bosch[7] sont fermés : un globe contenant le ciel et la terre, la vie bouillonnant entre les limites du verre qui invite à une réflexion sur la fragilité des choses. La sphère au-dessus de Margot la Folle à l'entrée de l'Enfer dans le Dulle Griet de Bruegel[8] est telle la coquille de noix shakespearienne ou l'aleph borgésienne, un microcosme contenant le macrocosme. Pour Foucault, il s'agit de la « bulle irisée du savoir », « un savoir difficile, fermé, ésotérique » qui a trait au « grand secret » que seul le fou peut connaître[9].

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Ce passage par le Moyen-Âge, le passé, la sphère de verre le permet car elle est, telle la boule de cristal des cartomanciennes, une fenêtre sur le Temps. Le critique Gérard Genette avertit le lecteur. En littérature, l'étude de l'espace ne doit pas se limiter au relevé des occurrences de l'espace comme thème, mais s'intéresser à l'espace comme structure du roman, comme signifiant, mise en espace/en page du sens[10] qui plonge dans la « spatialité du langage ». Dans le roman de Plath, la cloche de verre permet la mise en proximité d'épisodes « très éloignés dans la continuité temporelle d'une lecture linéaire » ou dans la chronologie de la vie d'Esther. The Bell Jar est une mosaïque d'analepses, de flashbacks, aspirés par le tourbillon, sorte de Charybde, qui engloutit le monde et le contracte dans un Big Crunch, antithèse du Big Bang expansif. La particularité de l'anxiété par rapport à la peur est son caractère anticipatoire. L'anxiété est toute entière orientée vers un futur qui l'inquiète. C'est cet avenir flou qui angoisse Esther. Dans la bell jar, émotion, temps et espace convergent : jar est l'espace quand bell, la cloche, dit le temps, un temps solennel, quasi-sacré. Mais de ce creuset alchimique où tourbillonnent et sont instillés temps et espace, un son s'élève, une musique des sphères[11] bien particulière : une alarme, un glas. Le chronotope[12] de l'anxiété a plusieurs formes : cercles infernaux, labyrinthe... mais il n'est nulle part plus intense, plus prégnant, que dans le motif de la cloche de verre qui cristal-lise thèmes, isotopies, sens. Le monde, la vie sont disséqués dans cette fiole où du vide renaît un bouillon de culture : « Je vis Je vis Je vis »[13], un cri, une « voix sous l'Histoire »[14]. Sum-up of the abstract in english Proposition de communication : « From atopia to Big Crunch, spatiality of the crisis in The Bell Jar by Sylvia Plath » Saisissez du texte, l'adresse d'un site Web ou importez un document à traduire. Annuler Alpha In 1963, the only novel written by the American poet Sylvia Plath is published posthumously. It relates the depression of a young woman in the fifties.

After graduating, Esther Greenwood is invited to participate in an internship in New York for a woman's magazine. She is struck by the superficiality of this world and rapidly returns in her Connecticut. There she learns that she is not chosen for a writing workshop and is considering his future with anxiety. Because of her insomnia, she is convinced by her mother to see a psychiatrist who prescribed electroshocks. Traumatized, she then attempts suicide and is interned. The story consists of a multitude of flashbacks, and ends with the medical interview that will decide whether she can leave the hospital. Spatialization of fear operates in the novel as a whole, drawing a Map of Tender of anxiety.

The space theme is polymorphic. Psychiatric institutions and their various pavilions are like infernal circles. Early in the novel, the City of New York appears frozen, static, stereotyped as in miniature replicas contained in the snowy glass balls sold to tourists.

The home/house is the place where the regression operates. Gaston Bachelard associates home to the mother and the space described in terms of verticality. The lowest point is the cellar where lies the unconscious, the hidden, the secret. There, Esther hides an attempt to end his days. The pattern of the Orphic descent into hell collides with the Carrollian image of Alice down the hole, developed by many English-speaking women writers. Other areas of interest to the analysis are a sanatorium, a beach or cemeteries.

These spaces, asylums, cemeteries, are heterotopias, conter-spaces like Foucault explains that they "represent, contest, reverse" all other locations of the society. These are the places of retreat, of excluding for a system. The anxiety of Esther leads her to these counter-spaces where she is not subject to social demands, the dictates of desire of the Mother or the pressures of her own ambition. In the center of all, a unique place, a focal point that gives the novel its title, the Bell Jar, the bell jar. The Bell jar

A bell jar is a scientific equipment used to create vacuum. The first occurrence of the isotopy in the story happens when Esther discovered in the laboratory of her boyfriend's Faculty of Medicine, jars containing fetuses in formaldehyde. Some time ago she attended the dissection of a dead man.

In this scientific place, the human body is reified. Earlier, mention was made of a jar of pickles. Here are babies kept in as a curiosity, a freak, like the "fou au jardin des espèces" of Foucault. The glass sets a boundary between human-subject and human-object, kind of still-life exposed on shelves. The geometry of the circle excludes/includes.

Soon, Esther feels herself trapped in a bell jar, revealing her own monstrosity. Subject of the gaze, she becomes an object. The bell jar blurs perceptions. The optical distortions culminate in visual aberrations where Esther is alternately watching or being watched. Through the glass walls, the world appears distorted. Her own reflection becomes a question mark. The glass dome is a giant eyeball watching avidly an hostile world. A strange world artificially divided into two blocs, East and West, in these times of Cold War. An absurd world that condemns by electricity both the Rosenbergs and a depressed young woman. Against this threat, the bell reassures and protects. As in an egg or the womb, Esther finds security "inside". But gradually, the bell encloses her and shrinks. Sealed tightly, it chokes, asphyxiates. The etymology of the word "anguish" comes from the latin angustia, "squeezing, tightness." Clinically, anxiety physical symptom is the tightening of the upper abdomen. The vacuum created in the bell jar supresses ability to breathe. It echoes the emptiness inside her in a metonymic parallelism game where the containers and contents are embedded like dolls.

Similarly, the concave (con-cave, back to the cave as Plato's cave) and the convex are reversible making obsolete a dialectic in / out too neat. The concave is the crucible of a potential life, fertility, but also the hole where lies the body of the father of Esther. The container is concave, the jar. The container of by excellence, glass, is the Grail. But here the jar is returned : the bell. Convex is the bell jar, an anti-Grail that far from offering eternity (infinite time), enclosed in atopy (place nil). No quest here but rather a "dévoyage", "Way to travel characterized by loss of control of the premises and self-dispossession. "

This topic of sphere, Foucault reveals its fertility in History of Madness in the Classical Age. He recalls that this sphere is an essential medieval motif. The globe that appears when the shutters of the triptych by Hieronymus Bosch are closed: a globe containing heaven and earth, life bubbling between the boundaries of glass that invites to a reflection on the fragility of things. The sphere above Mad Meg at the entrance to hell in Bruegel's Dulle Griet is such as Shakespearian nutshell or Borgesian Aleph, a microcosm containing the macrocosm. For Foucault, it is the "iridescent bubble of knowledge," "difficult knowledge, closed, esoteric" comes to "big secret" that only the fool can know. This passage from the Middle Ages, the past, the glass sphere permits it, such as the crystal ball of fortune-tellers, it is a window on time. The critic Gerard Genette cautions. In the novel, the study of space should not be limited to identified instances of space as a theme, but interest in space as structure of the novel, as spatializing/staging meaning that plunges into the "spatiality of language." In Plath's novel, the bell jar allows the setting of nearby events "far apart in the temporal continuity of a linear reading" or timeline of the life of Esther. The Bell Jar is a mosaic of analepses, flashbacks, sucked into this ball of anxiety by a vortex, a kind of Charybdis, who swallows the world and contracts it in a Big Crunch, antithesis of the expansive Big Bang. The peculiarity of anxiety over the fear is that it is anticipatory. Anxiety is entirely oriented toward a worrying future. In the bell jar, emotion, time and space converge: jar is space and bell says time, a solemn, almost sacred time. But from this alchemical crucible where are instilled time and space, sound rises, a very special music of the spheres: an alarm, a knell.

The chronotope of anxiety has several forms: the infernal circles, labyrinth ... but it is nowhere more intense, more pervasive, as in the pattern of the bell jar which crystal-lizes themes, isotopies, senses. The world, life are dissected in this vial of where from emptiness a breeding of life reborns; a cry, a "voice under the History": "I live I live I live" .

[1] Laurent Jenny explique, dans la Terre et les Signes. Poétiques de rupture (Paris, Gallimard, 1983), que les dictionnaires français du XIII^e siècle faisaient coïncider « terreur » et « territoire ». [2] Gaston Bachelard. La poétique de l'espace. Paris, PUF, 1958. [3] « On ne devrait jamais mépriser les lieux communs, après tout, les cimetières sont des lieux communs. » écrit avec humour Roland Jaccard dans La Folie, Paris, PUF, 1979. [4] Michel Foucault, « Des espaces autres. Hétérotopies » 1967 in Michel Foucault. Dits et écrits, volume IV. [5] Michel Foucault, Histoire de la folie à l'âge classique, Paris, Gallimard, 1972. [6] Le néologisme est de Pierre Bayard, défini dans Comment parler des lieux où l'on n'a pas été ? Paris, les Éditions de Minuit, 2012. Il ajoute : « Quelle part obscure en nous menace de tout envahir ? » [7] Le Jardin des Délices, 1504. [8] Dulle Griet ou Margot la Folle, 1562. [9] Michel Foucault, op.cit. « Ce savoir si inaccessible, et si redoutable (...) le fou le porte tout entier en une sphère intacte : cette boule de cristal qui pour tous est vide, est pleine, à ses yeux, de l'épaisseur d'un invisible savoir. » [10] Gérard Genette, Figures II. Paris, Seuil, 1969. [11] Pythagore, au VI^e siècle avant J. C., pensait la Terre comme une sphère entourée de l'univers sphérique où étaient suspendues étoiles et planètes, de la rotation de l'univers naissait la musique des sphères. [12] Le chronotope comme « catégorie littéraire de la forme et du contenu. » : « le temps se condense, devient compact, visible pour l'art, tandis que l'espace s'intensifie, s'engouffre dans le mouvement du temps, du sujet, de l'histoire. » Mikhaïl Bakhtine, Esthétique et théorie du roman. Paris, Gallimard, 1978. [13] The Bell Jar, dernier chapitre. [14] Michel Foucault, op.cit., parlant de la folie.

Biography: Jeanne Weeber My thesis's title is "The narrative threatened : fear of craziness in the novel 1961-1981". The corpus is Ken Kesey (One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest), Sylvia Plath (The Bell Jar), Janet Frame (Faces in the Water), Marguerite Duras (Le Ravissement de Lol V. Stein), Roland Topor (Le Locataire chimérique), the Portuguese Antonio Lobo Antunes (Conhecimento do Inferno) and the Moroccan Tahar Ben Jelloun (Moha le Fou, Moha le Sage). The study of space and its relation to fear and madness is a whole chapter of my work. I am finishing the writing of my PhD under the Direction of Mr the Professor Bernard Franco. I have both French and American citizenship and taught in California in 2010 where I received my credential, a Rotary Grant Scholarship and participated to the Los Angeles MLA Convention.

INFLUENCE DE LA LECTURE SUR L'APPREHENSION DES ESPACES EN PRESENCE ET EN L'ABSENCE DE REFERENT DU LIEU DANS LE LIVRE : L'EXEMPLE DES ROMANS RUSSES ET FRANCAIS DU XXE SIECLE

A. Lushenkova
Université Limoges

Abstract: Nous proposons d'appliquer à la lecture des espaces certains concepts introduits à la fin des années 1960 par les théoriciens russes de la réception esthétique. Ainsi, la notion de « biographie spirituelle du lecteur » permet d'examiner l'influence de la lecture du livre sur la lecture des espaces dans les romans russes et français du XX^e siècle, et notamment dans les œuvres d'Ivan Bounine et de Marcel Proust. Nous distinguons deux façons dont l'artiste appréhende l'espace en tant que lecteur, selon qu'il découvre d'abord cet espace dans un livre, ou qu'au contraire le lieu exploré n'a pas de référent littéraire. Mais le cheminement qui conduit du livre à l'espace est-il alors le même ? Il s'agira dans les deux cas d'examiner les façons dont la lecture contribue à la « biographie spirituelle du lecteur » et l'incite à l'exploration et à la reformulation esthétique de l'espace. Comment, lorsqu'il existe un référent littéraire de l'espace, la lecture invite-t-elle à la découverte de celui-ci dans un « mouvement de retour au nom » avant d'être dépassée et de conduire l'artiste-lecteur à une synthèse libérant l'espace exploré tant des apparences que de son référent littéraire initial. Il conviendra de montrer pourquoi, même en l'absence de référent littéraire de l'espace, la lecture, ou plutôt l'attitude développée au cours de celle-ci, en favorise l'appréhension, éveillant la sensibilité, ainsi que les capacités de dispersion et de polysensorialité.

Biography: Après avoir soutenu sa thèse en littérature comparée sur l'artiste-lecteur chez Marcel Proust et Ivan Bounine à l'Université de Limoges (EHIC), Anna Lushenkova étudie le translinguisme et examine en particulier les transferts culturels et l'extra-territorialité qui lui sont associés.

LE PARCOURS DE L'EMOTION VERS L'OUVERT DE L'ECRITURE DANS LE VICE-CONSUL DE MARGUERITE DURAS

M.C.V. Kuntz

PUC-Pontificale Université Catholique de São Paulo

Abstract: Marguerite Duras est née en Indochine et est venue en France quand elle avait dix-sept ans. Elle a parcouru, donc, une longue trajectoire à travers des régions inconnues et contrastantes du point de vue naturel et humain. Ces lieux reviendront dans son oeuvre, mémoire de son enfance, de son passé à l'Orient. L'écrivaine reconnaît l'influence de ces paysages agrestes et distants dans sa propre vie ainsi que dans la vie affective et émotionnelle de ses personnages (DURAS, M., PORTE, M., 1977, p.12)

Dans son roman Le Vice-Consul, les protagonistes parcourent d'énormes distances, aussi à partir de l'Indochine. En présentant une structure en abîme, dans l'histoire emboîtée, il faudra dix ans pour que la Mendiante arrive à Calcutta, dans l'Inde. Dans le récit principal, la protagoniste est venue de l'Europe, et elle aussi passera par plusieurs villes de l'Extrême Orient avant d'arriver à Calcutta.

Gertrud Lehnart nous avertit sur la charge de mémoire que les lieux peuvent garder, ainsi que la possibilité qu'ils ont de produire des émotions et "atmosphères" (2011-http://www.peterlang.com/download/extract/59253/extract_260617.pdf). Donc ces espaces deviennent "vécus" à mesure que les personnages les aperçoivent ou agissent sur eux.

L'immense trajectoire de la Mendiante reflète son sentiment de l'abandon et de dépouillement, la perte de ses racines, de sa langue natale. Le parc de l'Embassade de la France, le salon de fêtes et « l'Hôtel Prince of Wales », hors Calcutta, à bord de l'océan Indien, seront la scène de la solitude et du vide d'Anne-Marie Stretter, qui lui produiront un désir mélancolique, d'accomplir son vide, d'apaiser son angoisse. Les parcours semblables des deux protagonistes vont contribuer pour l'enchaînement des deux personnages et donc, pour construire la signification du roman (BARTHES, 1973, p.101).

Mais si d'un côté, ces territoires correspondent à la psychologie des personnages (BACHELARD, 1957), de l'autre côté, ils se transforment en des espaces littéraires. Ce sont, donc, des espaces imaginaires devenus en « l'insaisissable », des espaces qui vont outre, vers une profondeur, une dépossession jusqu'à la mort.

L'écrivaine ouvre un espace inconnu, tortueux, inhospitalier, vide, mais défiant, l'espace de l'écriture. Espace de la parole, mais aussi du silence, où "l'intérieur et l'extérieur se ramassent en un seul espace continu" (BLANCHOT, 1955, p.177).

L'espace narré ne se présente seulement comme simple décor du récit, mais il fait partie de son structure interne, à mesure qu'il aide le lecteur à accéder à l'intérieur des personnages et découvrir leurs sentiments d'angoisse, de vide, d'anéantissement.

Dans ce travail nous examinerons comment Duras établit les connexions entre les espaces narrés et les sentiments des personnages, tout en tissant sa parole vers « l'Ouvert »; comment elle transforme le visible en invisible, en inscrivant ses paroles dans ces trajectoires: "Elle marcherait et la phrase avec elle" (DURAS, 1966, p.180).

Biography: Maria Cristina Vianna Kuntz a fait ses études à l'Université de São Paulo, ainsi que sa maîtrise sur Patrick Modiano (« Fiction et Histoire : La Ronde de Nuit de Patrick Modiano », 1997) et son doctorat sur Marguerite Duras en 2005 (« Trajectoires de la femme : désir infini »).

Maintenant elle enseigne Littérature Française dans des cours à distance (online) à la PUC-SP (Pontificale Université Catholique de São Paulo- Cogeae –Coordenadoria Geral de Especialização, Aperfeiçoamento e Extensão), et elle a donné d'autres cours à la PUC comme Professeure invitée. Professeure-chercheur du GIEF-PUC-SP (Groupe interfaces de estudos do Francês).

Elle a publié plusieurs articles dans des revues de Littérature et participe souvent à des Congrès Nationaux et Internationaux au Brésil et à l'étranger.

M. Cristina est membre de l'ABRALIC et de la « Société Duras » qui a son siège à New Castle, Angleterre.

S1 COMPARAISON ET HISTOIRE LITTÉRAIRE / COMPARISON IN LITERARY HISTORY

ANCIENS, MODERNES, BARBARES? OBSCÉNITÉ ANTIQUE ET HISTOIRE LITTÉRAIRE À L'ÂGE CLASSIQUE

D. Wendt

Bonn

Abstract: Dans son livre Anciens, modernes, sauvages (Seuil, 2005) l'historien François Hartog, ajoute à la dichotomie qui oppose traditionnellement « Anciens » à « Modernes » un troisième terme, celui de « Sauvages », qui, selon lui, est né au XVI^{ème} siècle, suite à la découverte du Nouveau Monde. L'apparition de nombreux parallèles entre les rites des Romains et des peuples d'Amérique trouble l'opposition binaire, qui préférerait l'ancien au moderne. Cela nous amène à un problème fondamental, celui des usages et des appropriations modernes de l'Antiquité entre proximité et altérité, continuité et discontinuité, et, finalement, à la question de l'histoire elle-même - processus linéaire ou cyclique? Au cours du XVII^{ème} siècle, notamment au cours de la Querelle des Anciens et des Modernes, l'Antiquité n'est plus considérée comme Âge d'or, mais, de plus en plus, comme temps sauvage et barbare, qui constitue une avancée sommaire, ou pour le mieux une étape liminaire, dans le processus de civilisation. Dans ce contexte, des auteurs réputés pour leur caractère obscène, tels Martial ou Catulle, deviennent des anti-modèles de civilisation. Prenant le contre-pied de la traditionnelle admiration des Anciens, on décrit alors Grecs et Romains comme des Barbares. Nous analyserons des textes qui traitent de l'histoire littéraire, du Traité de l'origine des Romains (1670) de Pierre-Daniel Huet jusqu'à L'Origine des Fables de Fontenelle (1724). Comment les auteurs expliquent-ils les obscénités qu'ils trouvent dans les oeuvres grecs et romains. À quoi sert la référence à l'obscénité antique? Quelles en sont les conséquences sur la conception des genres littéraires et sur la philosophie de l'histoire?

Biography: Daniel Wendt

-Sujet de thèse: La réception de la littérature obscène de l'antiquité en France au XVII^{ème} et XVIII^{ème} siècle.

-Directeurs de thèse: Prof. Dr. Thomas A. Schmitz (Bonn) et Prof. Dr. Michel Delon (Paris Sorbonne)

-en 4^{ème} année

THE HISTORICAL NOVEL AND HISTORIOGRAPHY IN CONTEMPORARY SPAIN: AN ETHICAL DEBATE REGARDING UNDERSTANDINGS OF HUMAN RIGHTS, ETHICS, MEMORY AND IDENTITY

I. Lindstrom Leo

Mid Sweden University

Abstract:

There has been a lively debate in Spain in recent years concerning divergencies in the cultural memories left behind by the Spanish Civil War (1936-39) and the Franco dictatorship (1939-75). The current financial crisis has temporarily slowed down the debate; nonetheless, memory has become a cultural preoccupation in Spain and elsewhere. Moreover, the historical novels and history books of the past two decades represent ideological tendencies that investigate different understandings of human rights, ethics and identity (Luengo, 2004, Cuesta, 2008, Rodríguez Jiménez, 2008, Cercas, 2009, Aróstegui, 2004). Together they negotiate the cultural memory of the nation's recent, traumatic past while also creating cultural narrative identities (Ricoeur, 2005). This paper addresses the discourses presented in a selection of recent novelistic as well as historiographic publications and analyzes the ways in which "present pasts" (Huysen, 2003) are presented and discussed. Particular focus is placed on historiography and memory as bearers of philosophical, ethical stances regarding human rights. Key words: narrative identity, cultural memory, human rights, ethics. Bibliography: Carreras, J.J., "Teoría y narración en la historia". Ayer, 12*1993, 15-27
Cercas, J., Anatomía de un instante (2009). Barcelona: Mondadori. Collingwood, R. (1939), An Autobiography. London: Oxford University Press. Cuesta, J. (2008), La odisea de la memoria. Historia de la memoria en España siglo XX. Madrid: Alianza Editorial.
Huysen, A. (2011), "International human rights and the politics of memory: limits and challenges". Criticism, Fall 2011, vol. 54, no. 4, pp. 607-624.
Juliá, S. (1993), "La historia social y la historiografía española". Ayer, 10*1993.
Lemon, M.C. (2003), Philosophy of History. London: Routledge.

- Nash, R.H., ed. (1969), Ideas of History. New York: Dutton & Co.
 Ricoeur, P. (2009) Historia y narratividad. Barcelona: Ediciones Paidós Ibérica S.A.
 Rodríguez Jiménez, J.L. (2008), Historia de España contemporánea y de nuestro tiempo. Madrid: Editorial Universitas S.A.
 Rüsen, J. (2005), History. Narration, Interpretation, Orientation. New York: Berghahn Books.
 White, H. (1978), Tropics of Discourse. Essays in Cultural Criticism. London: The John Hopkins University Press.

Biography:

Ingrid Lindstrom Leo is associate professor of Spanish and Spanish Literature at Mid Sweden University, Sweden. She is a co-worker of the research project "The novelized memory" led by the Department of Spanish at Aarhus University, Denmark. Her research deals with contemporary Spanish historiography and historical novels, particularly issues regarding historiographic paradigms in the ethical, ideological and meta (or post-post)-modern context of Spain today.

REEVALUATION OF HISTORY IN THE NOVEL EXTREMELY LOUD & INCREDIBLY CLOSE (2005), BY JONATHAN SAFRAN FOER

J.P. Vani

UNESP (São Paulo State University)

Abstract: This paper analyzes the narrative strategies used by Jonathan Safran Foer in the novel Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close (2005), in order to verify the author's re-evaluation of September 11th terrorist attacks. Oskar, the narrator, is a 9-year-old boy, whose father died on that tragic day and is led to go on a journey in New York looking for answers for his father's death. The usage of pictures, blank spaces, overlapping writing and the dialogue with technology and coded messages such as SMSs will be examined. The catastrophe of 9/11 represents a new period in History and has become the theme of publications in different areas. This study examines how past events are turned into relevant historical facts and the systems which allow the revision of History through multiple perspectives. Moreover, the investigation will focus on the presence of trauma as a linking element between History and Literature. This discussion will be based on texts by McHale (1992), Lyotard (1993), Jameson (1997, 1998), Connor (1997), White (1985, 1999), Hutcheon (1988, 1993), Ricoeur (2008).

Biography: Joao Paulo Vani holds a B.A. in English and Portuguese from Sao Paulo State University (UNESP) and is currently taking a Master's degree in Literature at UNESP. He has been working as a Marketing and Communication consultant since 2003. In 2002, he founded HN Publishing House, which is dedicated to edit and release books, magazines and newsletters. It also offers solutions for different stages of the communication process. During his undergraduation course, Joao developed the project entitled "Interaction and Acquisition of a Second Language Inside the Classroom Scenario", funded by CNPq, under the supervision of Dr. Douglas Altamiro Consolo. Joao Paulo Vani has published papers in conference proceedings and, in 2003, he published the book chapter "Interacao na aprendizagem de linguas" [Interaction in the language learning process]. The article "Ensino de linguas nas escolas: estudo transversal da interacao em sala de aula" (Language teaching at schools: a transversal study of classroom interaction) was published in collaboration with Dr. Consolo.

MILTON HATOUM ET GUSTAVE FLAUBERT : CONVERSATIONS DE PERROQUET

M.D.L.P.D. Cristo

UNISANTANA

Abstract: Milton Hatoum a écrit quatre romans jusqu'au présent : Relato de Um Certo Oriente (1989), Dois Irmãos (2000), Cinzas do Norte (2005) et Órfãos do Eldorado (2008), et aussi un recueil de contes, A cidadeilhada (2009). Quelques critiques brésiliens préfèrent l'appeler un "écrivain du XIXe siècle". Ses livres présentent en tant que thème commun le drame de famille et l'ambientation à Manaus, capital du Amazonas. Les deux premiers romans retracent les histoires des familles libanaises qui vivaient au Amazonas où il s'agit alors de représenter le dialogue entre des cultures différentes. L'« accusation » d'être un écrivain du XIXe siècle est due à la présence d'une influence forte et avouée de l'écriture de Flaubert. Même s'il y a d'autres écrivains aussi importants pour l'auteur, Milton Hatoum a affirmé maintes fois la préférence par le dialogue avec l'écrivain français. En tant que critique littéraire, Il a écrit plusieurs essais sur Flaubert, ce qui s'accorde avec la position de professeur de littérature française à l'Université du Amazonas qu'il a longtemps occupée. Hatoum et le professeur Samuel Titan Jr. ont encore traduit de Flaubert l'oeuvre Três contos. L'objectif de cet article est de travailler sur les rapports entre les deux écrivains, à partir des romans de Hatoum, aussi bien que de sa production critique sur Flaubert. Il s'agit d'approfondir la compréhension de ce dialogue, dans l'observation des points de rapprochement et, au-delà de l'« accusation » superficielle et réductrice, de penser la façon dont Hatoum met au jour les lectures de Flaubert dans son écriture à lui. Certes, cette discussion est bien plus large que la question de l'influence pourrait le suggérer. En fait, ce sont des questionnements sur le roman contemporain et ses rapports avec la tradition littéraire, c'est à dire, établir des écarts et des rapprochements à fin de marquer les traits d'une identité définie.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Un Maîtrise universitaire ès Lettres (langue et littérature françaises), Université de São Paulo (2000) et un doctorat en littérature comparée et la théorie littéraire, Université de São Paulo (2005).

S1 TRADUIRE L'ALTERITE CULTURELLE / TRANSLATING CULTURAL ALTERITY

INTRACULTURAL LITERARY TRANSLATIONS: A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF MALAYALAM AND ENGLISH LITERARY TRANSLATIONS

J.K. Joseph

Central University of Kerala

Abstract: Literary works and their translations help testing different theories intercultural translations and clarify the object of comparison in Comparative literature. The study proposes to compare the intracultural translations of literary works with their originals. The study focuses on two texts and their translations: that of The God of Small Things (English) by Arundhati Roy into Malayalam, and a Aadujeevitham (Malayalam) by Benyamin into English. In the context of intracultural translation, the paper examines the critical reviews received by these translations and compares the literary translations in relation to their roles as translations. Both the originals being popular works by expatriate Kerala writers, the paper is an attempt to examine the expectations of readers of the translations. These works differ in language, content and treatment. The former, set in Kerala, experiments in language, travels in time and depicts a fixed social structure in space. The latter set in the Middle East uses simple language and moves spatially through an intricate conceptual structure that defies space. Although unlike Roy's work, the uncomplicated syntactical and lexical structure of Benyamin's work does not call attention to its language, it has passages that are 'untranslatable' even into languages of similar syntactic and semantic structures and such iconic expressions could be identified as representative pieces of source language cultural ethos. The paper examines Jakobson's intralingual, interlingual, and inter-semiotic translations in the twin context of the intercultural translations which also serve as interlingual translations and that of the deference of their inter-semiotic translations, especially as film. It tries to identify the task of 'the task of the translator' as well as 'the making of the translation' to critically appreciate the debates about the locus of the discipline of comparative literature and to extend the boundaries within which translation and the translator are traditionally confined.

Biography: Dr. Joseph Koyippally Joseph received PhD in Semiotics from Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi and taught at the Literature Departments of Jamia Millia Islamia (New Delhi, India), Sherubtse (Kanglung, Bhutan), Hail University (Hail, Saudi Arabia). He is working as Associate Professor in the Department of Comparative Literature, Central University of Kerala, India.

He teaches Translation Theory and Comparative Literature at the Central University of Kerala. Recently he translated the Malayalam novel Goat Life (Penguin, New Delhi, 2012) depicting diasporic labour exploitation and universal questions on human suffering into English.

He is also a member of Executive Committee of the Comparative Literature Association of India.

SOME ISSUES IN COMPARATIVE LITERATURE, TRANSLATION AND AESTHETICS

S.P. Shukla

Delhi University

Abstract: Our increasingly global and multi-cultural world has rendered translations and comparative literature as cultural phenomena that need to be critically analyzed. Translation today is seen as 'a fundamental act of human exchange' and its notable contribution to the continuity and diffusion of culture in comparative literature studies assigns it the role of an intercultural mediator and interpreter. Although the practice and theory of translation has become central to comparative literature only since the 1980's, the increase in human contact across linguistic and cultural boundaries of nations has increased the need for communication and dialogue across national boundaries. Such dialogue is necessary for mutual understanding and for the creation of peace and harmony in the world. It is in this context that ancient Indian philosophical texts need to be translated and compared to similar philosophical texts in the western world and elsewhere. In this paper an effort will be made to explicate the Natyashastra, an ancient Indian Sanskrit text on dramaturgy, in order to compare its basic concepts and its aesthetic theory grounded in the concept of 'rasa' to that of the theory of 'purgation and catharsis' of Aristotle's Poetics and of T.S. Eliot's concept of 'objective correlative' etc. The translation of such culturally rich texts and their comparative study in relation to the texts of other cultures can help in bridging not only the intellectual gulf between nations but also in creating better inter-cultural understanding.

Biography: Our increasingly global and multi-cultural world has rendered translations and comparative literature as cultural phenomena that need to be critically analyzed. Translation today is seen as 'a fundamental act of human exchange' and its notable contribution to the continuity and diffusion of culture in comparative literature studies assigns it the role of an intercultural mediator and interpreter. Although the practice and theory of translation has become central to comparative literature only since the 1980's, the increase in human contact across linguistic and cultural boundaries of nations has increased the need for communication and dialogue across national boundaries. Such dialogue is necessary for mutual understanding and for the creation of peace and harmony in the world. It is in this context that ancient Indian philosophical texts need to be translated and compared to similar philosophical texts in the western world and elsewhere. In this paper an effort will be made to explicate the Natyashastra, an ancient Indian Sanskrit text on dramaturgy, in order to compare its basic concepts and its aesthetic theory grounded in the concept of 'rasa' to that of the theory of 'purgation and catharsis' of Aristotle's Poetics and of T.S. Eliot's concept of 'objective correlative' etc. The translation of such culturally rich texts and their comparative study in relation to the texts of other cultures can help in bridging not only the intellectual gulf between nations but also in creating better inter-cultural understanding.

INTERSEMIOTIC TRANSLATION: MIMESIS OR REPRESENTATION? COMPARING HARDY'S TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES AND POLANSKI'S TESS

S. Bhattacharya
Jadavpur University

Abstract: The relationship between an 'original' work and its 'translation' has always remained tension-fraught. Translation has been one of the most necessary, but at the same time undervalued literary practices. As long as one tends to think of translation as the 'mimesis' of the original work, the comparison between the translated one and the original is bound to happen to the detriment of the translation. But if we take Walter Benjamin's view of translation as 'afterlife' of a text, more of a 'representation' than an 'imitation' of the original work (as the original work itself is an ineffectual reaching out after an ephemeral 'pure language' and therefore representing rather than capturing the pure concept), we are likely to take a more generous view of the translation and the 'task' and 'difficulties' of a translator. Benjamin's argument in 'The Task of the Translator' about the original text's own inability to reach the realm of 'pure language' to which its aspiration lies and its handicap being in the language in which it is written is almost Platonic in its concept. At the same time however, this view opens up a new direction in translation studies as translations are seen as not destroyers of the original as many theories postulate, but contributors to this construction of the 'pure language', which even the original has failed to achieve. So in one way translations are failures because the originals themselves already are, but by the same token if the originals had failed to achieve their objectives, translations aid their final aspirations by re-interpretations, re-readings and re-writings, which translations are meant to be and thereby releasing new meanings and getting closer to the realm of 'pure language' in the commonness of intentionality with the original one, though in different languages from the original ones. 'Pure language' of Benjamin has been interpreted in different ways (once more as a result of variations in translation), but I take de Man's version which approximates it to something like pure form, free from the unwieldy shackles of language without which the author is helpless but unfortunately it also is his undoing. From the 20th century we have a new language, that of the film as a new medium of translation. According to Jakobson the translation into film of a written text is one of those 'intersemiotic' translations or 'adaptations' occurring between two different sign systems. Intersemiotic translation in fact would 'represent' the original work rather than imitate it, because the mediums would be different. Films with their attributes like sound, images in addition to the language can actually add another dimension to the motif of a journey back to a pure form as with its use of other exploratory methods rather than merely written language, they trace paths which are more comprehensive, more total in their approach as translation. However a film as translation often pays a price in terms of narrative time as it is so completely dependent on the audience's attention span and the story must be told in the specified hours. The reduction in time in case of film versions of novels particularly, also may end up compromising on other qualities like character analysis. But once more, these considerations come up if we look upon translation as subsidiary literary practice, not a representational but a mimetic practice. As an illustration of the efficacy of the view of translation as representation rather than mimesis I take up Hardy's 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles' which was published in 1891 and Roman Polanski's 'Tess', an adaptation of Hardy's work, released in 1979. The transformation of a serialized novel into a compact three hour long film has its own set of compromises but among many other things I would also like to focus on the change in the title itself, because if Hardy's novel in its very title brings into question the issue of class in the Victorian society, Tess in Polanski's film as a name seems to be free from the burdens of class distinctions and establishes the protagonist more as a free agent and thereby perhaps putting it more into the era of timelessness than history. The other issue that is usually associated with film adaptations is the question of cultural status of the artifacts. The written text is supposed to be superior as a cultural product whereas film versions are supposedly more low-brow as they serve the masses. Yet in Hardy's own day his novels were not regarded as highbrow stuff and he in fact uses a very formulaic narrative in 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles'. On the other hand Polanski's fame as a film director and the choice of Hardy as his source who has become canonical in the twentieth century would actually establish the film itself as an expression of superior culture. My contention also is that if the translating medium exploits its very own unique resources as tools for translation, it can capture the essence of the original much more effectively, than if it tries to mimic the original on the latter's terms. The films based on literature that prove themselves 'equal' to the originals always do that instead of surrendering to the original's domination. The comparison between Hardy's novel and Polanski's film brings us to that realization too.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: I am Dr Sucheta Bhattacharya. I am Associate Professor in Comparative Literature in Jadavpur University, Kolkata, India.

My BA was in English literature from the University of Calcutta as well as my MA. I did my MPhil from Jadavpur University on the writings of the turn-of-the-century biographer Lytton Strachey. My PhD was from Jadavpur University, on the Bengali translations of marginalized Victorian novelists, with special emphasis on George William MacArthur Reynolds, a now-forgotten Victorian novelist.

I have been teaching since 1995. My teaching assignments include literature of European Renaissance, Neo-classical literature, translation studies and some amount of Latin American literature.

My research interests are film and literature, Victorian literature and 19th century Bengali literature and reception studies.

I have published essays on reception of G W M Reynolds in India in an Ashgate Volume and on translation in the Departmental journal of Comparative literature.

At present I am researching some novels of Reynolds, which will hopefully lead to a book.

I have been the recipient of Charles Wallace India Trust Research grant, UKIERI staff exchange programme with University of Leicester and been the first CWIT-CRASSH fellow at Cambridge.

S3 LITTERATURES POSTCOLONIALES / POSTCOLONIAL LITERATURES

POSTCOLONIAL SOMALI LITERATURE IN ITALIAN: THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING (INTELLECTUALLY) EARNEST

L.N. Lori

University of South Australia

Abstract: The aim of my paper is to highlight the reason why the definition of Postcolonial Somali Literature in Italian has an impact on shaping Italian identity. Though it may appear thoroughly anachronistic to attempt to categorize literary production in the 21st century, it is also important to understand that a more global approach to this literature would be desirable for a better understanding of the social creolisation that is taking place in Italy - and in the Western world. This even though a discussion on creole/global literature has no particular relevance today in Italy because this country has only recently changed from being a nation vacated by emigrants into a destination for thousands of immigrants without being culturally ready to process the change - partially because of the lack of shared cognitive categories, partially because of the fragmentation of the Italian national identity.

Migration factors have exposed Italy and public opinion to the populist pressures of people who do not want to accept the idea of the country no longer being a monocultural enclave. It is for this reason, regardless of the awareness of living in a historical moment where contamination and hybridism are not only desirable but real, that in Italy we see a society trapped in separatism, driven by secessionist forces. Since words are important, the expression we use to call/name this literary production is neither a foregone conclusion nor without relevance: this literature can be analysed using different critical approaches and seems hard to define in a univocal way – Somali, Italo-Somali, Italian – so by calling it “postcolonial” we acknowledge its role in the Italian cultural system and, above all, we strongly reaffirm the existence of a shared colonial past that, as a nation, we can't afford to ignore any longer.

The fact that the physical position of those authors is, out of necessity, diasporic and the fact that, at least in Italy, they are forced to share the migrants' field means that in their novels we find nuances and echoes of migrant and diasporic literature. Reading this literary production without acknowledging their background would be a great mistake because it would lead us to underestimate its constant dialogue with the colonial past and, above all, would deprive it of its role within the process of developing Italian cultural identity. It is then necessary to acknowledge this role and its repercussion on the Italian cultural system: this literature provides both the opportunity and the vehicle to tackle colonial denial and present issues raised by migrant flows to Italy by rethinking Italian national identity.

Using Postcolonial literature in Italian, it will be possible to move this analysis from the ivory towers of academia to classrooms, not only as part of the study of history, but as a pillar of the literature curriculum, providing new generations with the correct instruments to analyse contemporary events and to reflect upon a new and broader idea of an Italian identity free from regional tethers and racial prejudices.

Biography: Civilité / Salutation Dr

Titre académique / Academic Title Dr

Prénom / First name Laura

Middle name(s): name Nadine

Date de naissance / Birthdate: Lori

E-mail / Email: lau_stralia@yahoo.it

Téléphone / Phone : +61 424 934228

Proposition / Abstract: 2444

Statut / Status: En cours / In Progress

Type / Type: Abstract

Topic: 67 Nations and Beyond: Linguistic Areas, Literary Continents, Globalization?

Auteurs / Authors: L.N. Lori; Magill, SA/AU

Institutions / Affiliations

Institution / Institution: University of South Australia

Département / Department: School of Communication, International Studies and Languages

Rue / Street *: St Bernards Road

Code Postal / Postal Code * / Ville / City: 5072 / Magill

Pays / Country: AUSTRALIA

State: South Australia

Titre, type et theme / Title, Type and Topic

"Postcolonial Somali Literature in Italian: the Importance of Being (Intellectually) Earnest"

Affirmations

It says: "Please read all items carefully and click "I agree" when appropriate. You will not be able to complete your submission without having agreed with all mandatory items" but unfortunately on my pc I can't see anything.

Auteurs / Authors

Dr Laura Nadine Lori, author, Presenter and Submitter.

Biographie / Biography

After a BA in Arts at Università Cattolica in Milan, in 2005 I moved to Australia where I worked in education, publish and media. I have recently finished a PhD at Latrobe University in Melbourne and I am currently working at University of South Australia, in Adelaide. My research, "Salvaging Somalia: Postcolonial Somali Literature in Italian", responds to recent calls for a long overdue appraisal of Italy's colonial responsibilities by studying Somali Postcolonial Literature written in Italian, which explores a hitherto hidden past and challenges today's reluctant Italy to face its own identity.

WHO'S AFRAID OF COMPARING LITERATURES? CONNECTING THE LUSO-AFRICAN AND CARIBBEAN POSTCOLONIAL SPACES

K.S. Van Haesendonck

UNIVERSITY OF LISBON

Abstract: While much is being said about "World literature", most often literatures are approached by linguistic area in our academic departments. This also holds for research on postcolonial literatures, where the linguistic and nation-state models are rarely questioned. Scholars usually approach postcolonial cultures and literatures by language, i.e. by linguistic area (e.g. Lusophone or francophone African cultures, Hispanic, Anglophone or Francophone Caribbean cultures), or by nationality, ignoring connections between them. Does it make sense to compare postcolonial literatures from divergent cultural and linguistic areas? I will take a look at the luso-African and Caribbean literary spaces as a case study which challenges traditional approaches to postcolonial literatures, focusing on two peripheral postcolonial spaces: on the one hand the Luso-African islands of São Tomé & Príncipe and the archipelago of Cape Verde, on the other the Caribbean. Most postcolonial literatures have not yet been approached using alternative criteria, such as creolisation, which allows for going beyond the commonplace of insularity as cultural isolation. Originally a term used among linguists, creolisation has quickly become a key term in a range of disciplines, albeit in controversial ways. I will argue that comparing Luso-African and Caribbean narratives can help develop a method to approach creolizing literatures (such as "European literature"), besides strictly "postcolonial" spaces. Rather than a productive critical tool, creolisation –provided that one does not forget the creative specificities of this 'Caribbean' concept– allows for gauging contemporary cultural changes and perceptions of cultural identity.

Biography: Kristian Van Haesendonck, PhD, is a Research Associate in Latin American and Caribbean literatures at the Centre for Comparative Studies (CEC), University of Lisbon, where he teaches courses on Postcolonial theory and literature. Previously, he taught Spanish and Latin American Literature and Culture in the United States (Princeton, Villanova). He graduated in Romance Languages from the Catholic University of Louvain (Belgium) and obtained his PhD in Latin American Literature from Leiden University (The Netherlands). He is the author of the book ¿Encanto o espanto? Identidad y nación en la novela puertorriqueña actual (Frankfurt-Madrid: Vervuert-Iberoamericana, 2008), a comparative study of contemporary Puerto Rican novels. He recently edited Going Caribbean. New perspectives on Caribbean literature and art (Lisbon: Humus, 2012). Another volume, edited with Theo D'HAEN, is in press: Caribbean Configurations: Comparing Caribbeans (Amsterdam-Atlanta: Rodopi).

Contact address:

Centre for Comparative Studies

Faculty of Arts

Alameda da Universidade

1600 - 214 Lisboa

Portugal

AFRICA ON BOTH SIDES OF THE ATLANTIC

E.L. Cunha

PONTIFÍCIA UNIVERSIDADE CATÓLICA DO RIO DE JANEIRO

Abstract: This presentation will confront images of Africas produced in countries whose official language is Portuguese, especially Angola, with reconstructions of diasporic Africanness produced in Brazil. It will include both hegemonic perspectives and insurgent visions and, in the analysis, will highlight the temporal, spatial and ideological diversity of the ways nationality and Africanness are articulated.

Biography: Eneida Leal Cunha is graduated in Vernacular Literature and obtained a Masters degree in Literary Theory from the Federal University of Bahia. In 1993 she obtained a Doctor's degree in Portuguese Language Literatures from the Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro, where she is currently Associated Professor of Literature, Culture and Contemporaneity. Eneida is an expert in the identity issues that emerge in the historical and contemporary literature and cultural production in Brazil and in other Lusophone spaces.

S1 MIGRATIONS, MULTICULTURALISMES, HYBRIDATIONS / MIGRATION, MULTICULTURALISM, HYBRIDIZATION

PENSÉES ET VISIONS D'UNE TÊTE COUPÉE (1853), OR HOW THE TRIPTYCH BY BELGIAN PAINTER ANTOINE WIERTZ IN 1922 BECAME THE SOURCE OF INSPIRATION FOR ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL STAGE PLAYS AT THE THÉÂTRE DU GRAND GUIGNOL IN PARIS

J.M. Vander Laenen
Independent scholar

Abstract: "Two nations divided by a common language", it is sometimes said of Great Britain and the United States of America, and this statement can most certainly also be applied to the relationship of the French-speaking inhabitants of the small country of Belgium with their bigger sister to the south, France. Volumes have been written about this - cultural and literary - relationship, ranging from mutual understanding and cooperation to Belgian jokes, as well as downright dislike and rivalry. A very striking nineteenth century example of this is the general contempt displayed by the French poet and critic, Charles Baudelaire (1821-1867), towards the then very prominent Belgian painter, Antoine Wiertz (1806-1865). Baudelaire, who had to rely randomly on the greater freedom of press in what was, at the time, still the young Kingdom of Belgium for the publication of his writings and lectures, once actually visited the studio of Antoine Wiertz when staying in Brussels and wrote the following, among other things, about the painter and sculptor in his hate-filled pamphlet entitled "La Belgique deshabilée": "Charlatan. Idiot, voleur. (...) Abolition de la peine de Mort. (...) Grandes injures contre les critiques français et la France. (...) Bruxelles capitale du monde. Paris province. (...) En somme, ce charlatan a su faire ses affaires. Mais qu'est-ce que Bruxelles fera de tout cela après sa mort?" The insults aimed at Antoine Wiertz by Charles Baudelaire now come across as somewhat strange: with his macabre scenes, the themes of which have much in common with the short stories of the American Edgar Allan Poe (1809-1849), and partly through the interest shown in him by the Grand Guignol Theatre in Paris, Wiertz has acquired quite a reputation among the more bizarre horror circles and, as we know, Baudelaire was an absolute advocate of Poe, also translating many of his - bizarre - writings into French. On the other hand, however, Baudelaire's flood of abuse is also understandable: following Wiertz's resounding failure with, among other things, his "Patrocles" in the Parisian salons in 1839, he certainly did not miss any opportunity to vent his wrath on "contemptible" France and then especially on its art critics - with the infamous quote "Paris province, Bruxelles capitale!" probably being the most illustrious example of this. So, now that Grand Guignol and the death penalty have been mentioned... As already noted by Baudelaire, Wiertz was, with this triptych entitled "Pensees et visions d'une tete coupee", categorically opposed to the death penalty - by means of the guillotine - because, according to the painter, the head remained alive for some long, painful moments after being cut off. The Theatre du Grand Guignol on rue Chaptal in Paris was sometimes jokingly referred to at the time as the theatre "aux tetes coupees" on account of its having had a morbid predilection for executions and, from 1921, it even counted a genuine guillotine amongst its props, so it is hardly surprising that its authors would one day turn to Wiertz's triptych for their inspiration: this then became reality with the premiere of the play "Vers l'au-dela" by Charles Hellem and Pol d'Estocop on 10 May 1922. The aim of this paper is to outline the history of how a "provincial" painting intended as an indictment against the death penalty was brought back to life again in a completely different context some seventy years later in a dramatic script in Paris, the capital of the guillotine. Attention will be drawn to Wiertz's experiment beneath a scaffold at the Porte de Hal city gate in Brussels on 18 February 1848, his written report of this, his inclusion of the same in his triptych five years later, as well as the taking up and incorporation of these written and painted sources by the sensationalist Grand Guignol theatre. P.S. My computer wasn't able to put the right accents, aigu, grave, circonflexe, c cedille... My apologies

Biography: BIO: Jan Vander Laenen (born 1960) lives in Brussels, Belgium, where he works as an art historian and translator (Dutch, French and Italian). He is also the author of twelve collections of short stories, plays, and screenplays which have attracted keen interest abroad. A romantic comedy, "Oscar Divo", and a thriller, "The Card Game", are presently in the hands of a competent producer in Hollywood, while his short fiction collections, "The Butler" and "Poete maudit", and his horror play "A Mother's Revenge" are eliciting the requisite accolades in Italy. His most recent publication are the tales "A Glass of Cognac" in "Bears: Gay Erotic Stories" (Cleis Press), "Epistle of the Sleeping Beauty" in the Bram Stoker Award winning "Unspeakable Horror" (Dark Scribe Press), "Fire at the Chelsea Hotel" in "Best Gay Love Stories" (Alyson Press), "The Stuffed Turkey" in "Best Gay Erotica 2010 (Cleis Press), "The Corpse Washer" in Best S/M III (Logical Lust), "Lise" in "Strange Tales of Horror" (NorGus Press), and the Dutch and French version of his novel "The housekeeper and other scabrous tales" ('t Verschil, Antwerp (Belgium) - Textes gais, Paris (France)). Jan is a member of the Poe Studies Association and the Horror Writers Association. He presented his paper "Hypotheses on Poe's homosexuality" at the Bicentennial Congress in Philadelphia in October 2009, and his paper "The monstrous and the fantastic in the short stories of Edgar Allan Poe and the paintings by Antoine Wiertz" at the 33rd International Conference on the Fantastic in the Arts in Orlando, Florida, in March 2012. Jan is currently working on a play/screenplay around the life of the Romantic Belgian "horror" painter Antoine Wiertz (1806-1865), a novel called "The Psychomanteum" around the practice of mirror gazing, and a screenplay around the life of Lucida Mansi.

INDIVIDUAL PSYCHOLOGY IN DIASPORIC LIFE: HANIF KUREISHI'S SOMETHING TO TELL YOU AND DOMNICA RADULESCU'S BLACK SEA TWILIGHT

M. Draga Alexandru
University of Bucharest

Abstract: My paper will examine the relevance of Avtar Brah's "technologies of autobiographics" – a focus on personal experience as a lens through which diasporic life can be interpreted – to migrant and diasporic life in Hanif Kureishi's 2008 novel Something to Tell You and Domnica Radulescu's 2010 novel Black Sea Twilight. The aim of this comparison between the work of a British Asian author and that of a Romanian American one, between whose diasporic experiences there are similarities and differences, is to support the remark that in today's global world East-European literatures represent a kind of new postcolonialism of a type similar to that represented by Kureishi's work within the British literary context. I will argue that in the two novels the history of individual experiences of a group of friends (Jamal, Valentin, Wolf and Ajita in Something to Tell You, Nora, Valentin, Gigi and Anushka in Black Sea Twilight) of various ethnic backgrounds is constructed as emblematic of the experiences of the migrant and diasporic groups to which they belong. In both cases this happens through a shift of focus from the group (as used to be the case in migration novels) to the troubles of individual selfhood as representative of, but also more important than group identity. In Kureishi's novel, this happens through talk therapy. The protagonist, Jamal, a psychotherapist of South Asian origin, reimagines the trajectory of migrant integration through a long process of analysis of self and other. This ultimately leads to an understanding of the fact that dislocation and relocation are processes to be negotiated on an individual rather than collective level. In Radulescu's novel, a similar role is played by the protagonist's continuous analysis of the impact of her having a twin brother had on her life and emotional make-up, based on the author's study of one of the sources included in her novel's bibliography (Nancy Segal's 1999 Entwined Lives: Twins and What They Tell Us about Human Behavior). I will argue that in the two novels the psychological detail of a scientific depth represents the authors' indirect, but all the more effective approach to the trauma of unbelonging characteristic to diasporic life. I will use Frantz Fanon's theory of the internalised inferiority complex in constructions of black selfhood, Stephen Frosh's 'postmodern states of mind' and their relation to identity crisis in various situations of dislocation and Cathy Caruth's trauma theory as a bridge between personal and group experiences. My aim will be to show that in the two novels the protagonists' "healing" from guilt and lost love parallels a process of coming of age in the handling of interracial/ethnic relationships, as some of the secondary characters' stories also suggest.

Biography: Dr. Maria-Sabina Draga Alexandru is Associate Professor of American Studies at the University of Bucharest, Romania. Her main research and teaching interests are contemporary literatures in English, postcolonialism, Ethnic and African American literatures and women's literature. She has published articles in Romanian and international journals (such as Comparative Literature Studies, The Journal of Commonwealth Literature, Commonwealth Essays and Studies and Perspectives), as well as books, among which: Women's Voices in Post-Communist Eastern Europe (co-edited with Madalina Nicolaescu and Helen Smith, Bucharest: University of Bucharest Press, 2005 and 2006); Identity Performance in Contemporary Non-WASP American Fiction (Bucharest: University of Bucharest Press, 2008); Cultura românească în perspectiva transatlantică: Interviuri (Co-edited with Teodora Serban-Oprescu, Bucharest: University of Bucharest Press, 2009); Performance and Performativity in Contemporary Indian Fiction in English (Amsterdam: Rodopi, forthcoming 2012).

LITTÉRATURE YIDDISH ET LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE : UNE ÉCRITURE DE LA DIASPORA IMPOSE-T-ELLE UNE APPROCHE COMPARATISTE ?

A. Bikard

Abstract: Notre présentation entend examiner une question méthodologique importante dans l'approche des textes littéraires yiddish, et vise à démontrer l'intérêt d'une approche généraliste et comparatiste dans un domaine où les travaux émanent en majorité de spécialistes de linguistique ou d'études juives. Elle entend examiner la position particulière de cette littérature, aussi bien dans ses premiers développements à la fin du Moyen-Âge et au XVIe siècle que dans sa période de plus intense floraison à la fin du XIXe et au XXe siècle.

Nous insisterons sur deux particularités essentielles de la littérature yiddish :

Tout d'abord nous montrerons que ses représentants se situaient tous, sans exception, dans une situation de bilinguisme, et plus souvent encore de trilinguisme et que la logique même de la diaspora les confrontait à la difficile question de l'assimilation des cultures extérieures, non-juives.

Ensuite nous montrerons que l'histoire de cette littérature est jalonnée de tentatives d'affirmation et de définition de ses valeurs esthétiques et morales.

En conséquence, la littérature yiddish est, dans l'esprit même des écrivains, fondée sur une dialectique constante entre le propre et l'étranger, l'intérieur et l'extérieur. Il s'y joue, à la fois, un processus d'acculturation des richesses de la littérature mondiale dans lequel la problématique de la traduction est essentielle, mais aussi, et surtout, une lutte constante pour l'acceptation d'une littérature profane, à la fois dévalorisée par les instances religieuses et par un regard dépréciatif sur la langue yiddish définie comme jargon. Démontrer la noblesse de la langue, c'est regarder et utiliser les littératures étrangères dans une logique d'émulation créative. C'est cette émulation, consubstantielle au développement de la littérature yiddish, que la littérature comparée peut en particulier mettre en évidence.

Pour illustrer notre propos, nous étudierons deux exemples cruciaux : celui d'Elia Lévia (1469-1548), figure dominante de la littérature yiddish ancienne, et celui d'I.L. Peretz (1852-1915), le père de la littérature yiddish moderne. Nous montrerons que ces deux écrivains ont avant tout joué le rôle de « passeurs » non seulement de modèles esthétiques, mais surtout, de postures et de valeurs littéraires en s'inspirant d'œuvres italiennes et allemandes pour le premier, et d'une vaste connaissance de la littérature mondiale (et en particulier polonaise et russe) pour le second.

Biography: Arnaud Bikard

Doctorant en sixième (et dernière) année de thèse sous la direction de M. François Lecercle.

Sujet de thèse : « L'œuvre poétique yiddish d'Elia Lévia (1469-1548) au croisement des littératures yiddish ancienne, allemande, italienne et hébraïque. »

S4 LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE ET MONDIALISATION / COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND GLOBALIZATION

THE IDENTITY CRISIS OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE IN NORTH AMERICA AND EUROPE

G. Montenegro

University of California, Davis

Abstract: As Haun Saussy writes in the 2004 report on the state of the discipline, Comparative Literature has never been better received in the American University. That report highlighted some of the difficulties and advantages facing new American PhDs in the discipline. One of the advantages was that both doctoral candidates and junior faculty were able to map out the future of the field through new intersections of literature with translation, post-colonialism, and new feminist studies. In terms of undergraduate study in the field, the Association of Departments and Programs of Comparative Literature released their 2005 report on the Undergraduate Comparative Literature Curriculum which records practices, implications, and recommendations for the undergraduate major.^[i] Among their recommendations was the continued language requirement and study abroad. Hence, interdisciplinary studies and global studies (through study abroad) are perhaps a marker of Comparative Literature in North America in the 21st century. Across the Atlantic in France, Comparative Literature is also undergoing an institutional renaissance. Alain Montadon states in his report on the study of the field there that students majoring in French studies have to take compulsory courses in Comparative Literature, and those defending a dissertation in French studies often must take qualifying exams in the field (69).^[ii] Yet, while the danger of appropriation of Comparative Literature by dominant national literature departments—whether it is English in the US or French Studies in France, or by Area and Cultural Studies, as studied by Gayatri Spivak in Death of a Discipline—is a subject of discussion in vogue, we have failed to consider why exactly Comparative and World Literature is so attractive to universities in Europe and North America in the 21st century and what we can do to ensure the longevity of the field. In the United States, Comparative Literature serves as a model for educational programs that attempt to bridge and connect various disciplines. While in Europe, many programs have remained suspicious of interdisciplinary attempts, the results of the 1999 Bologna process, and the increased exchange of studies between European students through programs such as Erasmus, make the 21st century the era for Comparative Literature. Greek students in Berlin, German students in Lithuania, Portuguese students in Holland, translators for every language of the European Union — now is the time for the revival of comparative literary studies along translation studies. Moreover, shifting European migration patterns in the time of economic crisis merit a study on the impact of European migration within education, language acquisition through Integration and University courses, and literary studies. In Germany, universities are now offering Galician, Euskera (Basque), and Catalan alongside Spanish. Georgian and Armenian is taught along Russian. If we return to Frank Warnke's 1988 essay, "The Comparatists Canon: Some Observations," where he called upon Comparatists to return to the study of minor languages (49) we can see that now is the time for Comparative Literature and Translation studies especially in Europe. Warnke saw literary scholarship as suffering from a bad case of Western provincialism because of a disregard for non-Western languages and literatures and a complete disregard for minor Western languages and literatures (49). Now as a result of globalization and alienation at times we can ponder how can we turn this rich European cultural, linguistic, and educational exchange into food for thought in American universities? Equally, how can European universities draw upon the experience of North America's interdisciplinary intersections with Comparative Literature? My paper seeks to address these questions and the redefinition of the field among educational and geopolitical changes in Europe and North America.

^[i] The 2005 report summarizes the trends in the undergraduate Comparative Literature curriculum: "there is substantial agreement on the broad outlines of what an undergraduate comparative literature degree should involve: proficiency in a language in addition to English, courses that focus on literary analysis, courses on literary theory, and a balance between Western and non-Western and between premodern and modern components. Further, about 60% of programs require a capstone experience, which is usually a senior seminar" (188). Moreover, the report recommends that "for the undergraduate major, we see the future as maintaining or strengthening the requirement for languages and the frequency of study abroad, both of which represent a commitment to studying cultures in their own words; maintaining the inclusion of premodern as well as modern literatures, so that we continue to avoid presentism; extending the effectiveness and range of the movement toward globalization; and continuing to develop capstone courses, senior theses, or other components that make a comparative literature major demand the most of our students" (190).^[ii] Montadon discusses the new Master's degree in France as replacing the former postgraduate DEA [diplôme d'études approfondies] curriculum (under the old educational model a student would attain his or her licence [four years of university studies] and advance to this first research degree: "The recently implemented new Master's degree, incorporating a fourth and fifth year of study, the latter replacing the former DEA, prepares students either for advanced doctoral research or provides them with a particular vocational orientation. Teaching for the Master is supported by establishing research centers which are recognized by the Ministry of Education (Ministère de l' Education Nationale). The importance given to Comparative Literature varies from institution to institution and department to department, with each university offering a unique set of combinations. Some Masters are entirely comparative in focus and content whilst others offer only a comparative component (we occasionally encounter amongst French literature specialists a lack of recognition of a discipline that they consider non-essential to their parochial French priorities). A Master is typically composed of a specified number of taught components and involves at the end of the course of study the writing of a 100-plus page dissertation, which constitutes a student's first serious piece of academic research and often forms the beginning of a doctoral thesis" (70).

Biography: Giovanna Montenegro is a fifth-year PhD Candidate in the Comparative Literature Department at the University of California, Davis. Currently, she is a Fulbright Fellow at the Freie Universität in Berlin, Germany. She is finishing her dissertation on sixteenth-century visual and textual representations of the discovery of South America. In particular she focuses on German conquistadors in Venezuela and French Huguenots in Brazil. Ms. Montenegro was a former Graduate representative of the American Comparative Literature Association. She has also served in the Committee on the Status of Graduate Students in the Profession in the Modern Language Association.

LOCATING TIME AND PLACE IN A GLOBAL CONTEXT: A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF NORTH AMERICAN FICTION

R.J. Sethi
Amity Institute

Abstract: The paper focuses on the seminal importance of the "time & place" which play a phenomenal role in the shifting terrains of globalization. It explores the sense of "place" and "time" in the fiction of Ellen Glasgow (America) and Margaret Laurence (Canada). The main purpose of the two novelists is not only to reveal the vices, follies, sadism, masochism etc, of their respective places Manawaka (Manitoba) and Virginia but also to show virtue, dignity, nobility, richness of culture etc, importance of roots, their times in Global context. For example in the United States, the readers identify Hagar Shipley (the protagonist of The Stone Angel) as the archetypal North American Old Woman and in Canada, Hagar is Every woman as their own grandmother. Infact, Hagar's voice and her language have stamped themselves on her readers with a global authenticity to time and place. Thus, the afore stated study of North American fiction involving two novelist from Canada and USA denotes the broad literary and linguistic areas which make us feel the shifting paradigms of time and place.

Biography: Dr. Roshi Jolly Sethi is working as a lecturer in Amity International University, India. She has done her doctorate in American and Canadian Literature. She has been invariably invited to attend international summer seminar in Canadian studies from Ottawa University, Carleton University; International seminar in Jammu University, India, etc. Moreover, she has also participated in faculty orientation workshops in Amity University.

CULTURAL GLOBALIZATION: CHALLENGES FOR LATIN AMERICAN COMPARATISTS

A.J. Capalbo
Universidad de Buenos Aires (UBA)

Abstract: The impact of globalization in the cultural sphere has been viewed, most generally, in a pessimistic perspective. Cultural globalization holds the rapid transmission of ideas and meanings across national borders. It is also a process standardized around the world and marked by the spread of values and ideologies, becoming a brilliant facilitator of experiences between different people and cultures. The advancement of technology has accelerated the process: now telematic culture interconnects various populations from diverse cultures. By the end of the 20th century, the Internet made possible for ordinary people on opposite sides of the Earth to connect instantly and cheaply, optimizing the purpose of personal communication. The anti-globalization point of view assumes the reject of this cultural reality, taken as the destruction of cultural identities, victims of the accelerating encroachment of a homogenized and westernized culture (the western cultural imperialism, according to the radical discourse), because of the huge power of globalized capitalism. Transfiguration of worldwide diversity, the dominance of American culture sets up globalization as a process of hybridization on which cultural mixture and adaptation continuously transform and renew cultural forms. We, Latin American comparatists, know that cultures are continually changing and being recreated as part of an ongoing process of internal pressures and influences. Also know that cultures are shaped by external forces, because Comparative Literature, working in two or more languages, inquires about the intersections of culture traditions. Our theoretical questions confront the study of literary and cultural texts in its crossroads between languages, cultures, eras, genres, arts and disciplines. A cultural globalization forces us to strengthen our critical ability to identify, interpret, and evaluate the thoughts and formal features of literary texts in the context of hybridization with academic rigor. And to formulate new attitudes or directions. For instance, to intensify our usual emphasis on culture diversity, to add in our proceedings some subjects (gender, class, ethnicity) of the Cultural Studies, to consider ideologically when different cultural traditions collide. We must renew some tools used regularly in the fields of Comparative Literature to highlight with preoccupation the identity of a small culture that could disappear. We have to celebrate the literature as an agent of change in society.

Cultural globalization poses immense long-term challenges for Comparative Literature in the aspects of human flourishing and human dignity. We should not be distracted by the complexity of this historical process neither read into it just a new and destructive boogeyman. We have to assume the intellectual enterprise, addressing the discussion around the globe, particularly the Latin American comparatists.

Partial bibliography:

Cella, Susana, comp. (1998). Dominios de la literatura; acerca del canon. Buenos Aires: Losada.

Costa Picazo, Rolando: "De la globalización, el multiculturalismo y otros enfoques actuales", en Elgue Martini, Cristina & Carballo, Mirian, eds. (2001). América desde la contemporaneidad: nortes y sures. Córdoba (Arg.): Comunicarte.

García Canclini, Néstor. (2000). La globalización imaginada. Buenos Aires: Paidós.

Hopper, Paul. (2007). Understanding Cultural Globalization. Malden, MA: Polity Press,.

Moneta, Carlos: "Identidades y políticas culturales en procesos de globalización e integración regional", en García Canclini, Néstor & Moneta, Carlos. (2000). Las industrias culturales en la integración latinoamericana. Buenos Aires: Eudeba.

Nederveen Pieterse, Jan. (2003). Globalization and Culture: Global Mélange. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.

Nederveen Pieterse, Jan. (2004). Globalization or Empire? New York and London: Routledge.

Sarlo, Beatriz: "Sensibilidad, cultura y política: el cambio de fin de siglo", en Martínez, José Tono, comp. (2002).

Observatorio Siglo XXI. Buenos Aires: Paidós.

Biography: Professor of Literature. Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Buenos Aires.

Professor of Arts. Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Buenos Aires.

Editor of a dozen books on American Studies, published in Buenos Aires.

Journalist in ADN, Literary Supplement of the newspaper La Nación, Buenos Aires.

Professor in charge: "Literature of the combined arts II", Universidad de Buenos Aires.

Professor in charge: "Anglophone theater seminar", Instituto Universitario de Artes, Buenos Aires.

Speaker at conferences in Spain, USA, Venezuela, Colombia, Uruguay, Guatemala, Brazil, Holland and Chile.

S4 LE SAVOIR DE LA LITTÉRATURE

VISUALIZING FICTIONAL WORLDS: DOES COGNITIVE SCIENCE PROMOTE LITERARY KNOWLEDGE?

L.C. Otis
Emory University

Abstract: Visualizing Fictional Worlds: Does Cognitive Science promote Literary Knowledge? In the 1990s, Ellen Esrock and Elaine Scarry pointed out how cognitive studies of visual mental imagery can enhance our understanding of the way literature works. In the past decade, cognitive neuroscientist Maria Kozhevnikov's discoveries of two distinct visual cognitive styles have provided a new impetus for testing and applying these interdisciplinary scholars' ideas. Through behavioral and imaging studies, Kozhevnikov has determined that visually skilled individuals excel either at processing information about an object's distance, dimensions, speed, and direction of motion (spatial properties), or its shape, color, texture, and surface details (object properties). These properties are processed in two neurologically distinct pathways, and people good at spatial visualization rarely excel at object visualization. In an interview-based study, I asked 34 individuals (including some prominent scientists and authors) about what they visualize when they read. The differences were striking. Some people claimed that they visualized "everything" and that the pleasure they took in visualizing motivated them to read. Others did not believe that they visualized while reading, or, in the case of one well-known literary scholar, they reported seeing the layout of the spatial environment but could not say what color hair the main character had. Scarry's original Dreaming by the Book used her own visual mental imagery and psychologist Stephen Kosslyn's visualization studies to examine how skilled writers prompt their readers to visualize. Not everyone experiences literature with the same visual richness as Scarry, however, and the important beginning she made needs to be rethought. The question is whether novelists and poets construct their works to stimulate readers who visualize in a variety of different ways. Do they care about readers who see architectural layouts but not faces or tousled hair? More significantly, does it further our understanding of literature to know that readers respond to it visually in different ways?

Biography: Trained as a neuroscientist and literary scholar, Laura Otis studies the ways that literature and science intersect. She compares scientific and literary representations of memory, identity, and communication and explores variations in individual thought styles. Otis received her BS in Biochemistry from Yale University in 1983, her MA in Neuroscience from the University of California at San Francisco in 1988, and her PhD in Comparative Literature from Cornell University in 1991. Since 2004 she has been a Professor of English at Emory University, where she teaches interdisciplinary courses on literature, medicine, neuroscience, and cognitive science. She has also been a frequent guest scholar at the Berlin Max Planck Institute for the History of Science. Otis is the author of Organic Memory (1994), Membranes (1999), Networking (2001), and Müller's Lab (2007) and the translator of neurobiologist Santiago Ramón y Cajal's Vacation Stories (2001). She edited Literature and Science in the Nineteenth Century: An Anthology (2002). Otis' current project on cognitive styles and creativity examines differences in people's relationships with words and images. Besides her academic books, Otis has authored five yet-to-be-published novels. In 2000, she was awarded a MacArthur fellowship for creativity.

FROM DEEP TIME TO DEEP MEMORY : BUFFON AND DIDEROT

J. Stalnaker
Columbia University

Abstract: Le propos de cette intervention est de comparer et de confronter la notion de "temps profond" inventée par le comte de Buffon à celle de "mémoire immense" inventée par Diderot. Il s'agit de se situer, dans la seconde moitié du XVIIIe siècle, aux confins de la géologie, de la physiologie et de la philosophie et d'observer la manière dont ces « disciplines » s'articulent les unes par rapport aux autres.

Biography: Joanna Stalnaker, Assistant Professor à Columbia University

S2 CONCEPTIONS AND METHODOLOGIES

LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE COMME HUMANISME MODERNE

B.T. Franco

Université Paris-Sorbonne

Abstract: L'humanisme de la Renaissance a été la découverte d'un cosmopolitisme, au fondement d'un nouveau rapport à la culture. Née au tournant du XVIIIe au XIXe siècle, la littérature comparée s'est développée non comme science de la confrontation des littératures et des cultures, mais des brassages. Dans la période troublée du milieu du XXe siècle, elle a pris un sens particulier et peut aujourd'hui se comprendre, par ses présupposés critiques qui rapprochent une littérature de son contexte culturel, comme par les croisements culturels qu'elle envisage, comme une des formes modernes d'une culture humaniste.

Biography: Bernard Franco est professeur de Littérature comparée à l'université Paris-Sorbonne. Il a également exercé ses activités d'enseignement et de recherche dans de nombreux contextes: à l'université Harvard, à Oxford (dans le cadre d'une bourse Lavoisier, qui l'associait à la Maison française et au New College), à Madrid, à la Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität, où il a d'une part effectué des recherches post-doctorales dans le cadre d'une bourse de la Fondation Humboldt, d'autre part exercé comme enseignant. Enfin, il a durant quatre ans dirigé le département de Littérature française et comparée de l'université Paris-Sorbonne Abou Dabi.

Ses recherches portent sur les romantismes européens (notamment sur les transferts culturels entre des domaines allemand et français), sur les questions de dramaturgie et sur les relations entre esthétique et littérature. Il est notamment l'auteur de: "Le Despotisme du goût. Débats sur le modèle tragique allemand en France, 1797-1814".

INCERTITUDE POSITIVE ET METHODOLOGIE COMPARATISTE

B. Le Juez

Dublin City University

Abstract: L'incertitude, associée à la connaissance et/ou à la compréhension limitées d'un sujet, est un concept généralement perçu comme étant négatif. Depuis maintenant plusieurs décennies, le reproche dominant attribué à la littérature comparée, le plus souvent de l'intérieur même de la discipline, est formulé sur la base d'une notion de vague, de flottement. « Qu'est-ce que la littérature comparée ? » est la question perpétuelle sur laquelle nul ne s'accorde – bien que certains recueils l'aient utilisée afin d'apporter non pas tant une réponse qu'un panorama de perspectives (renforçant ainsi l'idée de flou). Il semble donc urgent de considérer qu'il puisse exister une incertitude positive dans la nature même des études comparatistes. Le fait de ne pouvoir décrire précisément, de ne pouvoir affirmer catégoriquement, et de ne pouvoir envisager de résultats ou conséquences précis à telle ou telle étude, à tel ou tel moment, devrait à ce stade de la réflexion collective sur le sujet de la possible définition de la littérature comparée, apparaître comme l'évidente et fondamentale qualité de la littérature comparée. Le principe méthodologique du champ, dans sa capacité à accueillir théories, cultures littéraires et disciplines, sans a priori, afin de mieux les combiner, d'effacer leurs apparentes différences et de faire fructifier leurs points d'intersection, permet de constamment remettre en question la rigidité qui peut s'installer dans les procédés trop bien établis et donc arrêtés. C'est cette incertitude même qui assure la durabilité de la matière comparatiste, ne la cantonnant à aucun domaine particulier, lui permettant de découvrir sans cesse de nouveaux horizons, sans en envahir aucun, tout en restant originale et innovatrice. L'incertitude interrogerait et modifierait ainsi les règles de l'utilisation des outils de recherche devenant alors multi-textuels et extra- aussi bien qu'inter-disciplinaires. Ainsi, malgré sa mort maintes fois annoncée, la littérature comparée, pliable et pliante, persistera-t-elle résolument à ne point rompre.

Biography: Professeur de Français et Littérature Comparée
School of Applied Language and Intercultural Studies, Dublin City University
Directrice du Master en littérature comparée de DCU.

Membre fondateur et actuelle Présidente de l'Association de Littérature Comparée d'Irlande (CLAI)

Membre du comité exécutif du Réseau Européen d'Etudes Littéraires Comparées

Membre fondateur et ancienne Présidente de l'Association des Etudes Françaises et Francophones d'Irlande.

Ancienne Rédactrice du Irish Journal of French Studies.

Recherche et publications en littérature et cinéma français, ainsi qu'en études comparatistes (réception, imagologie, géocritique).

Dernier livre paru:

- Beckett avant la lettre, Grasset, 2007 (traduit en anglais, Beckett before Beckett, Souvenir Press 2008).

LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE, LITTÉRATURE GLOBALE ET TRADUCTION : DEFIS ET POSSIBILITES

K. Shields

National University of Ireland Maynooth

Abstract: La Weltliteratur de Goethe était basée sur la pratique de la traduction : dans sa création d'un canon qui représenterait le meilleur de chaque nation dans sa spécificité et son universalité, la traduction jouait un rôle primordial. La création des états-nations en Europe au cours du XIXe siècle allait de pair avec l'idée d'une littérature transnationale où la traduction était un outil important de transmission et d'échange. En même temps, dans la littérature comparée en Europe, la traduction représentait une façon de décentrer, surtout pour l'allemand, le français et l'anglais.

La littérature comparée se voit actuellement confrontée par quatre défis. Premièrement, l'état-nation s'affaiblit. Deuxièmement, la notion de la Weltliteratur est en déclin, remplacée par l'ascension de l'anglais comme lingua franca et comme langue de base pour d'autres traductions. Troisièmement, en ce qui concerne la traduction, les asymétries dans les rapports entre les langues, et le nombre très restreint des langues de traduction, s'accroissent. (La métaphore du GPS, pour tenir compte de la multipolarité des cultures à l'échelle mondiale, est bien jolie. Pourtant le nombre de pôles est limité.) Finalement, l'évolution du lecteur en homo numericus fait que les produits littéraires sont "là", commodifiés et inscrits dans de nouveaux canons changeants, de manière transparente et sans médiation visible.

Dans cette situation, quelles sont les possibilités offertes par la tradition européenne de l'étude des traductions ? La théorie des polysystèmes pourrait-elle aider à refocaliser sur la lumière crue que jette la traduction sur les grilles, les filtres et les asymétries qui existent entre les producteurs et les consommateurs des textes littéraires ? Pourrait-on adapter la distinction faite, en français, par Arnaud et Guillou (2002) entre mondialisation et globalisation, la première étant l'extension de nouvelles formes de communication à l'échelle mondiale, et la deuxième l'exploitation et l'utilisation, cachées, du processus de la mondialisation au service de sa propre culture et de son propre empire commercial. L'étude des traductions peut-elle servir à cartographier les rapports de forces afin d'arriver non seulement à une éthique, mais encore à une géopolitique de la littérature ?

Biography: Kathleen Shields est maître de conférences à l'Université Nationale de l'Irlande, Maynooth où elle enseigne le français. Elle a publié dans le domaine de la lexicographie et elle est également auteur de livres et d'articles en traductologie. Elle travaille actuellement sur un projet au sujet de la francophonie et ses rapports à l'anglais.

S4 GAMES AND NARRATIVE

STRANGER IN A STRANGE LAND. REPRESENTING AND SIMULATING ALTERITY IN COMPUTER GAMES

H. Backe
Ruhr University Bochum

Abstract: In computer games, contact with the Other has traditionally been depicted as a source of conflict. Invaders from outer space, ghosts from the afterlife, and demons from hell are the staple of action game threats, with interlopers from foreign countries or opposing factions coming a close second. The avatar travels to foreign places to avenge, rescue, or conquer, and the complete Alterity of the encountered peoples and species usually leaves no room for peaceful communication or even coexistence. While most games exhibit such a colonialist thinking, some break the simplistic patterns and have avatar and player experience alterity and abjection. Especially games that favor a realistic setting over Fantasy or Science Fiction often mirror the thematic treatment of Otherness in corresponding game mechanics. In games such as Red Dead Redemption (Rockstar, 2010) and Kane & Lynch 2: Dog Days (IO Interactive, 2010), the player's usually unimpeded possibilities for perceiving the game world and interacting with it suffer from the avatar's alienation in an unfamiliar society. The dynamics of intercultural encounters are thus, at the same time, a topic in the representational aspect of the games and a rule-modifier in its ludic aspect. The paper will discuss how this dichotomy of semiotics and game mechanics can be analyzed from a humanistic perspective, and will demonstrate its importance for Comparative Literature by correlating it to traditional imagologist and poststructuralist reflections upon otherness.

Biography: Hans-Joachim Backe is post-doctoral researcher at the Department of General and Comparative Literature at Ruhr-University Bochum, Germany. He is the author of Strukturen und Funktionen des Erzählens im Computerspiel (2008), winner of the Anna Balakian Memorial Award of 2010, and co-editor of From Ritual to Romance and Beyond. Comparative Literature and Comparative Religious Studies (2011). In 2010, he has been elected chairperson of the Research Committee on Comparative Literature in the Digital Age. His research interests include literary theory, transmedia narratology, games studies, comic studies, and literature of the 19th to 21st century.

COMPUTER GAMES AS NARRATIVES AND THE FOUNDATIONS OF NARRATIVITY

Z. Ben-Porat
Tel Aviv University

Abstract: There are serious debates concerning computer games as works of fiction and as narratives. On the basis of research regarding Flashstories focusing on readers' conceptualizing them as stories and narrativizing the minimal information that such stories provide and on cognitive work concerning the narrativization of pictures by viewers, I plan to offer a methodology for the study of gamers' reactions to the narrative aspect of a game. My main point is to discuss the role of narrative schemas in responses to various stages in the game, and to suggest that a gamer is rarely an active participant in the construction of a narrative outside the game's action itself. If this is the case than computer games cannot be considered new forms of narrative within the conceptual frame of the present literary concept.

Biography: Ziva ben Porat has worked on intertextuality since 1973, moving from structuralist to cognitive and empirical approaches. Her background in semiotics brought about her involvement in an EC project related to hypertexts and cyberspace. A research project concerning the western Literary Canon in the Digital age paved the way for work on canonic traces in computer games and on games and narrative schemas.

STEPHEN KING'S COMPUTER EXPERIENCE "DISCORDIA": IN BETWEEN NARRATOLOGY, LUDOLOGY AND CINEMATOGRAPHY

D. Feleki
Aristotle University of Thessaloniki

Abstract: The creation of fiction outside the domain of the printed industry as well as a more general turn from alphanumeric codes to digital ones are regarded as the results of the multiple technological convergences that are taking place, leading to the intersection of various artistic modes and writing practices. This essay aims to present Stephen King's Discordia, the 3D online interactive computer experience that is based on the printed Dark Tower series, as the outcome of such artistic, technological and cultural convergences. By investigating the game's narrative and representational techniques employed in the game's design, my primary concern is to investigate the ability of the computer game genre to narrate a story. Additionally, I intend to look into the new types of interactivity this multi-modular literary experience offers to the players who -through participation- gradually turn into autonomous negotiators of meanings while in the fictional world. Last but not least, light will be shed onto the redefined roles of the author in such collaborative environments.

Biography: Despoina Feleki is an appointed English Secondary Educator and is currently heading towards the completion of her Ph.D. studies in the Department of Contemporary American studies in the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. She is currently teaching Computer Literacy and Research Skills at the Department of English, Aristotle University of Thessaloniki.

Her fields of research include contemporary American literature, writing technologies as well as popular culture studies. At the moment she is investigating the convergence of literary practices with computational technologies and its impact on contemporary theories of authorship and fandom. The impact of the implementation of computer games in education is also within her academic interests.

SOLVING THE TUNGUSKA-MYSTERY YOURSELF – THE ADVENTURE GAME AS THE SIMULATION OF ACTIVE PARTICIPATION IN EXPLAINING THE INEXPLICABLE

S. Nitzke
Ruhr-Universität Bochum

Abstract: The apparently unsolvable mystery of the Tunguska-event that occurred in 1908 and destroyed vast areas of Siberia has caused not only a wide range of research and speculation, but also a variety of fictional reactions. The majority of the Tunguska-fictions belong to genres which focus on the unknown or inexplicable in one way or the other. Science Fiction and Alternative Histories, Mysteries and Conspiracy-Novels – the texts, TV-series and films which deal with Tunguska all have in common that they challenge the notion of 'scientific fact' and the politics of knowledge within but also beyond the borders of their respective genre. The lack of a definitive explanation for the Tunguska-event creates a space in which fictions claim to provide theories and explanations that are not less qualified to be 'the truth' or 'real' than their institutionally scientific counterparts. Hence, (especially in literary texts) efforts to convince audience/readers of the presented 'solution' of the mystery become visible. In many of the stories, the protagonists start out as uninformed or highly skeptic and thus are subject to the same educational project as the readers. The potential of identification with the main characters and hence with the main ideas of the respective texts is crucial to the texts participation in the Tunguska-discourse. The popular German adventure game "Geheimakte Tunguska" (Secret Files Tunguska) represents a special case within the variety of Tunguska-fictions. The agency of the player creates an illusion of participation that goes well beyond the possibilities of identification in other texts. In my comparison of the different kinds of narratives of the Tunguska-event I will point out the specific characteristics and narrative possibilities that "Geheimakte Tunguska" adds to the discourse of the Tunguska-mystery. This paper will concentrate on the analysis of genre-patterns and innovations of established structures as well as on the question if and how the adventure game can approach the topic differently than literary texts, movies and TV-series and what the specific use of genre conventions and narrative perspective, immersion and 'atmosphere' contribute to the Tunguska discourse.

Biography: I completed my M.A. in German-Studies and Comparative-Literature at Ruhr-University Bochum (Germany) in 2010, when I also started working on my PhD-thesis on the Tunguska-Event as a challenge to the concept of catastrophe. Since 2011 I hold a scholarship of the Ruhr-University Research School. In the academic year 2011/12 was working as a teaching assistant at the University of Virginia. Currently I am teaching at Ruhr-University Bochum. (Co-Editor of: "Katastrophen" Essen: C. A. Bachmann Verlag: 2012)

S2: LECTURES CONTEMPORAINES DU CONCEPT D'ANTHROPOPHAGIE

POUR UN COMPARATIVISME SUPRANATIONAL

A.B. Martins

Universidade Federal de São João Del Rei

Abstract: La littérature comparée a toujours été une sorte d'anthropophagie, et les littératures nationales y ont joué le rôle des anthropophages. Les matières anthropophagiées, métabolisées, ce sont les langues, les mythes, les récits, les croyances, les chansons, la culture pop, le royaume des textes, soient-ils des textes oraux, soient-ils les publications diverses. Les littératures nationales contemporaines sont défiées par les forces de la mondialisation, elles mêmes des intensités paradoxales basées sur un comparativisme fréquemment célébré comme un signe de diversité, mais qui, pourtant, peut devenir une sorte d'hégémonie internationale. De toute façon, la mondialisation ne cesse de se rendre de plus en plus insaisissable, ce qui bouscule complètement la possibilité de se prendre des positions radicalement pour ou contre ce phénomène. Les soi-disant nations périphériques, parmi lesquelles le Brésil, se voient dans une situation complexe où il y a beaucoup à profiter avec la mondialisation, mais aussi beaucoup à perdre, particulièrement dans les secteurs culturels. En outre, une grande partie de ces nations parlent de langues mineures, qui ont du mal à rivaliser avec les langues hégémoniques de la mondialisation. Dans les dernières décennies, le Brésil a été reconnu en tant que nation globale, mais sa littérature est presque entièrement écrite en portugais. Le Brésil littéraire, donc, doit compter sur la traduction s'il veut se mondialiser. Dans mon texte, je réfléchis sur ce statut de nation en même temps globale et traduite. En d'autres termes, tandis que les anciennes capitales politiques et économiques sont obligées de revoir ses relations avec les périphéries, est-ce que les sièges et les langues de la légitimation littéraire mondiale sont sensibles aux demandes culturelles imposées par la mondialisation?

Biography: Professeur de Théorie Littéraire et Littératures Anglophones au Département de Lettres, Arts et Culture de l'Université Fédérale de Sao Joao Del Rei (UFSJ), Brésil. Docteur en Littérature Comparée (Université Fédérale de Minas Gerais - UFMG). A publié des articles dans des périodiques brésiliens et des chapitres de livres. Participation, avec présentation de travaux, à différents colloques au Brésil.

AVANT-GARDE REFLEXIONS ABOUT THE MAKING OF A "NEW-MAN"

D. Spinelli

Unicamp - Universidade Estadual de Campinas

Abstract: The beginning of the past century was a time of great expectations; some utopian but also others more apocalyptic. The intellectuals of this period took new ideas and radical thoughts to their ultimate consequences. In this period of extreme tension some movements appropriated the military term avant-gardes (and their 'methods of intervention' into the political discussion) to radically intervene in the society. This militant intellectual-political thought was born in Paris, with the publication of Marinetti's Manifesto Futurista, the first organized artistic movement of the century: Futurism. Its objective was a more complete revolution leading towards a transformed society which would develop in the coming years and result in the creation of a new man. This movement was envisioned to be much more than simple politics; instead being a societal revolution, encompassing all aspects of esthetic interactions like music, art, theater etc. These ideas influenced not only all the european historical avant-gardes of the twentieth century, but also the beginning of Brazilian Modernism in 1922. The proposal for this communication is to present the reflexions on the making of a new man, projected by the italian futurism and by the brazilian modernism. Both avanguardes are deeply connected by the nationalistic desire of the developement of a modern, independent culture in the periphery of capitalism, but they present different solutions for its construction.

Biography: Daniela Spinelli holds a Masters degree in Literature and Literary Criticism from the PUC - Pontificia Universidade Catolica de Sao Paulo (2008/CAPES scholarship). She is currently pursuing a PhD with the Department of Literary Theory and History at IEL/UNICAMP, with Prof. Dr. Carlos Eduardo Ornelas Berriel. She is a recipient of the CNPq scholarship and CAPES exchange scholarship (Universita degli Studi di Firenze, Florence, Italy, from Sept. 2010 to Aug. 2011 with co-advisor Prof. Dr. Gianluca Bonaiuti). She is a participant in the "Rinascimento e Utopia" (Renaissance and Utopia) Research Group, and the U-TOPUS Utopia Study Center, both at IEL/UNICAMP.

OTHER ANTHROPOPHAGIES: TRANSNATIONAL LITERATURES, TRANSCULTURAL TRANSLATIONS

S.G. Almeida
UFMG

Abstract: I propose in this work to provide to rereading of the notion of anthropophagy, as conceived and further developed by Brazilian theorists, in the light of contemporary discussions on transnational literatures and transcultural translations. It attempts to articulate issues of subalterneity, alterity, postcoloniality and the relevant role of comparative literature in our transnational world. To think about comparative literature in this space and time leads us to dislocate the national axis to thus “rethink mere national-origin collectivities” (Spivak, 2003, p. 53). In other words, it allows us to move towards other spaces of theorization and other transnational and translocal spheres in the context of contemporary geopolitical movements. The challenge of comparative literature rests in its necessary openness towards the other – his or her languages and literatures – productively unlearning the monocultures reproduced by empires. In fact, this work has to be carried out by an imagination trained in the translational process and concerned with conceptions of a comparative literature that makes room for other forms of literature and cultural expressions and that offers the promise of equivalence in subaltern spatial and temporal axis - a principle much in tune with anthropophagic concerns.

Biography: Sandra R. G. Almeida is a Professor of English and Comparative Literatures at the Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG), Brazil, and a fellow researcher from the Brazilian funding agencies CNPq and FAPEMIG. Her fields of research are contemporary literatures in English and Comparative Literature, literary and cultural theory, feminist literary criticism and gender studies. She has edited and co-edited several books, including: The Art of Elizabeth Bishop (2002), Gênero e Representação em Literaturas de Língua Inglesa (2002), Transnational Perspectives Brazil-Canadá (2005), New Challenges in Language and Literature (2009), and Migrações teóricas, interlocuções culturais (2009), among others.

S2 LES LITTÉRATURES ARABES : QUELLE PLACE DANS LA LITTÉRATURE COMPAREE ? ENJEUX METHODOLOGIQUES.

L'OBJET DE TOUS LES REGARDS : LES MILLE ET UNE NUITS

C. Boidin

Université Paris Ouest Nanterre La Défense

Abstract: Dans le cadre de l'atelier consacré à l'exemple de la littérature arabe, nous nous proposons de revenir sur un objet littéraire oriental, qui sert souvent de paradigme pour l'étude des modes de narration non-européennes et pré-modernes : les Mille et une nuits. La traduction de cet ensemble et son étude dans les cercles orientalistes et littéraires ont tenu un rôle historique dans les représentations réciproques de l'Orient et de l'Occident. Mais de quoi cet ensemble est-il représentatif au juste ? Est-il légitime de lui accorder ce rôle paradigmatique en termes de littérature et de connaissance de l'autre, dans le cadre de travaux comparatistes ? L'histoire des textes, tout comme la confrontation avec d'autres modèles narratifs issus de la tradition littéraire arabe, nous permettront de mettre en perspective ce monument largement imaginaire de l'Orient et d'en tirer les conséquences sur l'état des études sur l'Orient prémoderne dans notre discipline, sur la pertinence de nos catégories d'analyse, mais aussi sur les problèmes que pose l'enseignement consacré à cet ensemble.

Biography: - Les Mille et une nuits, Contes arabes, Traduction d'Antoine Galland, présentation par Jean-Paul Sermain et Aboubakr Chraïbi, dossier par J.-P. Sermain, 3 tomes. Paris, GF Flammarion, 2004 [édition fondée sur l'édition princeps, Paris, Claude Barbin, 1704-1717]. - Bauden, Frédéric ; Chraïbi, Aboubakr ; Ghersetti, Antonella (dir.): Le Répertoire narratif arabe médiéval, Transmission et ouverture. Actes du colloque international (Liège, 15-17 sept. 2005), Genève, Droz, coll. "Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège", 2008. - Carnoy, Dominique: Représentations de l'Islam dans la France du XVIIe siècle : la ville des tentations, Paris-Montréal, L'Harmattan, 1998 - Cheikh-Moussa, Abdallah: "Considérations sur la littérature d'adab. Présence et effets de la voix et autres problèmes connexes", Al-Qantara, XXVII, 1, 2006, p. 25-62. - Chraïbi, Aboubakr: Les Mille et une nuits, histoire du texte et classification des contes, Paris, L'Harmattan, 2008. - Defrance, Anne et Perrin, Jean-François (dir.): Le Conte en ses paroles, la figuration de l'oralité dans le conte merveilleux du Classicisme aux Lumières, Paris, Desjonquères, coll. "L'esprit des lettres", 2007. - Drory, Rina: "Three Attempts to Legitimize Fiction in Classical Arabic Literature", Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam, 18, 1994, p. 146-164. - Dufrenoy, Marie-Louise: L'Orient romanesque en France, 1704-1789, Étude d'histoire et de critique littéraire, t. 1, Montréal, Beauchemin, 1946. - Duprat, Anne et Émilie Picherot (dir.): Récits d'Orient dans les littératures d'Europe, contient la plupart des communications présentées lors du colloque "Récits d'Orient en Occident" tenu à l'Université Paris 4-Sorbonne, 16-18 mars 2006, Paris, Presses de l'Université Paris-Sorbonne, coll. "Recherches actuelles en littérature comparée", 2008. - Ghazoul, Ferial: Nocturnal Poetics, The Arabian Nights in Comparative Context, Le Caire, The American University in Cairo Press, 1996 - Hämeen-Anttila, Jaakko: Maqama, a history of a genre, Wiesbaden, Harrassowitz Verlag, coll. "Diskurse der Arabistik", Band 5, 2002. - Jomand-Baudry, Régine et Perrin, Jean-François (dir.): Le Conte merveilleux au XVIIIe siècle, une poétique expérimentale, Paris, Kimé, 2002. - Larzul, Sylvette: Les Traductions françaises des Mille et une nuits. Étude des versions Galland, Trébutien et Mardrus, Paris, L'Harmattan, 1996. - Marzolph, Ulrich et Van Leeuwen, Richard (dir.): The Arabian Nights Encyclopedia, with the collaboration of Hassan Wassouf ; with fourteen introductory essays by internationally renowned specialists. 2 vol. Santa Barbara, ABC-CLIO, 2004. - Perrin, Jean-François: "L'invention d'un genre littéraire au XVIIIe siècle : le conte oriental", Féeries, 2, p. 9-27, 2005. - Schoeler, Gregor: The Oral and the written in Early Islam, translated by Uwe Vagelopohl, edited by James E. Montgomery. London, Routledge, coll. "Routledge studies in Middle-Eastern literatures", 2006. - Sermain, Jean-Paul: Les Mille et une nuits entre Orient et Occident, Paris, Desjonquères, coll. "L'Esprit des lettres", 2009.

LA FIGURE DU POÈTE ARABE : FANTASME LITTÉRAIRE EUROPÉEN (XVIIe -XVIIIe SIÈCLES)

E. Picherot

Lille 3

Abstract: Depuis le roman de Pérez de Hita, Guerras civiles de Granada, le romancero fronterizo est associé au corpus arabo-musulman. Ce fantasme, largement repris par la suite, s'appuie sur une représentation littéraire du poète arabo-musulman à l'origine d'un personnage récurrent dans les corpus européens. Le personnage arabe, et, plus particulièrement encore, arabo-andalou, est toujours poète. Cette représentation reprend un élément théorique fondamental pour le comparatisme contemporain, le terme "poésie" ne recoupe pas exactement le même domaine dans la littérature arabo-musulmane d'Al-Andalus et dans les littératures européennes des 16ème et 17ème siècles ; si la caricature du personnage arabo-musulman d'Espagne en poète amoureux repose d'abord sur un fantasme collectif recoupant d'autres caractéristiques dépréciatives (comme, par exemple, la féminisation ou la sensibilité exacerbée), elle met aussi en évidence la différence de statut du corpus poétique dans les deux univers littéraires.

Biography: Pérez de Hita, Ginez, Historia de los Vandos de los Zegries y Abencerrages Cavalleros Moros de Granada, de las civiles guerras que hemo en ella y batallas particulares que huvo en la Vega entre Moros y Cristianos, hasta que el Rey don Fernando Quinto la gaño, Zaragoza, 1595 al-Qaysî, 'Abd al-Karîm, Diwân, étude et édition par Djum'at Shayat et Muhammad al-Hâdî al-Tarâbulusî, Carthage, Beyt al-Hikma, 1988. Abû'-l-'Abbas A. al-Makkarî, Nafh at-tib, III, éd. et notes Ihsân 'Abbâs, Beirut, Dar Sader, 1988. García Gómez, Emilio, Poemas árabes en los muros y fuentes de la Alhambra, Madrid, Publicaciones del instituto egipcio de estudios islámicos en Madrid, 1985.

Hadjadji, Hamdane, Le poète vizir Ibn Zamrak, du faubourg d'al-baycine au palais de l'alhambra, Beyrouth, Albouraq, 2005 [anthologie].

Soualah, Mohammed, Une élégie andalouse sur la guerre de Grenade (texte arabe publié, traduit, annoté et commenté), Alger, Adolphe Jourdan, 1914. Cancionero de Romances que estan recopilados la mayor parte de los Romances Castellanos que fasta agora son compuesto. Nuevamente corregido emendado y añadido en muchas partes, Envers, En casa de Martin Nucio, 1550. Cancionero general de Hernando del Castillo, Valencia, Cristóbal Cofman, 1511 Cancionero sin año, publié à Anvers sans date. Il est vraisemblablement imprimé dans les années 1547 – 1548 [voir Antonio Rodríguez-Moñino]. Correa, Pedro, Los romances fronterizos, Granada, Universidad, 1999 [étude et anthologie]. Durán, Agustín (éd.), Romancero de romances moriscos, compuesto de todos los de esta clase que contiene le Romancero General impreso en 1614, Madrid, 1828

Baudot de Juilly, Nicolas, Relation historique et galante de l'invasion de l'Espagne par les Maures, tirée des plus célèbres auteurs de l'histoire d'Espagne, comme de Don Rodrigue Ximenez Archevêque de Tolède, des Mémoires de Jean Baptiste Pérez, de ceux de Garcia, de Louïsa, de Rasis, Auteur Maure, & de Don Diego de Castilla, tome premier, Chez Adrian Moetjens, La Haye, 1699. Bernard, Catherine, Histoire de la rupture d'Abenamar et de Fatime, in Œuvres, tome I, Romans et Nouvelles, textes établis, présentés et annotés par Franco Piva, Paris, Nizet, 1993 [1696]. Hita, Pérez de Hita, Guerras civiles éditions françaises : 1606, 1660, Paris, chez Pedro Lamy, Iago Cotinet et Guillaume de Luyne. La Roche-Guilhen, Anne de, L'innocente justifiée, histoire de Grenade par Mlle., divisée en trois parties, La Haye, Chez Abraham Troyel, 1694. La Roche-Guilhen, Mlle de, Histoire des Guerres Civiles de Grenade, traduite de l'Espagnol en français par Mlle de la Roche-Guilhen, Paris, chez Claude Barbin, 1682, puis en 1683 chez Luis Billaine. Lafayette, Mme de, Zaïde. Histoire espagnole, par Monsieur de Segrais. Avec un traité de l'origine des romans par Monsieur de Huet, Paris, Cl. Barbin, 1670 – 1671. Préchac, L'ambitieuse grenadine, histoire galante, Paris, Par la Compagnie des libraires associés au Palais, 1678. Villedieu, Madame de, Les Galanteries grenadines, éd., notes et introduction par Edwige Keller-Rahbé, Saint-Etienne, publications de l'Université de Saint-Etienne, 2006 [1673].

S4: ETHNOLITERATURE AND ETHNOPOETICS

RECASTING U.S. CULTURE FROM ITS MARGINS: GUILLERMO GÓMEZ-PEÑA'S QUEER ETHNOPOETICS

M. Boletsi

University of Leiden

Abstract: Both in his artistic projects and in his writings, Mexican-born performance artist and writer Guillermo Gomez-Pena, based in San Francisco, draws from Chicano poetics, border cultures, anthropology, the Western media, U.S. pop culture, Western high art, religious imagery, and pornography, in order to challenge mainstream U.S. culture by offering queer, semantically overloaded, and provocative ethnographic portraits of its others. This paper will read a selection of his poetic performance texts in combination with selected photo-performances from the project The New Barbarians as an idiosyncratic case of ethnopoetics. This ethnopoetics seems to foreground cultures and ethnic groups at the borders or in the margins of the U.S. mainstream. In fact, however, it offers a reflection of/on U.S. culture, and especially its obscene underside after September 11, 2001, inflected through distorted images of its constructed evil others. This paper will show how Gomez-Pena's queer ethnographic portraits, which iterate stereotypical representations while they simultaneously confuse and recast them, weave an ethnographic portrait of the United States rather than of its others. To that end, I will probe the aesthetic and rhetorical strategies that run through this alternative ethnographic narrative of the United States, as it emerges by and through its periphery.

Biography: Maria Boletsi is Assistant Professor in the Film and Comparative Literature Department of Leiden University. In her Ph.D. dissertation (Leiden University, 2010), she explored the critical operations of the concept of barbarism in modern and contemporary works of literature, art, and theory. Her publications include articles on Jamaica Kincaid, C.P. Cavafy and J.M. Coetzee, literary speech acts, migration, cultural identity in the Balkans, and barbarism, in several edited volumes and in journals such as Comparative Literature Studies, Arcadia and Thamyris/Intersecting. She is also co-editor of the volume Inside Knowledge: (Un)doing Ways of Knowing in the Humanities (Cambridge Scholars Press, 2009). Her book, Barbarism and Its Discontents, is forthcoming in 2012 by Stanford University Press.

WRITTEN AND ORAL NARRATIVES IN CONTEMPORARY GUATEMALAN MAYAN LANGUAGES AND SPANISH REDEFINING THE LINGUISTIC AND CULTURAL IDENTITY OF "LATIN-AMERICAN" LITERATURE

H.M. Kahn

Temple University

Abstract: The Guatemalan Peace Accords of 1996 following the 36-year civil war were accompanied by increasing demands for Mayan language revitalization and revalidation. While maintaining Spanish as the only official language, new standards were established for the use and recognition of 22 Mayan languages, Garifuna and Xinka, and Mayan language instruction is now included in the school curriculum. Although Mayan language literacy is still uncommon, written Mayan literature is growing, and oral tradition persists. How does this re-emerging literature define itself in the field of what we have named "Latin American" literature? Contemporary written Mayan literature presents fundamental differences in form and content from the written Spanish-language literature of authors following the Western literary canon, and it is clear that it is influenced by the generic characteristics of oral tradition. In order to demonstrate these characteristics I will present some contemporary oral narratives from an area of Guatemala where both K'iche' Maya and Spanish are spoken. I will discuss the maintenance and shifts in linguistic and cultural identity which they represent, and the factors which influence them in the current socio-political and economic situation in Guatemala. As the multicultural and multilingual identities of Guatemala reassert themselves in the 21st century, the question remains whether Mayan literature, like other indigenous literatures of the continent, will define itself according to national or ethnic criteria; as part of a national literature, and/or aligned with other indigenous literatures of the continent.

Biography: Research interests: Literature by authors who write in two languages. Current research: Guatemalan Maya literature with an emphasis on (self) translation and re-writing in the sociolinguistic context of indigenous language revitalization. I use a comparative approach in analyzing the cultural content, literary style, and linguistic characteristics of oral and written literature in Spanish and Mayan languages.

THE "NARRATOR IN TRANSIT" BY RUY DUARTE DE CARVALHO

A.M.R.D. Moraes

Universidade Federal Fluminense

Abstract: Ruy Duarte de Carvalho (1941-2010), Angolan writer and anthropologist, publishes Vou lá visitar pastores in 1999, a kind of ethnographic essay on the Kuvaes (a people that inhabit the southern region of Angola and northern Namibia). From 2000 to 2009, he publishes his trilogy Os filhos de Próspero, comprising the novels Os papéis do inglês (2000), As paisagens propícias (2005), and A terceira metade (2009). In 2006, he also publishes Desmedida, an account of a trip along the São Francisco River (Brazil). Interestingly, the same narrator character, referring to the writer himself, emerges in the five cited works, combining an ethnographic discourse, novel and travel account. In the trilogy Os filhos de Próspero, this narrator lives with doubles – characters that have his own traits – such as Archibald Perkins, Severo and Trindade. In this paper, I intend to investigate the constitution of this same narrator, who is responsible for blurring the boundaries between the domains of the fictional and nonfictional in the writings of the Angolan author. I will highlight the novel A terceira metade, discussing aspects of the narrator's duplication in the characters Severo and Trindade.

Biography: Anita Moraes holds a bachelor's degree in Letters from UNICAMP – State University of Campinas (1999), as well as a masters (Brazilian Literature; 2002) and a doctorate degree (Literary Theory; 2007) awarded by the postgraduate program in Literary Theory and History of the same university. She then pursued postdoctoral studies at the University of São Paulo (USP). Her experience is in the area of Letters, with emphasis on Theory of Literature, Brazilian Literature, and African Literature in the Portuguese Language. Dr. Moraes is currently a professor of Theory of Literature in the Department of Language Sciences at UFF – Fluminense Federal University. Her publications include the book O inconsciente teórico [transl. The theoretical unconscious], coedited by Annablume-FAPESP.

SOI-MÊME DANS L'OEIL DE L'AUTRE. RECEPTION ET ETHNOLITTERATURE

F. Pillet

Université de Genève

Abstract: Les œuvres littéraires parlent depuis longtemps – sans doute depuis toujours – de l'autre, de celui qui appartient à une autre culture, à une autre « ethnie ». Les lettres persanes, dans lesquelles Montesquieu décrit la société française à travers des yeux prétendument orientaux, en constituent à l'époque moderne l'exemple le plus célèbre et le plus éloquent. La colonisation et le développement du voyage entraînent à partir du dix-neuvième siècle une multiplication d'ouvrages en Europe faisant référence à des ethnies et des pays éloignés.

Ces textes s'adressent principalement à un public culturellement et socialement proche de leurs auteurs. Cependant, la mondialisation a changé la donne. Les lecteurs ne sont plus aujourd'hui exclusivement occidentaux, mais sont parfois issus des ethnies et peuples évoqués dans nombre de ces œuvres. Et leur réception de celles-ci diffère fortement de la réception européenne et nous oblige à modifier, que cela nous plaise ou non, notre regard sur elles. Se voir soi-même dans l'œil de l'autre implique en effet tout autre chose que de voir la culture de l'autre avec le regard d'un auteur de sa propre culture.

Ma communication se propose donc d'interroger ce type singulier de réception, de le contraster avec la réception européenne « traditionnelle » et de souligner son apport pour notre connaissance non seulement des œuvres, mais du phénomène de réception littéraire dans son ensemble.

Biography: Fabien Pillet est assistant au Programme de littérature comparée de l'Université de Genève. Il travaille actuellement sur une thèse qui porte précisément sur la question de la réception dans une perspective spatiale et interculturelle.

S3: TRANSLATION AT THE BORDERS

ADAPTATION: THE TASK OF THE TRANSLATOR?

P. Burian
Duke University

Abstract: A work as distant historically, linguistically, and culturally as Homer's Iliad can hardly be translated as a work of literature without some degree of adaptation. Adaptation can be at the level of language (register, compression or expansion for comprehensibility, etc.), formal structure (verse or prose, verse form, completeness, etc.), cultural (Realien, features of setting, reference to specific cultural goods or values), generic (treatment of generic conventions of the original text, conformity or not to generic conventions of the target culture, etc.). In all likelihood, translations of such works will, to one extent or another involve all of the above. Literary translators of such works are thus inevitably adapters, and the boundaries within their work between translation and adaptation will be porous, to say the least.

I want to examine ways in which some interesting (and also debated and debatable) versions of Homer's Iliad raise questions about the boundaries between translation and adaptation: Pope's translation into English Augustan couplets; Leaf, Lang and Meyers's version in "King James" prose, W.H.D. Rouse's "novelized" translation; Christopher Logue's translation into modernist fragmentary epos; and the movie Troy, arguably a translation into "B-movie" conventions.

Biography: Peter Burian, Professor of Classics, Duke University

TRANSLATIO AND ITS POROSITIES

D.U.B. Liu
Duke University

Abstract: For all the canonical weight of Roman Jakobson's tripartition of literary translation into the intralingual, interlingual and intersemiotic, it is puzzling how many scholars of literature still reject adaptation as a form of literary translation. Taking as point of departure Lawrence Venuti's Benjaminian insistence on difference as that which is (to be) translated, this paper will explore various sorts of difference (as negotiation and play) that must be translated, particularly those occasioned by adaptation and exile. First, I appeal to a concept of impure art (cf. Adorno) in which works and expressive genres and modes always and already partake in a regime of MISCELLATION (commixing across domains) and INTERAFFECTIVITY (mutual affecting) beyond the putative self-containment of any work. I will argue that transmediation and other adaptive procedures are simply extensive modes of such impure art. This understanding opens up a creative (and necessarily porous) common between stricter modes of literary translation and other refunctionalizations of (literary) works across different contexts, media and zones. Second, the analogy of exile and interlingual translation raised by Paolo Bartolini further illustrates the protean nature of translation - a term whose Latin ancestor always had several meanings, though importantly never literary or linguistic translation. The coincidence of the two analoga (exile and interlingual translation) in Nabokov and Ariel Dorfman offers rich examples of fruitful miscellation between biographic life and art. This commixture of vital transfers points in turn to a "metatheater" of translation whose scope far exceeds mere processes of textual (re)production: an ecology of shifting cultural scenes in which (cognate) works of art and their constituent cultures and lives engender and shape each other. Finally, I return to a general reflection on TRANSLATIO (and TRANSDUCTIO) as a(n) af)ording or crossing over, a meta-phoric porosity not so much of an object into a new domain across gaps or membranes but as its transformation and differentiation, and the porosity itself of AFFECT(US, affecting) as the perennial mode of emergence, happening and change.

Biography: David U. B. Liu is Visiting Assistant Professor of Religion and Literature at Duke University in Durham, North Carolina, U.S.A. His teaching and research have ranged from various religious traditions to literature to Continental Philosophy and critical theory. In addition to degrees earned from Stanford, Yale and Duke, Prof. Liu has studied in Japan, Israel, France, Germany and Italy, and maintains an active interest in translation theory and practice.

INSISTENCE ON BACK-TRANSLATION: RECAPTURING THE SUBTRACTED DIMENSIONS IN HONG KONG AND ISTANBUL

Y. Ng
Université de Montréal

Abstract: The word “translation” shares the same root with “transaction” in its prefix “trans,” which connotes both “going beyond” and “traveling across” a border. Yet however implicitly, a border is always present. It is at this border, where exclusion could take place and communications might meet an impasse. Inescapably, translation becomes more often than not a source of disappointment to the original. In this paper, I want to explore how the strategy of back-translation occurs in the literary contexts of writing the city. By back-translation, I mean critical response to the unsolvable paradoxes emerged in the distance between the translated text and its original. Insistence on back-translation, then, is concerned with what is subtracted, what has not been captured, what could have been recovered, or what is considered untranslatable or almost inexpressible, during processes of translation or border crossing.

One striking example is Orhan Pamuk’s Istanbul: Memories and the City, in which he translates the term “melancholy,” used in Théophile Gautier’s writings on Istanbul, back into the Turkish word “hüzün.” As “a feeling [not] belong[ing] to the outsider observer,” the word “hüzün” suggests “an erosion of the will to stand against the values and mores of the community and encourages us to be content with little, honoring the virtues of harmony, uniformity, humility.” While “hüzün” “allows the people of Istanbul to think of defeat and poverty not as a historical end point but as an honorable beginning, fixed long before they were born,” Pamuk makes it explicit that a flâneur from the French literary tradition, like Balzac’s hero Rastignac, would not be capable of grasping the essence of “hüzün” in Istanbul.

Another instance of back-translation is studied with reference to Xi Xi’s Chinese novel A Fly Carpet, which tells the tales of an imaginative city Fertilia as an allegory of Hong Kong. The narrative frame intentionally imitates the latitudinal and longitudinal intersections in the “fabrics woven with warp and weft threads,” as the word “carpet” suggests—i.e. the flying carpet is a metaphorical representation of the city itself, with its patches of small narratives of the city woven together into a thick pattern of fabrics. While the Chinese word connoting the noun “carpet” is “tan,” Xi Xi notes that local Hong Kong people usually mix it with the other term “zhan” [“zin” in Cantonese], whose actual connotation is “blanket”—a very similar term compared to “tan” (“carpet”) but is essentially different. “Zhan” as a “blanket” should be elaborated as “fabrics that are made by rolling and pressing the mixture of feathers and fur into a flat shape.” In other words, “zhan” have no warp and weft threads. Mistaking “tan” as “zhan” is analogous to the misrecognition of Hong Kong by failing to read the warps and wefts that are interwoven in the fabrics of livings in the city. Naming her book as “Fei Zhan” (“A Flying Blanket”) instead of “Fei Tan” (“A Flying Carpet”), Xi Xi calls attention to the misgivings of the local Fertilians who see themselves in a frictionless Deleuzian “smooth space.” This novel, I propose, strategically resituates the reading of Hong Kong, by translating the mistaken metaphor of a “blanket” (in the misuse of colloquial language) back in its original sense as a “carpet”.

While my reading of the above examples is based on their English translated versions (from Turkish by Maureen Freely and from Chinese by Diana Yue respectively), I will discuss as well the inevitably lost dimensions in the process of translation and hopefully address Benjamin’s question: “Is a translation meant for readers who do not understand the original?” For instance, how could Xi Xi’s readers in the English language perceive the contradiction between “tan” (the actual and forgotten word in the written language) and “zhan” (the commonly mistaken word in the colloquial language), whose friction is so vividly implied in the Chinese title, but becomes completely erased in the English one?

Biography: Originally from Hong Kong, Yiu-Tsan Ng obtained his BA and MPhil degrees in English Studies and Comparative Literature at the University of Hong Kong. He is now a PhD candidate at the Université de Montréal. His current project examines the transaction between literature and the city with respect to the rhetoric of anticipation and disappointment. His article on Hong Kong cinema has been published and translated into Danish in the Copenhagen-based journal of film studies, Kosmorama. In Montreal, he also serves as a radio program host of a Cantonese-/Mandarin- bilingual program (“Voyages musicaux”) on local events and indie music in the multilingual Radio Centre-ville (CINQ-FM).

S4: ARAB SPRING AND THE PERSPECTIVES OF ARAB COMPARATIVE SCHOLARSHIP

LE COMPARATISME ET LE DIALOGUE MÉDITERRANÉEN (LE CLÉZIO/AL-KONI)

F. Taib

Université Mohammed V Rabat/ Agdal

Abstract: La diversité et la richesse de la création littéraire méditerranéenne qui est un trésor culturel , portent implicitement l'espérance d'une littérature générale riche et variée capable de surmonter les mésententes , les chocs et les blessures, qui sont parfois plus profondes que ce que l'on pense, en se basant sur le patrimoine méditerranéen caractérisé depuis toujours par les échanges et les interférences entre différentes cultures.

Si l'égalité et le droit à la différence sont les piliers essentiels de cette espérance (projet d'avenir) , la comparaison est son outil efficace .

La littérature comparée, discipline au croisement des savoirs et des pratiques qui encourage les échanges entre les cultures et les littératures , nous semble être une solution contre les stéréotypes, le rejet de l'autre et le repli sur soi . sa nature pluraliste , ambitieuse et dialogique ,porte les comparatistes vers leur destin collectif pour bâtir une humanité plus éclairée .

à fin d'illustrer le rôle primordial de la littérature comparée , dans l'amélioration des futures relations entre les deux rives de la méditerranée , on va étudier un type spécifique de dialogue interculturel nord /sud , à partir de deux romans centrés essentiellement sur la thématique du désert : » Poussière d'or » d'Ibrahim Al- koni , et « Désert » de Jean-Marie Gustave Le Clézio .

L'étude thématique comparative de ses deux romans , qui dénoncent chacun à sa manière l'exploitation et la marginalisation , promet de nous conduire - au delà des réalités politiques et culturelles dominantes qui façonnent l'identité méditerranéennes - vers un modèle absolu d'identité et de liberté humaine aussi vaste que le désert.

Biography: TAIB, Fatiha (Université Mohammed V Rabat/ Agdal/ Maroc)

ARAB SPRING AND TRANSCULTURAL THEATRE

E. Tunsi

College of Education, Saudi Arabia

Abstract: Q. What is the aim of the transcultural theatre in the time of Arab Spring?

This paper is an attempt to investigate the reason why Arab theatre groups in Tunisia and Iraq choose the World Shakespeare Festival 2012 to communicate with the world. In the time of Arab Spring, Arab theatre practitioners tends to the Shakespearean idiom to project social-political conflicts. They incline to use theatre not as a powerful changing factor in the life of society but rather as a medium for cultural dialogue. Their use of Shakespearean themes along with European theatrical techniques are means to introduce the diversity in the Arabic culture. The selection of Macbeth and Romeo and Juliet may be justified by the belief that Shakespeare is " the sort of great idol of the humanist West" and " the idea of him being for all ages."(29:60)

The Tunisian French theatre production Macbeth: Leila & Ben – A Bloody History presents a theatrical viewpoint of the social revolt which launched the Arab Spring in the Middle East. The use of multi-media techniques in addition to TV reportage bring to stage those tools suggested by Antonin Artaud (1896- 1948). The French director notes that we need to "discover the notion of a kind of unique language half way between gesture and thought." It is a language which "can only be defined in terms of the possibilities of dynamic expression in space as opposed to the expressive possibilities of dialogue." The dynamic expression may involve the possibility in speech for "expansion beyond words, for development in space, for a dissociative and vibratory effect on our sensibility." Apart from the "auditory language of sounds," Artaud sees in theatre "the visual language of objects, movements, attitudes, gestures," as well as " their meaning, their physiognomy, their combinations."

This paper discusses the role of Artaud's "dynamic expression" in the process of cultural transference of Macbeth: Leila & Ben – A Bloody History to audiences in the West. While the techniques belong to the exponent of "theatre of cruelty", the Shakespearean theme is developed within Arabic perspective by the Tunisian French theatre company. Urged by his wife to inflict incessant injustices on his society, Zine El Abdine Ben Ali follows the footsteps of Shakespeare's Macbeth. Like his predecessor, the Tunisian president would never hesitate to plot, murder, break vows in order to proceed in an unending ambition. Yet, he may use Islamic law and Arabic heritage to legitimize his actions. Arab versions of Shakespeare's plays contend to show that not only the political but the social forces as well are bound to inhibit the welfare of individuals. If sectionalized society condemns the working class, the sectarian society would engender no less ailment in the life of the young. Romeo and Juliet in Baghdad may be observed through Edward Bond's (b 1934) aggro-effect technique. Such an effect means the new "ways of making people notice, of making those things effective." It is a technique which aims to "disturb an audience emotionally, to involve them emotionally" (5:199) Iraqi Theatre Company uses folk music and rituals to highlight the cultural opulence of a land 'longing for love and beauty'. Whatever the social reality may be in Tunisia and Baghdad, theatre is the art to provide an adequate medium for cultural dialogue and communication.

Notes:

- Edward Bond, in conversation with Howard Davis, Quoted in James C. Bulman, "Bond, Shakespeare and the Absurd." Modern Drama, 29. 60.
- Antonin Artaud, 1896-1948: Selected Writings. Trans. Farr, Straus and Giroux, Inc. (United States of America: Grove Press, Inc. 1976) 242-3)
- Edward Bond and Christopher Innes, "Edward Bond: from Rationalism to Rhapsody." Canadian Theatre Reviews, 23 (Summer, 1979) p. 112-113. Quoted in Christopher Innes, "The Political Spectrum of Edward Bond: from Rationalism to Rhapsody," Modern Drama, 25. 199

Biography: TUNSI, Eiman (College of Education, Saudi Arabia)

LA RÉVOLTE DANS INCH' ALLAH DE GILBERT SINOÛÉ

F. Al-Fararguy
Université de Tanta

Abstract: Créateur de romans, Gilbert Sinoué dévoile le procès. Un profond fossé se creuse entre l'Orient et l'Occident. Il dénonce les radicalisations, les violences perpétrées et le malentendu installé. Après les attentats du 11 septembre 2001, il s'est posé la question sur la situation des arabes. Il a amassé énormément de documentation pour créer un roman et il ajoute une page de bibliographie à la fin de son roman. Sa réflexion sur le moi attaqué qui donne naissance à un moi révolté après dix ans de ces attentats et juste avant la naissance du printemps arabe, nous montre l'état de bouillement de ce monde souffrance de l'injustice pendant plusieurs années. La peur du monde arabe et la peur des arabes du regard des autres à cause de la phobie de l'islam rend le défi et le conflit plus compliqué.

Dans son roman Inch' Allah publié en 2010 et déployée en deux volumes : Le Souffle du jasmin et Le Cri des pierres. Le romancier démontre les événements qui ont préparé le chemin à la chute du mur de la peur. Entre l'imaginaire et la réalité, les actions se nouent autour cinq familles : deux familles palestiniennes Shahid et Tabroush, la famille égyptienne Loutfi, la famille irakienne El-Safi et la famille juive Marcus. Un observateur français contemple ce monde et résonne dans son esprit, cette question : le bruit de bombes recouvrira-t-il à jamais le souffle du jasmin ? Dans le deuxième volume, on trouve une autre famille juive ; les Bonstein. G. Sinoué indique, lui-même, au début du roman les familles qu'il a imaginé. Vivant une enfance entre les musulmans, les chrétiens et les juifs, il réussit à montrer l'interaction, l'exode, le dispute entre les communautés et les maux explosés par les extrémistes

Le Moyen-orient vécu sous l'oppression, la souffrance, la fragilité, la misère, la déchéance intérieure a choisi enfin sa voix. La problématique de la présente étude est basée sur plusieurs questions : L'égo, comment est-il dessiné ? Comment l'autre l'a-t-il estimé ? Pourquoi l'autre l'a-t-il condamné ? Comment atteindre le rêve de la liberté ? Comment le printemps arabe est-il né ?

Biography: AL-FARARGUY, Fathéya (Université de Tanta, Egypte)

DISCUSSION

S5 COMICS AND ADAPTATION

FROM EPIC TO ERRATIC: A COMPARATIVE ESSAY ON FRANK MILLER'S SIN CITY AND 300

G. Perreira

Universidade de São Paulo

Abstract: Frank Miller is a comic book writer and artist who dialogues with cinema since the very beginning of his career. Not only he wrote some movie scripts during his first years (and broke up with Hollywood later on, due to the unwanted interference on his work) but his early comic book production "The Dark Knight", "Daredevil" were also constantly compared with noir movies.

In his more recent works, two of his graphic novels were deeply inspired by literature and later received movie adaptations. "Sin City" and "300". In both cases he was involved with the adaptation itself (co-directed "Sin City" with Robert Rodriguez and worked as executive producer and consultant in "300"). Although both of them have some significant marks of Miller's work and refer to a specific genre of cinema, they go through very different ways. "Sin City" establishes a dialogue with noir movies and crime novels. Men are all erratic and weak, always getting in trouble due to their women. Their objectives are egoistic and questionable, and their feats are amoral at least. The film adaptation was released in 2005, and its success brought some renewed attention to Miller's Sin City projects. The fidelity of the adaptation was the most impressive, with full dialogues and scenes transcribed from graphic narrative to live action. "300" retells the Battle of Thermopylae and the events leading up to it from the perspective of Leonidas of Sparta as described by Herodotus in his "Histories". Men are portrayed as truly brave heroes and women as virtuous queens. They are all fighting and dying for their nation. Honor and virtue are the main qualities, and even give name to the chapters of the graphic novel. The graphic novel was particularly inspired by the 1962 film "The 300 Spartans" and dialogues with the epic genre.

This paper aims to compare these two processes of adaptation – from literature to graphic narrative to cinema - and to show how the two of them, even being so opposite to each other, relate to Frank Miller's previous works and bring the very same characteristics that are emblematic in his production.

Biography: Luiz Guilherme Couto Pereira

Short Biography:

Graduated at Universidade de São Paulo, in Literature (Portuguese and Classic Greek)

Concluding master degree in Classic Greek and reception of classics.

Participated on ICLA 2007 (Rio de Janeiro) and 2010 (Seoul) Conferences.

Participated on NeMLA 2010, 2011 and 2012 Conferences.

Main interests: Classics, Reception, Comparative Literature, Graphic Narratives.

ADAPTING THOMAS BERNHARD: NICOLAS MAHLER'S ALTE MEISTER

L. Pao

University of Vienna

Abstract: Adapting Thomas Bernhard: Nicolas Mahler's Alte Meister

Adapting classical novels and stories into a graphic narrative format is not a new practice, but only in recent years has it experienced a significant increase in popularity. As a result, publishing graphic narratives have ceased to be exclusive to niche and children's books publishers, and big trade publishing houses have started to accommodate the growing interest in Comics and Graphic Novels by expanding their program. Last year, renowned German publishing house Suhrkamp Verlag launched a Comic/Graphic Novel series that aims to publish literary comics. Nicolas Mahler's Alte Meister is the inaugural volume of the new Suhrkamp series and, for the first time, the work of a Comic artist was included in their publishing program. With the escalating number of publications, various terms are frequently employed to describe graphic narrative adaptations of prose (and to a smaller extent poetry and plays), such as drawn/illustrated/simplified by..., Graphic Novel, Graphic Version, Comic, Literary Comic and Illustration. This exemplifies the divergence and tentativeness over the question of defining graphic narrative adaptation and likewise of analyzing the process of adaptation.

In search of a theory of graphic narrative adaptation, multiple works have emerged that extend existing concepts of adaptation and contribute to the development of a theory specific to the medium. Linda Hutcheon's theory of adaptation serves as a prolific starting point, in that it understands adaptation as both an act and a product, and moreover questions the motive of fidelity of an adaptation to its source or original. These aspects are crucial in the analysis of Nicolas Mahler's adaptation of Austrian Writer Thomas Bernhard's Alte Meister (Old Masters).

This paper examines Mahler's Alte Meister as an adaptation of Thomas Bernhard's text, in terms of being both an act and a product. By analyzing Mahler's adaptation of Bernhard's idiosyncratic narrative style in Alte Meister and the possibility of visualizing the verbal that is inherent to the graphic narrative form, I intend to demonstrate various methods and modes of adaptation from prose to graphic narrative. Temporality, characterization, narrative point of view, ekphrastic elements, fragmented as opposed to coherent text in Bernhard's Alte Meister and its transformation to a graphic narrative form offer a comprehensive exploration of not only adaptation but the language of graphic narrative itself. Moreover, rather than simplifying and illustrating the topic of art and life in Bernhard's Alte Meister, Mahler's adaptation directly engages in the debate and provides its own perspective. The potential of graphic narrative adaptation as demonstrated in Mahler's adaptation of Bernhard, therefore, transcends fidelity, illustration and simplification and holds a profound manner of adaptation as process and product.

Biography: Lea Pao

MA Candidate, University of Vienna, Austria, Department of Comparative Literature/Department of Chinese Studies

Accepted to the PhD program in Asian Studies and Comparative Literature at Penn State University in Fall 2012

Research interests: Graphic Narrative, Modern and Contemporary Chinese Poetry, Avant-Garde, Comparative Poetics, Poetry Translations

Activities: Extended travels to China, India and Russia, Founder of a student newspaper "Das Reispapier", Translator of Chinese poetry (Translation of a Poetry Collection in Chinese/German published in April 2012), Currently living in San Francisco, CA and Vienna

MOTIFS AND MOTIVES IN MUTATION: IMPLICATIONS OF THE HUMAN-MUTANT FROM COMICS TO THE SCREEN

M. Ahmed

Jacobs University Bremen

Abstract: Comics and graphic novels and their subsequent feature films know a variety of protagonists graced with extraordinary powers but also doomed to an outsider status due to their abnormality. Precisely this characteristic of aberration, of not conforming to the norm, renders such protagonists – in spite of their extraordinariness - not only easy to relate to but also a source of inspiration; the unusualness singled out by society as abnormal can be transformed into a gift for the good of all. Moreover, regardless of physical or psychic divergence, such protagonists are often the most human characters in the story (e.g. Superman). This is due to the very thematization of difference. Otherness or alienation experienced in the real world is therefore transposed to unusual qualities in the diegetic world and consequently rendered acceptable. My paper will explore the nature and implications of human mutations by concentrating on Enki Bilal's Immortel (ad vitam) (2004), the roughly contemporaneous X-Men and Hell Boy movies (since 2000) along with their corresponding comics. In doing so, the ways in which the leading characters from these films contend with the paradigm of the typical (super)hero will also be dealt with. In addition the implications of media on print and moving image motifs will be brought out. The paper will try to illustrate uses for inventoring and analyzing motifs recurrent across media and genres, namely that regarding motifs as constituents of particular imaginaries can aid in: (a) deducing the broad anthropological significance of certain images and concepts, and (b) working out the transformative and narratological effects of media on similar content.

FOR: COMPARATIVE AND NARRATIVE APPROACHES IN COMICS STUDIES

Biography: My doctoral thesis analyzed a variety of iconotextual works in order to deduce possible characteristics of the graphic novel on a transcultural level. For this a hybrid methodology combining semiotics, particularly Umberto Eco's notion of the open work of art, with the traditional art historical tools of visual analysis was applied. My latest project aims at exploring the intermedial mediation of specific motifs (focusing once again on graphic narratives). Additional research interests include surrealism and subjectivities. Publications include articles in the International Journal of Comic Art as well as several chapters in edited volumes on a variety of topics from the visual arts and literature.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

S5 MIGRATION AND LITERATURE IN CONTEMPORARY EUROPE

HEART OF DARKNESS: NEW APPROACHES TO JOSEPH'S CONRAD NOVEL

D.S. Garrosa
Madrid

Abstract: ETHNIC AND POST-COLONIAL STUDIES HAVE BEEN FORGOTTEN IN SOME AREAS OF LITERARY CRITIC. IN THIS ARTICLE I WOULD LIKE TO APPROACH TO CONRAD'S NOVEL FROM THESE PERSPECTIVES AND ADDING NEW IDEAS TO UNDERSTAND THE TEXT. I WILL DEVELOPE THE AREAS OF SPACE, RACE, GENDER AND NARRATIVE SKILLS BUT WITH ANOTHER VIEW; AS IF IT WAS READ BY A NATIVE AFRICAN. REACHING THIS POINT I WILL REALIZE IT WITH ISER, JAUSS, INGARDEN AND THE SCHOOL OF CONSTANZA

Biography: D.S. GARROSA; Madrid/ES
LIC. SPANISH PHILOLOGY AND DEA IN SPANISH LITERATURE. WRITING MY DOCTORAL DISSERTATION FOR PHD. STUDYING 4th COURSE OF LITERARY THEORY AND COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND ENGLISH PHILOLOGY

CONTEMPORARY GERMAN-JEWISH LITERATURE OF RUSSIAN-BORN AUTHORS

O. Mayster
RWTH Aachen University

Abstract: Jewish migration from the former Soviet Union (1990-today) has been considerably influencing a contemporary German-Jewish literature. The most popular Russian-born authors Vladimir Kaminer and Lena Gorelik live in Germany and write in this language, they define themselves as German writers. Their novels/short stories are not restricted to the former experience in Russia but mainly analyze a new reality in Germany. The first-person narrators are Russians, Germans and Jews at the same time. The intention of this paper is to analyze at the inter/transnational aspects by Kaminer and Gorelik.

Biography: Oleksandr Mayster RWTH Aachen University Oleksandr.Mayster@rwth-aachen.de (Home) postal address: Bergdriesch 6 52062 Aachen Germany Tel(Home): 49-241-1684158 Studies 02.2011- today Doctoral Studies RWTH Aachen University, Department of European-Jewish History of Literature and Culture 10.2006-09.2009 Master of Arts, European Studies, RWTH Aachen University 09.2003-06.2004 Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1-year scholarship in Jewish education 10.1997-09.2000 Doctoral Studies in Comparative religious studies, National Institute of Philosophy, Kyiv, Ukraine (Studies had not been completed) 09.1993-06/1997 Diploma- Economist, Ukrainian state academy of water engineering, Rivne, Ukraine Participation in many scientific conferences, presentations on the topics of German Jewish literature, sociology of religion, comparative religious studies, Jewish education

CATALAN AFRO-EUROPE: CHALLENGING THE EXOSPORIC AND THE XENOSPORIC IN CHILDREN'S LITERATURE

C. Dominguez
Universidade de Santiago de Compostela

Abstract: Although the category of "Afro-European literature" is not a new one, scholars have recently added a new dimension into the discussion by taking into consideration the debates on European identity linked to the consolidation of the European Union. Afro-European literature intersects with diaspora studies, postcolonial studies and migration studies. The aim of this paper is to explore how literature written in Catalonia by second-generation, Moroccan writers challenges the category of Afro-European literature and, more specifically, the distinction proposed by Sabrina Brancato between the "exosporic" and the "xenosporic". The case of Catalonia is relevant inasmuch as migrant writers have to choose a literary language (either Spanish or Catalan) and, therefore, a literary system, for "peripheral" literary systems in Spain define themselves mainly upon the language which is used. Furthermore, my case study is constituted by children's literature, a corpus wherein key values, such as multiculturalism and tolerance, intersect with, on the one hand, "regional" and "national" politics, and, on the other hand, publishing houses which target different audiences.

Biography: César Domínguez
Universidade de Santiago de Compostela

S4: PRESIDENTIAL PANEL — COMPARATIVE LITERATURE/WORLD LITERATURE : RECONSIDERED / LITTÉRATURE COMPARÉE/LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE : NOUVEAUX EXAMENS

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE, WORLD LITERATURE: A SOUTH AFRICAN PERSPECTIVE

H. Viljoen

North-West University

Abstract: The momentous political changes in South Africa after 1994 also meant a series of big transformations of the university system in South Africa which had a profound effect on many disciplines. A national qualifications framework was set up and a number of universities were merged. Nationally there was a strong movement towards outcomes based teaching at all levels, which had a devastating effect on the knowledge, and language and writing skills of students entering university. In the 1980s South African universities already went through a series of rationalizations that included a phasing out of a number of departments that were strong in theory of literature and comparative literature, for example, at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg and at the Universities of Potchefstroom and the Free State. With much stronger emphasis on basic skills and seemingly a kind of exhaustion in the theoretical impulse after 2000, theory of literature and comparative literature seem to have lost ground while stronger national language based departments (especially English) grew. African languages suddenly became much less attractive to students and departments had had to scale down a lot. Though reconciliation between different groups might have triggered a stronger interest in comparative studies, this did not happen on a big scale. Two exceptions to this might be the growth in comparative work between Afrikaans and Dutch and the work in postcolonial studies.

Against this background I intend making a brief survey of the state of the art of comparative literature in South Africa for the period 2008-2012, focusing on curricula, institutions and issues in published and ongoing research. A survey of the research published in the Journal of Literary Studies/Tydskrif vir literatuur-wetenskap, the mouthpiece of SAVAL, the South African affiliate with the ICLA, and in Literator, the journal that carries comparative literature and linguistics in its masthead, will be two of the main strands of the presentation.

Biography: Hein Viljoen, Professor, North-West University, Potchefstroom, South Africa

CONCLUSIONS

S. Sondrup¹, G.E.P. Gillespie², J. Bessière³

¹*Brigham Young University*, ²*Stanford University*, ³*Université Sorbonne Nouvelle - Paris 3*

Abstract: Conclusions

Biography: Conclusions

S4: BOOK – MATERIAL – TEXT

BOOKS AS ART OBJECT - ART OBJECTS AS BOOKS

V. Hildebrand-Schat
Goethe-Universität

Abstract: With the upcoming E-book the pertinence and continuation of the traditional book are called into question. Anew the concern for the book is connected with new technical achievement. Already in 1926 El Lissitzky remarked that paradoxically dematerialization became an overwhelming phenomenon in a world of increasing materialization. But at the same time he could enjoy the reputation of the books he has designed. And thirty years later, when with conceptual art dematerialization took over to artwork, a new type of art became of importance - the artist's book. And this medium refers especially to the functions and specifics of the book. The artist's book connects what was separated for centuries. Visual and textual items intervene with concepts, philosophical meanings and literary contents. The sum of the elements offers points of views which the unique elements alone cannot afford. The artist's book develops a new comprehension, resulting from the typographical form, the interaction of image, text and material of the book. Also the use of the book is concerned, challenged by the specifics of the book's design and material. The artist's book, even if it lacks of text, is a book, which can be read. It can be viewed and contemplated, even if it lacks of images. This paradox becomes clear with the handling of the artist's book, since the artist's book reflects beyond others the specifics of its own medium. Within the widespread possibilities of the artist's book I would like to present different possibilities of interaction, such as is that of texts and images, printed matter and material, the inclusion and exclusion of surrounding space and how they affect the limits between conventional and new reception of the books. Sometimes the new type of bookwork, such as given with the artist's book is even compared with the e-book. The functions offered by electronic media, such as cutting, pasting and hidden text are applicable to the analog system. The codex form is but one used in the technical approach of the artists. Examples of differing contribution are "The Second Encyclopedia" by Ines Ketelhod and Peter Malutzki, book art such as Ulrich Wagner's application of ground schemes of concentrations camps, but also the destruction by burning, outlining, cutting and other handling of the book.

Biography: CV PD Dr. Viola Hildebrand-Schat Art historian and literary scholar, in 2012 Professor at the Karl-Franzens-Universität Graz/Department of art and scientific researcher in the Project "The artist's book as an aesthetic experiment. History and Poetics of a hybrid genre". The project is funded by Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (German Research Foundation) Since 2005 scientific researcher at Goethe-University, Frankfurt am Main. Lecture at Vienna University/Austria and Goethe-University/Germany 2011 Second State Doctorial (Venia legendi in history of arts)

THE STAGING OF THE TEXT IN THE FORM OF THE BOOK. A PERSPECTIVE ON CHARLES DODGSON'S ALICE-BOOKS AND SOME NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS

C.B. Schulz
Ruhr-Universität Bochum

Abstract: Charles Dodgson, the writer, set great store by the design of the text and the aesthetic appearance of his books. In the case of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" and its sequel "Through the Looking-Glass", for instance, Dodgson, as the instigator of the publication, took all decisions regarding the design and the printing, the choice of paper, the binding and the cover – whereas the publisher Alexander Macmillan was only responsible for the marketing and distribution of the books. The relevance of the artistic control over issues that, in the process of publication and book production, are often considered as rather contingent, is a specific quality of these two literary works. Here, the design of the book is based on conceptual artistic decisions, taken by Dodgson himself, and thus of a particular semantic relevance. Not only does the typographic design of the text and semantic games with different types from the typesetter's character box play an important role. Far from being merely decorative additions, the illustrations are an integral part of the work's literary form. In that sense the narrative is less a text in the narrow linguistic sense of letters and words connected to form sentences, than a complex text-image compound, in which two different levels are inextricably intertwined in an intermedial narration. This synaesthetic multi-mediality, where images interact with the text – just as the words on the page connect with the pages of the book – turns the Alice books into a Gesamtkunstwerk of a particular kind. In this connection, mention has to be made of carefully calculated optical effects that arise as the reader leafs through the books. In Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, for example, the Cheshire Cat's disappearance is demonstrated as the reader turns the page, to find now only a faint image of the cat in the same position as it had occupied in all its glory on the previous page. Much has been said and written about the difficulties arising in the process of translating the Alice-books in different languages. Neologisms, riddles and puns seem to refuse a proper translation and make it necessary to search for comparable effects in other languages. On a different level, and particularly in the context of new illustrated editions, the close coordination of the text and image with the structure of the book would have to be acknowledged and transacted. The semantic play with the design of the text and the sequential structure of the book, which Dodgson practiced not less virtuoso than the play with the meaning of language, have rarely been identified as an integral part by the numerous illustrators that followed John Tenniel. The lecture wants to give insight in how Dodgson used the structure of the book for literary purposes as it can be observed in the first editions, as well as to present a selection of new illustrated editions in which the text and the illustrations have been staged in original ways in the material structure and in the form of the book.

Biography: Christoph B. Schulz works as an internationally renowned art curator. His current project was a staging of "Alice in the arts" for the Tate Gallery of Liverpool and the Hamburger Kunsthalle. He has recently completed a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature.

WHEN GOETHE'S WORDS BETRAY THEIR SPLENDOUR IN A VISUAL WORLD

H.S. Lee-Niinioja
Independent scholar

Abstract: Material culture looks at an object within its environmental and cultural context. It examines forms, uses, and meanings of objects, images, and surroundings in everyday life, to discover untold stories and their linked expressions of creativity. Books are primary resource for this activity, due to part of the records of material culture. Particularly book illustrations can be analyzed for their imagery as they relate to the content of the book. Despite the globalization and timelessness of reading abilities, certain types of books demand their own readers. Moreover, book designs are a crucial element of object study, regarding books as (1) expression of the author (2) knowledge (3) experience for pleasure (4) recorder of time (5) decoration (6) symbol of education and civilisation and (7) consumer item.

I am pursuing this through Johan Wolfgang von Goethe (1749-1832), the greatest German poet, who has been an inspiration to my literary and visual world. Among his numerous books, "The Sorrows of Young Werther" (1774) has a greater impact than any others on my emotions. It is a story of Werther, a sensitive young hero, falls in love with Lotte at a German village. Despite Lotte's engagement to Albert, Werther is unable to subdue his passion for her, and his infatuation torments him to the peak of despair. This book was an immediate success in Europe and a cult of suicide grew up.

My paper discusses of a relationship between text and image by examining different book illustrations of "The Sorrows of Young Werther".

Biography: Hee Sook Lee-Niinioja, PhD

As one of the Asian pioneers in Scandinavia for studies in 1970s, Dr. Hee Sook Lee-Niinioja is artist/designer/journalist/scholar, specialising on 'text and image', and 'Hindu-Buddhist and Islamic architectural ornamentation', She earned her BAs (journalism, design), MAs (visual communication), and PhD (architecture), as well as studies in religion, culture, language, etc. across the globe. She volunteered much humanitarian work and teachings, hoping to enhance communications between different religions. She has been engaged with ICH-ICOMOS.

S4: TRANSLINGUAL LITERATURE

"CHANSONS DES FILLES DE MAI": ALBA DE CÉSPEDES' POETIC ACCOUNT OF MAY 1968

R. Diver

The University of Auckland

Abstract: Italian/Cuban writer Alba de Céspedes (1911-1995) started writing in French late in her career with 'Chansons des filles de mai' (Seuil, 1968), a collection of poems which inscribes a feminist and outsider's view of the events surrounding the May 1968 student protests in Paris. Céspedes is one of what Robert Jouanny has called 'Singularités francophones' in his book of the same title (PUF, 2000): writers who choose the French language without belonging to a francophone community, and who are, as such, generally ignored by literary criticism. Indeed, while Céspedes' long literary and journalistic career in Italian has come under substantial scrutiny, the 'Chansons', which were followed by a novel written in French, 'Sans autre lieu que la nuit' (Seuil, 1973), have received scant attention from her scholars, even though and she later translated these two works herself into Italian and they these were to be her last. Following the framework proposed by Anne-Rosine Delbart in 'Les exilés du langage: un siècle d'écrivains venus d'ailleurs' (Pulim, 2005), this paper will discuss the poems' account of the events, in terms of its deployment of characteristic thematic and stylistic features of translingual writing: the inscription of foreignness through outsider characters, through language as a constitutive element of the narration, and the use of fragmentary forms to convey a sense of dislocation and of incommunicability. We will see how Alba de Céspedes uses this collection of poems to offer a radical commentary on issues of gender, race, class, and power in French society.

Biography: Dr Ruth Diver is Head of the Comparative Literature Programme at the University of Auckland, New Zealand. Her research interests cover transcultural and translingual literature, in particular life-writing, heteronymic authorship, the application of intercultural psychology to literature, childhood cultural displacement and creativity, and questions of language, cross-cultural intertextuality, and comparative reception. Her monograph 'Enfants russes, écrivains français: Nathalie Sarraute, Romain Gary' is, at time of writing, in press with the Éditions Honoré Champion.

FROM BABEL TO ATLANTICA: EUGENE JOLAS AND HIS LANGUAGE LABORATORY

E.M. Kelbert

Yale University

Abstract: It is little known that Eugene Jolas, the discoverer and first-time publisher of James Joyce's "Finnegan's Wake", started his career as a translingual journalist and poet. Raised in Alsace-Lorraine as a French-German bilingual, Jolas acquired English in adolescence, crossing the Atlantica to refashion himself as an American man of letters. A "Man From Babel", as he styles himself in his autobiography, he published poetry in English, French and German, and eventually arrived to an understanding of his linguistic predicament as representative of humanity's path back to a pre-Babel state. In his own words, "je sens que moi, homme migrateur presque symbolique, je fais toujours partie du cosmos inter-racial et inter-linguistique, que j'appartiens au futur"--a premonition that is hard to ignore in the multilingual literary universe of our day. Unfortunately, Jolas' reputation as a backstage mastermind of European modernism has overshadowed by far both his poetry and his autobiographical work. Yet, his acute consciousness of the "linguistic jungle" in his mind played an important role in his career as one of the 'administrative epicenters' of the modernist movement. No less importantly, it led to his invention of a poetically charged polygloss he called Atlantica that, he hoped, would surpass Esperanto and allow poets to lead humanity out of a post-war "malady of language". This paper attempts to unify the different strands of Jolas' lifework in an analysis of his multilingual poetry. Thus, it presents these curious poems, which oscillate between virtuosic linguistic creativity and the construction of a new language, as curving out a niche within the modernist movement for literally and metaphorically non-native use of poetic language.

Biography: Eugenia Kelbert is a PhD candidate in Comparative Literature at Yale University. Her dissertation focuses on the phenomenon of second language writing (translingualism) in the 20th century. She won the 2011 Horst Frenz Prize for the best paper presented at ACLA by a graduate student; her article on Rilke's translingual poetry appeared in the Yearbook of Comparative and General Literature in 2012. Her other interests include translation theory, modernism, literary representations of myth and the Bible, narratives of execution, the history of the cabaret and the uses of quantitative approaches in the Humanities.

LES DIFFÉRENTES VOIES DU TRANSLINGUISME AUX XXE ET XXIE SIÈCLES ET SON IMPLICATION DANS LE PROCESSUS CRÉATIF

A. Lushenkova
Université Limoges

Abstract: Nous proposons de distinguer et d'analyser différentes voies qui mènent au translinguisme littéraire, et de comparer les situations des auteurs qui ont fait le choix d'écrire dans une langue autre que celle maternelle, dans des périodes et contextes différents. Nous proposons d'analyser particulièrement les exemples des auteurs slaves qui ont adopté une langue étrangère au cours du XX^e siècle, et ceux qui ont fait ce choix à l'aune du XXI^e siècle. Les auteurs russes ayant suivi les nombreuses vagues d'émigration imposées par des circonstances géo-politiques dans la première moitié du XX^e siècle ont parfois adopté une autre langue en suivant la logique éditoriale dictée par les changements de pays. Ainsi, c'est le cas de Vladimir Nabokov, qui a d'abord écrit en russe à Berlin et à Paris où l'importance de la diaspora russe rendait possible une large publication et diffusion des livres écrits en russe, avant de passer à l'écriture en anglais dès son installation aux États-Unis. Les migrations plus récentes témoignent de cas d'emploi parallèle de deux langues. Depuis les années 2000, Eugène Ternoïsky écrit des romans en français, tout en continuant de publier des livres en russe. D'autres ont commencé d'écrire directement dans la langue adoptée, comme par exemple Wladimir Kaminer, émigré de Moscou à Berlin depuis 1990. On peut également observer un passage progressif à la langue étrangère. Ce dernier cas de figure est particulièrement intéressant chez Dimitri Bortnikov qui a commencé à écrire en russe au début des années 2000, lorsqu'il était déjà installé en France, avant de passer au français pour ses deux derniers ouvrages. Ce passage progressif s'inscrit dans son aspiration à la transgression des lois du langage, et l'aspiration au néant à travers l'écriture. À travers l'analyse de ces différents cas du translinguisme littéraire dans des contextes distincts et dans deux périodes historiques différentes (XX^e et XXI^e s.), nous examinerons si les conditions et les raisons de l'adoption de la langue étrangère pour l'écriture s'inscrivent de manières différentes dans la quête artistique de l'auteur.

Biography: Après avoir soutenu sa thèse en littérature comparée sur l'artiste-lecteur chez Marcel Proust et Ivan Bounine à l'Université de Limoges, Anna Lushenkova étudie le translinguisme et examine en particulier les transferts culturels et l'extra-territorialité qui lui sont associés.

WRAP-UP: FINAL DISCUSSION

N. Lvovich
City University of New York, Kingsborough College

S4: THE UPS AND DOWNS THAT WESTERN LITERARY CONCEPTS HAVE EXPERIENCED ON THEIR WAY TO THE EASTS

THE RECEPTION OF NEW CRITICISM IN CHINA. CASE STUDY ON ZHU ZIQING AND QIAN ZHONGSHU

J. Ji

Soochow University

Abstract: New Criticism was initially introduced to China at the end of the 1920s by scholars such as Zhu Ziqing, Ye Gongchao. They either introduced the theory of New Criticism or put it into practice of textual criticism. Among them, Zhu Ziqing and Qian Zhongshu are regarded as having achieved the most systematic and profound reception of New Criticism. Borrowing from the theory of New Criticism, Zhu Ziqing has applied the method of close reading flexibly and focused on the analysis of textual meaning, especially on the interpretation of the multiplicity of meanings in poetry. For example, in his books “Shi duoyi juli” and “Gushi shijiu shou shi”, Zhu has made excellent interpretation on the texts of Chinese classical poetry. By combining and integrating the Western New Critical theory with traditional Chinese methods for the interpretation of poetry, Zhu has established the unique modern Chinese Hermeneutics of Poetry Theory, which has not only promoted the spread of New Criticism in China, but also has helped the modern reconstruction of traditional hermeneutics of poetry. While Zhu Ziqing’s contribution is mainly on the interpretation of poetic texts, Qian Zhongshu has focused more on the integration of New Criticism with Chinese poetry on the poetics level with his oeuvres “Tanyi lu” “Guanzhui bian”. He has conveyed Chinese counterpart concepts to the Western concepts such as defamiliarization, context, ambiguity, the intentional fallacy, the affective fallacy, contributing to the possibility of poetic dialogue between the West and China. If we say that New Criticism has only made formal analysis on the internal structure of texts, then we should recognize that Qian has furthered his study from formal analysis to the poetics level, such as issues concerning the passing on of artistic styles and the rules of poetics. The reception of New Criticism of Zhu and Qian has provided us with excellent examples to review the spread of Western literary concepts in China. It helps us to carry out bilateral dialogue and inter interpretation between the West and China based on our backgrounds as Chinese scholars with a Chinese perspective, relying on our own poetic resources, so as to explore new frontiers for criticism.

Biography: Ji Jin, Professor of Soochow University Department of Chinese Literature
199 Renai Road, SIP
Suzhou, Jiangsu, P.R.C

THE PROBLEMATIC AESTHETICS OF THE AUTONOMY OF WORK OF ART IN NEW CRITICISM: A CASE STUDY OF TAIWANESE MODERNISM

P.C. Kao

National Chengchi University

Abstract: The Problematic Aesthetics of the Autonomy of Work of Art in New Criticism: A Case Study of Taiwanese Modernism New Criticism had played a dominant role in Western academia as a critical approach to study the modernist works of literature from the 1930s to 1960s. Whereas it retreated from the Western academic scene in the 1960s, it re-emerged in the East at this point of time. The blossom of Taiwanese modernism during 1960s to 1970s is concomitant with the transportation of New Criticism to the East. During then the emergence of a new generation of “Americanized” and “Westernized” young writers from the academic institutions demonstrated the wide acceptance of the Western literary and critical modes by Taiwanese writers and critics. According to Edward Said’s concept of the “travelling theory,” the dissemination of the literary theory from one country/continent to another is involved with both the temporal and the spatial transformation of that theory itself. In the case of Taiwanese Modernism, its dominant critical tool – New Criticism – also put on a different face in its engagement with the modernist literature of Taiwan. New Criticism encountered two mutated factors in Taiwan: historically, the belated modernity was ushered in Taiwan; geographically, the Western modernity was transplanted to the East. In Taiwan, the landing of New Criticism is complicated by the island’s context; the post-war blossom of Modernism and its critical approach is deeply connected to the intervention of American imperialism on Taiwanese foreign policies and the rage of monopolized capitalism the former brought onto the island. The concept of travelling theory reminds us that the different temporal and spatial contexts have created new problems for the acclimatization of New Criticism and its twin brother Modernism in Taiwan. This paper argues that the New Critical aesthetics of the autonomy of work of art and its principle of “internal reading” in disregard of external context and biography is inadequate in the addressing of the works of Taiwanese Modernism concerning its historical and geographical specificity. The appropriation of New Criticism to the study of Taiwanese Modernism within the confines of Taiwanese academy was first grounded on the thematic and formal similarities between Taiwanese and Anglo-American Modernism. They both explore themes of the internal world and the psychic tensions of modern men. Both use the techniques of stream-of-consciousness, fragmented language, and interior monologue. Nevertheless, apart from the fact that Modernism was transported Taiwan from the West, the domestication of the former in the new land was inextricable from the historical background of Taiwan itself. In domestic arena, Taiwanese society was undergoing the political period of “white terror” under Chiang Kai-shek administration, the high-handed political suppression which created the condition of mental estrangement of many Taiwanese writers. The theme of internal and external exiles explored by many Western modernists thus held strong appeal to the Taiwanese modernists in its portrayal of the escape of modern men from the hostile social environment. In the international scene, late capitalism of the West in the 1960s had introduced its multinational enterprises into Taiwan. The impacts of American capitalist imperialism on Taiwanese society and the consequent awareness of Taiwanese racial dignity in the face of exploitation by capitalist corporations have all become the important issues explored in the works of Taiwanese modernists. The different historical and geographical backgrounds made Taiwanese Modernism present a different face from its Anglo-American counterpart. The external considerations of historical context are necessary and made inevitable in the case of Taiwanese Modernism, which has exposed the inadequacy and insufficiency of the pure “internal reading” strategy of New Criticism that treats literary work as an organic and self-sufficient object. Critics must enlarge their horizons to consider historical and geographical specificity in their addressing of Taiwanese Modernism. The aesthetics of New Criticism should be adapted to the new context of the island in the latter’s becoming process of critical reception from original resistance to gradual accommodation. For the East as well as the Third-World countries, the transported literature and theory from the West doesn’t mean a pure transplantation from the original land to the Other land – it involves the process of cross-fertilization and re-configuration within the different social and cultural climates.

Biography: Pei-Wen Clio Kao is a second-year PhD student from English Department, National Chengchi University, Taiwan (R.O.C.). Her major is Anglo-American Literature. Her research specialty is Conrad Studies and Modernism.

WESTERN MIND, CHINESE SOUL: ON LIN YUTANG’S UNIQUENESS

H. Yang

School of Foreign Languages and Cultures

Abstract: Born into a Christian family, educated at St. John’s University in Shanghai, Harvard, and Leipzig, associated with the key figures of China’s New Culture Movement in late 1920’s and early 1930’s, thirty-odd years of living in America after 1936, extensive traveling and lecturing across the world, Western philosophical, cultural, literary and artistic influence was omnipresent in both Lin Yutang’s writing career and his daily life. Overeducated and more than sufficiently immersed in Western culture as he was, Lin had throughout his life kept a rational and healthy distance from that culture. And unlike many of his contemporaries, Lin did not undergo a 360-degree turnaround, converting from all-out Westernization in early years to sentimental harking back to the Chinese tradition in late years. His distancing from some aspects of the Chinese way was self-conscious and equally noteworthy and it was in here that his wisdom and his uniqueness lay. Styling himself “the product of the Western mind and the Chinese soul” and “a bundle of contradictions,” Lin Yutang’s independent-mindedness and his blending of the West with the East made him a liberal cosmopolitan, a rare phenomenon in 20th century Chinese intellectual history.

Biography: YANG Haocheng, professor of English and American literature
School of Foreign Languages and Cultures
Nanjing Normal University.

BEYOND OTHERNESS: HAN SHAOGONG’S PARTICIPATION IN GLOBAL LITERARY POSTMODERNISM

J. Zhang

Georgetown University

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Abstract: Han Shaogong is one of the most prominent and innovative Chinese novelists and essayists of recent decades. He has been a leader of literary trends since the mid-1980s: especially toward the privileging of cultural peripheries, the disintegration of narrative, and narrative of disintegration. His stories address very specific junctures in recent Chinese history and local Chinese culture. But he has also been a translator of important modernist works; and several of his main original works are so strongly reminiscent of Western models that he on one occasion had to launch a libel lawsuit to defend against accusations of perjury. My paper will focus on the question: Is Han better described as someone who copied Western models, as many have thought, and in doing so changed them by bringing them to a new context? Or is he better described as someone who was inspired by a few Western models and ideas (as Westerners are inspired by each other), precisely because of the similarity of the Chinese and Western cultural predicaments in the last 50 or 100 years?

Biography: Jingyuan Zhang has a joint appointment in the Comparative Literature Program and the Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures at Georgetown University.

S2 ESPACES EN TENSION

LA REPRESENTATION MULTIFOCALÉ DU RWANDA

P. Gomez

The University of The Gambia

Abstract: La représentation multifocale du Rwanda By Dr Pierre Gomez Senior Lecturer Ag. Dean, School of Arts and Sciences The University of The Gambia E-mail: gomezpierre@hotmail.com Tel: +220 7008671 or +220 3650013 Afin de mieux aborder les grands traits de la représentation multifocale, nous nous appesantirons essentiellement sur La géocritique : mode d'emploi et Littérature et espaces, ouvrages dirigés par Bertrand Westphal. Se fondant sur cette théorie, il a souligné que l'espace était mobile, d'où la nécessité de réfléchir sur une nouvelle approche entre la littérature et l'espace : la géocritique était née. Ses axes de réflexions s'articulent autour des représentations des interactions entre espaces humains et littérature, ainsi que de l'affirmation des identités culturelles. Elle adopte par ailleurs, une méthodologie basée sur quatre approches essentielles : interdisciplinaire, stratigraphique, multifocale et fictionnalisante. Notre travail sera donc entièrement consacré à la problématique de l'espace rwandais. Ainsi, en nous fondant essentiellement sur une méthodologie géocritique, nous essayerons, à travers trois chapitres représentant les axes de réflexion de l'approche multifocale, de montrer comment l'espace rwandais est perçu à la fois par les auteurs locaux (représentation endogène), les auteurs étrangers résidant au Rwanda (représentation allogène) et les auteurs étrangers vivant à l'extérieur (représentation exogène). L'accent sera donc mis sur des perceptions plurielles de l'espace rwandais.

Biography: Dr Pierre Gomez est le Doyen de la Faculte des Lettres et des Sciences, Universite de Gambie. I a fait sa these en Litterature Comparee avec le Professeur Bertrand Wesphal, Universite de Limoges. Il prepare actuellement son HDR avec comme sujet de recherche La geocritique du Rwanda.

FROM HEGEMONY TO HETEROTOPIAS: GEOGRAPHY AS EPISTEMOLOGY IN GRAMSCI AND FOUCAULT

M. Pala

University of Cagliari

Abstract: Said praised Gramsci for his "powerful geographical sense, a spatial sense of discontinuity that complicates and renders less effective than ever the possibility of correspondence, congruence and reconciliation between different areas of experience". Said also added that, like Foucault after him, Gramsci was interested in hegemony and power, but, in comparison to Foucault, had a much more subtle understanding of power because "less abstracted". My paper wants to show how foucauldian geography aims at systematically using measure, inquiry and examination for building an inventory or catalogue of situations which very much resembles Gramsci's "philological" approach to power. In both cases there is no such thing as human nature fixed and immutable, but rather meanings are determined by the complexity of social and historical relations. Either in the vast arrays of spaces discussed by Foucault in "Le langage de l'espace, Des espaces autres" and finally in "Space, Knowledge and Power" or in Gramsci's philosophy of praxis geography represents the methodological system of ascertaining textual facts in order to determine their conditions of meanings in the historical moment of their production. Gramsci's political theory is in fact marked by the use of a geographical society, which becomes definitive in the early phases of "The Prison Notebooks": the emergence of the concept of hegemony is articulated by diverse elements referring to precise geopolitical conditions, such as those denoting a strategy aiming at the production of consent, as opposed to coercion. The field of operation of civil society, rather than the state, is the most suitable for such strategies. Hegemony's field of operation is 'the West', proper terrain for a war of position, in its distinction from the East, more suited for a war of position. In Gramsci as well as in Foucault's heterotopias the method is not aimed at conducting an ontological search: in both cases we rather witness an analysis of a multiplicity of political, social, institutional conditions of possibility, where an entire system of relations and cause/ effects is reconstructed. Heterotopias according to their foucauldian formulations and their partial analogues in Gramsci can help reworking certain problems traditionally assigned under the histories of science, ideas and ideologies, reconstructing, through historical geographic specificity, the rules of formation of discourses shaping our social order.

Biography: Mauro Pala is Associate Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Cagliari (Italy). In 1984 he graduated in Lettere (modern philology, history and philosophy) at the University of Cagliari, Arts Faculty (Modern Philology) and in 1989, as Fulbright scholar, obtained a Master of Arts from Columbia University with a thesis on the American exile of Klaus Mann, attending classes with Julia Kristeva, Edward Said, Eric Foner.

In 1991 he graduated in Foreign Languages and Literature at the University of Cagliari and between 1992 and 1994 attended classes in German and American Literature and Theory of Literary Analysis at Freie University in Berlin under the supervision of Prof. Klaus Scherpe.

In 1995 he obtained a PhD in comparative literature with a Dissertation on the urban representations in Döblin and Dos Passos and since 2000 has taught Comparative Literature and Literary Theory at the University of Cagliari.

In 2010, as Fulbright Distinguished Lecturer, he was Visiting Professor for the PhD Program in Literature at the University of Notre Dame (USA) and Visiting Professor at the University of Limoges (France). In 2011 he was Guest Professor at the University of Malta.

He has published extensively on European Romanticism, Critical theory, Cultural studies and Postcolonial studies. He has published books, articles and essays on Raymond Williams, Edward Said, Antonio Gramsci, among the others and he has also published on Romanticism and comparative studies, frequently cooperating with the Bologna centre for Romantic studies and lecturing for the Palermo European PhD programme in Cultural studies.

MAPPING POLITICAL IDEAS. EUROPE AS SPACE OF PROJECTION OF NATIONAL SELF-DESCRIPTION

L. Schmuck

Institut für Politikwissenschaft

Abstract: Point of departure of my paper is the observation that the European integration efforts after the Second World War go along with a new presence of Europe in literary works. Particularly in Spain and Portugal the end of Dictatorship and the accession to the European Union caused a new presence and a new consciousness of Europe. But the thought Europe («gedachte Europa») clashes with the lived Europe («gelebte Europa») (KAELBLE 1994; cf. also SCHILDT 2001). This leads to the question how and to what extent the literary cartography (TALLY 2008) produced in Spanish and Portuguese literature is utilized to transmit national ideas.

Theoretical background is the redefinition of space within the scope of spatial (LEVFEVRE 1974; SAID 1995; SOJA 2008; 1996) or topographical (FISCHER-LICHTE 1990; WEIGEL 2002) turn. According to Foucault's concept of heterotopia of compensation («heterotopie de compensation») (1994 [1967]), I will show to what extent the literary idea of Europe can be understood as a counter-emplacement, that realizes a compensation of the «chaotic» reality creating a determinate (socio-political) order. This particular heterotopia corresponds to Frederic Jameson's idea of cognitive mapping as a strategy of situating oneself within a social totality (JAMESON 1990) (here: Europe). Drawing on the principle of geocriticism of a dialectic between human and literary space (WESTPHAL 2000: 21), I will, in a second step, focus on the correlations or dynamics between literary space and socio-political space to answer the question to what extent the literary cartography can be understood as mapping of political ideas and intentions.

Objective of my paper is, on the one hand, to present a combination of geocriticism and Foucault's heterotopology and, on the other hand, to show the particular capacity of the geocritical approach for Portuguese and Spanish literature studies.

Biography: After having completed my doctoral degree in Iberoromanic Literature in 2009 (within the scope of the interdisciplinary project «Cultural Contact, Cultural Conflict. Construction and Literary Elaboration of the Spanish-Portuguese Relationship», funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation, SNF) I was Research Associate at the Centre of Competence «Cultural Topographies» at Basel University (www.kultop.unibas.ch) preparing a postdoctoral research project. Recently, in May 2012, I started my new research project, funded by the German Research Foundation (DFG) and situated at the Department of Political Sciences of Hamburg University, where I work as Academic Assistant. This project, based on a geocritical approach, focuses on the function of Europe as space of projection of national ideas.

ESPACES ET RECITS DE VOYAGE

D. Tuan

Université de Limoges

Abstract: Longtemps l'imaginaire et la littérature ont eu une forte emprise sur la géographie, laquelle entre-temps s'amusait à combler ses espaces blancs par des forêts et des antres peuplés de monstres mythologiques et peu rassurants. Avec le temps, sous les lumières du progrès, ces espaces inconnus se sont lentement et constamment asséchés jusqu'à disparaître de nos plans et de nos planisphères. Pour certains, comme l'anthropologue Claude Lévi-Strauss, cela établit la fin des voyages. Toutefois, nonobstant la déception, ce plein géographique ne décourage pas les voyageurs, au contraire, ceux-ci se rendent compte que l'espace est pluriel : que l'espace vécu, pour reprendre Henri Lefebvre, est différent de l'espace conçu et de l'espace perçu. Et d'ailleurs, si la fin du voyage était réelle, pourquoi telle littérature ne s'est-elle jamais portée aussi bien que de nos jours ? Pourquoi y a-t-il une telle floraison d'espaces imaginaires ? Voici deux questions parmi d'autres qui sont au cœur de la recherche géocritique et que je propose d'aborder en m'appuyant sur quelques récits de voyage dans l'Europe de l'Est après la chute du Mur de Berlin.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Tuan Daniele est actuellement doctorant à l'Université de Limoges. Son sujet de thèse porte sur les récits de voyage dans l'Europe de l'Est après la chute du Mur de Berlin. Il a publié des textes consacrés au rapport entre espace et littérature et notamment sur Roblès et l'Italie; Cioran et l'Europe; Ortese et Milan ou encore sur la Transylvanie et les récits de voyage.

S1 LA LITTÉRATURE ET LE VIVANT / LITERATURE AND THE LIFE SCIENCES

APPLES AND ORANGES: ORIGINATING COMPARISONS FROM SCIENCE TO LITERATURE

J. Tsu
Yale University

Abstract: "Apples and Oranges: Originating Comparisons from Science to Literature" It is well known that the origins of comparative literature owed much of its methodological inspiration to other disciplines that were undergoing similar comparative turns in the nineteenth century. How this happened, and the consequences of its conceptual and historical limitations, however, has not been well understood. This paper examines the disciplinary linkages that contributed to the rise of the comparative methodology. Drawing from the biological sciences, linguistics, religion, and law, it provides a different account that both elucidates the longer arc of the development of the literary field and raises new questions as to where it is going.

Biography: Jing Tsu is Professor of Modern Chinese Literature & Culture at Yale. Her research areas include nationalism, race, diaspora, Sinophone literature, transnational labor, history of science, and different approaches to large-scale literary and cultural studies from the nineteenth century to the present. Author of Failure, Nationalism, and Literature: The Making of Modern Chinese Identity, 1895-1937 (Stanford University Press, 2005) and Sound and Script in Chinese Diaspora (Harvard University Press, 2010), Tsu is also co-editor (with David Der-wei Wang, Harvard) of Global Chinese Literature: Critical Essays (Brill, 2010) and (with Benjamin A. Elman, Princeton) Science in Republican China (Brill, forthcoming). She is currently working on a book that proposes and develops the conceptual framework of "New Area Studies" in response to the growing scope of modern Chinese literature, diaspora, and transnational Sinophone studies. Tsu has held fellowships from, among others, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, Woodrow Wilson Foundation, Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, Harvard Society of Fellows, the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard, and the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford.

COMPARATISME SCIENTIFIQUE, COMPARATISME LITTÉRAIRE : LE CROISEMENT DES SAVOIRS ET DES FORMES

M. Gonod
Ecole Normale Supérieure de Lyon

Abstract: Le passage du XVIIIe au XIXe siècle voit l'émergence d'une première théorisation du vivant en même temps que se développe, contre le modèle physique ou mathématique de la connaissance, la biologie. La biologie désigne en fait des disciplines pensées de façon radicalement différentes selon les traditions culturelles des pays européens. L'avènement de ces disciplines est bientôt connu des auteurs qui s'en inspirent. En Allemagne, c'est d'abord la théorie de l'organisme qui apparaît, immédiatement ressaisie par la génération romantique. En France, la tradition des Lumières, relayée par les Idéologues, conduit à l'émergence de la méthode clinique. En Allemagne, l'organisme est rapidement pensé par les sciences de la vie comme une forme susceptible de désorganisation formelle contre laquelle la médecine doit lutter pour rétablir l'équilibre du corps et de son fonctionnement. La vie est comprise alors comme un processus permanent de génération, une forme stable dans sa perpétuelle évolution, lorsque la santé domine. L'émergence de la notion d'organisme dans le cadre de la compréhension du corps, et plus largement du monde, influence radicalement l'épistémologie de cette époque, qui se structure également comme un organisme censé reproduire métaphoriquement l'organisation du monde. L'œuvre littéraire se transforme, dès lors, selon la même logique. Organisme, elle est soumise aux lois de la vie, et génère des formes nouvelles. La perspective générique associant des caractéristiques propres à un genre perd de son importance : l'œuvre doit être expressive, c'est-à-dire exprimer le monde et son fonctionnement selon le modèle organiciste. En partant du savoir biologique, on peut donc se situer au niveau du processus créatif, de la génération des formes. La conséquence de cette théorisation du vivant est l'avènement romantique du fragment comme esthétique de la partie faisant signe vers la totalité. On peut étudier ce phénomène chez Novalis, à la fois dans ses Aphorismes politiques et dans ses ouvrages de fiction comme Henri d'Offertdingen. En France, la méthode clinique instaure un nouveau mode de lecture des signes. C'est moins la forme organique qui compte que la façon de plonger son regard au sein même du corps vivant par une symptomatique reliée de plus en plus clairement à une lésion interne (anato-pathologie). La littérature relaie largement chez les auteurs des années 1830 cette conception. Chaque symptôme renvoie, pour Balzac par exemple, à la blessure des blessures : la Révolution ; blessure fondamentale qui vient dire l'organisation du corps/de l'œuvre par le rayonnement autour du foyer lésionnel. La totalité romantique en France ne promeut dès lors pas le fragment, mais au contraire l'œuvre-fleuve qui reproduit la totalité du monde, totalité dont le principe d'organisation cachée renvoie toujours à la lésion révolutionnaire. Nous nous proposons d'examiner cette conception dans Le colonel Chabert de Balzac. Il s'agira donc en définitive de mesurer les conséquences parfois contradictoires sur la littérature de l'émergence de nouveaux modèles scientifiques visant à penser le vivant.

Biography: Doctorant contractuel chargé d'enseignement à l'Ecole Normale Supérieure de Lyon sous la direction de Monsieur Eric Dayre, mon sujet de thèse s'intitule :
Corps, biologie et médecine : la littérature face au vivant.

DEMATERIALIZATIONS

R. Joseph
Independent scholar

Abstract: L'histoire des sciences nous apprend que l'activité scientifique, dans quelque domaine que ce soit et une fois passé son stade préliminaire, est portée à établir des rapports de diverses natures avec d'autres domaines. Sans nous arrêter sur les contingences et les motifs qui ont pu occasionner l'investigation de la nature de ces rapports au cours des deux siècles derniers, ce qui intéresse notre propos est la distinction des différentes sortes de liens qui se forment parmi les sciences et la prise de conscience de leur rôle dans les développements et découvertes qui peuvent s'en ensuivre, et ceci pour ce que l'établissement de ces liens productifs a de comparatiste. Mon argument pour une synthèse méthodique au croisement du littéraire et du vivant s'articule d'une part sur les éléments scientifiques, proprement historiques, qui sont mis en scène dans Les Particules élémentaires de Houellebecq, et d'autre part sur les modalités d'œuvres littéraires dont les auteurs y figurent également, puisés les uns comme les autres dans la période éminemment fertile, dans les sciences comme dans les lettres, au tournant du siècle dernier. En guise de prélude, quelques exemples de croisements scientifiques brièvement décrits serviront d'abord à illustrer les sortes de liens collaboratifs, classables selon leurs modalités, assez sommairement pour le but de ce précis, en deux catégories : ceux où une science remplit la fonction d'outil auxiliaire, et ceux où le lien en soi est un instrument efficace de réflexion. Ce sont évidemment les modalités appartenant à la deuxième catégorie qui nous intéressent et l'objet de ce prélude est de nous préparer à en identifier dans les exemples scientifiques et littéraires pris dans Les Particules élémentaires et à relever en particulier celles qui mettent en cause une homogénéité de l'activité théorique à travers les domaines. Je délaisse la matière romanesque de cette œuvre qui pourtant me fournit tant de croisements fertiles, car elle nous aurait fourvoyés vers des questions de critique sociale et de bioéthique. Et, sans contester la pertinence de ces questions, je limite mon propos à l'aspect méthodique des exemples de croisements relevés dans cette œuvre de fiction qui subtilise la théorie quantique au profit de la microbiologie, marque la nécessité de ressourcer la physique quantique dans les espaces hilbertiens d'où elle est sortie, soulève autour de la théorie de Darwin des questions d'ordre psychologique qui nous porteront à l'examiner non dans son énoncé final mais dans sa genèse, et, à travers les modalités des œuvres littéraires mentionnées que je m'attacherai à démontrer, suggère une fonction de l'entreprise littéraire vis-à-vis des sciences. La démarche suivie dans cette communication sera en fin de compte de dépasser la matière pour parvenir à voir par-delà les deux cultures et discerner une méthode synthétique, ce qui correspond d'ailleurs, dans l'homogénéité de l'activité théorique, à la dématérialisation des objets spécifiques des domaines qui peuvent alors se prêter à la méthode préconisée, et fait écho, dans la fiction, à la dématérialisation du vivant pour sa survie.

Biography: Ph.D. in French Literature, Stanford University, 2006 Dissertation Title: Paul Valéry, parmi la mathématique
Pertinent publications: - Le Substrat mathématique en poésie - Images, Figures, Langage
Recent appointments: - Virginia Polytechnic Institute, 2009-2011 Seminars: 19th and 20th century French Literature; Travel Narratives, from exoticism to ethnography - Stanford University, 2009 Seminars: Science and Literature in 19th-Century France

UNE LITTÉRATURE GLOBALE ?

WELTBÜRGER, WELTLITERATUR? SUR LA LITTÉRATURE MONDIALE ET LE COSMOPOLITISME / WELTBÜRGER, WELTLITERATUR? ON WORLD LITERATURE AND COSMOPOLITANISM

R.M. Hibbitt
University of Leeds

Abstract: Weltbürger, Weltliteratur? On World Literature and Cosmopolitanism Kant's famous 1784 essay 'Ideal for a Universal History with a Cosmopolitan Purpose' / 'Idée d'une histoire universelle au point de vue cosmopolitique' is viewed as one of the founding text of modern theories of cosmopolitanism. But the original German title, 'Idee zu einer allgemeinen Geschichte in weltbürgerlicher Absicht' contains an etymological link with the concept of Weltliteratur that is lacking from the English and French translations and suggests a link with the original Greek origins of the term cosmopolis: the city state as its own world (polis as cosmos) or the world as a single city (cosmos as polis), or to Seneca's claim that the 'whole world is my country'. In contrast, the term 'cosmopolitanism' has taken on connotations not of universal citizenship but of polyglot internationalism, travel, sophistication and exoticism, and wealth. In La République mondiale des lettres Pascale Casanova uses the term 'cosmopolite' in this narrow sense, distinct from the neutral key term 'mondial'. Similarly, Anna Boschetti's recent edited collection L'Espace culturel transnational avoids the term, preferring the neutrality and fluidity of the transnational. However, theorists such as Jacques Derrida and Homi Bhabha have both found ways to reintroduce the term 'cosmopolite / cosmopolitan' that avoid these connotations and reclaim its value as a critical concept. Beyond this, a host of recent works on cosmopolitanism and literature have shown how the term can influence our understanding of the international literary field(s). This paper sets out to explore the specific link between the concept of Weltliteratur and cosmopolitanism in the sense of world citizenship (Weltbürgerschaft), beginning by re-examining Goethe's initial usage of the term in the light of recent thinking about cosmopolitanism. Building on recent work by David Damrosch and Xavier Landrin inter alios, it examines the thesis that comparative literature has been particularly inclined to use the foundational concept of Weltliteratur as a dehistoricized given and handy synonym for universal or world literature, invested with an essentialist, hegemonic humanist ideology and naturalized as an ideal of cultural exchange from the late nineteenth century onwards. Tracing the development of the two terms up to the present day, it aims to redress the view that the Weltliteratur is the privilege of the intellectual or cultural aristocrat rather than the property of the citizen of the world.

Biography: My research interests encompass two overlapping areas. The first is in nineteenth- and early twentieth-century French literature, with a particular emphasis on the work of Paul Bourget and on the fin-de-siècle preoccupation with the concepts of dilettantism and cosmopolitanism. I am also interested in the reception of fin-de-siècle literature and in cultural exchanges during this period. This research has led to recent and forthcoming publications on Bourget, Laforgue, Rimbaud and Oscar Wilde. I am currently working on a book project on cosmopolitanism and Decadence, which will explore the aesthetic, cultural and political ramifications of fin-de-siècle cosmopolitanism with reference to writers including Bourget, Henry James and Thomas Mann. My second area of research is informed by an interest in English, French and German literature from a comparative perspective, stretching from Montaigne to W. G. Sebald. This includes my first book, Dilettantism and its Values: From Weimar Classicism to the Fin de Siècle (Legenda, 2006), and an ongoing interest in dilettantism, digression, experimentation and error. I have recently published with Dr Jo Catling (UEA) a co-edited volume of essays on W. G. Sebald, entitled Saturn's Moons: W. G. Sebald - A Handbook (Legenda, 2011). I am on the Executive Committee of the British Comparative Literature Association: <http://www.bcla.org/> and the Assistant Editor of its journal Comparative Critical Studies, published by Edinburgh University Press: Comparative Critical Studies

LES CULTURES NATIONALES COMME ÉLÉMENTS DE RÉSISTANCE À LA MONDIALISATION

M. Collomb
Université Montpellier III

Abstract: La mondialisation affecte massivement les circuits d'information et les modes de diffusion des productions culturelles, mais affecte-t-elle également la production littéraire et le fait-elle de façon uniforme? On partira de l'hypothèse que ce processus globalisant entre en contradiction avec les efforts pour faire reconnaître des littératures nouvelles, en particulier dans les pays dits émergents. Le processus rapide de la mondialisation, accéléré encore par les formes nouvelles de communication, perturbe la temporalité lente des changements littéraires. Toute une production littéraire visant à illustrer une histoire et une identité nationale se voit bousculer par la pression mondialiste relayée par les grands médias. La résistance peut aussi se manifester dans des pays dont la littérature est ancienne et reconnue. En tentant d'identifier diverses expressions de cette résistance, on verra que le rapport entre identité et universalité donne lieu à d'innombrables variations qui permettent de garder espoir dans la littérature.

Biography: Professeur de Littérature comparée ; Université Paul Valéry- Montpellier 3 (émérite) Ancien élève de l'École Normale Supérieure. Professeur agrégé de Lettres modernes. Docteur es-Lettres, Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle (1983) : " Beauté et Modernité; en 1925. Recherches sur le style d'époque". Thèmes de recherche : Styles d'époque en littérature et en art. Paul Morand. Jean Cocteau. Walter Benjamin et la pensée française. Photographie et littérature. Echanges littéraires entre la France et les pays germanophones au XXe siècle. Récits de voyage, grands reportages, exotisme au XXe et XXIe siècles. Les écrivains et la radio. La Bible comme hypertexte. Ancien vice-président de l'Université Montpellier 3 Membre de l'équipe RIRRA 21, Université Montpellier 3 Membre du Groupe de recherche sur la culture de Weimar (Maison des Sciences de l'Homme de Paris) Editeur des oeuvres de Paul Morand dans la Bibliothèque de la Pléiade et la Collection Blanche aux Éditions Gallimard.

LA LITTÉRATURE 2.0 : LITTÉRATURE GLOBALE OU ANTIGLOBALE ?

F. Théron

Université Paul-Valéry Montpellier III

Abstract: Internet est par définition un réseau mondial, un outil de communication sans frontières, un instrument de la globalisation. En outre la révolution des technologies numériques en réseau est avant tout une révolution de la communication écrite marquée, comme le montre Pierre Mounier dans son article Écritures d'internet : phénomène littéraire global publié en 2004 sur le site Homo Numericus, « par une dissémination extrêmement rapide des pratiques d'écriture et une multiplication sans précédent des auteurs de textes écrits » : plusieurs milliers de weblogs ont fleuri sur des plateformes type Skyrock Blog ou Over-Blog ; chaque auteur y déverse le fruit de ses réflexions, pensées intimes, analyses ou textes de pure fiction. Véritables pépinières d'écrivains, ces blogs intéressent de plus en plus d'éditeurs. Les 140 signes impartis par le site de microblogage Twitter deviennent un exercice de style pour les écrivains tentés par la concision et la brièveté exigées par ce média. Faut-il avec Marc Lambron, journaliste et critique littéraire au Point, y voir « un mode d'expression déculturé, sommaire, créant une classe moyenne universelle » ou un formidable laboratoire littéraire à même de stimuler la fibre expérimentale des artistes (François Bon est très actif sur Twitter, l'Américain Bret Ellis a par exemple proposé à ses abonnés d'imaginer une suite à son roman American Psycho et l'écrivain français Thierry Crouzet (« auteur expert de rien » comme il se désigne lui-même) a posté son roman Croisade à raison de 5200 tweets entre décembre 2008 et avril 2010) ? Un « Institut de littérature comparée » a même été créé en 2010 par un québécois, Jean-Yves Fréchette et un journaliste bordelais, Jean-Michel Le Blanc, afin de promouvoir ce nouveau type de littérature rappelant le Haïku...

Alors que l'accès d'un nombre croissant d'individus à des réseaux d'information et de communication induit deux effets opposés (émergence d'une sorte de culture commune marquée par le recours à un anglais de communication et à des références culturelles américaines / prise de conscience accrue de la diversité culturelle, des cultures minoritaires qui ont pu, grâce à internet, trouver une visibilité nouvelle), on peut aussi poser la question de savoir si internet conduit à un appauvrissement de la littérature où à un enrichissement de celle-ci. Internet est né de la contre-culture et de l'esprit communautaire des années 60. Élitistes, ses fondateurs répartis dans les universités et les centres de recherche aux USA, étaient animés par la soif de l'aventure intellectuelle. Les initiateurs de la « société en réseaux » se nourrissaient du partage et de la création. Alors que désormais le monde du commerce et de l'industrie s'est emparé du réseau (les blogs littéraires sont aussi, ne soyons pas dupes, un formidable outil marketing) quelle relation internet entretient-il avec la contre-culture ? Dans La Démocratie internet, Dominique Cardon soutient qu'internet constitue une opportunité démocratique, qu'il doit aujourd'hui négocier le virage de la massification et évoluer sans perdre ses qualités créatives initiales. Le règne des amateurs institué par le Web 2.0 pourrait-il conduire, contre l'autarcie aristocratique du livre, à une démocratisation de l'écriture dans ce que Milad Doueïhi nomme l'« humanisme numérique » (Seuil, 2011) ? Dans le sillage de Pierre Mounier affirmant que « la vraie littérature-monde est celle du web 2.0 où les blogueurs deviennent des écrivains et les écrivains des blogueurs, où l'espace intime se fait surface de réflexion immédiate des catastrophes lointaines », nous tenterons, dans cette communication présentée au XXème congrès de L'AILC, d'envisager internet comme « phénomène littéraire global » (textes courts ou longs, myriades de fragments d'oeuvres interreliées entre elles), comme espace commun/communautaire (blogs, réseaux sociaux) où amateurs et écrivains reconnus par l'institution se rejoignent pour défendre une conception ludique de l'écriture.

Biography: Florence Théron
Université Montpellier III

ORHAN PAMUK : UN REGARD COMPARATISTE SUR UN AUTEUR DE LA LITTÉRATURE GLOBALE

E.L. Duclos

Université Paris Ouest Nanterre

Abstract: Il s'agira d'explorer les différentes acceptions de l'expression d' « auteur global » dans le cas d'Orhan Pamuk, pour essayer de dessiner les contours complexes, parfois paradoxaux, de la notion de « littérature globale ». Orhan Pamuk peut se rattacher à la « littérature globale » d'un point de vue institutionnel et politique. Il reçoit en 2006 le Prix Nobel de littérature, la plus haute consécration littéraire au monde. Premier écrivain turc nobélisé, son oeuvre romanesque se trouve dénationalisée, déprovincialisée par l'obtention de ce « certificat d'universalité » (P. Casanova, La République mondiale des Lettres) : il fait son entrée dans la « littérature mondiale ». Malgré sa prétention universalisante, cette littérature n'en est pas moins historiquement référencée. Le canon de la littérature mondiale est construit par les centres de l'espace européen-américain, véritable banque centrale qui fixe et attribue la valeur littéraire. Le romancier est un auteur globalisé au sens où il se trouve délocalisé et universalisé tout en étant le symbole de la spécificité de l'âme turque et de son dédoublement. De ce point de vue, la littérature globale est donc une littérature déterritorialisée, consacrée par les instances de reconnaissance occidentales qui tendent à constituer un canon de classiques transnational. Cette affirmation a tendance à prendre les dehors de la tautologie : il est global parce que reconnu par les centres. Pour obtenir la reconnaissance, il aura fallu produire à l'Occident les preuves qu'on a bien fait ses classes littéraires occidentales, qu'on a lu la littérature européenne : Borges, Calvino, Thomas Mann, James Joyce... reviennent souvent pour décrire les maîtres de Pamuk. Afficher une intertextualité européenne aussi prolifique, ce serait produire un « certificat de bonnes études ». Il y a aussi une fascination de la critique européenne et occidentale à reconnaître chez « l'autre » ses « propres » références littéraires, ce qui procure un certain ravissement narcissique. Le grand écrivain turc Yachar Kemal, moins tourné vers l'Occident que Pamuk, n'aura pas reçu la prestigieuse distinction de l'académie suédoise, alors même qu'il était pressenti depuis longtemps pour l'obtenir. Question de stratégie narrative ? Toujours est-il que le premier écrivain turc nobélisé est un turc occidentalisé, éduqué à l'école occidentale [« Je ne pouvais certainement pas me dissimuler ce que ma destinée d'écrivain devait au fait que mon père parlait bien plus souvent des grands auteurs de la littérature mondiale que de nos pachas ou auteurs religieux. », "Conférence du Prix Nobel", 7 décembre 2006]. L'exotisme turc se dit à travers le code romanesque européen. Le global peut donc apparaître comme le nouveau nom de l'impérialisme culturel et littéraire européen-américain, autre nom de l'hégémonie occidentale dans le champ littéraire mondial. Mais la proposition se prête aussi au jeu du renversement : c'est un auteur global car c'est un écrivain de la périphérie littéraire qui s'identifie à l'« internationale littéraire » des écrivains dominés. Dans son essai D'autres couleurs, il se solidarise avec les écrivains excentriques, notamment avec Mario Vargas Llosa (275-285 : « Mario Vargas Llosa et la littérature du Tiers Monde »). Dans la Conférence du Prix Nobel de 2006, il exprime également sa sympathie avec les littératures et auteurs excentrés. "Quant à ma place dans l'univers, mon sentiment était que de toute façon, j'étais à l'écart, et bien loin de tout centre, que ce soit dans la vie ou dans la littérature. Au centre du monde existait une vie plus riche et plus passionnante que celle que nous vivions, et moi j'en étais exclu, à l'instar de tous mes compatriotes. Aujourd'hui, je pense que je partageais ce sentiment avec la presque totalité du monde. De la même façon, il y avait une littérature mondiale, dont le centre se trouvait très loin de moi. Mais ce à quoi je pensais, était non pas la littérature mondiale mais la littérature occidentale. Et nous les Turcs en étions bien sûr exclus aussi, comme le confirmait la bibliothèque de mon père." ("Conférence du Prix Nobel") Ce sentiment de provincialité est celui décrit par Franco Moretti dans son Atlas du roman européen (1800-1900) (« ...le provincialisme est moins une question de différence par rapport au centre qu'une ressemblance forcée (et toujours un peu retardataire). Le provincialisme comme un effet collatéral de la nationalisation de la culture, en somme : cette sensation toujours un peu triste que la « vraie » vie est à Paris... » p.187) et c'est également la lecture que Pamuk fait de Dostoïevski : « Les Démons restent un livre qui, pour moi, clame ouvertement les secrets honteux que voudraient nous cacher les intellectuels radicaux, excentrés aux marges de l'Europe, aux prises avec leurs rêves occidentaux, oscillant constamment entre le doute et la foi. » (D'autres Couleurs, p.236) Cette expérience de l'excentricité européenne le conduit vers un cosmopolitisme textuel et littéraire stratégique. Le succès mondial des romans de Pamuk, en particulier en Chine ou en Russie, peut s'expliquer par l'exemplarité du positionnement marginal du sujet de l'extra-occidentalité. Franco Moretti, dans « Conjonctures on World Literature », met en lumière cette « loi de l'évolution littéraire : dans les cultures qui appartiennent à la périphérie du système littéraire (ce qui signifie, presque toutes les cultures, à l'intérieur et à l'extérieur de l'Europe), le roman moderne émerge d'abord non comme un développement autonome mais comme un compromis entre une influence formelle occidentale (habituellement française ou anglaise) et un matériau local. » (C'est nous qui traduisons) De fait, c'est ainsi que Jale Parla, dans sa préface à Essays interpreting the writings of novelist Orhan Pamuk: the Turkish winner of the Nobel Prize in literature, décrit l'opération poétique de Pamuk dans Le Livre noir : « Pamuk invests Kara Kitap with the favorite themes of his native novelistic tradition and transforms them from a local into a global novelistic idiom. » L'expression de cette exclusion occidentale est un des lieux central des romans de Pamuk. Si cette extra-occidentalité est la « règle » et non « l'exception » (Moretti), alors son succès est l'expression de quelque chose de « typique ». Nous verrons également dans notre exposé ces autres sens que peut recouvrir la « littérature globale » dans le cas d'Orhan Pamuk. Ses romans sont aussi des œuvres de la « littérature globale » parce que ce sont des best-sellers mondiaux. Ils sont impliqués dans une globalisation éditoriale et commerciale du marché mondial du livre. Ils relèvent également de la « littérature globale » parce qu'ils représentent le moment contemporain de notre culture postmoderne dans ses rapports avec la culture de masse et dans sa dialectique entre local et global. Nilgun Anadolu-Okur (dir.), Essays interpreting the writings of novelist Orhan Pamuk: the Turkish winner of the Nobel Prize in literature, with forewords by Talat S. Halman, Jale Parla, Lewiston (N.Y.), E. Mellen press, 2009. Pascale Casanova, La République mondiale des lettres, Seuil, 2008 [1999]. Franco Moretti, « Conjectures on World Literature », New Left Review 1, January-February 2000. Orhan Pamuk, « Conférence du Prix Nobel », 7 décembre 2006 ; - D'autres couleurs, trad. Valérie Gay-Aksoy, Gallimard, 2009 [2006]. Azade Seyhan, Tales of Crossed Destinies, The modern Turkish novel in a comparative context, The Modern Language Association of America, New York, 2008.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Elise Duclos est professeur agrégée de lettres modernes, et actuellement allocataire monitrice à Paris Ouest Nanterre. Elle prépare une thèse en littérature comparée intitulée "Formes, usages et enjeux de la littérature européenne dans les romans d'Orhan Pamuk", sous la direction de Mme le Professeur Karen Haddad. Elle a organisé avec Sandra Cheilan, en novembre 2011, le colloque "Livre et roman au XXe et XXIe siècles" avec le soutien du Centre de Recherches en Littérature et poétique comparées de Paris Ouest Nanterre. Les actes sont à paraître dans la revue Silène.

L'EFFET ANTIGLOBALISANT DE LA TRADUCTION. LE POÈTE TOMAS TRANSTRÖMER PRIX NOBEL

P. Marty
Université Montpellier III

Abstract: Mon intervention réfléchira sur la façon dont l'institution « Prix Nobel » de littérature promeut ou au contraire résiste à ce qu'on peut appeler une mondialisation de la littérature. Sachant que, pour le prix 2011, le chanteur Bob Dylan, ou le Japonais Murakami, dont les livres sont des best sellers, faisaient partie des favoris et étaient plébiscités par le buzz (comme Jean Paul II, le premier « pape global », en 2005 pour une canonisation immédiate), on réfléchira particulièrement sur les formules par lesquelles l'Académie suédoise justifie, chaque année, l'attribution du prix (ces dernières années : à Orhan Pamuk, Doris Lessing, Le Clézio, Herta Müller, Vargas Llosa, Tranströmer), et on s'arrêtera plus longuement sur le dernier Nobel : le poète suédois Tomas Tranströmer. Son œuvre a été diffusée dans le monde par la traduction anglaise qu'en a donnée le poète américain Robert Bly ; en français, elle est disponible dans la collection Poésie/Gallimard ; en allemand, chez Hanser en édition bilingue. On réfléchira, précisément, sur la fonction ou l'effet « antiglobalisant » de la traduction : parce que, par les versions diverses, un même (poème) devient ceci et cela, et encore cela, l'effet-version lisse le buzz. Le poème gros de ses traductions produit le contraire d'une information apte à se globaliser ; il produit de l'incertain, du mouvant et du devenir. La communauté des traductions d'un même poème présente une autre sorte de mondialisation (ou universalisation) que le « village global ».

Biography: Philippe Marty

S4: ÉCRIVAINS-TRADUCTEURS

LA TRADUCTION FRANÇAISE ET LA VERSION ROUMAINE DE DES LARMES ET DES SAINTS ENTRE DIVERGENCES ET COMPLÉMENTARITÉ

A.M. Blaga

Universitatea Babeș-Bolyai, Facultatea de Litere

Abstract: Nul traducteur n'a été aussi tranchant et impitoyable avec l'œuvre de Cioran, que Cioran lui-même. Dans la traduction qu'il fait avec Sanda Stolojan des Larmes et des Saints en 1986, il se résout à des pratiques qu'il reproche par ailleurs souvent aux traducteurs : il explicite les passages les plus hermétiques, il supprime des phrases, des paragraphes et même des pages entières qui étaient caractérisées par une certaine ambiguïté, il enlève tout ce qui est gratuit, tout ornement lyrique, tout ce qui constitue une idée adjacente par rapport à celle qui gouverne chaque paragraphe, toute divagation, il joue avec les phrases, prenant une expression ici et la plaçant dans un autre paragraphe là, dans une sorte de collage de morceaux de phrases... A partir de cette réflexion sur le cas très particulier que constitue l'auto-traduction, nous nous proposons aussi de montrer en quoi cette dernière a influencé les traductions ultérieures de l'œuvre de Cioran : une analyse stylistique approfondie comparant l'œuvre roumaine et l'œuvre française de Cioran nous permettra de dégager des caractéristiques formelles mettant en évidence leur disparité – ou leur complémentarité ? – plus que leur « ressemblance » supposée.

Biography: Bibliographie primaire

CIORAN, Lacrimi si sfinti, Bucuresti, Humanitas, 1995. CIORAN, Des larmes et des saints, trad. Sanda Stolojan, Paris, L'Herne, 1986.

RÉFLEXIONS SUR LA DISSEMBLANCE STYLISTIQUE DU ROMAN JUMEAU D'EILEEN CHANG : THE ROUGE OF THE NORTH ET YUANNÜ

T. Chou

INALCO

Abstract: Rares sont les écrivains bilingues qui jouissent d'une autorité comparable dans deux mondes linguistiquement séparés. Lorsque nous comparons les textes bilingues d'un auteur renommé, il se peut que l'asymétrie stylistique entre les deux textes à contenu identique attire notre regard et nous invite à en explorer davantage les origines. Cette asymétrie s'expliquerait quelquefois par la maîtrise inégale des langues employées, mais elle peut aussi témoigner d'un jeu d'écriture subtil de l'auteur qui cherche à mettre en scène les variations entre les deux langues. Or, chez de nombreux écrivains, l'écriture bilingue révèle notamment des contraintes réelles auxquelles ils sont soumis. Face aux différents publics ciblés, ils luttent chacun à leur façon pour faire retentir leurs langages littéraires dans des langues différentes. Écrire en deux langues s'inscrirait alors dans un processus d'auto-traduction et/ou de traduction réciproque entre les deux langues. C'est ce à quoi Eileen Chang s'est confrontée. Eileen Chang (1920-1995) est l'un des rares écrivains bilingues chinois dont les œuvres ont été éditées en chinois et en anglais. Ayant émigré aux États-Unis en 1955, Chang se met à réécrire et/ou traduire du chinois vers l'anglais ses propres œuvres romanesques précédemment publiées à Shanghai dans les années 1940. The Golden Cangue (1971) est l'un des exemples d'auto-traduction d'Eileen Chang. L'œuvre originale Jinsuo ji (1943) de cette traduction subit d'ailleurs une réécriture en se transformant en un roman anglais – The Rouge of the North (1967), avant la mise au jour de sa version chinoise - Yuannü (1968). Dans ce cercle bilingue recelant non seulement l'acte de réécriture mais aussi celui d'auto-traduction bi-latérale, je voudrais centrer ma communication sur la double version du « même » roman : The Rouge of the North et Yuannü, dont l'écriture quasi-simultanée a rendu impossible la distinction de l'original et du traduit. En comparant ce roman « jumeau », nous pouvons constater leur ressemblance au niveau de l'énoncé. Cependant, l'asymétrie au niveau du style est marquante : le langage littéraire d'Eileen Chang n'a pas le même timbre dans les deux langues. Quelles sont de possibles facteurs qui auraient conduit à cette dissemblance ? Posons la question plutôt de la façon suivante : l'analyse de cette dissemblance générée dans l'acte de s'auto-traduire, nous permettrait-elle de nous approcher autrement de la littéarité provenant d'une parole singulière ?

Biography: Tan-Ying CHOU, écrivain en langue chinoise et docteur en littérature française de l'Université Paris 8, est originaire de Taipei. Elle a traité dans sa thèse la question de la réécriture cinématographique des textes littéraires et publié quatre œuvres romanesques à Taiwan. Actuellement doctorante en études chinoises à l'INALCO, elle travaille sur la réécriture, l'auto-traduction et l'adaptation des œuvres d'Eileen Chang, tout en poursuivant ses projets d'écriture.

S2 L'ART DE L'ANALOGIE

LE PARADIGME PICTURAL AU SIECLE DE LA RENAISSANCE : VOIE ROYALE DE L'EXPLORATION ANALOGIQUE ?

P. Mochiri

université de Bretagne Occidentale

Abstract: Dans l'imaginaire archaïque qui gouverne encore le monde de la Renaissance, le jeu infini des similitudes et des résonances ménage naturellement une place de choix au geste de la peinture en tant qu'outil de médiation : pensée figurée, rhétorique de l'image, métaphysique de la vue, entre autres choses, imposent le détour par ce mode de signification visible. Dans le champ littéraire, l'approche comparatiste, tentée d'abord de recenser les « ressemblances » entre la littérarité du texte et « l'artisticité » (Gérard Genette) de la peinture, pour faire valoir notamment l'aptitude figurative du langage tout comme l'éloquence muette de la peinture, est vite confrontée à la part irréductible et à l'impensable de l'image peinte, au figurable qui sollicite l'œil de l'esprit.

Biography: Pouneh MOCHIRI est maître de conférences en littérature générale et comparée à l'université de Bretagne Occidentale (Brest). Ses recherches portent sur les traités d'art italiens, les relations entre la littérature et la peinture au XVI^e siècle, la question du paragone, ainsi qu'aux recueils à cadre. Elle a publié une étude des Métamorphoses (Livres X, XI, XII), Gallimard, « Folio plus classiques », 2005. Elle fera paraître en 2013 Ut pictura prosa ornata - Fonctions et implications de la description d'art dans la littérature en prose au XVI^e siècle (domaine franco-italien), Honoré Champion, « Bibliothèque de Littérature générale et comparée ».

MUSIQUE ET LITTERATURE : LES AFFINITES (S)ELECTIVES

V. Vives

université de Valenciennes et du Hainaut-Cambrésis

Abstract: Le XIX^e siècle est, pourrait-on dire parodiquement, le moment de l'absolu musical. La musique en effet devient une matrice métaphorique où chacun, philosophe, biologiste, écrivain, etc. puise pour créer ou réactiver des philosophèmes. Théorie harmoniciste, thèses pneumatologiques, concepts vibratiles (Stimmung, Gemüt) : le musical se trouve au centre d'un redéploiement des fantasmes syncrétiques, synthétiques, métaphysiques, et de pratiques qui les accompagnent. La présente recherche veut tracer et interpréter la ligne de démarcation, quelquefois floue, qui sépare les procès transcendants (ésotériques) des projets immanents (exotériques). Dans la rencontre entre musique et littérature, ce sont ainsi des affinités électives qui se constituent : fantasme d'une trans-sémiotité romantique (Liszt, Berlioz), appel à un fond commun (depuis Schopenhauer jusqu'au jeune Nietzsche, depuis Wagner jusqu'aux jeunes Symbolistes) tendant vers le mythe. Dans cette rencontre, ce sont encore des affinités sélectives qu'on peut entendre : jeux de dialogues figuralistiques (Fauré), combinatoires arbitraires (Rimbaud/Verlaine) dérivant vers des opéras fabuleux ou s'arrimant à la matérialité sensuelle de la figure humaine, très humaine. Ces pratiques dessinent autant de modèles, explicites ou implicites, d'une transposition possible en forme d'impossible comparaison, oscillant entre identification et déraison.

Biography: Vincent VIVES est professeur de littérature française à l'université de Valenciennes et du Hainaut-Cambrésis. Spécialiste de la littérature du XIX^e et du XX^e siècle, il s'intéresse aux relations entre poésie, musique et philosophie. Il a publié La Beauté et sa part maudite. Essai sur la poétique postromantique, Presses universitaires de Provence, 2005 ; La Règle du jeu, essai sur Verlaine précédé de Verlaine et son mètre de Jean-Christophe Cavallin, Edizioni Fiorini, 2007 ; Histoire et poétique de la mélodie française (en collaboration avec Michel Faure), CNRS éditions, 2000.

DISCOURS DU RECIT LITTERAIRE ET DISCOURS DE L'ŒUVRE PLASTIQUE AU XXE SIECLE

C. Grall

Université de Picardie-Jules Verne

Abstract: Le comparatisme a une longue tradition de couplage des histoires et des notions entre littérature et arts plastiques, en particulier entre littérature et peinture. Après avoir rappelé dans quels sens on peut parler d'analogie dans ce discours comparatiste savant, on s'interrogera sur les manières dont les arts plastiques (en particulier la peinture) et la littérature proposent des discours. Ce terme, compris comme langage du savoir, langage de la thèse, et connoté par l'ancien lyrisme, nous paraît révélateur de grandes oppositions depuis les modernismes à nos jours entre, d'un côté, le rejet de la signification rationnelle et, de l'autre, le retour des logiques représentationnelles à prétention parfois « éthique » – comme ne manquent pas de le signaler les études culturelles. Entre indicible des « images » et verbe immatériel, une étude des analogies entre les arts et dans les perspectives comparatistes à propos de cette question du discours moderne et contemporain proposera des réflexions thématiques (histoire de la pensée représentationnelle) et méthodologiques, et sur quelques grandes œuvres et quelques grands moments du XXe siècle.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Catherine GRALL est maître de conférences en littérature générale et comparée à l'Université de Picardie-Jules Verne (Amiens). Ses recherches portent sur l'esthétique du récit bref, elle s'intéresse également aux théories de la fiction, ainsi qu'au rapport entre esthétique littéraire et esthétique plastique, et entre fiction et éthique. Elle a publié Le Sens de la brièveté (Honoré Champion, 2003), dirigé le petit volume Récit de fiction et représentation mentale (Presses Universitaires de Rouen- Le Havre, 2007), co-dirigé avec Marielle Macé, Devant la fiction, dans le monde (Presses de La Licorne, Poitiers, février 2010). Elle fera paraître en 2013, avec Anne-Marie Luciani, Imaginaires juridiques et poétiques littéraires (CERR-CERCL-CEPRISCA, Éditions du CEPRISCA, Amiens).

S2 PRESENTATION DU GROUPE DE RECHERCHES DE L'UNIVERSITE AIX – MARSEILLE

FAVART ET L'OPÉRA-COMIQUE : HISTOIRE D'UN GENRE MIXTE AU XVIIIÈ SIÈCLE

F. Mele

Université d'Aix en Provence

Abstract: L'opéra-comique fut un genre mixte et original, dont la définition a été pendant longtemps controversée et dont les exordes remontent au XVII^e siècle. Ce genre était apprécié par des publics très différents, et basé sur une alternance entre musique et discours parlé, qui très souvent permettait de parodier la structure et le contenu des tragédies lyriques données sur la scène de l'Académie Royale de Musique. Ces ouvrages soulignaient notamment l'usage des lieux communs de la tragédie en musique et fustigeaient le recours aux éternelles vieilles recettes. Charles-Simon Favart qui fut l'auteur de nombreux opéras-comiques de grand succès ayant ces caractéristiques, sut concilier l'amour pour la musique et la verve comique. Parodiste habile, il aspirait à faire sentir de manière astucieuse et plaisante les endroits mal faits d'un ouvrage, tout en mettant en valeur les passages de l'œuvre qui avaient été aimés et appréciés. C'est ainsi qu'une parodie, « en joignant l'agréable à l'utile », pouvait être une source d'inspiration pour les professionnels du spectacle.

Dans ma communication, j'analyserai les manuscrits de Favart, direct descendant de la tradition de la Commedia dell'Arte et témoin de son évolution en France. Je montrerai que ces manuscrits qui constituent une matière vivante, attestant du processus continu de réécriture, ont des rapports très étroits, mais complexes, avec les tragédies lyriques, œuvres cibles de ses parodies.

Favart and the opéra-comique: history of a mixed genre in the 18th century

The opéra-comique was an original and mixed genre, whose definition has been debated during a long time, and whose beginnings date back to the 17th century. This genre was appreciated by very different audiences. It was based on an alternation between music and spoken text, which often allowed parodying the structure and the content of lyric tragedies performed on the stage of the Royal Academy of Music. These works notably emphasized the usage of platitudes of the tragédie en musique and harshly criticized the resorts to the old same receipts. Charles-Simon Favart, who has been the author of numerous and famous opéra-comique, had all these features. He knew how to reconcile love of music and of comic wit. A clever parodist, he aspired to make feel in a pleasant and shrewd way the flaws of a work, while at the same time to highlight the passages that had been appreciated. This is how a parody, « by combining business with pleasure », could inspire stage professionals.

In my paper, I will analyse manuscripts of Favart, straight heir of the tradition of Commedia dell'Arte, and witness of its development in France. I will show that those manuscripts, which form a living material showing evidence of the continuous process of rewriting, have complex and close connections to the lyric tragedies, targets of his parodies.

Biography: F. Mele; Aix En Provence/FR

AUTOUR DU "THÉÂTRE RADIOPHONIQUE"

R. Margolin

Université d'Aix en Provence

Abstract: La dramatique radiophonique ne peut faire l'économie de la musique. Elle structure l'œuvre, l'accompagne en soulignant les affects des personnages, mais entre également dans un véritable dialogue avec le texte, jouant sur le décalage entre comique et tragique, musique et silence, chant et parodie, et sur le rapport de force entre la pièce et la musique. Quatre pièces, écrites entre 1995 et 2009 sont ici étudiées dans cette perspective, confrontant les écritures de Noëlle Renaude et de Mathieu Bertholet.

Radio-broadcasted drama cannot escape the need of accompanying music. It shapes the work, it underlines throughout the different characters' feelings. It also initiates a real dialog with the text, playing on the discrepancy between the comic and the tragic registers, between music and silence, between song and parody, as well as on the power play between the text and the music. Four works, written between 1995 and 2009, are studied that way: Noëlle Renaude's and Mathieu

Bertholet 's writings will be contrasted.

Biography: R. Margolin; Aix En Provence/FR

S2 LITERARY AND CULTURAL INTER-RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN INDIA, ITS NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES AND THE WORLD

RAMAYANA AS CULTURAL LINKAGES: A CASE FOR SOUTH ASIAN COMPARATIVISM

J. James

Central University of Kerala

Abstract: Legends, myth and folklore are both repositories and reflectors of a nation's culture, ethos and attitude to nature. The epics of India – Ramayana and Mahabharata- are the spontaneous accumulation of myths, legends and folklore from different parts of the country across many centuries. The contributory factors of the palimpsestic nature of these two epics are not confined to the subcontinent, but are spread all over South Asian countries and societies. The diversity of the narrative tradition that the “many Ramayanas” of South Asia evinces, facilitates a fascinating comparativism linking lives, cultures and beliefs across geopolitical boundaries. The inter-relationship of the different versions of Ramayana in South Asian countries provide a substantial praxis for a comparative methodology that has the potential for decolonising comparative literature from its western mandates. My presentation will address this gainful evolution of a comparative literature based on the study of “Ramayanas” in the different languages and cultures of South Asia. The characterisation and attributes of Sita and Rama and Ravana in these diverse Ramayanas are charged with some crucial cultural factors impacting upon their literary representation. The Sri Lankan version of Sita's misfortunes, the treachery she suffers in the Javanese version – Serat Kanda, in the Malayan Seri Ram, the Thai Ramakien etc juxtaposed with the hundreds of Ramayanas written and orally transmitted in the different regions and languages in India present not only mutual illumination of texts in thematology but also provide a unique comparativism in “cultural, historical, ethical and socio-anthropological material”. Comparative analysis of the Ramayanas of South Asia not only extends the purview of comparativism but also leads to an indigenous South Asian comparative methodology that will enlighten and empower the Discipline of Comparative Literature. This South Asian concept of comparative literature is a post-colonial intervention in the interface between textuality and culture.

Biography: Prof. Jancy James, Vice Chancellor,

President, CLAI and Vice Chancellor, Central University of Kerala, Vidyannagar (P.O.), Kasaragod-671123

RAMIFICATION OF THE RAMAYAN IN INDIA, INDONESIA & THAILAND : A COMPARATIVE STUDY

S. Mukherjee

Visva-Bharati

Abstract: For hundreds of years, Southeast Asian kingdoms had been engaged in international commercial relations with traders from East Asia (China), South Asia (India), and West Asia (the “Middle East”). Asian sojourners also brought religion, customs, traditions, and court practices to the region. Hence, their relationship was economic and cultural at the same time. Moreover, local Southeast Asian rulers used and indigenized practices of kingship institutions from South Asia (rajadharma) and West Asia (sultanate).

In many South East Asian countries these influence are extended to the realm of literature also. The text, which cast the strongest impact on these areas, is the Ramayana. Because of its universality of themes, ideals, sentiments and emotions Indian epic, the Ramayana has been an important source, which influenced the socio-cultural lives of South - East Asian region and their people. However each culture has accepted, assimilated and interpreted the Ramayana according to its own circumstances and needs. This process of interpretation can be referred as the “indigenization of the Ramayana”. This indigenization can be traced in the realm of literature (like in the Thai version of the Ramayana known as Ramakien and in Indonesian Old Javanese Ramayana) as well as in the area of performing arts . In both the countries a form of shadow puppet plays are popular. Although both the Thai and Cambodian traditions follow the broad outline of the narrative derived from India, they often deviate dramatically from it to produce considerable differences in detail that arise out of their particular worldviews. For example, due to the Theravada Buddhist influence, Cambodian Rama's image was modified to resemble prince Siddharta. Rama was shown as dealing with his opponents in a non-violent way, on the model of Buddha. So because of different socio – cultural and historical differences the characters of the Ramayana also deviate from their Indian counterparts.

In this paper my aim is to understand and analyse these deviations in the realm of literature and show how the process of reception of a text arises out of the need of the received culture. Through these cultural contacts and exchange of ideas both these cultures offer a great and varied scope for comparative literary analysis.

Biography: Dr. Soma Mukherjee, Assistant Professor

Assistant Professor of Comparative Literature, Dept of English and Other Modern European Languages, Bhasha-Bhavan, Visva-Bharati, Santiniketan-731235

WHY DID THE MOMENTUM SHIFT ? CULTURAL POLITICS OF TAMILNADU & SRILANKAN LITERATURES IN THE 20TH CENTURY

C. Kanaganayakam
University of Toronto

Abstract: While the literary encounters between Tamil Nadu and Sri Lanka can be traced back to the earliest periods of literary history, the emergence of Subramanya Bharati marks a decisive – modernist – shift in the relations between the literature of Tamil Nadu and writing among Tamils in Sri Lanka. Bharati's poetry marked the first of many successive stages in Tamil Nadu, all of which brought about substantial changes in literary perspectives. Tamil Nadu produced both literature and literary criticism in ways that made Sri Lanka the passive recipient of influences from across the Palk Strait. This momentum waned in the postcolonial era, and starting from the 1970s, not only did Sri Lankan Tamil literature take on an agential role, it set new standards of excellence and innovation. The objective of this paper is to unpack the nuances that led to this major shift in cultural hegemony and assert that in the last few years one perceives yet another shift in cultural relations.

Biography: Prof. Chelva Kanaganayakam, Professor of English and Canadian Literature
Department of English, Trinity College, 312, Larkin Building, University of Toronto, Canada

S3 COMPARER LES ESPACES / COMPARING SPACES

BOREDOM AND ITS MANIFESTATION IN INTERIOR SPACES

M. Berg

University of Chicago

Abstract: In my paper I seek to explore the emotion – or rather non-emotion – boredom and its development and unfolding in an interior space. Moreover, I would like to argue that in an interior space, the increasing feeling of boredom triggers a certain productivity, with the aim to overcome the state of being bored. Thus, the non-emotion of boredom can be understood as a white sheet of paper, offering a potential of creativity. In Wolf Lepenies' first metaphorical description of boredom as "das ewige Einerlei"[1] ("the eternal monotony"), boredom seems to be rather embedded in a temporal than in a spatial sphere. But already in his second metaphorical description as "gähnende Leere"[2] (yawning emptiness), boredom gets a spatial connotation, more precisely it appears as an empty space. The main characteristic of the space where boredom occurs as a phenomenon is the space's closeness, its isolation from an outer world, and the solitude of man who is captured in this space. What I find particularly interesting of this spatial setting is how boredom and perception mutually influence each other. I claim that at least in one exemplary space, namely in the intérieur, isolation, boredom, and perception come together. Furthermore, it is also important to consider that boredom located in an interior space arises as a potential for both lethargy and thoughtful reflection. Moreover, where is the reception of literature more effective than in an isolated space where no distraction can interrupt the reading and perceptive activity? And exactly here, emerges another space, namely the space of imagination and literature. With this theoretical background in mind, I would like to discuss two novellas, "Des Lebens Überfluss" by Ludwig Tieck and "Der Mensch erscheint im Holozän" by Max Frisch. In both stories, the characters stay in interior spaces – either because they have to hide like in Tieck's romantic novella or because they cannot leave the place due to weather conditions as it happens to Frisch's protagonist. Moreover, in both texts, boredom and the isolation from the outer world play an important role in the way the characters read literary texts. In Tieck's novella, literature provides an imaginary space and thus an escape from the restrictions of the interior. And also in Frisch's novella, boredom evokes a creative productivity. The protagonist here cuts out and pastes articles from an Encyclopedia all over the walls of the room. Thus, his activity also contains a destructive potential. Hence, I would finally claim, boredom triggers here an activity, which can be either the production of another, inner and intellectual space or the destruction of literary space.

[1] Wolf Lepenies, Melancholie und Gesellschaft (Frankfurt a. M.: Suhrkamp, 1969), p. 118. [2] Ib.

Biography: Mirjam Berg studied German Literature and Political Science on the University of Bonn where she graduated with a Magister in the summer of 2010. Her final thesis was on "Die poetologische Bedeutung des Spaziergangs in den Texten „Der Spaziergang“ von Robert Walser (1917), „Gehen“ von Thomas Bernhard (1971) und „(Krieg und Welt)“ von Peter Waterhouse (2006).“ After her graduation, she spent a year at the German Graduate Program of Johns Hopkins University as a visiting student. She joined the Graduate Program of the Department of Germanic Studies at University of Chicago in September 2011. Her research interests focus on the poetological meaning of space and motion, particularly in 20th century and contemporary literature. Mirjam is also interested in intermedial theories of narration of literature, film, and theater, as well as in the interface of literature, philosophy, and political science in the contexts of aesthetics and theories of language.

THE "FALLEN" SPACE: THE WOMAN FROM THE RED-LIGHT AREA AND THE SPACES SHE INHABITS

S. Gupta

Independent researcher

Abstract: "Though women's oral histories are not inherently feminist nor is the telling necessarily a feminist act", as Susan Geiger writes, "collection of oral histories can become a 'method' in the hands of a person (the listener/recorder) whose interests in it go beyond the immediate pleasure of hearing/learning the history being told. The analysis of these histories can become a feminist methodology if they are systemised in particular feminist ways and if the objectives for collecting the oral data are feminist (Geiger: What's so Feminist about Doing Oral History?)." My object of study for this paper are oral narratives of the 'fallen' women-- women from red-light areas in Kolkata. In this paper, I analyse a few narratives to understand how these women represent and negotiate with the spaces they inhabit in. I argue that women from red-light areas structure their narratives around the different spaces they inhabit—the familial (where the woman is developing relationships with other members of the family, as a mother or a daughter or a sister), the conjugal (where she represents herself as the wife or the partner), the professional (she is a 'worker' or an activist) and the political (where she thinks of herself as 'citizen' with the right to vote). It is also important to understand the three linguistic spaces she inhabits—episodic, semantic and symbolic. The linguistic space is understood from the way a woman from a red-light area structures her narrative. Through multiple and episodic realms, she re/constructs her past. The semantic space is translated through her in/ability and/or reluctance to name herself, her relationships and her work. And finally, the symbolic space which either perpetuates or subverts the normative representation of the 'fallen' woman.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Dr SEEMANTINI GUPTA KOLKATA INDIA

Biography: NAME : Seemantini Gupta DATE OF BIRTH : October 26, 1973 ADDRESS : 74 A, Jodhpur Park, Calcutta–700068, India E-MAIL : seemantinigupta@gmail.com PHONE NUMBER : (+91) 98301 88341 ACADEMIC QUALIFICATIONS : B.A. (Hons.) in Comparative Literature from Jadavpur University, 1995 M.A. in Comparative Literature from Jadavpur University, 1997 PhD in Comparative Literature from Jadavpur University, 2006 Present Position: Senior Copy-Editor, AnandaBazar Patrika, Kolkata LANGUAGES KNOWN : English, German, Bangla, Hindi, Urdu and French ACADEMIC WORK EXPERIENCE : I have taught at the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University, India at the B.A. and M.A. levels from April 1998 till October 2007, in the capacity of first as Research Fellow (Junior Research Fellow from April 1998 to March 2000 and Senior Research Fellow from April 2000 to February 2003) as well as Guest Lecturer in the Department (2005-2007). I have also acted as a resource person in the Multidisciplinary Workshop on Canadian Studies organized by the Assam University, Silchar in March 2004. EXPERIENCE IN SOCIAL RESEARCH I have worked extensively with four Indian Non Governmental Organisations between 1999 and 2007. This was for the purpose of my research which involved conducting interviews and collecting oral narratives of women sex workers in Calcutta and Delhi; as well as voluntary work involving mobilisation at the grass-root level and collection and dissemination of data. The NGOs that I have worked with are Savera ('Dawn') from Delhi, Sanlaap ('Dialogue'), Durbar Mahila Sammanya Committee ('The Sexworkers' Organisation') and Pratibhandhi Kalyan Kendra ('Organisation for the Challenged'). All these organisations work for the empowerment of disprivileged women and children. I have worked with the Documentation Units of Sanlaap and PKK and contributed reports and articles for their newsletters. For Sanlaap, I had worked on a project on urban eviction and have also compiled statistical reports on rape and trafficking. While working with these organisations, I have tried to address various issues like, social rehabilitation / empowerment, basic human rights, creating awareness of diseases and hygiene and STD/HIV intervention programs. FELLOWSHIPS EARNED 1995-1997: Jadavpur University Fellowship for two years for pursuing MA Studies. 1998-2003: University Grants Commission Fellowship for five years for Doctoral Research. 2000: Shastri Indo-Canadian Institute Fellowship to attend Summer Programme on Developmental Studies at the Universities of Alberta and Calgary, Canada. 2002: SEPHIS-CODESRIA Fellowship to attend Extended Workshop on Social History at Dakar, Senegal. INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES/ WORKSHOPS ATTENDED 1. I took part in, and presented a paper on 'Legalisation of Sex trade in India', at the International Conference on Gendered Mobilities in Asia, held at the Chinese University of Hong Kong in November 1999. 2. I participated in a Summer Programme on Development Studies, from June 21 through July 25, 2000 at the Universities of Calgary and Alberta, Canada. 3. I participated in the 2002 session of the SEPHIS Extended Workshop on Social History at CODESRIA in Dakar (Senegal) from 16th September 6th October, 2002. 4. I presented a paper on the representation of marginalised women in Indian fiction in the International Comparative Literature Association Conference held in HongKong in August 2004. 5. I participated in a peace initiative programme organised by 'Pakistan India People's Forum for Peace and Democracy' in Pakistan in December 2003. 6. Participated and presented a paper in PROSTITUTION CONFERENCE at the University of Exeter, UK, September 2010. 7. Participated and presented a paper in INTERNATIONAL BANGLA CONFERENCE, University of Dhaka, December 2011. List of Publications Books 1. Edited Unified Self, Fractured Identities? (on Canadian First Nations) published by the Canadian Studies Programme, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 2002. 2. Edited (on published by the Canadian Studies Programme, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, 2003. 3. Guest Co-editor of Sahityalokam published by Kerala Sahitya Akademi, Thrissur, Kerala, 2001. Research Publications 1. "Her"story: The Lucknowi Baijees of the 19th and early 20th centuries. Essay published in G S Jayasree ed., Samyukta Vol. 1, No 2, Women's Initiatives, Thiruvananthapuram, Kerala, July 2001. 2. "Surjadighal Bari o LalSalu: Naricharitra Rupayaner Tulanatmak Alochona" (A comparative study of women characters of two novels from Bangladesh, Abu Ishak's Surjadighal Bari and Syed Waliullah's Lalsalu in tapas Ray ed., Sricharaneshu, April 2000. 3. "Cry for Justice" in Indrani Sinha and Rabi Roy eds., Jonaki, May-December 2001. 4. "Tabu Swadhinata: Hope and Disillusionment in Bengali poetry of the 1940s and 1950s" in Dinkaal, Autumn 2001. 5. "Rape: a Statistical Report" in Rabi Roy ed., Jonaki, 2002. 6. "Trafficking: a Statistical Report" in Rabi Roy ed., Jonaki, 2002. 7. "The Other Side: Interview of the Bangladeshi playwright Selim Al Deen" in The Statesman, March 3, 2000. 8. "...and become displaced again" (Interview of Krishna Roy on Developmental Displacement in Calcutta) in Indrani Sinha and Rabi Roy eds., Jonaki, May-December 2001. 9. "Swadheen Bharate Paradheen Amra" on the conditions of sexworkers in India in Indrani Sinha and Rabi Roy eds., Jonaki, May-December 2001. 10. Co-author of "Bangla Kobita: Swadhinatar Swapno o Swapnabhanga" in Seminar Proceedings, published by the Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University. Translations 1. Translation of Dalit poems in Bangla, to be published by Oxford University Press (In Press) 2. Translation of Lothar Lutze's 'On Translating Jibananda' from German to English, published in Seethalakshmi Viswanath and Anjan Sen eds., Gangeo Potro, February 1999. 3. "Violence Against Women around the World” in Indrani Sinha and Rabi Roy ed., Jonaki, May-December 2001. 4. Translation from German to English of four essays by Hermann Hesse i) A Visitor from India, ii) About my Relationship with Spiritual India and China, iii) Nostalgia for India and iv) From India and about India from Hesse, Autobiographische und essayistische Schriften (DSA Programme, Department of Comparative Literature, Jadavpur University). 5. Vilas Sarang’s ‘Sukhakarta Dukhaharta’ (Marathi to Bangla). 6. Bhupen Khakakar’s ‘Bati’ (Gujarati to Bangla). 7. Himangshu Shelat’s ‘Anyā Ekdharaner Manush’ (Gujarati to Bangla). 8. Ajeet Kaur’s ‘Shool-Biddha Muhurta’ (Punjabi to Bangla). 9. Dalip Kaur Tiwana’s ‘Maran Ritu’ (Punjabi to Bangla). 10. Davade Satyarthi’s ‘Dasandha Singh’ (Punjabi to Bangla). 11. Pandit NeelKantha Das’s ‘Amar Janmo Katha’ from Atmajiboni (Oriya to Bangla). 12. Sitadevi Khadanga’s Amar Jiban katha (excerpts, Oriya to Bangla). 13. Kalicharan Pattanayak’s Kumorer Chaka (excerpts, Oriya to Bangla). 14. Manmohan Chowdhury’s Jaubaner Smriti (excerpts, Oriya to Bangla). 15. Shilabhadra’s ‘Abidito’ (Asomiya to Bangla). 16. Apurba Sharma’s ‘Andhakarer Alap’ (Asomiya to Bangla).

EMOTIONS AND IDENTITY IN HOTEL ROOMS

S. Ulrich
University of Turin

Abstract: Emotions and identity in hotel rooms The interest within the Humanities in “space” dates back to 1967, when Michel Foucault, with his Of Other Spaces, Heterotopias, described the 20th Century as the age of space tout court. Thus, from then on geographic space has become a key element for a definition of human identity. Yet, lived-in space has ever since played a crucial role in the redefinition of individuals’ identities and emotions. A first difference emerges here: space tout court pertains to the community, while lived-in space is individual, with features detected and described in psychological and anthropological studies (see among others G. Bachelard, The Poetics of Space and M. Augé, Non-Places). Lived-in space has become relevant to literature thanks to its plasticity, which distinguishes it from a mere setting or background. Its role is to induce the people living in it to become aware of their own inner life: it turns into a metaphor of human inner life itself while acting as a cathalyzer of crises, or more simply of feelings and emotions. This relational space was analysed by Georg Simmel back in 1908, in his essay Space and spacial arrangements in society, where he identified a close connection between this kind of space and the human presence. Space is relevant insofar as it justifies itself through such principles as exclusiveness, the size of its boundaries, the “fixity of some items”, the dialectics of proximity/distance and finally its own internal mobility. In Middle-European literature of the 20th Century, lived-in space acquires its central position on the one hand thanks to its relationship with identity and emotions of the individuals living in it, and on the other hand thanks to the influence that it exerts on the relationships of the individuals among them. My paper moves from Simmel’s considerations about this relational space as a place of meeting and confrontation of people. Lived-in space is a restricted space, and it is characterized by exclusiveness, limited extension, fixity of certain items, limited distance between people: for all these reasons people inside it experience a varieties of feelings and emotions. By the way, in a restricted space indifference cannot exist, only sharp and extreme feelings become possible: assurance/insecurity, love/hate, etc. Besides, Walter Benjamin affirmed that the traditional way of living had undergone dramatic transformations “for the living, in hotel rooms; for the dead, in crematoriums”. Many of the studies revolving around the spatial turn (see among others G. Lehnert, Raum und Gefühl: der Spatial Turn und die neue Emotionsforschung, 2011; C. Seger, Grand Hotel, 2005 and 2007 and B. Matthias, The Hotel as Setting in Early Twentieth-Century German and Austrian Literature: Checking in to Tell a Story, 2006) focus on the peculiarity of the Grand Hotel of the first half of the 20th century as lived-in space, starting with S. Kracauer’s popular essay The detective novel (1925) in the Chapter titled “The Hotel Lobby”. In the Middle-European literature of the time the Grand Hotel plays a key role in defining guests’ identities. Luxury and ostentation in the lobby (fixed elements) are often contrasted with their frustrations, unmentionable secrets and sorrows. Compared with “the home” – the traditional dwelling of which Gaston Bachelard has drawn an accurate phenomenology by which he distinguishes the inside and outside, or the private of one’s home and the public of the exterior – the hotel appears as an evolution of the original separation of private and public, as it is the domain of an intermediate reality, a heterotopy where spaces are both semi-public and semi-private. In that domain even the inner life of the guests is never protected by impervious walls, but it becomes visible, as through X-rays. The virulent explosion of emotions and irrationality within the hotel’s space as well as the guest’s realization turns the Grand Hotel into a threshold, while the temporary stay within its boundary-lines turns it into a liminal experience, often on the border between life and death. This occurs for example to G. Aschenbach (T. Mann, Death in Venice) or to Miss Else (A. Schnitzler, Fräulein Else). In other works the Grand Hotel reflects the mutability of human fortunes, which in the Twenties characterizes the guests’ lifestyle as still frivolous and cheerful as usually happens in comedies (see Baum, Grand Hotel). The hotel environment with its dynamics deeply affects the staff too, as with Felix Krull (T. Mann, Confessions of Felix Krull), to whom the promiscuous communal life of aristocrats and bourgeois allows the mise en scene of role play typical of modern society. The same opportunity is not offered to young Bela, the main character in Hungarian Janos Szekely’s novel Kísértés. Bela’s poverty and meanness are only turned into anxiety/restlessness by the close encounter with Budapest Grand Hotel's luxury. On the basis of the theoretical models outlined above, I will show: - how a hotel room may affect the inner life of its occupant. Thanks to the special "virtue" of the hotel – a neutral and impersonal place par excellence – it makes its guests psychologically weaker but also more open to change, by depriving them of all cultural and ideological orientation. - The hotel room carries out its peculiar function testing to human inner life especially during the overnight stay. - Environmental elements as darkness and silence amplify the awareness of conscience as well as the realization of what is one's own and what belongs to the "others", thus leading to the internalization and sharing of experiences and emotions. - My analysis focuses on H. Hesse's Kurgast, S. Lenz, Die Nacht im Hotel, J. Roth, Hotel Savoy, S. Zweig, Brennendes Geheimnis, J. Szekely, Kísértés, D. Buzzati, Il corridoio del grande albergo, just to quote a few examples. Feelings fluctuate between uncertainty, shame, despair, anger, hate and fear, but they are always ready to turn into a positive mood.

Saturday, July 20, 2013

Biography: Silvia Ulrich is a researcher in German Literature at the Faculty of Foreign Languages and Literatures at the University of Turin. Her research interests range from the German literature of the nineteenth century (La noia. Storia e opinioni intorno al male del secolo, Trauben 2006) – with particular attention to the reception of Leopardi's and Baudelaire's works in Germany – to the German literature of the twentieth century. As regards the latter she has been analyzing the theme of the "confidence man" (Impostori, avventurieri e cavalieri d'industria nella letteratura tedesca del Novecento, Trauben, 2006), as well as on Thomas Mann, Bertolt Brecht and Walter Serner. Since 2008 she focused her research on the role of Hotels in the Literatur of the 20th Century in Germany and Austria. In this field she published following articles: Cultura e civiltà dell'hotel in Germania e Austria nel primo Novecento, in «STUDI E RICERCHE» 4(2009), p. 301-317. Dalla casa all'hotel. Riflessioni sullo spazio abitato in Joseph Roth e Franz Kafka. In: Annali Facoltà di Lingue e Letterature Straniere. Per le vie del mondo., TORINO, Trauben, 2009, p. 211-221 (also available under: <http://130.192.193.3/oslingue/documents/os-home-annali/Annali%20della%20Facoltà%20-%20anno%202009.pdf>).

S2 COMPARAISON ET HISTOIRE LITTÉRAIRE / COMPARISON IN LITERARY HISTORY

WHEN BANDE DESSINÉE BECOMES A SITE OF HISTORICAL TRUTH: WWI IN THE HANDS OF CHILDREN

A.V. Cirella-Urrutia
Huston-Tillotson University

Abstract:

This presentation will focus on three case studies of French bandes dessinées that use WWI as a major theme. In looking at these examples in the evolution of the medium in France, I hope to trace the function of this artistic form as one strand in the history of children's literature with the propagandistic scope to enroll children into the Great War on the one hand, gradually leading in the 1970s to the emergence of the bande dessinée as a state-mandated art form coined the Ninth Art. Both Pinchon and Tardi, although in different times contribute to the development and the evolution of the now familiar historical bande dessinée in a multicultural France. The elements of interpretation (graphic fiction) and history are two essential features of the historical bande dessinée, which by its degree of narrative and graphic reliability fluctuates between historical invention (according to Pierre Nora) and fictional history. Bande dessinée has recycled images of WWI from propagandistic to critical histories of predominantly anti-war narratives since the 1990s with Tardi. Because historical bandes dessinées frequently include or reference authentic textual and iconographic source material documenting the repercussions of WWI on underrepresented communities, they represent an invaluable source of to enrich the state-mandated history curriculum as well. In using bandes dessinées in this capacity, comparative literature specialists may exploit this medium as both a historical document (whose objective is to transmit knowledge of the past) and a document of generic History (which allows scholars to retrace the evolution of mentalities and public opinion within the genre). Ultimately, of importance is the evolution of the medium especially since the 1990s; how French cartoonists engage with History and Education in recent years and how in turn the medium has grown into a site of academic discourses.

Biography: Dr. Cirella-Urrutia earned her Ph. D. in Comparative Literature at the University of Texas at Austin in 1998. Her research on the familiar French Theater of the Absurd and children's theater has been published in international journals such like Bookbird, Les cahiers Robinson, Exemplaria, The Children's Literature Association Quarterly Journal. She also likes to contribute with book reviews on French-speaking comics in international journals of comics. She hopes to continue contribute to the internationalization of the study of children's literature in French and francophone bande dessinée. She currently teaches French at historically Black Huston-Tillotson University in Austin, TX.

DISCONTINUOUS COMPARISON(S): PASSAGES, PARCELS, AND PLACES OF LITERARY REMEMBRANCE

L.N. Mulman
Salem State University

Abstract: Lisa Naomi Mulman, Ph.D. Associate Professor, Salem State University
ABSTRACT: Discontinuous Comparisons: Passages and Parcels of Irregular Remembrance In the Introduction to Walter Benjamin's remarkable Arcades Project, translators Howard Eiland and Kevin McLaughlin comment that Benjamin's insertion of quotations and other unconventional materials into his text represents the "blasting apart of pragmatic historicism" by forcing a temporally discontinuous reading that spans the epochs of recent history through a series of hints or blinks. Although Benjamin's project was intended to expose the unsettling (and increasingly materialist) ethos of the 19th century, in fact, Benjamin's methodology of writing seems equally if not more appropriate to his own historical moment, reflective as it is of a state of philosophical and political crisis. Indeed, Benjamin's ultimate stated objective was to link the emergency (in every sense of the word) of his present with the objects and artifacts of the recent past, so as to awaken the historical subject into recognition of his own political position. Thinking of this project--now itself an artifact--alongside Benjamin's other work, it is possible to see the text as a blueprint for the difficult larger project of memorializing or, in Benjaminian terms "actualizing" an impression of Europe in the 20th century as a disorganized organization of heterogeneous materials; a non-narrative that urgently demands continuous reading. This paper will approach Benjamin's methodology as an assemblage of comparable and (mostly) incomparable literary objects whose promise is one of escape; an exile performed by tunneling through the passages (literal and metaphoric) created by unlikely proximities. This includes the unlikely proximities of Benjamin's own life, as well as, and more importantly, the uncomfortable pairing of narrative modalities that has become the dominant trope of remembrance in contemporary literary representations of the Holocaust. Much like Benjamin's unorthodox literary and material collections, recent novels of the Holocaust juxtapose photographs, flip books, citations, maps, and various ephemera not as a means not of narrating historical events, but rather to radically destabilize the notion of history itself. And, like Benjamin's famous vanished suitcase, the project of writing becomes one of erasure or disappearance. As objects and texts are randomly piled onto, and next to, each other, they collapse under their own weight. How can such incomparable objects be assimilated into a literary/historical context? Is the task of criticism in the 21st century to retrieve and archive what has been inexorably lost and cannot be retrieved? These questions will be engaged through a close examination of The Arcades Project and other fragments of 20th and 21st century Holocaust narrative, including photographs, graphic novels, testimony, and film.

Biography: Lisa Naomi Mulman is Associate Professor of 20th c. Literature and Coordinator of Graduate Studies in English at Salem State University. She received her Bachelor of Arts in English from Harvard University in 1986 and her Ph.D. from Duke University in 2011. She is the author of several articles as well as Modern Orthodoxies: Judaic Imaginative Journeys of Twentieth Century (Routledge, 2012).

TWO MODERN POETS, ONE SINGLE TERM: "THE OBJECTIVE CORRELATIVE" AS A LINK BETWEEN T. S. ELIOT AND EDIP CANSEVER

A.H. Tezgor
Yeditepe University

